BURNUM WEBSTER FRANCIS is one of the leading business men of Cheshire, New Haven county, where he is engaged in house painting, graining, whitewashing, paper hanging and glazing, and is a dealer in paper, mouldings, paints and oils, while at present he is also giving some attention to farming. A native of this county he was born in Meriden Feb. 22, 1840, a son of Frederick A. and Jeannette (Hall) Francis.

Cyrus Francis, his paternal great-grandfather, was a major in the Revolutionary war and in a hand-to-hand conflict had to brain his opponent in order to preserve his own life. The grandfather, Appleton Francis, was a soldier of the Mexican war. He was born in Meriden but was reared in Kensington, Hartford Co., Conn., where he spent the remainder of his life as an agriculturist. He was the father of the following children: Herbert; Charlotte; Frederick A., father of our subject; and Catharine, wife of Almon Ives, of Cheshire.

Frederick A. Francis was born in Berlin, Hartford county, in 1801, and was reared and educated in Kensington. Throughout life he followed the occupation of farming. At one time he was a member of the State militia. In Wallingford, this county, he married Miss Jeannette Hall, a native of that town, who died in Meriden in 1844, and he died in 1845. In their family were four children: Harriet, who married William Powers, and died in Meriden; Jeannette, wife of Amos Tuttle, of North Haven, Conn.; Frederick, the inventor and originator of the system of burning coal in engines, who lived in New Britain but died in New Haven; and Burnum W.

During his boyhood and youth our subject attended school in Meriden and New Britain, Conn. Coming of a very patriotic and loyal family which has been well represented in the wars of this country, he espoused the cause of the Union during the Rebellion and enlisted in 1862 at Bristol, Conn., in Co. K, 16th Conn. V. I., and was mustered into the United States service at that place Aug. 5, 1862. He participated in the battles of Antietam and Fredericksburg, the siege of Suffolk, and at Plymouth, N. C., was taken prisoner, being confined in Andersonville for eight long months. He was finally exchanged at Charleston, S. C., and taken to the parole camp at Annapolis, Md. He remained in the service until the war ended and was honorably discharged at Hartford, Conn., in 1865. Mr. Francis then made his home in Bristol, Conn., until coming to Cheshire, in 1881, since which time he has successfully engaged in his present business.

In Bristol, in 1865, Mr. Francis was married to Miss Helen Blakeslee, who died in Hartford county in 1882, and in Cheshire he was again married, in 1888, his second union being with Miss Harriet Humiston, a native of Cheshire, and a daughter of John and Rhoda (Nichols) Humiston. Her father died in that town in 1850, her mother in 1896. Politically Mr. Francis is a Republican and he is now most creditably serving his sixth year as justice of the peace in Cheshire. He was one of the charter members of the Grand Army Post at Bristol, and in days of peace, as in times of war, has shown himself to be a worthy and loyal citizen, true to the best interests of his country.

CHARLES E. HART stands high among the substantial business men and valuable citizens of New Haven, where he is considered a representative dealer in his line. His unassuming and pleasant personality has made him as popular personally as he is reliable commercially.

Mr. Hart was born April 2, 1843, in the town of Durham, Conn., and comes from one of the old and honorable families of New England, and one of the very oldest in Connecticut, he being a representative in the seventh generation from Deacon Stephen Hart, who was the progenitor of this family in America. His line is from Deacon Stephen through Thomas, Hawkins, Samuel, Samuel (2), and William Augustus.

(I) Deacon Stephen Hart, born about 1605, at Braintree, County of Essex, England, came thence to Massachusetts Bay Colony about 1632, and is supposed to have belonged to the company that settled Braintree, Mass. He located for a time at Newtown (now Cambridge), where he married and where his first wife died. For his second wife he married Margaret Smith, widow of Arthur Smith. Mr. Hart was one of the fifty-four settlers at Cambridge, Mass., later went to Hartford with the company of Rev. Thomas Hooker, in 1635, and was one of the original proprietors in 1639. At Cambridge he had been a member of Mr. Hooker's church and continued a member at Hartford. In 1672 he became one of the eighty-four proprietors of Farmington, Conn. In 1647 he was a deputy to the General Court of Connecticut, and continued to serve as such during most of the succeeding years up to 1660, from the town of Farmington. At the latter place he was one of the seven pillars of the church, and was chosen the first deacon. An extensive farmer, he became a man of influence, and was one of the leaders in the town. His death occurred in 1683, his widow dying in 1693.

(II) Thomas Hart, son of Deacon Stephen, was born in 1644, and married Ruth Hawkins, who was born in 1649, in Windsor, Conn., a daughter of Anthony Hawkins, a man of distinction in Farmington, whose wife was the daughter of Gov. Welles, of Connecticut. Mr. Hart served as ensign, lieutenant and captain of the trainband. Mr. Hart and John Hooker were the two most prominent men of the town, and conspicuous in the Colony, being men of wealth, activity and usefulness. From 1690 to 1711 he represented the town in the General Court, for twenty-nine sessions, and he was several times clerk and speaker. Capt. Hart died in 1726.

(III) Hawkins Hart, son of Capt. Thomas, was born in 1677, in Farmington, and was a farmer. He married, in 1701, Sarah Lathrop, who was born in 1683, daughter of Nathaniel and Sarah Lathrop, of Wallingford. They lived for a time in Farmington, and then removed to Wallingford, where Mrs. Hart died in 1733. Mr. Hart then married Mary Street, daughter of Rev. Joseph Elliott, and his second wife Mary (Wilys), of Guilford, the latter a daughter of Hon. Samuel Wilys, of Hartford. Mr. Hart held the rank of lieutenant, and represented Wallingford in the General Court nine sessions, between 1714 and 1732. He died in 1735.

(IV) Samuel Hart, son of Lieut. Hawkins, born in 1735, in Wallingford, married, in 1759, at Durham, Conn., Abigail Fowler, and settled on a farm in that town; this farm was part of a tract of land which had been given to Rev. Joseph Eliot by the Colonial Legislature, for preaching the election sermon. Both he and his wife were taken into full church communion in 1771. Mr. Hart held the rank of lieutenant in the Continental Army during the Revolutionary war, and was wounded at the battle of Saratoga, after which he drew a pension. His death took place Jan. 12, 1805, and his widow passed away Nov. 26, 1827.

(V) Samuel Hart (2), son of Lieut. Samuel, was born July 12, 1770, and was baptized in Durham, Conn. On March 3, 1803, he married Patience Hubbard, who was born in August, 1772, a daughter of Eber and Patience (Chittenden) Hubbard. Mr. Hart was a farmer, living on his father's homestead, and was an industrious man. He died Dec. 25, 1857, his widow surviving until March 15, 1864.

(VI) William Augustus Hart, son of Samuel (2), was born April 26, 1806, at Durham, Conn., and was well known to the residents of New Haven, Middletown and Durham, as he carried on a butchering business in these towns, and also kept a country store on the old homestead. He married Sally Maria Jones, daughter of John Jones, of North Madison, and the children of this union were as follows: Elizabeth H., born May 17, 1831, married Charles E. Camp, of Middlefield, Conn.; Franklin H., was born April 20, 1834 (he is mentioned elsewhere); Mary E., born July 10, 1836, is deceased; William Lewis, born Dec. 28, 1838, is residing in Brighton, Ohio (he served as private in the First Connecticut Heavy Artillery in the Rebellion); Ellen M., born March 11, 1841, married Isaac Hall, of Wallingford, and both are deceased; Charles E., our subject, was born April 2, 1843; F. J., born Feb. 26, 1845, now a resident of Joplin, Mo., was during the Civil war a lieutenant in the 100th U. S. Colored Regiment, previous to which he had served as a private in the First Connecticut Regiment, Heavy Artillery; Catherine S., born Aug. 10, 1849, lives in Durham, Conn.; Alice L., born April 19, 1852, is an artist in Boston, Mass. The parents of this family died in Durham, Conn. They were honored members of the South Congregational Church, and Mr. Hart was deacon in the same. Mr. Hart was noted for his strict total abstinence from all kinds of intoxicants, and for his firm stand on the subject of intemperance.

Charles E. Hart was born on a farm that had been in the family since the time of Rev. Joseph Eliot. He spent his early school days in Durham, and at the age of seventeen came to New Haven to work as a clerk in the establishment of Horace H. Strong, which stood on the site of Mr. Hart's present place of business, on State street. On Aug. 2, 1862, Mr. Hart enlisted in Company I, 15th Conn. V. I. In 1864 he was promoted to the rank of first lieutenant, in the 100th United States Colored Infantry, and just before the surrender of Gen. Lee he was promoted, in March, 1865, to the rank of captain. In March of the following year he was mustered out of the service at Louisville, Ky. Mr. Hart was in service for nine months in Texas, at the time Maximilian made his raid along the border.

On his return from the army Mr. Hart engaged in the market business with his brother, William Lewis, at Wellington, Ohio, for about four months. Coming back to New Haven, he became a member of the firm of Strong, Hart & Co., and later became a member of Frisbie & Hart, of New Haven, the members being John Frisbie and C. E. Hart. This partnership lasted until 1860, when Charles E. Hart engaged in business alone for a year. Then he became a member of C. E. Hart & Co., which organization consisted of our subject, R. H. Nesbit and W. E. Judd, and continued until 1894, when the C. E. Hart Co., a corporation was formed. C. E. Hart became president and treasurer, and W. A. Hart, his son, became secretary. Mr. Hart has been at his present location since 1886.

Mr. Hart is a member of Admiral Foote Post, G. A. R., and is an enthusiastic Grand Army man; is a member of the New York Commandery of the Loyal Legion; the Sons of the American Revolution; the Sons of Temperance, with which he became connected in 1861; and Hiram Lodge, A. F. & A. M. He is a member of the official board of the Davenport Congregational Church. Genial and hearty in disposition, he is welcomed wherever he goes.

Mr. Hart was married in New Haven, Feb. 12, 1870, to Belle F. Burns, of New Haven, and two children have been born to this union, Edith M. and William A. William A. is an attorney in New York, having graduated from Yale in 1897, after which he studied law in Harvard and the New York Law School. Miss Edith M. lives at home. The family residence is at No. 19 Warren street, New Haven.

HERMAN HESS, whose name is familiar to the people of Meriden, is that of a man who has served them for fifteen years as city and town clerk and registrar of vital statistics. He comes of German parentage, and was born in Meriden April 4, 1861.

Frederick Hess, his father, was born in the Grand Duchy of Baden, in Germany, where he spent his early life, coming to the United States, however, before he had reached his majority. He located in Meriden and was among the first of his nationality to settle in this section of the State. Finding employment as a burnisher in the works of the Meriden Britannia Co., he was there actively engaged all his life. Noted for his industry and integrity, he had many friends, and was held in general respect. In political affairs he was a Democrat, but he never was an office-seeker. In August, 1861, he enlisted in Company H, 6th Conn., V. I., Col. John L. Chatfield and Capt. Henry Bibel being his commanding officers. The following March he was discharged from the service on account of disabilities. The death of this worthy gentleman occurred in May, 1898, and his remains were interred in the East cemetery. In religious connection he was a member of the Lutheran Church. Fraternally he prized his membership in Merriam Post, No. 8, G. A. R., Meriden.

Frederick Hess was married in the city of New York to Miss Johanna Yobke, a native of Germany. She died in 1872, and was buried in the East cemetery. A good wife and mother, she was a good Christian woman and a devout member of the Lutheran Church. To Mr. and Mrs. Hess were born three children: Herman, Frank and Frances, the last named now the wife of James Story, of New Haven.

Herman Hess was afforded somewhat meager advantages for education in his youth. He attended the district school until he was eleven years of age, when he became a cash boy in the mercantile establishment of W. H. Babb, in Meriden, beginning at a salary of $2.50 a week. There he was employed five years, meantime devoting much time to study at home nights, bringing his education up to a more practical standard. In 1877 he obtained a situation with the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railway Co., with which he spent five years as a clerk, being one year in the ticket department and four years in the freight office at Meriden and New Haven. In 1882 he secured a position as bookkeeper with the Meriden Malleable Iron Co., and held same five years. Since September, 1900, he has been a director of the Meriden National Bank.

In 1883 Mr. Hess was elected city auditor to fill a vacancy. In October, 1886, he was elected town clerk and registrar of vital statistics, and in the same year was made city clerk. For fifteen years he has continued to fill these offices with credit to himself and satisfaction to the public. His first election was as a Democrat, but since 1892 he has been the nominee of both parties. He is a genial and popular gentleman, thoroughly efficient, and in every way an honorable and upright man.

Mr. Hess is well versed in Masonic lore, belonging to St. Elmo Commandery, No. 9, K. T., and to Pyramid Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S.; he is also a member of Meriden Center Lodge, No. 68, I. O. O. F.; the K. of P.; the R. A.; the B. P. O. E.;

and the American Order of Foresters. He and his family are members of the Universalist Church.

Mr. Hess was married May 28, 1883, to Eugenia De Crosby Pomeroy, who was born in Meriden, a daughter of Norman W. and Ruth Ann (Norwood) Pomeroy, and a granddaughter of the late Noah Pomeroy. They have had two children, Raymond Pomeroy and Ruth Imogene, the latter deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Hess are people of much refinement and evident culture, and the latter belongs to one of the oldest families in this part of Connecticut.

ALBERT BARNES MATHER, A. M., superintendent of the public schools of Meriden, where for a third of a century he has been prominent in educational matters and a useful citizen, is one of the leading educators of the State.

Prof. Mather was born July 13, 1845, at Fairfield, N. Y., a son of Jairus and Eliza (Jones) Mather, and is a descendant in the eighth generation from Rev. Richard Mather, who came to New England in 1635, stopping for a time in Boston, and going thence to Dorchester, Mass. Rev. Mr. Mather was a native of England, born in 1596 in Lowton, Winwick Parish, of Toxeth Park, son of Thomas and grandson of John Mather, both of Lowton. Rev. Richard Mather married (first) in 1624 Catherine, daughter of Edmund Holt, of Bury, who died in 1655, and he married (second) in 1656 Sarah Story, widow of Rev. John Cotton. He died at Dorchester in 1669, and his wife, Sarah, in 1676.

From Rev. Richard Mather Prof. Mather's lineage is through Timothy, Atherton, William, William (2), Moses and Jairus Mather.

(II) Timothy Mather, son of Rev. Richard, the emigrant settler, born in 1628, in Liverpool, England, married (first) Catherine, daughter of Major Gen. Humphrey Atherton, and (second) March 20, 1678-79, Elizabeth, daughter of Amiel Weeks. As a farmer he settled in Dorchester, Mass., and died in 1684.

(III) Atherton Mather, son of Timothy, born in 1663, married (first) in 1694 Rebecca Stoughton, daughter of Thomas, and (second) in 1705 Mary Lamb, of Roxbury. When a young man Mr. Mather settled at Windsor, Conn. He removed in 1712 to Suffield, Mass., which in 1752 became a part of Connecticut, and was there a prominent and useful man and citizen. For four years he was a deputy from the town to the General Court at Boston. He died in 1734.

(IV) William Mather, son of Atherton, born in 1698 in Windsor, Conn., married in 1821 Silence Butolph, daughter of Daniel Butolph, of Simsbury, Conn., and lived in Suffield.

(V) William Mather (2), son of William, was born April 25, 1735, in Suffield, and later was of Marlboro, Vt., and Fairfield, N. Y. He married (first) April 10, 1760, Helen Allyn Talcott, daughter of Peletiah Allyn; she died in 1770, and he married (second) Martha Dickinson, who died May 29, 1809. Mr. Mather died in Fairfield, N. Y., May 22, 1810.

(VI) Moses Mather, son of William (2), born Feb. 1, 1774, in Suffield, Conn., was later of Marlboro, Vt., and Fairfield, N. Y. He married June 10, 1790, Sarah Dresser, who died Nov. 15, 1863. Mr. Mather died Dec. 20, 1832. Their children, all born between 1802 and 1819, inclusive, were: William, Jairus, Jacob D. and Martha.

(VII) Jairus Mather, son of Moses, born Aug. 23, 1810, at Fairfield, N. Y., married July 30, 1844, Eliza Jones, and to the marriage came children as follows: Albert Barnes, born July 13, 1845; Charles Jairus, born Oct. 22, 1847, who married Dec. 21, 1875, Mary B. Getman, and died March 28, 1884; Laura Maria, born Feb. 7, 1850; and Frederick Dresser, born June 20, 1860.

Albert Barnes Mather, whose name introduces this sketch, received his primary education and was prepared for college in the schools of his native town. He was graduated with honors from Amherst College in 1868, and in the fall of the same year located in Meriden, Conn., having been placed in charge of the Meriden High School for one term. Following this he was given charge of the schools of the Corner District of the same city, and from that time to this has been identified with its schools. Prof. Mather is an intelligent and enthusiastic educator, and is well and favorably known in this line of work throughout the State and beyond State lines. Since 1898 he has been the superintendent of the Meriden schools. He has been president of the State Teachers' Association, and of the State Council of Education, and is a member of Phi Beta Kappa. He has been a prominent member of the Scientific Association, of which he has served as an officer for a decade or more, and is a Knight Templar Mason, and for a dozen years or more was recorder of St. Elmo Commandery, of Meriden. He is also a member of the Home Club, and has served as its president, and is clerk of St. Andrew's Episcopal Parish. He is a popular and genial gentleman.

On Feb. 27, 1887, Mr. Mather was married to Anne Wylie, daughter of Dr. Wylie, late of Meriden.

DAVID STEARN STEVENS was for many years prominently identified with the printing industry of New Haven county, and made for himself an honorable record in business. He was progressive, reliable and energetic, and won the confidence and respect of all with whom he came in contact, in either business or social life. He now makes his home in Northford.

The first of the Stevens family of whom we have any authentic record was Rev. Timothy Stevens, a native of Bristol, Wales, who came to Hartford, Conn., when a young man, and was the first Congregational minister at Glastonbury, being ordained in October, 1693. He died April 16, 1725.

His son, Joseph, born in Hartford, in 1705, was the father of Elisha Stevens, who was born in Glastonbury, in 1752, and married Agnes Kimberly. Their son, Milton Stevens, the grandfather of our subject, was a native of Hartford county, and died in Prospect, New Haven county, when our subject's father was quite small. He had three children: Henry; Mary, wife of Timothy Fowler, of New Haven; and David S.

David Stearn Stevens, Sr., our subject's father, was born July 14, 1823, in Prospect, and there married Eliza Benjamin, who died at the age of thirty-six years, leaving the following children: Albert died at the age of thirty-six years; Alice, born Aug. 17, 1849, married Jared Bassett, of North Haven, and is now deceased; Eliza Seneca, born March 3, 1851, is the wife of H. Maltby, of Northford; Henry, born May 7, 1855, married Ella Augur, a sister of Watson D. Augur, and lives in Wallingford; David S., our subject, is the next in order of birth; and Agnes G., born Oct. 4, 1859, is the wife of Watson D. Augur, of North Branford. For his second wife the father married Frances Hart, of Quinipiac, town of North Haven, and to them were born two children: Fannie, wife of Lea Revere, and Peter, both residents of Millenbeck, Va. When a young man the father moved to Quinipiac, where he engaged in the manufacture of spoons, silverware, etc., until 1869, when he sold his business there and came to Northford, town of North Branford, where he continued to manufacture silverware for some years. In 1881 he removed to Lancaster county, Va., where he purchased property and lived in retirement for some time, and died in 1895, at the age of seventy-two years.

On the maternal side our subject traces his ancestry back to Samuel Benjamin, who was married, in 1731, to Elizabeth Boswick, and in 1754 removed from Stratford to Hartland, Conn. His children were John, Patty, Asher and Samuel. The last named was a soldier of the Revolutionary war, enlisting from Hartland, in June, 1776, for one year, under Capt. Woodbridge. He married Rachel Holcomb, of Granby, and to them were born three children: David, who married Rachel Moore, and lived in Southwick, Mass.; Eleazer, father of Eliza; and Samuel, who married Asenath Holcomb, and lived in Granby, Conn. Eleazer Benjamin married Polly Case, of Simsbury, Conn., and to them were born the following children: Rachel, born Aug. 18, 1811, married Dr. Russell H. Tiffany, of Canton, Conn., and died April 23, 1863; Abigail, born Feb. 1, 1813, married Anson Holcomb, of Simsbury, and died Jan. 18, 1890; Polly, born Feb. 10, 1815, married Charles P. Clark, of East Granby, Conn., and died Dec. 16, 1892; Mariette, born Nov. 28, 1817, died Sept. 13, 1819; Mariette, born May 21, 1821, died unmarried Sept. 14, 1853; Eliza, the mother of our subject, was born Jan. 1, 1824, and died Sept. 8, 1860; DeWitt Clinton, born June 4, 1826, went to California as a gold seeker in 1849, and is still a resident of Georgetown, that State; Fleazer, born Jan. 6, 1828, died Dec. 25, 1850; and Scott, born Oct. 26, 1830, died October, 1853.

David S. Stevens, Jr., was born in Quinnipiac, town of North Haven, April 4, 1857, and for three years was a student at Gen. Russell's Institute, in New Haven, and two years at Durham Academy. Soon after the completion of his education he conceived the idea of the card printing industry—a business that was soon afterward taken up by scores of firms throughout Connecticut, depending for sales upon newspaper advertising and the mail order system of delivery. He was the first to engage in this business extensively. Beginning as he did in a corner of his father's silverware factory, with a small press, he increased his business by continual application and the use of original methods, to an establishment occupying three floors and employing from seventy-five to eighty hands. Owing to various causes the business in time lost patronage, and after twenty-two years of successful operation Mr. Stevens discontinued it. In connection with his printing business he dealt extensively in novelties, scrap pictures, etc., and in a single year imported $50,000 worth of scrap pictures alone.

On Oct. 9, 1879, Mr. Stevens married Miss Clara Hoadley Maltby, a daughter of Chapman Maltby and granddaughter of Julius Maltby, natives of Northford. She is the fourth in order of birth in a family of eight children, the others being Harriette; Flora Belle, wife of John M. Dutton, of Hamden, Conn.; Arthur, a resident of Wallingford; Robert, who is engaged in the real estate business in Seattle, Wash.; Wilbert, who is connected with a coffee house at Plainfield, N. J.; Douglass Fowler, a resident of Matawan, N. J.; and Mary Irene, who died at the age of twenty years. Mr. Stevens and his wife have five children, whose names and dates of birth are as follows: Douglass Maltby, Sept. 4, 1880; Clifford Fleetwood, July 8, 1885; Wilbert Benjamin, Dec. 3, 1886; David Stearn, July 23, 1888; and Clara Margaret, Dec. 31, 1889. The eldest son is a graduate of the normal school at Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania.

Mr. and Mrs. Stevens are members of the Congregational Church, and give liberally to its support, and politically he is an ardent Republican. In 1899 he most efficiently represented his town in the State Legislature, and was a member of the Railroad Committee. He is a member of the Second Company, Governor's Foot Guards. Courteous, genial, well-informed, alert and enterprising, he stands today one of the leading men of his town—a man who is a power in the community.

AUGUSTUS HOWARD JONES, who is named in honor of the pilot who first brought the steamer "Great Eastern" into New York harbor, was born in the city of New York Dec. 21, 1851.

Joseph Jones, his father, was born in Wales, of which country his father was also a native. Joseph Jones was reared in his native country, and learned the trade of scroll sawyer. Being a natural genius, he could successfully turn his hand to almost any kind of mechanical labor. Before attaining his majority he crossed the Atlantic, and spent some time at Quebec, Canada. Thence he went to New York, where he followed his trade. His death was caused by septicaemia, brought on by the bite of a dog, and his body was deposited in Greenwood cemetery, Brooklyn. While living in Quebec he married Martha Jackson, also a native of Wales, who passed her last days in Meriden tenderly cared for in the home of her son whose name begins this article; her last resting place is in Greenwood cemetery, beside the remains of her husband. They had six children, namely: William, who died in New York; Nathaniel, a mechanic, who also died in New York; Jane, wife of William Luckey, of Meriden; Augustus Howard; Walter, a citizen of Meriden; and an infant that died unnamed.

Augustus H. Jones was deprived of a father's care at the early age of nine years. He continued to attend school until twelve years old, and then entered a store, where he might earn something to aid in his maintenance. Anxious to secure an education, he attended a night school while discharging his duties in the store by day. At the end of three years he left this employment in order to give a year's time exclusively to study. Having a natural taste for mechanics, he determined to master a trade, and secured a position in a brass foundry where his brother, Nathaniel, was a foreman, serving an apprenticeship of four and one-half years. For the first six months he received as compensation three dollars per week. Being energetic and ambitious, he soon made himself valuable to his employer, and during the next year he was paid ten dollars weekly. In time he became highly expert as a coremaker, and his salary for the succeeding years was, respectively, fifteen, twenty and thirty dollars per week. After completing his trade he worked one year as a contractor in the manufacture of locks.

In 1867 Mr. Jones came to Meriden and spent the two years succeeding as foreman in the brass foundry of the Bradley & Hubbard Manufacturing Co., making gas fixtures and similar articles. He then started a small brass foundry, but at the end of two weeks he received such a flattering offer from his former employers that he sold out to them and made a five-years contract to resume his former position. He continued in a responsible relation with this concern until 1882, when he assisted in organizing the Foster Hardware Co., to carry on the production of brass goods. In 1885 this concern was reorganized, under the name of the Meriden Bronze Co., of which Mr. Jones became president in 1891. His pluck and energy were admired by the older manufacturers of Meriden, who often tendered him assistance, and he continued to operate the business fourteen years. The financial depression of the latter part of the nineteenth century was severely felt by all the industries of Meriden, and Mr. Jones was forced out, with a loss of one hundred thousand dollars. But his ambitious spirit could not be put down, and he began business again in February, 1901, under the name of the A. H. Jones Manufacturing Co., and is engaged in the manufacture of novelties.

Mr. Jones was married, in Meriden, in January, 1870, to Miss Jennie F. Logan, who was born in Meriden, a daughter of Thomas and Margaret Logan, both now deceased. Mrs. Jones is a cultivated lady, fit companion for an energetic and intelligent man. She presides over their modest home with that ease and grace which betoken good breeding. Two children have been born to this couple, of whom the youngest died in infancy. The other, William H. Jones, is associated with his father in business. The family are identified with the First Congregational Church.

Of genial and companionable nature, Mr. Jones has naturally allied himself with various social and fraternal organizations of his city. He is a member of the Home Club, and is a thirty-second-degree Mason, affiliated with Meridian Lodge, No. 77, A. F. & A. M.; Keystone Chapter, No. 27, R. A. M.; Hamilton Council, No. 22, R. & S. M.; and St. Elmo Commandery, No. 9, K. T. In politics he is a staunch Republican. He has served four years as a member of the Meriden common council, and during that period acted on the committees on Fire, Sewers and By-laws. He served for two years more as an alderman, and was mayor pro tem. during the last year, and chairman of Police, By-laws and Lamps committees.

ALBERT H. BARTLETT was for about twenty years one of the successful building contractors of New Haven, and he has left many substantial evidences of his skillful and thorough work in that city and other places in New Haven county.

Mr. Bartlett was born in Northampton, Mass., a son of Samuel Bartlett. The father, who was also a contractor, laid out all the roads in Northampton. Our subject's mother was engaged during her earlier years as a teacher. Albert H. was one of fourteen children, several of whom still survive.

Albert H. Bartlett spent his youth in New Jersey, where he early engaged in carpentering, and at the age of eighteen he undertook the erection of two houses at Windland, that State. About 1871 he came to New Haven, where he was a contractor of rate until his death, in December, 1890, putting up a large number of houses. Some fine residences in Orange street, New Haven, in Fair Haven and elsewhere testify to the grade of work which he executed, and his financial success would be sufficient proof in itself, having been gained solely on the merits of his work. A man of the highest honor and strict integrity, he commanded respect for his personal qualities no less than for his business ability, and was held in high esteem by the large number of people with whom he came into daily contact in his busy career. His shop was located on the present site of the New England Telephone Co.'s building, and he furnished employment to a number of men. Fraternally Mr. Bartlett was a member of the Knights of Pythias (in which he held the office of treasurer) and the New England Order of Protection. He was a Republican in political affiliation.

In October, 1870, Mr. Bartlett was united in marriage with Miss Marion Bird, a native of Brooklyn, N. Y., and two children blessed this union: Frank was a student at Yale Law School, and is engaged in business in New Haven; Alice attended the Wesleyan Academy at Wilbraham, Mass., and is now devoting herself to the study of music. The family reside in a comfortable home at No. 312 Orange street, New Haven, and they have many friends in the city. They worship at the Church of the Redeemer.

CHARLES W. S. FROST, M. D., whose scientific acquirements, upright character and devotion to his profession have given him a leading place among the physicians of Waterbury, was born in that city Dec. 22, 1857, a son of Warren S. Frost, who traces his ancestry to Samuel Frost, of England.

Samuel Frost came to America from the mother country in 1700, and on March 21, 1733, wedded Naomi Fenn, of Wallingford.

David Frost, son of Samuel and Naomi, was born in Southington, Conn., Sept. 10, 1743, and died Dec. 15, 1812. During the war of the Revolution he was a soldier in the Continental army. He married Mary Beach Nov. 6, 1761, a daughter of Joseph Beach, a prominent man of his day.

Enoch Frost, son of David, was born in Southington Jan. 8, 1765, and died May 27, 1822. His entire life was passed as a farmer. Anna Culver was his wife and they became the parents of six children: Anna, Stephen C., Selah, Nancy, Enoch W. and Emice.

Selah Frost, the Doctor's grandfather, was born in Waterbury Feb. 2, 1708, and died in 1838. He was engaged as a merchant in Torrington. His wife was Ursula Brooker and they reared a family of two children: Mary and Warren S., the father of the Doctor. Mary married George Mason, who is now deceased.

Warren S. Frost was born in Torrington Jan. 10, 1827, and his long and useful life was terminated April 20, 1899. He married Miss Edna J. Spring, of Collinsville, Conn., a daughter of Thomas Spring, who was born in Granby, Conn., and was a farmer and wheelwright. The Springs are of English extraction and the first representative of the family on the American shores came over about 1680. Mrs. Edna J. Frost died Sept. 20, 1897, and is remembered as a woman of far more than the usual gifts and attractions. She was a good wife to her husband and a wise and helpful mother to her children. Mr. Frost was a Republican and served many years in the Waterbury common council. The family were all connected with the Congregational Church.

Dr. Charles W. S. Frost spent his boyhood days in Waterbury where he acquired his elementary and general English education in the public schools and the Waterbury English and Classical School. He entered Yale Medical School in 1870 and graduated from the College of Physicians and Surgeons of New York City in 1880. His vacations were spent in the hospitals of the great city, and soon after his graduation he came to Waterbury, opening an office here. The summer of 1880 marked the beginning of a singularly successful professional career. Dr. Frost and Miss Jennie G. Davis were married Feb. 5, 1880. By this union was born one daughter, Edna J. Dr. Frost was again married Dec. 31, 1891, to Mrs. Minnie L. Ryder, the daughter of Leander Wright, of West Ashford, Conn. Two children have been born of this union: Barbara and Sela. The Doctor is a Republican and was president of the board of health for two years, of which he has been a member since 1887. He is city and town health officer and is a member of the staff of Waterbury Hospital. Dr. Frost was secretary of the Waterbury Medical Society for eleven years and is a member of both the State and County Medical Societies. On the membership roll of the Masonic fraternity, the K. of P., the Red Men, the R. A., the Heptasophs, the K. O. T. M., the O. U. A. M., the Sons of the American Revolution and several social organizations, such as the Waterbury Club and the Golf Association, the name of Dr. Frost is found; and wherever he appears he is sure to be a welcome presence. Dr. Frost is a member of the First Congregational Church and is a man of fine character and superior professional standing.

CHRISTIAN FISCHER, one of Meriden's best known German-American citizens, and the capable foreman of the packing department of the Bradley & Hubbard Manufacturing Co., was born at Biskirchen, Rhine Province, Germany, April 27, 1846.

Henry Christian Fischer, father of Christian, was a native of the same place, and was well educated in the German schools. At the age of seventeen years, according to the law of his land, he entered the Prussian army, joining the cavalry branch of the service, and spent three years in defending his country. Among the many experiences of his army life was an expedition upon which he was sent with a detail to capture horses, at Wallachia, Roumania, where he secured a mare with a little colt. He kept the latter for himself and it grew to be a pet of the family for many years, reaching the age of forty-four years. The other members of the family to which Henry Christian Fischer belonged were: Frank, who became a minister in the Dutch Reformed Church; Frederick, who went to Paris, and was there during the Revolution and was lost to his family afterward; and Emma, who married Valentine Konold, came to America, and resides in Collinsville, Conn. By trade Mr. Fischer was a blacksmith and learned his work at his father's forge. For many years he carried on a successful business, reared a large family and was a much respected man. His death was caused by cramps attacking him when bathing in a river, near his home, June 7, 1846. His marriage was to Katharine Zipp, in Niederhausen, Nassau, Germany. She was a most estimable woman, a devoted wife and the mother of eight children. Both parents were consistent members of the Dutch Reformed Church. The children were: Katharine, now deceased, was the wife of August Pistorius, of Meriden; Elizabeth died in Germany, the wife of Frederick Fischer, superintendent of a factory at Ems, who died from heart failure; Conrad, who died in Collinsville, Conn., in 1894; Ernestine, who married Carl Montanus and lives in Germany; Christina, who married Emil Weidig, died with her husband from asphyxiation in Germany; Louisa, who died in infancy; Louisa (2) was the second wife of August Pistorius; and lastly Christian, the subject proper of this sketch.

Christian Fischer received an excellent German education in his native land and there became proficient in the blacksmith trade. His service was demanded in the army when he was seventeen years old, but he decided that three years of his life could be better spent in other directions, and with this end in view he left his home and made his way to Bremen, where he took passage on a sailing vessel for America, arriving in New York in December, 1865.

As a brother was already located at Collinsville, Conn., the young German lad made his way thither and soon secured employment at his trade with the Collins Company, and there he remained two and one-half years. In 1868 Mr. Fischer came to Meriden and worked in the machine room of the Bradley & Hubbard Manufacturing Co., until 1869, entering then the shipping department of the business. For a period of thirty-four years he has satisfactorily filled the position of foreman of this important department, gaining the confidence of the company in greater degree as the years go by, and they more fully realize the earnest and honest service which he renders. Mr. Fischer is gifted with the ability which all do not possess, by which he is able to manage his department in a thoroughly satisfactory, orderly and economical manner with the respect of his assistants and to the benefit of his employers.

On September 24, 1870, Mr. Fischer was married, in Meriden, to Miss Johanna Maschmeyer, a sister of August Maschmeyer. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Fischer five children have been born:

Henry August, Theodore A., Augusta A., Lillian L. and Catherine E., all of whom reside at home but Theodore, who resides at Medford Hillside, Miss. While Mr. Fischer has a tendency to lean toward the Democratic party in politics, he declares himself more of an independent, being a man of intelligence and ability, perfectly capable of deciding the merits of a candidate, or to measure for himself. During 1879 and 1880 he was a member of the city council from the third ward, and was a member of several important committees. Mr. Fischer has always been deeply interested in the cause of education and he was the first German resident of Meriden to call a meeting to look toward the establishment of a German-American school, and was one of the trustees of this institution for six years. For a considerable period he had been a trustee of the West school district before the consolidation. Mr. Fischer has been a member of the German Aid Society for thirty-two years. He and family are all members of the Universalist Church, active in its work in every direction. All his life he has believed in progress and advancement and lends his assistance to all worthy objects. Mr. Fischer enjoys popularity with all classes, is industrious and upright, and a man who is devoted to the welfare of his family. To him Meriden means home, and he takes an interest in every measure which is calculated to benefit her locally or abroad. Mr. Fischer has added to the beauty of the city by the erection of a fine dwelling place on Fourth street, which he built in 1875, at a time when there had been little building on that street. It is a roof under which generous hospitality is offered to the hosts of friends who are made welcome by Mr. Fischer and his most estimable family.

GEORGE WILLIAM HENRY HUGHES. A prominent representative of an old and most honorable family, which has been conspicuous in the State of Connecticut for many years, is George William Henry Hughes, a citizen who has been identified with the material growth of New Haven for a long period.

Mr. Hughes was born in Prospect, Conn., Aug. 28, 1848, a son of Reuben Beecher and Harriet M. (Sloper) Hughes. The great-grandfather of George W. H. Hughes was sturdy, honest William Hues, a man well known in his day as an excellent farmer and respected citizen. Reuben Hughes, son of William Hues, was born in Southington, Conn., and early in life learned the trade of carpenter and joiner. His talents lay in the direction of invention, and he displayed remarkable mechanical skill. One of his machines intended for the dressing of flax was the cause of his losing his left right hand, thus probably causing many of the excellent ideas on machinery to remain within his fertile brain. It is known that he did a soldier's duty in the war of 1812, and at that time went to New London, and later settled in Southbury, Mass. He married Jane Beecher, who belonged to the celebrated Beecher family, which traces clear ancestry as far back as 1637 as the time of the settlement of this family in New England.

Reuben Beecher Hughes, a son of Reuben, who with carefulness and accuracy has published an interesting record of the Beecher family and connecting branches, is one of the best-known and highly regarded citizens of New Haven. He was born in Southbury, Mass., Jan. 27, 1820, in the first house south of the famous White Oak Tree on the Mitchell land. This now beautiful mansion is the residence of William Beecher, a prominent citizen of Southbury. Soon after this date Reuben Hughes, Sr., purchased the home, lying between the residences of Ezra Beecher and Nathaniel Beecher, south of the school-house. Here his boyhood days were passed, attending school as opportunity offered, and assisting in the farm work. The family being large, Reuben also worked occasionally for the neighboring farmers, but in 1836 removed to New Haven. Here he remained four years with Pernet Booth, and learned the trade of painter. Just about the time that Mr. Hughes was prepared to commence a career of his own in the trade he had mastered, there fell a business depression over the country, and then began the musical career which has made Mr. Hughes famous. Music had always been with him a passion, and upon his settlement in the city he had connected himself with several church choirs, and now, when there was no promising outlook in his trade, he turned his musical ability to good account. Mr. Hughes is a master of the 'cello, trombone, string bass, ophicleide, violin and other instruments, and he was soon recognized as a superior teacher of band music. In this connection it may be mentioned that many of the members of his mother's family were distinguished musicians.

A natural mechanic, Mr. Hughes became skilled in many lines, was an excellent shoemaker, and learned the trade of toolmaker, and also became an expert engineer, and subsequent to the Civil war made tools for manufacturing pistols, cutlery, clocks, guns, carriage springs and many other articles. For a great many years he was engineer in the works of the Wheeler & Wilson Company, at Bridgeport, Conn., and was toolmaker for the New Haven and the Waterbury Clock Companies.

Prior to coming to New Haven Mr. Hughes worked at shoemaking, also did carpentering, and at the same time cultivated a farm which he owned at Prospect, living there for a period of nine years. He was sent to the Legislature from that town, for the session of 1849-50, serving also as justice of the peace, tax collector, member of the school board and lieutenant in a military company.

It is in musical circles that Mr. Hughes is so widely and favorably known. For fifteen years he was a member of the Union City and Wheeler & Wilson celebrated male quartette, also the Wheeler & Wilson Band, was a member of the Second Company Governor's Foot Guards Band, and when over seventy-five years of age he played in bands and marched fifteen miles. In Naugatuck he had charge of the orchestra, and for ten years led the choir in the Methodist Church, and later for several years in the Congregational Church, living in this place for fifteen years. For fifty years Mr. Hughes has been engaged in organizing and instructing bands, orchestras and church choirs. In 1877 he organized an orchestra for the benefit of the New Haven City Missions, conducting it for twenty years free of charge.

Mr. Hughes is a member of the Church of the Redeemer in New Haven, and in his earlier years he was a member of the choir. For many years his orchestra played for five different services every Sunday. Mr. Hughes is still in the enjoyment of vigorous health, and presents the appearance of a man not over sixty years of age, although the records show the almost unbelievable fact that he is eighty-two. On his trusty wheel he sometimes covers as many as fifty miles a day, and his friends would not be surprised if he made a "century run." A man of high order of talent, he has always favored all enterprises that in combination with music work for the uplifting and refining of the city's life.

On Dec. 31, 1840, Reuben Beecher Hughes and Harriet M. Sloper were united in marriage. She was born in Bath, England, May 1, 1821, a daughter of the Rev. Jacob Sloper, and the children born to this union were: George William Henry, born Aug. 28, 1848, and Charlotte Matilda, born Aug. 14, 1858. In his political belief Mr. Hughes has always been a Republican, but has not in late years taken any active interest in party affairs. In 1882 he retired from mechanical pursuits, and is amply supported by the income derived from the labors of a life of strict temperance, industry, prudence, economy and integrity, and is now able to enjoy the fruits resulting from such a life, without labor or care. Mr. Hughes has legions of friends and myriads of acquaintances.

While George W. H. Hughes was still a child his parents removed from Prospect, Conn., to Naugatuck, and here he took advantage of the excellent educational opportunities afforded, and in the high school was under the instruction of the well-remembered A. N. Lewis, graduating from this school in 1864. The musical talent which was a most natural inheritance from a gifted father, soon displayed itself in young Hughes, and his entrance into the business world was as a tuner of organs about twenty-five years ago. Under the firm style of Vogel & Hughes, he became interested in the manufacture of organs, in Norwich, Conn., this enterprise prospering until its career was closed by a disastrous fire destroying nearly all of the property of the firm.

With the assistance of Mr. J. W. Huntington, a financial magnate, Mr. Hughes then built a factory in Norwich, and until the death of Mr. Huntington, in 1879, the manufacture of organs was successfully carried on in this place. Then Mr. Hughes closed this business and returned to New Haven, embarking in the coal and flour trade at No. 34 Church street, conducting this very successfully until 1891, when he sold this business and organized the Royal Shoe store, which one year later he gave to his cousin, Harry Hughes, who is still conducting it.

Mr. Hughes is a man of most varied talents, and possesses business ability of a superior order. For some ten years he has been actively engaged in the real estate business, and in 1889 he purchased an interest in the Hyperion Theater, in this city, and with his partner, Dr. A. E. Winchell, has improved this property very greatly. It had been badly managed and required renovation and business tactics to place it upon a paying basis. Mr. Hughes is also a stockholder, owning a controlling interest in a corset factory, and also in some prosperous patent medicines, outside of this city. Active, alert and energetic, Mr. Hughes has long been a very important factor in the business life of New Haven. In the management and sale of real estate he has been far-seeing and politic, and his management of various properties and their disposal have brought him large commissions, notably in the case of the "Florence House." Howard avenue in this city has been principally built up by Mr. Hughes, and some of its edifices are still his property. Soon after building the imposing Hughes block, on the corner of Congress and Asylum streets, he disposed of it to Mr. Newman.

In 1886 Mr. Hughes was married to Miss Maude Kellogg, of Bridgeport, Conn., a daughter of William Kellogg, of that city, and to this union was born one son, George W. R., Sept. 14, 1887. This young man is a student of the Day school, in New Haven, and is a very interested member of the foot-ball team. Mr. Hughes votes with the Republican party, but has no political ambition. His business interests in this city are large and growing, but are under his control, his ability and grasp of affairs making him one of the leading factors in the growth and development of this beautiful city.

CHARLES ELIHU IVES, a prominent market gardener and selector of Cheshire, New Haven county, was born in that town Sept. 23, 1857, and is a descendant of John Ives, the first of the name in this county. The grandfather, Elihu Ives, was a native of the town of Wallingford, where he engaged in farming during early life, and where he married Rachel Blakeslee. Their children were Charles; John, a resident of Marion, Iowa; Elihu, of the same place; George; and Norman, all of whom, with the exception of Charles, went West and located in Iowa. The grandfather also removed to Iowa, becoming one of the first settlers of Marion, where he took up land and engaged in farming until his death. He was a Jeffersonian Democrat, and a member of the Baptist Church.

Charles Ives, the father of our subject, was born and reared in Wallingford, and when a young man came to Cheshire, where for several years he engaged in agricultural pursuits upon what is now known as the Morgan farm. He then purchased the farm now operated by his son, and upon that place made many improvements. His death occurred Sept. 4, 1866, on the Morgan farm, and his remains were interred in Cheshire cemetery. He, too, was an earnest member of the Baptist Church, and a Democrat in politics. In Cheshire he married Sarah L. Moss, a native of that town, and a daughter of Joseph Moss. She is still living, and now makes her home in Wallingford. To them were born five children, namely: George Rodney, who died in infancy; George Rodney (2d), also deceased; Mary C., wife of Amos Ives, of Wallingford; Matilda L., wife of Robert Miner; and Charles Elihu.

During his boyhood Charles Elihu Ives attended the district schools of his native town and early became familiar with the duties which fall to the lot of the agriculturist. He was only nine years of age when his father died, and he early took charge of the home farm, and has since devoted his energies to its operation. It consists of seventy-five acres, upon which he has made many useful and valuable improvements. He is engaged principally in market gardening, and in this branch of industry is meeting with good success.

Mr. Ives was married at Meriden, Conn., in 1887, to Miss Harriet L. Todd, a daughter of James and Esther (Hall) Todd, and granddaughter of Streat Todd, all natives of Wolcott. She is a most estimable lady and a member of the Episcopal Church. In his political views Mr. Ives is a Democrat and has filled the offices of selectman and assessor of his town, and is now a member of the board of selectmen. Fraternally he is a member of the Grange. Industrious, enterprising and progressive, he commands the respect and confidence of all with whom he comes in contact, and has many warm friends throughout the town.

ANDREW HENDERSON has been engaged in business in New Haven as a florist since 1875, and has long been regarded as one of the best in that line in the city. He is a native of Sweden, born June 24, 1858, son of John H. Henderson, who passed all his life in that country. Our subject's father was a machinist, and always followed that trade. His death at the age of sixty-two was the result of an accident. He married Sadie Erickson, also a native of Sweden, whose father was a farmer, and seven children were born to them, six of whom are yet living: John, in Sweden; Charles, a resident of Emporia, Kans.; Hannah, in Sweden; Augustus, in Vienna, Austria; Andrew, our subject; and David L., a machinist, of New Haven. The mother died at the age of sixty-one. Both parents attended the Swedish Lutheran Church.

Andrew Henderson spent his boyhood in his native land, attended the common schools, and at an early age commenced work at the business which he has continued to follow. He worked at nursery and landscape gardening until coming to this country, in 1871. His first three years in America were spent in New Rochelle, N. Y., with James S. Knapp, and he was subsequently in business a short time at Long Branch, N. J., before coming to Westville, in 1875. For four years he was partner in a florist business, at the end of that time starting in business for himself in a small way at first. His business has attained such proportions, however, that he now has more land than any other florist in the place, having four acres devoted to growing roses, violets and carnations. He gives employment to a number of men, having a fine local patronage, and supplying the large florists in the city of New Haven. His place of business is at No. 845 Whalley avenue. Mr. Henderson caters to first-class trade only, and makes a specialty of the best grade of flowers. By integrity and honest dealing he has gained a substantial footing among the reliable business men of Westville and New Haven and has prospered deservedly.

Mr. Henderson was married, in 1885, to Miss Ellen Jane Pritchard, a native of England, who, on coming to America, lived in Pennsylvania before her marriage. Three children have been born to them, Seigert, Ida and Jennie. The family attend the Episcopal Church. Mr. Henderson is a Republican in political faith.

CHARLES HENRY FRISBIE, one of Branford's respected citizens, comes of good old New England Revolutionary stock. A native of Connecticut, he was born Oct. 28, 1836, in Stony Creek, New Haven county, and was reared and educated in Branford, in the northern part of the town, called the Mill Plain District.

Josiah Frisbie, grandfather of our subject, was a native of Branford, and died at the age of ninety-one years. He was a farmer by occupation, and served as a soldier in the war of the Revolution. Four children were born to him: Augustus, Levi, Samuel and Lavinia. Of these,

Levi Frisbie, father of our subject, was also of Branford nativity, and followed the pursuit of a fisherman at Stony Creek, where he died at the age of fifty-four years. By his wife, Betty (Beach), daughter of Elnathan Beach, he had five children: Elnathan B., Russell, Anna B., Thaddeus B. and Charles Henry.

Charles Henry Frisbie, the subject proper of these lines, learned the trade of carpenter, and followed same up to and some time after the Civil war. On Aug. 13, 1862, he enlisted in Company E, 15th Conn. V. I., and participated in the first battle of Fredericksburg, after which he was placed on detached service in the quartermaster's department, 2d Division, 9th Corps, Army of the Potomac. Later he had charge, as wagonmaster, of all the land transportation at Newbern, N. C., over one thousand horses and mules and one hundred men. After three years' service he was honorably discharged at New Haven, Conn., July 11, 1805. After the close of hostilities Mr. Frisbie followed his trade and lumbering up to June 3, 1874, when he had an accident with a buzz-saw whereby he lost his left arm, at the elbow. Since 1890 he has been engaged in the manufacture of hammer handles for granite cutters.

On Dec. 31, 1854, Mr. Frisbie married Mary Foote, daughter of Jonathan and Abigail R. (Linsley) Foote, of North Branford, Conn., and they have one son, Frank H. Socially Mr. Frisbie is a member of Mason Rogers Post, No. 7, G. A. R., of Branford, and served three consecutive terms as commander of the post, an evidence in itself of his popularity in the G. A. R. In politics he is a Republican, and has held the office of assessor two years.

JERE DEWEY EGGLESTON, M. D., of Meriden, where for twenty and more years he has successfully practiced his profession and been a valued and useful citizen of that manufacturing center, is one of the commonwealth's selfmade men.

Born Oct. 28, 1853, in Longmeadow, Mass., Dr. Eggleston is a son of the late Jere D. and Louisa (Carew) Eggleston, and a descendant in the seventh generation from Begat Eggleston, who was born in 1590, and came probably from Exeter, England, to Dorchester, Mass., in 1630, only ten years after the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers. He was a freeman in 1631, was an original member of Mr. Warham's Church and with it removed to Windsor, Conn., in 1635, becoming one of the first settlers of the town. His second wife was Mary Talcott, of Hartford. Mr. Eggleston died Sept. 1, 1674, and his wife Mary died in Windsor Dec. 8, 1657.

From this first American ancestor Dr. Eggleston's lineage is through James, Nathaniel, Nathaniel (2), Eber, Eli and Jere D. Eggleston.

(II) James Eggleston, son of Begat, the emigrant settler, born in England, married Hester, sister of Roger Williams, and she is said to have been the first female white child born in Hartford, Conn. Mr. Eggleston was made a freeman in 1637. He was in the Pequot fight, for which services he received in 1671 a grant of fifty acres of land. He died Dec. 1, 1679, at the age of fifty-nine. His widow married, April 29, 1680, James Enno.

(III) Nathaniel Eggleston, son of James, born Aug. 15, 1666, married, Sept. 13, 1694, Hannah Ashley, of Westfield, Mass., born Dec. 26, 1675, and removed from Windsor to Westfield, where his death occurred.

(IV) Nathaniel Eggleston (2), son of Nathaniel, born in Westfield April 3, 1712, married, Aug. 17, 1741, Esther Wait, of Northampton, and died in Westfield March 7, 1790, aged nearly ninety. Their children were: Eber, Simeon and Abner.

(V) Eber Eggleston, son of Nathaniel (2), married Submit Judd, of Southampton, who died July 4, 1821. Mr. Eggleston was a soldier of the war of 1812, was wounded in battle, losing three fingers, and was a United States pensioner. His children were: Eli, born in Westfield in 1784; Eber, born in 1790; Eunice; Judd; Submit; Laura; and Esther.

(VI) Eli Eggleston, son of Eber, born in 1784, married (first) Oct. 1, 1805, Zeruiah Searle, born at Southampton in August, 1780, and died in Westfield Oct. 3, 1826, at thirty-seven; he married (second) Laura, niece of Benjamin Eggleston, of Middlefield, Conn. Eli Eggleston was an honest, industrious, cheerful and obliging man, a great reader of the Bible and was greatly respected. He was engaged in farming. His children were: Eunice, born Dec. 19, 1806, died Sept. 1, 1827; Minerva, born April 19, 1808, married, in November, 1834, Sylvester Cooper, and died at Springfield, Mass., Feb. 2, 1841, had children, Cornelius and Russell; William Judd, born Aug. 21, 1809, died in Hampton, Mass., had three sons and three daughters; Zeruiah, born Feb. 7, 1811, married May 3, 1835, Abel Pendleton, of Norfolk, Conn., and died there July 31, 1842, had two daughters, Mrs. Sherman Kimberly and Mrs. Humphry, both of Goshen, Conn.; Jere Dewey is mentioned farther on; Electa, born Jan. 4, 1814, married Sumner Cooper, of Suffield, Conn., and removed to Woodstock, Conn., had three children; Russell Searle, born in September, 1816; Harmon, born Jan. 18, 1818, married Maria Root, of Westfield, where he died; Eli, born Sept. 21, 1819, died Feb. 18, 1822; Julia, born in 1821, died when young; and Julia (2), born Sept. 30, 1822, married, June 22, 1842, James D. Collins, then a gunsmith of Colts factory, Hartford.

(VII) Jere Dewey Eggleston, son of Eli, born July 11, 1812, married, in 1831, Louisa Carew, and resided for a time at Broad Brook, East Windsor, Conn. He was a miller by occupation, a man of generous impulses, of strict integrity and of decided opinions. He died in Enfield, Conn., March 10, 1855, and his widow passed away some years later. Their children were: (1) George, who died in 1876, leaving a son, Charles. (2) Mary Louise married Horace King, and had five children. (3) Arthur F., born Oct. 23, 1844, and married, March 1, 1871, Mary Isabel Abbe, of Windsor Locks, Conn. Judge Eggleston is now one of the foremost lawyers of the State, a member of the firm of Buck & Eggleston, of Hartford. He was prepared for college at Monson Academy, Monson, Mass. The breaking out of the Civil war gave him a spirit of uneasiness and restlessness that could only be quieted by actual participation in the conflict, and though not yet as old as was generally deemed necessary he managed to enlist in the 16th Mass. V. I., followed its vicissitudes until it was mustered out, and received an honorable discharge. He then resumed his studies, in 1864 entering Williams College, from which he was graduated in 1868. He read law in the office of Strong & Buck, Hartford, and was admitted to the Bar of Hartford county in 1872. Some time after Mr. Strong's death in 1872 he became a member of the firm of Buck & Eggleston, an association which has since remained unbroken, and which has developed into one of the strongest law firms in the state, as well as one of the most successful. Judge Eggleston is a Republican, and active and influential in the councils of the party. He has served as president of the common council. He served for a period of ten years as attorney for the board of County Commissioners, and filled the office of county treasurer a like number of years. In 1877 he was appointed judge of the Hartford police court, and continued on the bench until 1883, when he declined re-election. In 1888 he succeeded Hon. William Hammersley to the office of State Attorney for Hartford county, a position he has since filled with signal ability and efficiency. From 1892 to 1895 he was police commissioner of the city of Hartford. (4) Hannah married B. Tillson, and resided in Pomfret, Conn. (5) Herbert E. (6) Jere Dewey, Jr.

Dr. Eggleston's father having died in the son's infancy, and his mother while he was yet a youth, he became self-reliant and dependent when a mere lad, but rose equal to circumstances and conditions. At thirteen years of age he began supporting himself by working on a farm, and later by teaching school he was prepared for and passed through college, graduating from Williams College, and later in 1879 from the College of Physicians and Surgeons at New York City. He began the practice of medicine in the town of Windsor Locks, Conn., and in about 1886 located in the city of Meriden, where through his studious habits, close attention to his profession and agreeable manners he gained the good will and confidence of the people, and obtained a large share of the practice in that growing city, and is now in the enjoyment of an extensive and successful patronage. He has kept abreast of the times in the profession and has earned the reputation of being a conservative and safe practitioner. Like his brother, Judge Eggleston, the Doctor is a Republican in his political affiliations and has given some time to the duties of citizenship, having served the municipality of Meriden for several years as an alderman. Dr. Eggleston is known as a man of strict integrity and honor, and as a man of energy and snap. He is self-made, his position in society and his professional success being due wholly to the force of his make-up. He is prominent in his community in both Freemasonry and Odd Fellowship, and is a member of the local orders there.

On May 18, 1881, Dr. Eggleston was married to Elizabeth C. Duncan, of Poquonock, Windsor, Conn., and to them have come children as follows: Robert D., born March 7, 1882; Ralph B., born November, 1884, and died March 19, 1886; Jeanette

L., born April 18, 1887; Arthur J., born Nov. 19, 1890; and Jere Dudley, born May 29, 1894.

Mrs. Eggleston is a native of Poquonock, and the daughter of one of its prominent citizens and manufacturers—Thomas Duncan (2), who is a native of Scotland, where he was born Aug. 13, 1832, son of Thomas Duncan, a descendant of an excellent Scotch ancestry. Thomas Duncan (2) for upwards of forty years has been a resident of Connecticut, and here has been prominently connected with religious and civil interests. He is an expert paper manufacturer and for many years has been identified with the making of paper in Poquonock and elsewhere in the State. Late in the 'nineties he removed to New York city. His first wife, the mother of his children, was formerly Miss Grace Yule, who was born June 14, 1834, and died Feb. 15, 1867. Their five children were: T. E. and John C., both well known men to the paper trade of the country; Grace, now deceased; Agnes, now deceased, formerly the wife of Nelson R. Lord, of Poquonock; and Elizabeth C., wife of Dr. Eggleston.

CAPT. DANIEL LOYAL BARBER was born March 19, 1855, in Litchfield, Conn., a son of Loyal Rossetter Barber, who was born Aug. 21, 1811, in Harwinton, Litchfield Co., Conn. The father was a farmer and was extensively engaged in the timber business. He was a Republican, and removing to Litchfield when he was twenty-two years of age became a prominent member of the community, serving for several terms as selectman; and was an active member of the Congregational Church. On June 25, 1833, he was married to Miss Lucretia Buell, born in Litchfield April 25, 1814, and a daughter of Norman and Lucretia (Webster) Buell. Loyal R. Barber died May 25, 1885, in the town of Harwinton, where he had been living for some years on his farm. His widow is still living in Waterbury. Their children were: (1) Amelia B., born Sept. 9, 1835, married Edwin F. Perkins, of Litchfield, who died in the war of the Rebellion; she is now living in Litchfield. (2) Norman B., born Oct. 9, 1837, died Oct. 12, 1863, at Alexandria, Va., during the Rebellion; he married Susan Wood, of Milton, Conn. (3) Lucretia R., born March 17, 1840, married D. M. Hancock, of Raynham, Mass., where she died Oct. 22, 1890. (4) Minerva W., born Sept. 4, 1842, died Aug. 9, 1843. (5) Marina W., born May 30, 1849, married L. O. Bradley, of Torrington. (6) Lyman B., born March 8, 1847, died April 12, 1897; he married Miss Jennie W. Cooper, of Bristol, Conn., and died in Wallingford. (7) Augusta B., born May 2, 1853, married Edgar H. Chipman, of Waterbury. (8) Capt. Daniel L. (9) Julia M., born Aug. 30, 1859, married George E. Taft, of Unionville, Conn., and died April 27, 1891.

Asa Barber, the grandfather of Capt. Daniel L., was born in Harwinton, Conn., where he spent his entire life engaged in farming. An active Whig, he held many town offices, although he died when but thirty-one years old, and he was prominent in church matters. He married Miss Mindwell Rosseter, of Harwinton, and to them were born: Abner, Asa, Loyal and Lyman.

Capt. Daniel Loyal Barber had his early education in his own home town, and then attended the Harwinton schools, whither his parents removed when he was about thirteen years old. Leaving school at the age of eighteen years, he began life for himself in charge of an engine in the Barber & Dayton Spring Bed and Scaffold Bracket Co. He remained with this company about a year and a half, when it failed and he took charge of the wood department of the Stanley Level and Rule Co., at New Britain. Mr. Barber was with this establishment about three and a half years, and then removed to Burlington, where he was foreman of W. R. Hartigan's wood turning establishment, having some twenty-five wood turners under him. He held this responsible position for two years or more, and then came to Wallingford to be assistant foreman of the buffing department of the R. Wallace & Sons Manufacturing Co., where he remained for nearly ten years. At that time he began contract work in the same department, in which he is now engaged, having in his employ about twenty hands.

Capt. Barber joined Co. E, First Conn. Nat. Guards, as a private, at New Britain in 1875, and served for four years. On Sept. 20, 1883, he united with Co. K, 2d Conn. Nat. Guards, at Wallingford, as a private, and became a corporal May 20, 1885; sergeant, Dec. 30, 1886; first sergeant, Sept. 20, 1890; second lieutenant, June 25, 1891, and captain, Nov. 17th of the same year. On Nov. 17, 1896, he made application to be placed on the retired list, and Jan. 1, 1900, Captain Barber was appointed inspector of small arms practice on Col. T. F. Callahan's staff at New Haven.

Capt. Barber was one of the charter members of Ivy Lodge, No. 43, K. of P., and is a member of Compass Lodge, of the Eastern Star Lodge, No. 37, F. & A. M., and of Mira Temple, No. 90, Knights of Khorassan. He was colonel of the second regiment, U. R. K. P., for two years, where he was on the staff of Major General Carnahan. Capt. Barber is a charter member of Court Samuel Simpson, No. 131, Foresters of America, and was the first Chief Ranger of the Court, where he served two terms. He belongs to the Charter Oak Circle, C. of F., auxiliary to the Foresters. Capt. Barber is a charter member of Putnam Council, O. U. A. M., and for six years was secretary of that body. He is also a member of the Wallingford Club.

Capt. Barber has served on the town committee for several terms. For a number of terms he has served on the Court of Burgesses, and is one of the solid and influential citizens of the county. On national issues he is a pronounced Republican, but in local affairs is a Republican with a tendency toward the best man of either side for the office.

Capt. Barber was married, June 25, 1878, to Miss Emma J. Butler, born May 8, 1859, at Harwinton, a daughter of Lewis L. and Pearly (Brace) Butler, of Torrington, Conn. In 1896 he built one of the most modern and handsome homes in Wallingford, in Church street. Capt. Barber and his wife attend the Congregational Church at Wallingford.

JOHN PHILANDER HOPSON, the very efficient superintendent of the Berkshire Division of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, was born in Wallingford, Conn., Dec. 15, 1852, a son of Philander, also a native of Wallingford, and a grandson of Samuel, who was born in Wallingford, where he followed farming, and died at the early age of thirty-five.

Philander Hopson was only ten years old at the time of his father's death, and was reared on the farm. When quite young he was set to work, and learned the carpenter trade, which became his avocation during life. He worked at it first as a journeyman, and then as a contractor, having a very extensive business on his hands, and building in Branford and elsewhere. At one time he had six hundred men in his service, and he not only did a vast amount of building, but had an extensive lumber yard and planing mill. When he was sixty-two years of age he died in Branford from an apoplectic attack. He was a deacon of the Baptist Church, and was a man of much character and ability. His mother, Mary Blackstone Hopson, who died at the age of seventy, came from a prominent family, and was a sister of the father of Timothy Blackstone, who gave the public library to the town; she was the mother of five children, two of whom are still living in Wallingford, and have their residence on the old homestead, the farming operations being under the care of George Blackstone, a cousin. Philander Hopson married Betsy Ann Newell, who was born in Cheshire, a daughter of Nathaniel Newell (a mason and contractor, who came to Cheshire to work on the Northampton canal, and he also engaged in farming) and his wife, Mary Rogers (who was born in Vermont). Nathaniel Newell and wife had three sons and three daughters, three of whom are living: Cornelia, who is Mrs. Crook, of Troy; Betsy Ann, the mother of J. P. Hopson; and Edward J., who is in the gentlemen's furnishing business on Fifth avenue, New York. The mother of these children belonged to the Congregational Church and died at the age of eighty-nine. Mrs. Betsy Ann Hopson, who is still living, hale and hearty at the age of seventy-one, had three children, of whom John Philander is the only survivor.

John Philander Hopson spent his early years in Branford, where he attended the common schools, and at the age of fourteen began life for himself as a clerk in Branford Station, where he was later apported agent. After ten years at Branford he was transferred to New London, where he was agent for six years, when he resigned to go into business as a stock broker. He ran office for Henry Clews, and still has a letter of recommendation from that eminent financier. Mr. Hopson entered the business of stock broking in October, 1882, and followed it until June, 1885. At that time he was appointed agent at South Norwalk, where he was engaged two years. For eleven months he was superintendent of the New York, Rutland and Montreal Railroad, when he took charge of the New Haven & Derby Railroad until its consolidation with the New York & New Haven Railroad. The completion of that deal was followed by the appointment of Mr. Hopson as the superintendent of the Berkshire Division of the reorganized line. He now has 200 miles of the line under his personal supervision, including seventy-five stations, many of which do a very large business. As a railroad man he has made a very high reputation and is rated as one of the most efficient men on the line.

Mr. Hopson was married, in 1871, to Sarah Hull, who was born in Branford, a daughter of Eliza Hull. To this union was born one child, Homer B., now an engineer on the New York & New Haven Railroad, to whom is given charge of all the official trains on the line; Florence Gardner, his wife, was born in Ashford. Mrs. Sarah Hopson died at the age of thirty-nine, and Mr. Hopson married for his second wife Martha A. Howland, who was born in Danbury.

Mr. Hopson is a Republican, and is a prominent Mason, belonging to Widows' Sons Lodge, No. 66, of Branford; Franklin Chapter, R. A. M.; Harmony Council; New Haven Commandery, No. 2, K. T.; Pyramid Temple, Mystic Shrine, of Bridgeport; and the Knights of Malta. He is also connected with the Union League; the Royal Arcanum; the A. O. U. W. at New London, and the Heptasophs. At one time he was a member of the Pequot Club and now belongs to the Knights Templar Club. In the New England Association of railroad superintendents his experience and ability command attention. At one time he was a director of the Masonic Mutual Benefit Association.

MARTIN HENRY BROWN, the efficient superintendent of the E. A. Bliss Co., manufacturers, of Meriden, is one of the well-known and highly esteemed residents of that city, in which he has served as a useful member of the council, and now holds a position on the board of public works.

John Brown, father of Martin H., was born in County Clare, Ireland, and came to America when a young man, finally locating at Sydney, Cape Breton, where he engaged in mining. There he married Hannah Ormond, who was a native of Cape Breton. In 1852, with his family, he removed to the United States and located at North Attleboro, Mass., at which place he was employed as a silversmith, by Tift & Whiting, and he continued in the employ of this great manufacturing company the remainder of his life. In 1869 he passed away, sincerely mourned by a large circle of friends. His political affiliation was with the Democratic party, but he never sought office, being content to work hard and provide and care for his family and live up to the standard of a good Christian citizen.

John Brown reared his family in the faith of the Roman Catholic Church, and they became excellent citizens, respected in the localities in which they found homes. Mrs. Brown died in 1898, and was buried by the side of her husband at Attleboro. After his death she assumed the care of the family, and much of the success which has attended the career of the subject of this biography may doubtless be traced to the teaching of his estimable mother. The family consisted of thirteen children, six of whom still survive: Mary, who married Michael Crossey and removed to Bisbee, Arizona; Martin H., subject of this sketch; William, a silversmith of Wallingford; Frank M., a jeweler of North Attleboro, Mass.; and Pattie and Annie, both of whom reside in North Attleboro.

Martin Henry Brown was born at Sydney, Cape Breton, Nov. 10, 1846, and removed with his parents to Massachusetts. His educational opportunities were limited, and at the age of fifteen he engaged as an office boy with the S. Richardson Co., jewelers, working for forty cents a day. There he continued three years. Although he did not prosper financially with this firm, he learned obedience to authority and business methods which proved of value later in life. A very sensible proceeding was his apprenticeship to Tift & Whiting, manufacturing jewelers, with whom he learned the trade of silversmith, or jeweler, and received $9 per week. In 1868 he obtained a position with the firm of Whimsey & Rice, and the five succeeding years were spent as a journeyman in their employ; he was then made foreman of their factory, which important position he filled satisfactorily for ten and one-half years.

The fertile brain of Mr. Brown saw wider usefulness in another field, and in 1882 he was one of the organizers, stockholders and directors of the J. R. Nichols Co., remaining with that corporation two and one-half years. In 1885 he accepted a tempting offer from the E. A. Bliss Co., then of North Attleboro, and in January of the following year was made superintendent of the company, which in July, 1890, removed to Meriden. Here Mr. Brown for the past eleven years has been the capable superintendent, and enjoys the confidence and respect of the firm. As a manager he has proven himself very efficient, those under his authority esteeming him highly. Mr. Brown is a self-made man, of liberal mind, and is the fortunate possessor of an affable manner and a genial personality.

In 1874 Martin H. Brown was married, in North Attleboro, Mass., to Miss Mary A. Kennedy, a daughter of Patrick and Margaret Kennedy, and four children have been born of this union: Walter, a student in the Meriden high school; Estella; Charlotte; and Hazel. A life-long Democrat, Mr. Brown has very liberal ideas. He well served the Fifth ward in the city council in 1892, and in 1897 was elected from the First ward, serving two years. In 1898 he was appointed, by Mayor Ives, a member of the board of public works for a term of four years, and is still filling that office. Socially and fraternally he is popular, and belongs to the A. O. U. W. in Meriden, the Amaranth Club, and the Jewelers' League, of New York. The family belongs to St. Joseph's Catholic Church. Mr. Brown stands very high in the esteem of the people of Meriden, where he has lived so many years. His neighbors know him to be kind and helpful, charitable and generous, and the general public feels that in Martin H. Brown it finds an honest and upright citizen.

CHARLES B. ALLING. One of the most substantial and highly esteemed citizens of New Haven county, and for a half-century engaged in the manufacture of woolen hosiery and underwear, is a resident of Derby, in which city he is an extensive owner of real property and probably the largest tax-payer. He was born in Orange on June 20, 1824, and traces his ancestry back to Roger Alling, one of the early settlers of New Haven county, who emigrated from England in the spring of 1637. A somewhat detailed history of his line may be found in the sketch of Amos H. Alling on another page of this work. His father, Charles W. Alling, was a pioneer manufacturer in Orange and his mother (née Lucy Booth) was the daughter of Walter Booth of Woodbridge, one of the patriot heroes of the Revolutionary war. The foundation of both his scholastic and commercial education was laid in his early boyhood, when he alternated attendance upon the district school with collecting wool from the farms around about to be used in his father's mill. It is unnecessary to direct the reader's attention to his primitive methods of securing raw material and that which now obtains in the great manufactory, with its five hundred employes, of which to-day he is the sagacious, energetic head. He early developed a natural aptitude alike for the mercantile and mechanical branches of the business, and at the age of seventeen was given charge of the wool carding, spinning, weaving and finishing of the cloth, which was for the major part sold to the farmers of the surrounding country.

In 1845, in connection with his brother, Amos H. Alling, he leased the small mill from his father and embarked in the career which, through his keen acumen, untiring watchfulness and unblemished honor, has not only made him a capitalist, but has won for him the respect of the commercial world, and the love and respect of his fellow townsmen. The style of the young firm was A. H. & C. B. Alling, and both brothers worked industriously and faithfully, early and late to extend its business. At the outset their capital was very small. Upon the shoulders of Mr. C. B. Alling devolved the weightier share of the actual management of the concern's business affairs, and to the discharge of this task he brought habits of economy, a close application to business and a mental fitness of no common order. From the making of custom cloth for farmers the line of manufacture gradually developed—first into the production of yarn for the market, and later into the turning out of hose and hosiery, which find a ready sale in every State of the Union. As the business grew the brothers Alling perceived the limited advantages offered by a comparatively small town, such as Orange, to a business of the character and extent which theirs promised to become. Looking about for a new situation, their attention was attracted to Derby with its magnificent water-power and its exceptionally good transportation facilities. There they established themselves in 1858, and the value of the mills in the development of the city belongs to the domain of history, not to the realm of conjecture. The original plant was destroyed by fire in 1864, but the firm promptly rebuilt, on a larger scale, locating their new works in the immediate vicinity, and purchasing the site once occupied by the copper works of the late Anson G. Phelps. For thirty-five years the Alling woolen mills have stood there, gradual enlargements being made as the exigencies of the constantly growing business demand.

As their trade expanded the brothers bought real estate in the city of their adoption, having faith that the future of Derby would abundantly justify the wisdom of the investment, and not unnaturally being anxious to aid in the town's development. Their business instinct and keen foresight induced them to buy chiefly near the city's center, and here Mr. C. B. Alling's interest and influence is shown on nearly every street along which the weary stranger may turn his feet. Many of the business blocks and office structures of Derby owe their erection to the sound judgment and public spirit of A. H. and C. B. Alling. Among the best known of these is a handsome brick structure at the corner of Main and Elizabeth streets; and in this connection it is worthy of mention that the erection of this structure virtually marked a new epoch in the building history of Derby.

Apart from interests which may be characterized as more or less self-engrossed, Mr. Alling has always shown himself one of Derby's most public spirited citizens. Various public improvements may be traced, more or less directly, to his personal efforts, notably the dam across the Housatonic river,

Since the death of his brother, Amos H., Mr. C. B. Alling has conducted the business alone. Despite his seventy-eight years, his physical powers are unimpaired and his mind as active and keen as when in early manhood he laid—broad, deep and sound—the foundations of the great business which has grown up under his careful scrutiny and watchful care. His muscular frame, undimmed eye, and active step, one and all, give convincing evidence of a life of well directed energy and temperate self-restraint. It is men such as he that shed lustre on their native State, and bring honor upon the name of New England. His nature is kindly, his disposition genial and his impulses generous. Philanthropic in the best and truest sense of that much abused term, his charity is unostentatious; his life simple and sincere. His religious faith is that of the M. F. Church, of which body he is a devout and consistent member. He is an esteemed member of the local Board of Trade, to whose deliberations he brings a keen intellect and a ripe experience.

His home is one of the most beautiful in Derby. Situated near the heart of the city, it stands upon a high elevation, overlooking the streets which he has built up and beautified. Two thoroughfares abut against its spacious grounds. Here he passes those hours which he can redeem from business cares to devote to leisure and recreation. Here, too, he may review his past with that pardonable pride which is the legitimate offspring of self-conquered success, and here he can look forward to life's sunset without dread.

LEE JOSEPH AUBRY. Among the prominent citizens of New Haven who have done much to contribute to the industrial prosperity of that city is Lee Joseph Aubry, proprietor of the L. J. Aubry Carriage Co., located at No. 139 Park street.

The industry which has brought wealth and prominence to Mr. Aubry and which has reflected credit upon this city for a long period is the manufacture of carriage bodies ironed up and ready to paint and trim, this business being one of the most prosperous concerns in New Haven. Carriage making in all its branches has been the occupation of the Aubry family for several generations.

Grandfather Francis Aubry was born in France but later became a citizen of Canada, taking part in the Revolution of 1837. In St. Scholastique, Canada, he established himself in the carriage building trade and was one of the capable, persistent and trustworthy men who live successful lives on account of their close and constant attention to business. Francis Aubry established a reputation for excellent work in his line, which has been supported by both his son and grandson. His death occurred in his seventy-fourth year, after a life of industry. Possessing the strong, wiry frame of his countrymen he also inherited the energy and ability of his race. His family consisted of four sons and one daughter.

Gregory Aubry, son of Francis, and father of Lee Joseph Aubry, was born in Canada in 1819 and died in Troy, N. Y., in the autumn of 1887. In his youth he became an expert worker in wood and learned the carriage making trade under his father and when the latter removed to Montebella he engaged in the business for himself in St. Scholastique, where he prospered exceedingly until 1857, at which time by a disastrous fire he suffered the loss of all he possessed. Unfortunately he had no insurance and thus was left to begin the world over again, meeting this misfortune with a courage and patient perseverance which commanded the respect of all who knew him. For three years he worked at his trade in New Haven, Conn., going from there to Troy, N. Y., where he died of pneumonia one year later.

In 1842 Gregory Aubry was married to Edmire Chaurette, also a native of Canada, a daughter of Joseph Chaurette. Her death took place in Hartford, Hartford Co., Conn., in 1900. The children of this marriage were: Alice, who was born in 1844, married Paul Dupuis, who died some twenty years ago, but she still lives in Hartford, Conn., and has a family of three sons; Lee Joseph, of the L. J. Aubry Carriage Co.; Alfred, who was born in 1852, married Louise Gandron, and is in the employ of the aforesaid company; and Valarie, who was born in 1854, married Edmund Jacques and died in New Haven in 1880, leaving no children. Gregory Aubry was a good and law-abiding citizen and after locating in the United States became a member of the Republican party, although never a politician. In religion he belonged to the Catholic Church, of which he was always a consistent and most worthy member.

Lee Joseph Aubry was born in St. Scholastique, Province of Quebec, on May 1, 1848, the second child of his parents, and was very liberally educated, attending an English school until he was nine years of age, then receiving instruction in a French school in Lower Canada, and later entering an English school in Upper Canada. Mr. Aubry was fourteen years old when the family located in Troy, N. Y. This was after his father's misfortunes, and young Aubry began to learn his trade, in preparation for a future career under Edward Chamberlain, working hard all day and studying in the night schools after his work was done. The perseverance thus manifested in the lad has been a foundation stone in his business success. For three years his life continued thus in Troy under Mr. Chamberlain and was followed by one year of journeyman work in the same city and then he went to Pownal, Vt., where he found work for three months, but then drifted to New York City.

The ability and energy he displayed in connection with the excellence of his work soon secured for Mr. Aubry a very lucrative position with the R. M. Stiver Co., resulting in a residence there for two years, enabling him to feel justified in marrying.

His honeymoon was spent in Peekskill, N. Y., where he easily found employment which he kept for four months, accepting then a position with the Beers & Hanover Carriage Manufacturing Co. in New Haven, Conn., coming to that city in October, 1860. For two years he continued with this company, doing some of the most satisfactory work that had ever been turned out from this large establishment, although he was still young in years. His next business connection was with Durham & Wooster in the manufacture of sidebar buggies; these vehicles being new at that time, his work, on account of his thorough knowledge, was confined to the finest product of the firm. For seven years he remained with this firm, going then into the employ of Osborne & Adriance, for two years doing their most particular work. For a short time he gave his services to the firm of Brockett & Dorman, returning then to his former employers, Durham & Wooster, where he continued until the financial panic which was so seriously felt in industrial circles, resulting in the severing of his business relations with this firm.

Mr. Aubry then went to Quincy, Ill., and engaged in work for the firm of E. N. Miller & Co., serving as foreman, but three months later returned, at their urgent request, to Durham & Wooster, in New Haven. This last association with this firm continued for one and one-half years, and then for a few months his talents were given to the firm of Brockett & Tuttle, and immediately after he became foreman in the responsible firm of Henry Hale & Co., remaining here for the space of seven years.

This long business association with reputable and well-established firms thoroughly prepared Mr. Aubry to embark in business for himself, and he made his start in March, 1888, with a capital of $19, hiring a fire in the works of Beers & Hanover. His success was such that in January, 1899, he was able to hire the building of his former employers, Osborne & Adriance, and three years later his orders had increased to such a degree that larger quarters were required, and he then leased his present building at No. 139 Park street. From this small beginning and insignificant cash capital Mr. Aubry by strictly attending to his business and by producing work superior to that of competitors, has won a place in the front rank of carriage manufacturers, no other firm successfully competing in the line of his specialty, that of the manufacture of fashionable carriages. His business has extended in every direction and has been a source of prosperity in many homes, Mr. Aubry employing a very large force in his factory.

Mr. Aubry is gifted in many ways, being not only a skilled mechanic, but also so accurate a draughtsman that his sketches are in the greatest demand for the trade magazines, although he never took a lesson in mechanical drawing in his life. Added to this technical knowledge Mr. Aubry is a keen man of business, quite able to handle large enterprises and manage vast interests. At the time he located in New Haven there were thirty-five manufacturing plants in his line, his successful competition crowding out in this short time all but ten of these. The business of the L. J. Aubry Carriage Manufacturing Co. includes the construction of all kinds of carriages, wagons, automobiles and similar vehicles, these being made ready for trimmings and painting, and his product is shipped all over the country. The correctness and excellence of his carriage drawings have not only given him an enviable prominence in the trade, but have been of substantial value, bringing him many prizes.

On June 22, 1871, Lee Joseph Aubry was married to Miss Alzina Castell, of Troy, N. Y., a daughter of Benjamin and Margaret Castell, and the children born to this union were: Charles G., born May 30, 1872, is a carriage painter, located in Erie, Pa.; on Dec. 25, 1900, he was married to Miss Josephine Hunt. Arthur L., born in New Haven, died there Dec. 16, 1892. Alice was married in September, 1897, to Frank Cargill, bookkeeper for the New Haven Baking Co., and they have two children, Dexter and Valorie. Benjamin, a traveling salesman, was married to Miss Ruby Bean, and their one child died in infancy. Estelle, Lilian, Mable and Wilfred are all at home.

While Mr. Aubry is a successful manufacturer he is also much more. For many years he has been a leading member of the Methodist Church, liberally contributing to its charities, and although not an active politician he ardently supports the Republican party and lives up to the highest ideals of citizenship. Fraternally he has long been an active member of Davenport Council, No. 700, Royal Arcanum, of New Haven, and is past chancellor of Ezel Lodge, No. 2, Knights of Pythias. Few men can point to more substantial returns or wider usefulness in so short a time as can Mr. Aubry, and the city of New Haven cherishes a feeling of pride in his success and prominence.

JOHN EDWARD ROGERS, a successful agriculturist of the town of Milford, was born in that town May 6, 1834, and is a member of a well-known family of the locality.

Joseph Rogers, our subject's grandfather, was a native of Milford, and made his permanent home on a farm in that town. He married Jane Smith, and had three children: Mary, deceased, who never married; Joseph, our subject's father; and Nancy, who married William Nettleton, of Milford, and had a son, Joseph W., now a prominent resident of the town.

Joseph Rogers (2), our subject's father, was born in Milford in February, 1792, and was always engaged in farming at the homestead. Politically he was a Whig, and in religious faith he and his estimable wife were Congregationalists. He died in 1853. His wife, Anna Nettleton, daughter of Benajah Nettleton, of Milford, was born in the town of Milford, in September, 1801, and died Jan. 31, 1802. They had the following children: Elizabeth A., deceased, who never married; Charles J., who died at the age of forty-two, unmarried; John Edward, our subject; George E., deceased, a farmer at the homestead; Mary A., a resident of Milford; and Theodore H., deceased, who never married.

John E. Rogers began his education in the district schools of Milford and at sixteen years of age entered the Milford high school. He has been engaged in farming all his life, and his farm of eighty acres is a part of the old homestead, which contained 300 acres. On Oct. 2, 1801, he married Miss Charlotte L. Plumb, of Milford, daughter of Lyman Plumb, a joiner of that town. She died Jan. 28, 1886, leaving no children, and on June 6, 1888, Mr. Rogers married Miss Ella Wilcox, daughter of Russell Wilcox, a native of Cromwell, Conn. Mr. Rogers is influential in a quiet way in local affairs, and is a member of the Grange and of the Congregational Church of Milford. In politics he is a staunch Republican.

WALTER HENRY TWITCHELL is one of the representative public-spirited and progressive citizens and business men of Naugatuck, who has won success through his own assiduity, intellect and industry, to which has been joined a sturdy and unquestioned integrity.

Robert Twitchell, his father, was born in Oxford, and passed the greater part of his life in Naugatuck, where he died when his son Walter was a lad of ten years. He married Jennette Clark, who was born in Prospect, New Haven county, in which town her father, Amos Clark, was a well-to-do farmer. Three sons were born to them, Edward C., Walter H. and Robert C. Edward C. conducts a meat market in Union City, town of Naugatuck, and Robert C. is a farmer in Prospect, living in the old Clark homestead, where his mother was born and where she passed the days of her girlhood. Robert Twitchell was a Democrat in politics. Both he and his wife were members of the Episcopal Church.

Walter Henry Twitchell was born in Naugatuck Oct. 17, 1858. He attended the local schools until he reached the age of fifteen years, when he went to reside with an uncle on a farm near Syracuse, N. Y., going to school during the winter months. After four years spent thus he returned to Naugatuck, and for a time worked as a farm hand there, finally entering the employ of Fremont W. Tolles, an undertaker and furniture dealer, who also carried a general line of carpets and house furnishing goods of every description. In January, 1897, Mr. Twitchell bought the business from Mr. Tolles, and has since conducted it alone. To its management he brought a thorough familiarity of every detail, a power of mental concentration and sound business sense. It is not surprising, therefore, that he has succeeded. To enterprise he has joined conservatism, and to sagacity unflinching courtesy. His establishment occupies the fine brick building at Nos. 132-134-136 Church street, is well stocked, and his goods are tastefully arranged.

On June 15, 1882, Mr. Twitchell married Miss Addie Richards, of Wethersfield. No children have been born to them. Mr. and Mrs. Twitchell attend the Congregational Church. His political affiliations are with the Republican party. In private life he is social, and readily makes and keeps friends. He is a member of the I. O. R. M.; and is a Mason of high degree, belonging to Shepherd's Lodge, No. 78, A. F. & A. M.; Allerton Chapter, No. 39, R. A. M.; Clark Commandery, No. 7, K. T., of Waterbury; and Pyramid Temple, of Bridgeport.

JOHN N. LEONARD, contractor and also mason and builder, well-known and valued in New Haven, was born in that city Jan. 24, 1842, son of Linus H. and Maria (Burwell) Leonard, the former of whom was born in Charlestown, Mass., in 1809, and the latter a daughter of Daniel Burwell, who died in Barkhamsted; both he and his wife lived to be over eighty years of age, and ten of their thirteen children also reached that age. Linus Leonard removed first to Springfield, Mass., and then to Westville, where he was connected with the hardware firm of Blake Brothers, and in that place he died at the age of sixty-three. His widow survived until Feb. 3, 1890. Both had been active and earnest members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which Mr. Leonard was a steward and class-leader.

John N. Leonard was the only survivor of a family of three children. His education was obtained in the schools of Westville and at West Rock Seminary, and after finishing his course he learned the trade of mason with N. D. Sperry. This was interrupted by his enlistment for service in the Civil war in Company E, 15th Conn. V. I., in 1862. His devotion to his country cost him three years of his life, during which he saw some hard service. At Kinston, N. C., he was captured and incarcerated in Libby Prison for a short time. When discharged he held the rank of sergeant.

Upon his return to New Haven Mr. Leonard worked as a journeyman for a season, and then went to Rockville, where he spent three years, going back to New Haven and again taking up his trade as a journeyman. In 1865 he began contracting and building and has continued in active work ever since, his business being continually on the increase. In one year he built and sold twenty houses and also did much other building and improving. So thoroughly does Mr. Leonard understand his business, and so faithfully does he carry out his contracts, that he has gained much of the best custom in the city, his patrons numbering among the wealthiest and most exacting of the citizens.

On Aug. 4, 1869, Mr. Leonard was married to

Walter A. Purcell

Miss Martha F. Pardee, a daughter of William L. Pardee, a farmer and mechanic, who was born in Madison, Conn., and grew up in Oxford, and to this union has been born: Harry A., in business with his father, married Bertha E. Gorham, and has one child, Janice; Susie May and Grace Abigail are graduates of both high and private schools; and Jennie E., who died in childhood.

Fraternally Mr. Leonard is connected with F. & A. M., Olive Branch Lodge, No. 84, Chapter and Council, of New Haven, and Commandery, up to the 32d degree, having been connected with the Masonic order for twenty-five years. Mr. Leonard also has membership with the O. U. A. M., the Red Men, the Royal Arcanum, the Heptasophs and the A. O. U. W. The family attends the Methodist Church, to which Mr. Leonard is a generous contributor. For a number of years he was a member of the Governor's Foot Guards. Mr. Leonard built the Westville Methodist Church and donated a memorial window in memory of his parents.

SAMUEL B. BRONSON, for many years a capable and trustworthy carpenter and builder in Ansonia, where he has a cozy and attractive home at No. 56 Franklin street, was born in Middlebury Jan. 24, 1828.

Jared Bronson, his father, was also a native of Middlebury, where his grandfather, Thaddeus Bronson, was also born. Both father and grandfather were engaged in the tanning business. Jared Bronson lived to be eighty-four years old. He was married to Lydia Mallory, a daughter of Thomas Mallory, and both father and daughter were natives of Middlebury, where he was engaged in farming. Esther (Benham) Mallory, her mother, had eight children. Jared and Lydia Bronson were the parents of four children, of whom two are living: Lewis, who is living in Middlebury, and Samuel B. Both Mr. and Mrs. Bronson attended the Congregational Church.

Samuel B. Bronson spent the first twenty years of his life in Middlebury where he attended the local schools and secured a very good education, which was supplemented by a course at Woodbury Academy. When he came to a suitable age he was apprenticed to the carpenter's trade and served three years under instruction, becoming quite proficient, and when his term of apprenticeship was up he began contracting and building on his own account, and for some years was a resident of Middlebury. Then he removed to Waterbury where he spent three years at his work. After some time in Plymouth, he in 1865 came to Ansonia and the next year opened a contracting and building business, in which he was actively engaged until 1896. In 1869 he formed a partnership with Mr. Barnes and the two continued together for a number of years. Mr. Bronson is the oldest builder in this section, having been in the business forty-five years. In his career he has had to do with the building of many of the finest homes in this part of the State, and in Ansonia alone he has built nearly two hundred houses. His advice and instruction as an expert in his business are still freely sought and heeded.

Mr. Bronson was married to Miss Mary J. Castle, of Woodbury, a daughter of Seckey Castle. Mrs. Bronson is the only child of her parents now living and is herself the mother of a family of two children: Walter and Frederick. Mr. Bronson is a Republican in his political associations, but a strong believer in prohibition. He has served on the board of burgesses and is a public-spirited citizen. He belongs to Naugatuck Lodge, I. O. O. F., and is a member of the Congregational Church, where he has been a deacon for some years and also superintendent of the Sunday-school. A very active part is taken by him in church and Sunday-school work.

WALTER BRONSON, noted above, was born in Woodbury Feb. 27, 1850, and was brought to Ansonia when he was five years old. He had his education in the high school and when fifteen years of age began life for himself as a clerk in a store in Middlebury. He was engaged in this fashion about nine months and then returned to Ansonia where he attended school a few months more and then began in the store where he is now found, clerking for J. C. Miles, with whom he remained eighteen years. At the end of this time he bought him out and since that transaction he has been in business for himself. Mr. Bronson is with one exception the longest in business of any man on the street. He carries a large stock of foreign and domestic goods and employs three clerks to meet the demands of a very large and profitable trade. The store which he occupies has been entirely remodeled and it is today one of the most attractive on Main street.

Walter Bronson was married in 1883 to Miss Anna French, born in Ansonia. Her mother was Harriet Johnson before her marriage and is still living. Mr. Bronson is a staunch Republican and in local affairs votes for the best man. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity and is affiliated with Washington Lodge, F. & A. M., and Mt. Vernon Chapter. He also belongs to the Naugatuck Lodge, I. O. O. F., the Ancient Order of Heptasophs, the New England Order of Protection, and is also a member of the Board of Trade. He is an attendant at the Congregational Church and belongs to the Ansonia Club.

BENJAMIN HUBBELL is a wide awake and energetic business man of Derby, New Haven county, where for a quarter of a century he has successfully conducted a livery stable. He was born in the town of Wilton, Fairfield Co., Conn. Nov. 26, 1841, and is a representative of an old and highly respected family of that county. His grandfather, Nathan Hubbell, spent his entire life in Wilton, his time and attention being devoted to agricultural pursuits.

Wakeman Hubbell, father of Benjamin, was born in the same house where our subject's birth occurred and remained on the old homestead engaged in farming throughout life. He was quite a prominent man of his town and was known as Doctor Hubbell. He married Miss Julia Ann Lynes, a native of Ridgebury, town of Danbury, Hartford county, and a daughter of Benjamin Lynes, of that town. Four children were born of this union, namely: Henry L., who is a Doctor of Divinity and followed the ministry at one time, is now president of Lake Charles College, Louisiana; James W., who was also a Doctor of Divinity, died in Mansfield, Ohio; Stephen is engaged in the insurance business in Des Moines, Iowa; and Benjamin is our subject.

Benjamin Hubbell spent his boyhood on the home farm in Wilton and was fitted for college under Prof. Edward Ohlstead. He began his business career as a drug clerk in Hartford, Conn., which position he filled for some time and later studied medicine with Dr. Samuel Lynes, of Norwalk. For about three years, after which he took a course of lectures at the College of Physicians and Surgeons, of New York City, and was graduated at the institution in 1862. Mr. Hubbell then operated the home farm until coming to Derby, in 1871. He engaged in the grocery business in East Derby for about four years, and has since devoted his time and attention to the livery business.

In 1864 Mr. Hubbell was united in marriage with Miss Alice Marvin, of Wilton, a daughter of Charles Marvin, a prominent man of that place, who was a member of the State Legislature several times and also served as bank commissioner. Our subject and his wife have two sons: Henry M., who is engaged in the lumber business in Derby; and Benjamin, who was graduated from Yale in 1897, and is now a teacher of languages in the Derby High school. Mr. Hubbell and his family are members of the Congregational Church and are quite prominent in the community where they reside. Politically he is a staunch supporter of the Republican party; has served as alderman from the Third Ward of Derby for two years, was selectman one year, in 1898; is at present one of the assessors and is also a representative to the Legislature. He is a man of recognized ability, is genial and pleasant in manner and is quite popular both in business and political circles.

FRANK R. STILLMAN, the well-known farmer and dairyman of Meriden, was born June 9, 1847, on the Stillman Homestead at Bench Hill, in Connecticut, and is a descendant of one of the old and honorable families of Connecticut.

There was a coat of arms issued to Stillman, to Stephen Ashton, Wiltshire, England, on May 6, 1552, having a camel's head and a crest. Rev. John Stillman was a chaplain in Cromwell's army. He had opposed to beheading Charles I., but was in favor of dethroning him. George Stillman, the founder of the family in America, was a native of London, England, where he was born in 1654, a son of a London merchant. George also became a merchant. The Stillmans were supporters of Oliver Cromwell during the days of the Commonwealth. Upon the restoration of Charles II. George was forced, for safety, to assume another name, selecting that of Pritchard or Pieccering. His marriage to Lady Jane Pieccering occurred in London, where his son, George, was born. Those were times of storm and stress and many of the Cromwell supporters found it necessary to emigrate secretly to America. This was the case with Mr. Stillman, and in 1680, leaving little George with friends in London he, with his wife, set out on the voyage to the free land across the ocean, but this Mrs. Stillman never reached, her death occurring before land was sighted. Mr. Stillman located at Hadley, Mass., and in 1685 he there married Rebecca Smith. Later he removed to Wethersfield, Conn., and there spent the remainder of his days, dying in 1728, and his remains lie in the old cemetery there with the dust of so many other early settlers. George Stillman and his second wife were the parents of ten children: Nathaniel; Benjamin; John; Henry; Martha; Rebecca; and others whose names are unknown. George, the son of the first marriage, whom Mr. Stillman left in England, came later to America with a party of Seven Day Baptists and settled in Rhode Island.

John Stillman, son of George, was born in Hadley, Mass., Feb. 19, 1693, and removed to Wethersfield, Conn., with his parents, where he spent the remainder of his days engaged in farming. A prominent citizen and a deacon in the church he died full of years in 1775 and was buried in Wethersfield. On May 26, 1715, he married Mary Wolcott, who was born May 14, 1694, and died in 1777, a daughter of Mrs. Judith Wolcott and a granddaughter of Samuel Appleton, of Wethersfield. Their union was blessed with eleven children: John, Rebecca, May, Abigail, Martha, Sarah, Elisha, Abigail (2), Appleton, Huldah and Benjamin.

John Stillman, son of Deacon John, was born Aug. 19, 1717, in Wethersfield, where he grew to manhood and where he married Oct. 26, 1738, Rachel Robbins, a daughter of Richard and Martha (Curtis) Robbins, of Wethersfield. In 1757 he removed with his wife and family to Sandisfield, Berkshire Co., Mass., where he spent the remainder of his days and died July 15, 1782. His widow removed to Colebrook, Litchfield Co., Conn., where she died July 12, 1807, at the age of eighty-nine years and was buried in the old cemetery there. John Stillman was one of the founders of the church in Sandisfield. The children born to John and Rachel Stillman were: Josiah, Sept. 10, 1739; Hannah, Feb. 13, 1741; John, Jan. 16, 1743; Joshua; Roger; Appleton; and Robert.

Roger Stillman, son of John, was born July 4, 1754, in Wethersfield, where he grew to manhood.

He then removed to Sandisfield, Mass., where he enlisted. Roger Stillman was one of the first to enlist in the Continental army for service in the Revolutionary war, and he participated in the battle of Bunker Hill and many other engagements, finally being honorably discharged at Lake Champlain. In 1780 he located at Colebrook where he spent the remainder of his days, dying Dec. 8, 1832, and on the morning of the dark day he was engaged in building his house. Both his name and that of his wife occur among the founders of the Congregational Church in Colebrook, in 1705. He married Mehitable Hurd, who was born March 4, 1757, in Killingworth, now Clinton, Conn., and died in Colebrook Aug. 24, 1828, and there her remains are laid to rest. She was the mother of ten children, five of whom were sons: William, Deacon Daniel, Osburn, Edmund and Chester.

Chester Stillman, son of Roger, was born in Colebrook, Conn., April 9, 1797, on a farm, one-half mile south of the main road. Mr. Stillman became a land owner and farmer in Colebrook and built a house there in 1825 and he was buried in Stillman's cemetery in Colebrook. On Dec. 10, 1815, he united with the church and was appointed deacon in 1838. On March 2, 1820, he was married to Clarissa Esther De Wolf, of French ancestry, who was born Aug. 1, 1797, at Otis, Mass., and died May 14, 1864, and was laid to rest in Stillman's cemetery. Eight children were born to this union, four of whom were sons: Edwin C., Dorwin E., Lester R. and Collins L.

Edwin C. Stillman, the father of Frank R. Stillman, was born in Colebrook, in the Beach Hill district, Sept. 14, 1821, and grew to manhood in his native home, following the life of an agriculturist. Later, with his family, he moved to Southington, Conn., where he settled down to farming and dairying and spent the balance of his life, dying June 6, 1895, and was buried in Southington. Mr. Stillman was a consistent member of the Congregational Church, liberal-minded and progressive, a most worthy citizen and an exemplary father and husband. In politics he was a Republican but was never an office seeker.

On June 28, 1846, Mr. Stillman was married to Sarah M. Doolittle, who was born April 18, 1828, in Westfield, Middlesex Co., Conn., a daughter of Seth Doolittle, who removed from Westfield to Barkhamsted, then to Pleasant Valley, where he died. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Stillman were: Frank R.; William C., a dealer in butter and eggs, in Meriden; Jesse E., mentioned elsewhere in this work; Waldo, of Meriden.

THE DOOLITTLE FAMILY, on the maternal side, is one of the oldest in Wallingford. Abraham Doolittle, the first of that name in Wallingford, was a native of England who came to America and located in New Haven before 1642, later removed to Wallingford as one of the earliest settlers and there died Aug. 11, 1690. He was twice married, the second wife being Abigail Moss, who died Nov. 5, 1710.

Daniel Doolittle was the tenth child of Abraham Doolittle and was born Dec. 9, 1775. He married Hannah Cornwall, of Middletown, Conn., and later removed to Middletown, where he spent several years, returning again to Wallingford, where he died in 1755 at the ripe age of eighty years, his wife having died Jan. 16, 1736.

Daniel Doolittle (2), son of Daniel Doolittle, was born Feb. 3, 1707, and engaged in farming near the North Haven line, living there through life, and dying in September, 1791, at the age of eighty-four years. He married Elizabeth Dayton, and to them seven children were born.

Michael Doolittle, son of Daniel (2), was a farmer by occupation and became a deacon in the Baptist Church in Wallingford, where he lived to a ripe old age. He married Millicent Hough, of Wallingford.

Seth Doolittle, son of Michael and Millicent Doolittle, was born in Wallingford, but later removed to Westfield parish, Middletown, where he followed the trade of wagon maker, but still later removed his family to Barkhamsted, where he pursued his trade and died there. He married Betsey Healey and their daughter, Sarah M. Doolittle, married Edwin C. Stillman, as before related.

Frank R. Stillman attended the Beach Hill district school in Colebrook and remained at home until he was twenty-one years old, removing with his family to Southington, where he assisted his father in his farming operations. On attaining his majority he came to Meriden and for one year was employed by Deacon Samuel Paddock in the butcher business. Returning to Southington he worked for his uncle, Richard Williams, during the following two years in the express business but his services were needed on the farm of his father and he returned home, there to engage in farming, dairying and the raising of tobacco until 1874, when he came to Meriden and bought his present farm on South Broad street, consisting of fifty acres. Many improvements were needed here but Mr. Stillman soon had everything in first class condition; and for many years he has been known as a fine farmer and successful raiser of the best breeds of cattle.

On Nov. 28, 1872, Mr. Stillman was united in marriage, in Southington, to Miss Julia L. Hart, of that town, a daughter of Roswell and Pernelia (Amsden) Hart, the latter a native of Boston, the former of Southington. To Mr. and Mrs. Stillman five children were born: Harry Hart, born Feb. 5, 1875, died Aug. 5, the same year; Marion, born Sept. 19, 1879, died Sept. 13, 1881; Flora P., born Sept. 25, 1884; Dorwin, born April 11, 1886, died Nov. 2, 1890; and Elsie Julia, born Dec. 21, 1887. Both of the survivors are attending school. In political preference Mr. Stillman is a Republican and both he and his amiable wife are members of the Meriden Grange and have long been valued members of the Baptist Church. In the community Mr. Stillman stands high, and he is justly considered one of the representative men of the town of Meriden.

CHARLES LEE SCRANTON, retired agriculturist, and one of the most highly respected citizens of the town of Madison, is a native of the same, born Feb. 21, 1825, in the New District. He is an honorable member of one of the oldest and most highly respected families of New Haven county.

(II) John Scranton, the first of the name in Guilford, had a son (II) John (Capt.), who had a son (III) Ebenezer, born March 16, 1696, in Guilford, where he in early manhood removed to North Guilford, there passing the rest of his days in farming pursuits, dying Oct. 6, 1774, at the age of seventy-eight years. His wife, Ann, born in 1693, died July 2, 1780, aged eighty-seven years. Both were buried in the North Guilford cemetery. Four children constituted their family: (1) John, born Aug. 27, 1726, died in November, 1736; (2) Ebenezer, born Aug. 17, 1728, settled in the eastern part of Connecticut or in Rhode Island; (3) Ann, born March 31, 1731, married, in 1751, John Dibble, of Boston; (4) Jared is mentioned below.

(IV) Jared Scranton, born in North Guilford June 25, 1733, was a lifelong farmer there, died Nov. 12, 1816, and was buried in the North Guilford cemetery. On Jan. 1, 1766, he married Lucretia Russell, who died June 14, 1813. Children: (1) John Russell, born July 14, 1799, who married Zerviah Fowler and died Dec. 21, 1820; (2) Jared, sketch of whom follows; and (3) Ebenezer, born Sept. 6, 1773, who was drowned in Quinebaug pond, Guilford, May 21, 1794.

(V) Jared Scranton, grandfather of Charles L., was born May 10, 1771, in North Guilford, on the old homestead, and received his earlier education at the district schools of the neighborhood, after which he attended Yale College, graduating therefrom in 1795, with the degree of A. B. Like his forefathers, he was a tiller of the soil all his days in North Guilford, dying there March 15, 1851. He married Rachel Fowler, born in North Guilford, a daughter of Asher Fowler, and nine children were born to them, as follows: (1) Frederick William, sketch of whom follows; (2) Evelyn, born Aug. 9, 1798, who married first Susan N. Adams and second Fannie Davis; (3) Eliza Ann, born March 2, 1800; (4) Asher Fowler, born Sept. 29, 1801, who when a young man left home for the West; (5) Cathia Russell, born Oct. 12, 1813; (6) Julia, born May 21, 1815; (7) David, born April 20, 1817, who married Lucy Edwards and lived in Cromwell, Conn.; (8) Romeo, born Dec. 27, 1819, who died May 14, 1827; and (9) Elvethan, born March 27, 1814.

(VI) Frederick W. Scranton, father of Charles L., was born Aug. 15, 1796, and at the age of three years was adopted by his uncle and aunt, Capt. Frederick and Ann Lee, of Madison, with whom he grew to manhood. For a time, in early manhood, he was a clerk in the New Haven post office, and then returning to the Lee homestead (Capt. Lee appointing him his heir) took charge of the farm, and cared for his foster father in his declining years. He died in 1877, a Democrat in politics and a member of the Episcopal Church of Guilford. Mr. Scranton married Hannah Barker, a native of Branford, and a daughter of Archillis and Mary Barker, well-known citizens of that locality. She died in Madison, Aug. 9, 1890, and her remains were laid beside those of her husband in the West cemetery, Madison. Their children: (1) Charles Lee, a sketch of whom follows; (2) Harriet, born Feb. 26, 1826, who died Oct. 27, 1846; and (3) Romeo, born May 14, 1829, who died March 4, 1832.

(VII) Charles Lee Scranton, the subject proper of these lines, received his education in part at the district schools of Madison, in part at Lee's Academy, and remained on the home farm with his parents, taking care of them in their old age. For many years he followed agricultural pursuits on his father's farm, known as the Capt. Frederick Lee homestead, but he is now living retired at the advanced age of over seventy-six years, yet hale and active, and well posted on all the leading events of the day. In politics he is a lifelong Democrat, in religious faith a member of the Episcopal Church of Guilford, and a vestryman in the same.

On May 17, 1854, at North Lyme, New London Co., Conn., Charles L. Scranton was united in marriage with Louisa Stark, a native of that place and a daughter of Christopher and Phebe (Jewett) Stark, and one child graced their union, Anna Louise, who died in 1886, at the age of twenty-one years, deeply mourned not only by her parents but by a wide circle of friends, by whom she was much admired and beloved. Mr. and Mrs. Scranton are a most estimable couple, and deservedly enjoy the friendship and esteem of the best people of the community in which they live.

WALLACE S. CHASE, the efficient librarian of the Taylor library in Milford, was born Jan. 28, 1847, in Paxton, Worcester Co., Mass., a son of John and grandson of Nathan Chase.

The family traces its descent from one of three brothers who came from England at an early period and settled in Rhode Island.

Nathan Chase, grandfather of our subject, resided near Providence, R. I., and his wife, Content Anthony, was a native of that State. They had two sons: Rufus, a shoemaker in Paxton, Mass., who died in 1864, and John S., our subject's father. Nathan Chase died when the latter was a young man.

John S. Chase was born May 18, 1810, at his father's home and died in Paxton, Mass., Nov. 23, CAPT. FREDERICK LEE.

1901. His boyhood was mainly spent at Paxton, Mass., where he learned the shoemaker's trade. He married Miss Amey E. Warren, a native of Paxton, and they had six children: Wallace S., our subject; Charles E., who died at the age of twenty-one; Carrie E., wife of Almon Pingree, of Denmark, Oxford Co., Me.; Emma G., who died aged eighteen; George, who died aged two years; and Emmons W., a resident of Milford.

Amey E. (Warren) Chase was born Dec. 12, 1828, daughter of John Warren, of Paxton, and a descendant of John Warren, who came from England in 1783, and located at Marlboro, Mass. Her mother, Lucretia Merriek, traced her descent from John Merriek, a native of Wales, who came to America in 1614. The line of descent is John Merriek, born 1655; James, born 1699; Elisha, born Sept. 13, 1735; Telly, the father of Lucretia.

Wallace S. Chase was educated in the public schools of Paxton, attending until nearly the age of seventeen. In November, 1863, he enlisted at Paxton in Co. L, 2d Mass. Heavy Artillery, with which he served nearly two years, being mustered out Sept. 3, 1865, at Smithville, N. C. The following year was spent at Paxton and for two years he worked in a shoe factory at Barre, Mass. He then went to Norwalk, Conn., where he was employed for two years in a hat factory and in 1870 he came to Milford. After working two years in a hat factory there he entered the Baldwin shoe shop and two years later he went to Albany, N. Y., to take charge of a retail shoe store, remaining about a year. Returning to Milford he worked in the shoe shop most of the time until 1894 when he was elected to his present position as librarian of the Taylor library.

On Feb. 14, 1868, Mr. Chase married Miss Emma Chickering, of Rutland, Mass., daughter of Salmon Chickering, a well-known resident of that town. They have one son, Charles R. Mr. Chase is a Republican in politics and he and his wife are prominent in social life. He belongs to the Masonic fraternity; the G. A. R.; the Order of American Mechanics; and is an active worker in the Methodist Episcopal Church, being a trustee at the present time.

WILLIAM H. FORSYTH, president and treasurer of the Pond Lilly Co. For forty years and more the name of Forsyth has been most closely associated with the business interests and growth of New Haven, the late Thomas Forsyth establishing here in 1868, the well-known Elm City Dye Works, which he and his sons, following him, have developed into one of the largest and most complete establishments of its kind in the country. No name in New Haven stood higher than that of Thomas Forsyth, carrying with it such suggestions of honor and integrity and all the other qualities that go to make up a sound business life. His sons, one of whom is still identified with the business, and whose name appears at the opening of this article, were identified with many important business enterprises in the city.

The late Thomas Forsyth was born in Paisley, Scotland, March 26, 1830, a son of Thomas Gordon and Mary (McCunne) Forsyth, both highly respected citizens of their community. They were in moderate circumstances and Thomas received but a limited schooling, but being of a bright and studious disposition he read much and became familiar with the best literature of the language. When he was twelve years of age he began learning the dyeing and bleaching trade, but soon turned to weaving at Paisley, where he worked for five years in the factory that produced the celebrated Paisley shawls. His extensive reading had stirred within him a spirit of independence and in 1848 he was involved in the Chartist movement. He was finally moved to seek a fairer field in the United States. Landing in New York in November, 1848, with but a half penny in his pocket, the beginning of his career in this country was attended with every discouragement. Friends in Springfield whom he had expected to find had gone away; weeks passed without his finding employment; finally he discovered a young countryman at Malden, Mass., with whom he had worked in a Paisley dyeing shop and who was carrying on a small dye shop at Malden. He gave young Forsyth employment but after two months the enterprise proved a failure and all the wages Mr. Forsyth had earned during the entire period were lost and he was three months indebted to his landlord. Mr. Forsyth secured employment with Barrett Brothers, then the largest dyers and bleachers in Malden, who later moved to Somerville, and remained with them eighteen years, learning the business from start to finish.

Thomas Forsyth was energetic, frugal and industrious, and by saving his money was able to start in 1867 for Saccarappa, Maine, accompanied by Abial Foster, for the purpose of starting in business for himself in the line in which he had been so long engaged. This partnership was of but short duration as Mr. Forsyth, owing to poor health, was obliged to retire from business for a time. In 1868 Mr. Forsyth located in New Haven, where he was associated with Henry Fisher in the establishment of the business with which he was so long successfully and prominently associated, under the firm name of Forsyth & Fisher. It was later carried on under the name of the Forsyth Dyeing, Laundering and Bleaching Co. In the beginning the concern was a small affair and its first location was at the corner of Elm and Orchard streets. After a time the firm erected a building of their own near their present location. In 1870 a steam laundry department was added and they were the first laundry company in the State to do business by machinery. On the death of Mr. Fisher, in 1876, Mr. Forsyth became sole proprietor, his sons gradually coming into the business and relieving him of the active management and responsibility. In 1882 the demand of the business for more commodious quarters was answered by the erection of a commodious brick building on the corner of State and Lawrence streets, the plant covering nearly an acre of ground and answering all demands for dyeing and bleaching, principally dyeing for rubber shoe manufacturers. Their customers in this line at one time included a dozen or more of the largest rubber concerns in that line in the United States, and in the year 1885 there were colored and sent out from this house more than four million yards of cloth fifty-two inches in width. The laundry could handle 500 shirts, 17,000 cuffs and collars a day and 10,000 pieces of unstarched goods at the same time. Carpet cleaning was also an important branch of the business and the house could handle 20,000 yards of carpet a day. In 1887 the firm was incorporated under the name of the Forsyth Dyeing, Laundering & Bleaching Co., with a capital of $25,000. In 1890 Mr. W. H. Forsyth withdrew from the management of the Forsyth Dyeing, Laundering & Bleaching Co. and organized the Pond Lilly Co., which in 1890 absorbed the former business, buying out their machinery and real estate.

Thomas Forsyth was a Republican and took delight in the thought that he was a Republican before the organization of the party, having been a Whig and an Abolitionist, and at one time an associate with John Brown, in Kansas. In his religion he was a Presbyterian.

Mr. Forsyth was married in March, 1860, at St. John's, New Brunswick, to Miss Agnes White, who died in 1895 in Paisley, Scotland. To this union were born the following named children: William H.; Leslie W., who died in 1887; Thomas Gordon, now in Bridgeport; and Janet, who married Franklin K. Hickok, of New Haven. All the sons grew up in the business and were identified with it at one time or another.

William H. Forsyth, one of the surviving sons, and now the active head of the Forsyth estate, was educated in New Haven, where his early life was spent. He was a student in the Dwight school and afterward in the Workley school at Fairhaven. His preparations for business were made in a business college. For two years he had private teachers and was liberally educated in the business that he was to follow. In 1890 he formed the Pond Lilly Co. and purchased from his brother the other business in 1890. The Pond Lilly Co. does general cotton dyeing for manufacturers. Mr. Forsyth is president of the Pond Lilly Co., of which William C. Harmon is secretary and treasurer, and president of the Pond Lilly Laundry Co., which occupies the plant of the old Forsyth Dyeing, Laundering & Bleaching Co., corner of Lawrence and Mechanic streets. George A. Keyes is secretary, and C. R. Whedor, Jr., treasurer of this company. Fraternally Mr. W. H. Forsyth is connected with Olive Branch Lodge, F. & A. M., Ujramid Lodge, A. O. U. W.; the Heptasophs; and the Woodmen of the World. In 1887 Mr. Forsyth was married in New Haven to Mary L. Easton, a granddaughter of Joseph Fairchild, one of the old and prominent citizens of New Haven. To this marriage have been born three children, Lesley Easton, Thomas and Donald W.

CHARLES ELKANAH PADDOCK, one of Meriden's well-known farmers and dairymen, was born on his father's farm in Meriden Aug. 31, 1844, and is a representative of a very honorable family of his locality.

Throughout the last century the name of Paddock has been identified with the history of Meriden, where have dwelt the family of the late Samuel Paddock, the latter for sixty and more years one of the active and influential men of the town. He was succeeded by his son, Charles L. Paddock, who passed away full of years and good deeds.

Zachariah Paddock, from Wales, says tradition, came to New England along in the eighteenth century, landing on the Rhode Island coast, and thence later came to Middletown, Conn., where he passed the remainder of his life and died May 13, 1800, when in the seventy-third year of his age. His wife, Hannah, survived him until 1819, dying March 3, of that year, aged eighty-one years.

Samuel Paddock, son of Zachariah, the emigrant, born June 18, 1758, resided in Middletown. On May 12, 1782, he married Mehitabel Loveland, who was born Jan. 29, 1759.

Samuel Paddock (2), son of Samuel, born Feb. 22, 1784, in Middletown, married (first) Aug. 30, 1806, Polly Sears, who was born Dec. 2, 1782. In 1806 they removed to Meriden and made that town their home the balance of their lives, saving a few years' residence in Wallingford. There Mrs. Paddock died Oct. 26, 1822. On Jan. 22, 1823, Mr. Paddock married Charlotte Yale. As above stated, for more than sixty years Mr. Paddock was an influential man of the town, holding a number of offices in the gift of his fellow men and proving worthy of the civic trusts bestowed upon him. For many years he was extensively engaged in agricultural pursuits.

Charles L. Paddock, son of Samuel (2) and father of the subject of this biography, was born on the old Paddock homestead in the town of Meriden June 6, 1807, and was engaged in farming all his life. He was a successful agriculturist and well-known citizen and was the owner of one of the largest farms in East Meriden when he died, March 13, 1870. He married Elizabeth Day Hall, a daughter of Elkanah Hall, of Wallingford, and a granddaughter of David Hall, and to this union four sons and three daughters were born: Elbridge G., deceased; Frances E., who married Justin Bradley, of East Haven, and is now deceased; Sarah, now deceased, wife of Horace Hemingway, of Fairhaven; Mary A., deceased, was the wife of Seth Hotchkiss, of Georgia; Charles Elkanah; John

M., a farmer of East Meriden; and Joel H., a prominent fruit grower of Wallingford.

Charles Elkanah Paddock was reared upon the old family farm, attended the district schools and also Meriden Academy and has spent almost all of his life on the farm. For several years he worked as a mechanic and then settled down on a part of the old homestead, built a nice residence and has successfully followed general farming, market gardening and dairying.

In July, 1866, Mr. Paddock was married to Miss Ellen Jennette Hubbard, a native of Meriden, daughter of Asaph Hubbard and a member of one of the oldest families in Connecticut. They adopted one daughter, Nellie M., who is a highly educated young lady, and was engaged as a stenographer and typewriter in Hartford for several years, and on Oct. 17, 1901, she was married to L. Morelle Cooke, of Wallingford, Connecticut.

Like his father Mr. Paddock is in sympathy with the Democratic party but has always declined office at its hands. His religious membership is with the Congregational Church and Mrs. Paddock is a member of the First Baptist Church, of Meriden. Both are valued members of the Meriden Grange. Mr. Paddock is a representative citizen, honest and upright in his dealings, of exemplary life and enjoys the esteem of the whole community.

WARD H. SANFORD, M. D. Among the prominent young professional men of the city of New Haven the subject of this brief biography, Dr. Ward H. Sanford, takes an envied position, for in the comparatively short time since his graduation and location in this city he has built up a practice larger and more satisfactory than that of many older practitioners.

Dr. Sanford was born in Liberty, N. Y., Aug. 27, 1859, a son of Elias W. Sanford, who was born in Fulton Settlement Jan. 29, 1821, and died in 1900, a worthy son of Hiram Sanford who, with his wife, Phoebe Warren, was born in Connecticut. Grandmother Warren was a cousin of the brave Gen. Warren, of Revolutionary fame. Elias W. Sanford, the father, settled in Liberty, N. Y., and attended the common schools, later going to school in New York City. All his life he was a great student of history and every moment that he could spare from business was devoted to the enjoyment of this taste. Mr. Sanford learned the trade of tanner at Liberty Falls and worked at it at Cohecton, N. Y., later becoming the first postmaster of that village, holding the office many years. He married Mary T., daughter of the late Capt. H. P. Horton, of Bethel, N. Y. In 1861, with his family, he removed to New York and was there appointed weigher and inspector for the government for the New Jersey division and as he was exceedingly well-qualified for such a position he held it for five years. In 1877 he removed to White Lake and purchased the old John Linson farm, which is now known as Koneonga Place. In 1892 he sold this and returned to Liberty, where his wife died Oct. 1, 1895.

Mr. Sanford was a consistent member of the M. E. Church for a period of fifty years. The children who survive their parents are: Ward H., our subject; Bruce E. and Alice M., both of whom reside in Liberty.

Ward H. Sanford spent his boyhood days at White Lake and attended private schools both there and at Walton, N. Y., entering the University of Vermont, although previous to this time he had pursued special studies under private tutors at Utica, N. Y., for several years. Leaving the University of Vermont before graduation he entered the Baltimore Medical College and graduated in the class of 1895, coming immediately to New Haven. In this city Dr. Sanford soon found there were plenty of patients awaiting his skill and he has built up a still growing practice.

On May 24, 1889, Dr. Sanford was married to Miss Rosa Rhine, a native of Watertown, N. Y. With his brother physicians our subject is held in high esteem and is very often called in consultation upon subjects of which he has made a special study. He is connected with a number of societies, among these, Hiram Lodge, F. & A. M., of New Haven; I. O. O. F., of Utica; Royal Arcanum, of Utica; New England Order of Protection; State and county Medical and New Haven Medical Societies; also the New York State Pharmaceutical Association. In politics Dr. Sanford has long been connected with the Republican party, but his professional duties are so urgent that he takes only a voter's interest in the contests at the polls.

JOHN T. KENT. The large industrial companies reach out and select as foremen and superintendents of their various departments the best men they can find for their responsible places. It is a guarantee of superior ability for one to hold a position of that nature. For nineteen years the subject of this sketch has been foreman in the wood-working department of the Farrell foundry at Ansonia.

Mr. Kent was born in Meriden, Conn., Dec. 27, 1851, a son of Timothy and Ellen (Rowan) Kent. The father, a native of Ireland, migrated when a young man to America, locating first in Massachusetts and later in Connecticut. He was a carpenter and builder and worked as a journeyman until his death at Ansonia at the age of forty-eight years. His wife, also a native of Ireland, lived to the age of fifty-three years. To Timothy and Ellen Kent were born five children, three of whom, John T., Anna and Nora, survived. Anna married William Conklyn, of Waterbury; and Nora is married and lives in Bridgeport.

John T. Kent, when ten years of age, left his home and worked as a farmer in Cheshire, Conn., until he was sixteen years old, attending the common schools. He then began to learn his trade with his father, remaining with him and his partner until 1871. He then came to Ansonia with his father and here worked at his trade, first with John Dixbury and later successively with D. F. Johnson and Platt, Lanes & Co., with the latter company acting occasionally as foreman and he was sent by them to Farrell Foundry and was engaged in its construction about a year. He was then employed by the Farrell Foundry and a few months later, in 1880, was made foreman of the wood working department, a position which he has since held uninterruptedly. At first he had seven men in his department and now he has eighteen, and at times when constructing some of the buildings he has employed sixty men. Mr. Kent does all the drafting for new buildings or alterations. He has seen the business of the foundry grow to more than double in size and its employes increase from 200 to 500. He is a thorough wheelwright also, one of the few masters of that trade that can now be found.

Mr. Kent is prominent in the fraternal organizations of America. He is a member of the Maccabees, Tent No. 5, and has served as its commander. He has been through all the chairs and is chief of the Ancient Order of Foresters and also of the Circle of Foresters. For twenty-six years he has been a member of the Young Men's Temperance Society, has filled all the offices and he takes a deep interest in its affairs. He is also a prominent member of the Farrell Foundry Beneficial Association and is one of the oldest and most active members of the Knights of Columbus. He is an attendant of the Catholic Church, of Ansonia.

Mr. Kent is one of the public-spirited citizens of Ansonia. His sound business principles, stern integrity and high attainments have commended him to the good wishes of the community and he commands a host of friends. He is not only conversant with current affairs but has a large and well selected library, including standard works of history, poetry and mechanics, and of these and the latest literature he is an appreciative student.

BENJAMIN LOTT LAMBERT, M. D., one of the prominent and respected physicians of New Haven, whose pleasant home is at No. 358 Howard avenue, in that city, was born in New Haven Feb. 10, 1856, son of Denison David Lambert, who was born Sept. 20, 1820.

The Lambert family can trace its descent from High antiquity, going back with all the certainty of written records to the time of William the Conqueror, in the eleventh century, and by history of unimpaired credibility to the Kingdom of the Lombards, in Italy. The earliest account we have of the Lombards is that they were a roving clan from Germany, who then settled awhile in Amdili (in Germany), all attracted by the fair plains of Mesopotamia, they passed from their mountain fastnesses to the plains, and founded one of the most powerful States in Italy. The signification of the name in their language was long beard, as history states that "this clan parted their hair and suffered it to grow to whatever length it might attain." This clan is described as being of a warlike temper, as the fact and manner of their establishing themselves in Italy would prove. Upon the subversion of the Kingdom the descendants of the clan were dispersed into various parts of Europe, many of them settling in cities and large towns in that part of the world. The family from which the Milford (Conn.) branch is descended we find in history had established itself in Normandy, France. It appears from the records of heraldry that they were of the highest respectability in the said place, and on them were bestowed the various orders of knighthood. When William the Conqueror invaded England he took with him Rodolph de Lambert as his armor bearer, or knight at arms. Cardinal Lambertini, of this family, was elected Bishop of Rome Aug. 27, 1730, and took the title of Benedict XIV.

Rodolph de Lambert left one son, Hugh, and from him are descended all of the name in England and North America. Among the most noted of these were John Lambert, who commanded the Parliamentary forces against King Charles I; also Richard, ancestor of the Earl of Cavan; his heir, the first baron, who was created Lord Lambert, and Earl of the County of Cavan, in 1617 (he died July 9, 1718); his son Charles on May 12, 1642, was made governor of the city of Dublin. Jesse Lambert, the ancestor of the Lambert family of Milford, Conn., emigrated from England about 1680. He was from a branch of the Earl of Cavan's family who settled in Wiltshire (or Devon). Jesse Lambert, previous to his coming to New England, had been an officer in the British navy, and had been up the Mediterranean sea against the Turks. His first landing in America was at Boston, but in a few days he proceeded on to New Haven, and soon after to Milford, where he settled in 1684. His residence was on the west side of the Wepowage river, a few rods north of the First Presbyterian meeting-house, on No. 7 of the lots of the early planters. On May 10, 1688, he married Deborah Fowler, daughter of Capt. William Fowler, and granddaughter of William Fowler, magistrate. Jesse Lambert died in the autumn of 1718; his will is recorded on Probate Records, New Haven, Lib. IV, page 553. His son Jesse was born April 20, 1693, and died Dec. 20, 1773.

David Lambert, great-grandfather of the Doctor, and third son of Jesse (2) was born Dec. 2, 1731, in Milford, settled in the family homestead there, and was the owner of a large real estate. He was a farmer by occupation. In 1755 he married Martha (Gunn) Northrop, and they had ten children. He died Nov. 8, 1815, aged eighty-four; his wife, born July 21, 1737, died Oct. 27, 1815, aged seventy-eight. Mr. Lambert was a large, well-built man, of dignified carriage. He had a firm, unbending spirit, and was noted for his decision and independence of mind. He was sincere in his attachments as a friend, and stubborn and uncompromising to those who offended him. Truly benevolent, his house was ever opened to the poor and friendless. In his active years he was one of the leading men of the community, serving as town clerk, justice of the peace, and in other capacities.

Benjamin Lott Lambert, seventh son of David and grandfather of our subject, was born Sept. 29, 1782, in Milford (now the town of Orange), Conn. He taught in the academy in Milford for eleven years, then settled on a farm in Orange. He was the first representative sent to the Legislature from the town of Milford, and was also town clerk for several years. He died Oct. 11, 1825, at the early age of forty-three, from an overdose of root given for swamp fever. He was buried in the Orange cemetery. He was married Sept. 8, 1817, to Eunice, daughter of Isaac Hemingway, of Woodbridge, Conn. One of their sons, Benjamin Lott Lambert, born Dec. 28, 1825, is still living in New Haven.

Denison David Lambert, son of Benjamin L., was reared upon the farm in North Milford, and was educated in the common schools. Until 1840 he was engaged in the cultivation of the old homestead. For a number of years he was employed as a carpenter and builder in New Haven; was also engaged in erecting mills in the South, at Atlanta, Ga., for a time; and for fifteen years was in business at Milledgeville, Ga., after which he retired. After his return to New Haven he entered the real-estate business, which he followed for only a few years, his death occurring May 13, 1871. He married Jane Adams Hinman, who was born in Woodbury April 27, 1827, and they had three children, of whom Benjamin Lott and David Denison survive. Jennie Celia, twin sister of Benjamin L., died Aug. 4, 1898, after a life of usefulness in the United Church. Mrs. Lambert belonged to the Minor family through her mother, Mrs. Hinman, who died when Mrs. Lambert was a little girl. The father married for his second wife a lady of the same name, Hinman, who lived to the advanced age of ninety-six years.

Dr. Benjamin L. Lambert has spent his life in New Haven, where he received his literary education, finishing at Yale. In 1883 he graduated from the Medical Department of the University of New York. For two years he was engaged in the practice of his profession in Brooklyn, and in 1882 became a resident of his native city. His home and business have been maintained here since that time with most excellent and satisfactory results. In his medical practice, while he was broad and thorough in his preparation, he makes a specialty of the diseases of children.

Dr. Lambert was married Dec. 15, 1881, to Mary Durant Gilbert, of Durant, Ohio, who was the first child born in that town, hence her name; she received two building lots for the honor. She was one of five children born to Isaac U. and Mary (Husson) Gilbert; her mother, a native of Lancaster, Pa., is still living. Dr. and Mrs. Lambert have had one son, Harold Denison, who died Aug. 22, 1899. The Doctor built the house in which he resides.

Dr. Lambert is a Republican, and was the first of his political faith to be elected from his ward to the court of common council. For the four and one-half years ensuing he was elected alderman, in 1895, 1896, 1897 and until July 1, 1898, being a member of the board of aldermen, and during this time he served as chairman of the lamp committee, and as president of the board of aldermen in 1897 and six months of 1898. In 1895 and 1896 he was on the board of finance, and for one year was a member of the park commission. For the past two years he has been police surgeon of the Third precinct; he was chairman of the committee to improve Beecher pond and the adjacent land.

Dr. Lambert takes pride in his social relations, and is highly esteemed in fraternal circles. In Masonry he is an adept, having risen to the thirty-second degree, belonging to Trumbull Lodge; Franklin Chapter; Harmony Council; Lafayette Consistory, No. 2; Pyramid Temple; and other bodies. He is also affiliated with the I. O. O. F.; the A. O. U. W., in which he is past master; and the K. P., having assisted in organizing the local lodge, in which he is now past chancellor. He is past archon of the Order of Heptasophs, and belongs to the Red Men at New Haven; is past president of the American Guild; also supreme medical director of the American Mutual Life Society. The Doctor since he began life for himself has been a member of fifty-two different societies and associations, and in all these relations he has been much esteemed, winning a host of friends who wish him well and are glad to see him prosper. He is identified with the Howard Avenue Congregational Church, and has placed a memorial window in this church for his son.

In his professional associations Dr. Lambert stands well among his brethren of the science of practice as well as with the general public. His membership in the city, county and State medical societies and the American Medical Association serves to display his professional enthusiasm and to emphasize his kindly and fraternal feeling toward all who are walking in the same lines with him. He has acted as vice-president of the City and County Medical Societies, and has written often for publication on important medical themes.

DAVID DENISON LAMBERT, the present popular and capable supervising principal of the Day District, in New Haven, was born in that city Aug. 7, 1862, a son of Denison David and Jane Adams (Hinman) Lambert. He acquired his education in the New Haven schools, and was gradnated from the Academic Department of Yale in 1880, receiving his degree of M. A. two years later. After this special course of two years he began teaching mathematics in New York city, where, after a year of good work, he received a call to the schools at West Ansonia, in New Haven county, Conn. At this place he spent two years, after which for three years he was principal of the public schools at Westville. In 1894 he entered upon his present work, as supervising principal of the Day District, which in 1901 consisted of five buildings, forty teachers and 1,700 pupils.

In 1888 Mr. Lambert was married to Katie A. Latham, who was born in New York, a daughter of Joseph A. Latham, who was a rare mechanical genius, and moved to New Haven to take up the steam fitting business, later becoming a pattern and model maker, and he died there in 1893. Ellen A. (Atkins) Latham, mother of Mrs. Lambert, was a daughter of Samuel Atkins, of Waterbury. Three children have blessed the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lambert, namely: Cecile, Rheta and Denison Latham.

Mr. Lambert is a Republican, and belongs to the Union League and the Young Men's Republican Club. He is also a member of the Young Men's Institute, the A. O. U. W., the New Haven Golf Club and the American Mutual Life Society. As a mathematician he has more than a local reputation, and he has perfected a perpetual calendar, which shows any day of any year by a simple change which requires but a moment to effect. With his family he has attended for eight years the Howard Avenue Congregational Church.

WILLIAM A. PENFIELD, of Meriden, is a scion of one of the early families of New England.

Nathaniel Penfield, the first of the American branch of the family, was a member of the New Haven Colony, and settled at Wallingford, where he died in January, 1776.

Nathaniel Penfield (2), son of Nathaniel and his wife Hannah, was a farmer in what is now Meriden. On June 9, 1755, he married Lydia Barnes, and died in Meriden May 18, 1777. His widow married Jeremiah H. Osgood, April 23, 1778, and died Jan. 31, 1811, aged seventy-six years.

Phineas Penfield, son of Nathaniel (2) and his wife Lydia, was born June 6, 1756. From Farmington, Conn., he became an enlisted private soldier in the Continental army, and saw actual service for the space of twelve months and twenty-three days, a part of this time being under Capt. Curtis and Col. Enos. On April 9, 1778, he married Lucy, daughter of Jeremiah H. and Lucy (Churchill) Osgood, and he died March 28, 1834, in Hartford county, at the age of seventy-seven years. Nathaniel, a brother to Phineas Penfield, but four years his junior, also enlisted at Farmington as a private, in the Continental troops, and his service lasted for eighteen months and twelve days, during a portion of which time he served under Capt. Bray and Col. Butler.

Phineas Penfield (2), son of Phineas and Lucy, was born Oct. 18, 1785, and Nov. 25, 1812, he married Ruth Judd Hart, who was born May 3, 1793, a daughter of Linus Hart, of Farmington. She died Dec. 11, 1848, at the age of fifty-five years. Phineas Penfield was a farmer and cooper and died in his sixtieth year, Aug. 3, 1845.

Lemuel Penfield, son of Phineas (2), was born in New Britain, and died in 1876, aged fifty-six years. He was reared in his native place, and while still a youth he entered the shipping department of the Stanley Rule & Level Co., where he remained for several years. Mr. Penfield was the first policeman appointed under the city government of New Britain, and continued on the force until his death. His remains rest in the New Britain cemetery. His first wife was Caroline Allen, who bore him four children, the eldest of these died in infancy; Henry B. resides in Meriden; William A.; and Caroline married Spencer Page and lives in New Britain. Lemuel Penfield was married a second time, Miss Hattie Terrell becoming his wife. During life he was a faithful and valued member of the Congregational Church, and espoused the principles of the Republican party from its first organization.

William Allen Penfield, son of Lemuel and Caroline (Allen) Penfield, was born March 30, 1852, in New Britain, Conn., and there attended the district school, passing through the course at the high school. When but fourteen years of age he entered the employ of the Stanley Rule & Level Co., in the rule department, where he continued for twelve years, eight of these being employed on piece work. Then he came to Meriden, and here accepted a position with the Meriden Britannia Co., in the German silver department, remaining in this city for three years in the same capacity. When Mr. Penfield returned to his old home, New Britain, he worked in the lock shop for one year, but decided to come back to Meriden and accepted a position in the brass department of the Bradley & Hubbard Manufacturing Co., as a contractor, and for seventeen years he has continued with this well-known concern. His reliability and substantiality are well established in this city, where he is regarded as a representative citizen.

Mr. Penfield has been prominently identified with public affairs in this city for a number of years. Until 1901 his political connection was with the Democratic party, but the issues of that time caused him to vote with the Republicans and he has been warmly welcomed into that party. In 1896 he was elected on the Democratic ticket as alderman from the Third ward, in this city, was chairman of the Claims committee, and in 1899 he was appointed a member of the board of Public Works, having two years yet to serve. Under Mayor Ives he also served as fire commissioner for one year.

On Oct. 10, 1874, Mr. Penfield was married in New Britain, Conn., to Sarah Briggs, who was born in New Brunswick, Canada, a daughter of Eben and Melitable (Taylor) Briggs, and the four children born to this union were: Harry Briggs, who died young; Mattie May, who married Lorenzo T. Fuller, has one child, Briggs Penfield; William Lemuel, with the Bradley & Hubbard Manufacturing Co.; and Charles Larkin. The home which Mr. Penfield erected on Randolph avenue, in Meriden, is one of the most attractive and stately on that beautiful thoroughfare, and it is presided over with ease and grace by his most estimable wife, who is prominent in both religious and social circles in Meriden. She is an active member of All Saints' Episcopal Church, while Mr. Penfield shows by an exemplary life his liberal and discerning bequests to all deserving objects and his public spirit on all occasions, that he is actuated by true Christian principles.

Fraternally Mr. Penfield is a member of Myrtle Lodge, No. 6, K. of P., also of Meriden Lodge, No. 35, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and Montowese Tribe, I. O. R. M., Silver City Lodge, O. U. A. M., and Pilgrim's Harbor Council, R. A. Perhaps Mr. Penfield's first interest, outside his business and his family, is the possession of fine horses, and usually he owns some speedy trotters. Several specimens which have attracted attention have been trained under his eye. Although in no way a sporting man, the interest he takes in horses is an enjoyable diversion from business cares.

E. EUGENE HUBBARD, a well-known agriculturist of the town of Orange, was born June 10, 1848, on his present farm, an attractive homestead at Oyster River, or Woodmont, about three miles from West Haven.

The family has been prominent in this section from an early day, and our subject's great-grandfather, Gen. John Hubbard, served as a general in the training of the old-time militia, under appointment from the governor. He resided in New Haven in early manhood, and for more than twenty years was chorister of the Center Church, but his last days were spent in Litchfield, Conn., where he died at the age of eighty-six.

John Hubbard, our subject's grandfather, was born in Hamden and became a farmer by occupation, locating at the present homestead in 1817. He died there in 1861, aged eighty-three years. In 1802 he married Sally Peck, of Woodbridge, who died in 1855, at the age of seventy-three. They were devout members of the Congregational Church and attended for a time in New Haven and later in West Haven. They had two children, a son and a daughter.

John P. Hubbard, our subject's father, was born in Hamden, and much of his early life was spent at the present homestead. For some years he was in the shoe business in Norfolk, Va., but he then returned to agricultural pursuits at the farm where he died at the age of seventy. In religious faith he was a Congregationalist, and politically he was first a Whig, and later active as a member of the Republican party. At times he held offices in the township, including that of assessor. He married Miss Sarah Ann Clark, a native of Woodmont, and the daughter of Thomas Clark, a well-known tailor and farmer of that town. Her mother, Eunice Mallett, of Bridgeport, lived to eighty-three years of age, and of the seven children six lived to maturity. Of these one is still living, Mrs. Harriet Law, of New Haven. Our subject's mother died in 1899, at the advanced age of eighty-two. John P. Hubbard and his wife had seven children, of whom six are now living, the other having died in childhood. John M. and Lewis C. reside near our subject; E. Eugene; Anna married William Cottle, of Waterbury, who conducts the West Side Hill greenhouses; Rev. George H., who has been in China as a missionary since 1884; and Mary E., wife of Charles R. Lawrence, of Waterbury.

As a boy our subject assisted his father on the homestead, of which he took charge at the latter's death. The place contains about eighty acres, which he devotes to general farming and gardening, with excellent results. In politics he is a Republican, and at one time he served as a constable. He was reared in the Congregational Church, to which his parents belonged, and he and his wife are active members of the First Congregational Church of West Haven and of the Sunday-school. In 1877 he married Miss Vara Smith, and they have had six children, of whom five are living, viz.: Minnie, Bertha, William, Florence and Clarence. Mrs. Hubbard is a native of the town of Orange, and a daughter of Marcus Smith, a prominent agriculturist, who died there aged eighty-two years. Her mother, Lucy Garlick, was born in Clyde, N. Y., and died in 1888, aged sixty-five years. Of the four children of Marcus and Lucy Smith, three are living, viz.: Brace, a resident of West Haven; Fanny, wife of Lewis Hubbard (our subject's brother); and Mrs. Hubbard.

THOMAS ENGLISH WORTHINGTON, a representative of one of the oldest and best known families of Massachusetts, and for many years a prominent contracting brick mason of New Haven, was born in Oxford, Conn., Aug. 25, 1842, a son of Thomas and Nancy (Hoyt) Worthington. The father was a native of Agawam, Mass., and by occupation a hatter. He died in Oxford, in 1848, when our subject, second of a family of four boys, was six years old. The mother, Nancy Hoyt, was a native of New York City, where she was educated, removing later to Connecticut, where her father engaged in farming. She died in 1873. The four children of Thomas and Nancy (Hoyt) Worthington were Harvey, Thomas E., George and Albert. Harvey was a carriage builder, head of the Concord Carriage Co., of Concord, N. H., and he died in 1892;

George, also a carriage maker of Gilmanton, N. H., died in 1868. Albert was a rubber boot manufacturer, and died in 1881.

Thomas E. Worthington spent his boyhood days on a farm in Oxford. He attended the old district school until he was fifteen years of age, and a year later he came to New Haven and began an apprenticeship at the mason trade. He continued steadily at his trade until August, 1862, when he enlisted for three years or until the close of the Civil war, in Company B, 20th Conn. V. I. He saw much active service and was wounded at the battle of Gettysburg in July, 1863, and was mustered out of service at Washington at the close of the war.

Returning to his old home, Mr. Worthington resumed his old trade at once, and has ever since been prominently identified with the same. Most of his work has been in New Haven, but occasionally business called him to other cities, and one year, 1877, he spent in St. John's, N. B., where he built three churches.

On Sept. 3, 1867, Mr. Worthington married Mary Jane Pardee, a native of Oxford, daughter of William L. and Sarah E. (Sackett) Pardee. Her father was born in Madison, and her mother in what is now Beacon Falls. Mr. and Mrs. Worthington are members of the Universalist Church. Mr. Worthington is prominent in the fraternal benevolent and social orders. He is a member of Admiral Foote Post, G. A. R., No. 17; Garfield Council, American Mechanics; Camp No. 8, Patriotic Order Sons of America; Hammonasset Tribe, No. 1, Red Men; Vetrain Lodge, No. 1, Good Fellows; and also a member of the Bricklayers' Union. In politics he has always identified himself with Republican principles, and he has been an active and influential worker in the ranks of the party organization. For eleven years he has been the sewer inspector of New Haven, and in 1901 he received from Mayor John P. Studley the appointment of superintendent of sewers. He is highly respected, successful in business, and one of the prominent, self-made men of New Haven.

GEORGE BRONSON MURDOCK, whose standing in Meriden as a man of affairs and as an honorable citizen is unquestioned, was born in the town of Waterbury, New Haven county, Feb. 25, 1840, and is connected by both maternal and paternal ancestry with old Connecticut families.

The Murdocks are of Scottish descent. The first of the family in America was Peter Murdock, a native of Limerick, Ireland. He was a son of John Murdock, a wood comber by occupation, whose parents were natives of Scotland, but settled in Limerick on account of religious persecution at home. John Murdock was a staunch supporter of William of Orange, losing nearly all his property because of this loyalty. He married Mrs. Thomas, who became the mother of four children, Peter Murdock, our subject's emigrant ancestor being of the number.

Peter Murdock was eleven years old when he was sent from his native place, because of his father's losses and the troublous times, to seek a home with his uncle, Peter Murdock, who resided in the North of England. There he remained until seventeen years old, when he came to the New World, landing at Philadelphia with only a crown in his pocket. Finding employment with a Quaker family, he worked on the farm for a time, and finally, having saved a few shillings, he invested in cutlery and notions, which he peddled. Coming North, he settled in Long Island, and married Mary E. Fithin, at Southampton. He bought a small store at East Hampton, the care of which fell to his wife, while he devoted himself to the coast trade with a small vessel. Making some money, he bought 2,200 acres of land in Little Egg Harbor, N. J., and 840 acres in what is now Westbrook, Conn., to which latter point he moved his store. There he died Nov. 6, 1753, in the seventy-fourth year of his age, and there he was buried. His wife died Oct. 29, 1755, in her sixty-ninth year. Becoming established on Long Island, Peter Murdock sent for his three sisters, Abigail, Elizabeth and Dorcas. The first of these had died in the meantime, but the other two came. The last named married John Conklin; those of the name mentioned in this article were of the same lineage as United States Senator Roscoe Conkling. Elizabeth married a Mr. Sing, a goldsmith of Philadelphia.

John Murdock, only child of Peter, was born in 1706 on Long Island, and accompanied his father to Saybrook, where he became engaged in farming, and was an extensive land owner. He was a deacon in the Congregational Church from 1764 to 1778; was a major in the Colonial militia; judge of the common pleas court of the county of New London; and represented his town, then Saybrook, in the Legislature. He died in Saybrook, and was buried in the local cemetery. John Murdock was twice married. Phoebe Sill, his first wife, was born in Lyme, Conn., and died ten months after marriage. Frances Conklin, his second wife, was a native of East Hampton, Long Island, and became the mother of thirteen children: Peter, who graduated from Yale College, and died the same year; Mary, who married Nathaniel Hunting, Jr.; John; Phoebe, who married Rev. John Devotion; William; Abigail, Mrs. Lee, who had nine children; Enoch; Jonathan, a graduate of Yale and a clergyman in after life; Anna, Mrs. Lay; Miriam, Mrs. Morgan; Abraham; Frances, who married Lewis Jones and had a large family; and James, a graduate of Yale College.

William Murdock, son of Major John, was born Aug. 31, 1740, and was a farmer in Westbrook. He married Jerusha Lay, of Lyme, who bore him

Harriet M. Shurdock.

Z. Kimball R.

thirteen children: John; William; Phebe, who was twice married, first to a Mr. Hambleton, second to a Mr. Richardson; Peter, grandfather of our subject; Elisha (twin of Peter), who was drowned; Polly, Mrs. Zachariah Hurd; Miriam, Mrs. Isa Hurd; Anna, Mrs. Daniel Anderson; Frances, Mrs. Benjamin Smith; Enoch; Jonathan; James; and Abigail, Mrs. Samuel Whitney. The mother of these died in 1796, aged fifty-five years, and the father subsequently married Thankful Warner, widow of David Warner, of Millington; she died in 1816. There were no children by this union. William Murdock, the father, died in 1821 or 1822.

Peter Murdock, son of William, was born in Westbrook in 1768, died March 20, 1852, and was buried in Westbrook cemetery. He was a cabin boy on three privateers during the Revolution, and in later life a farmer and land owner, becoming one of the substantial citizens of his day. He married Mrs. Bathsheba (Dodge) Bush, widow of John Bush, in East Lyme, and to this union were born: Polly U., who married a Mr. DeWolfe, of Clinton, Conn.; Charles and Delia, twins, the latter of whom married Edwin Dowd, and was the mother of Zina Dowd, of Meriden; Emeline, who married Horace Nettleton; Zina Kelsey; and Mathew Griswold. Mrs. Murdock was the mother of three children by her first marriage: Fenner, a prominent manufacturer of Meriden; John; and Amaziah. Mrs. Murdock died in Westbrook in 1852.

ZINA KELSEY MURDOCK, the father of George B., was born in Westbrook, March 2, 1811, and his education was obtained in the district schools of his native town. In early boyhood he had delicate health. Endowed with a restless disposition, he left home at the age of fourteen years to make his way in the world, walking from Westbrook to Meriden, where his brother, Fenner Bush, was engaged in the business of manufacturing ivory combs. For several years he worked in this factory, and then became engaged in a mercantile business in partnership with Curtis L. North, Mr. North managing the local business, while Mr. Murdock carried on trading along the Ohio and Mississippi rivers. This arrangement did not prove satisfactory and Mr. Murdock retired, leaving Mr. North in possession. He bought the farm where his son George Bronson now resides, in Murdock avenue, then known as the Curtis farm, and here spent his last days, dying Jan. 30, 1874. He was at the time among the large land owners in the town. A broad-minded man, he was a lover of fair play and liberty, and left a fine reputation. His courage and regard for free speech were fully demonstrated during the so-called riots of 1837 in Meriden. In the fall of 1837 Rev. Mr. Ludlow came to Meriden to lecture on Anti-slavery, and as Meriden was a pro-slavery town it was proposed to shut him out. Mr. Murdock and several other advocates of free speech insisted on hearing him, and in consequence a mob gathered which inflicted serious injuries on the brave defenders of free speech. A Whig in early life, Mr. Murdock had no sympathy with slavery and no patience with those who brought on the Civil war. In his last years he supported the Democratic party. He never sought political honors. In his early life he was a Congregationalist in religious connection; after his marriage he and his wife united with the Episcopal Church, and in that communion he died. He married Harriet M. Bronson, who was born in Waterbury, daughter of Judge Bennet and Anna (Smith) Bronson. To this union were born three children: Mary E., Oct. 8, 1843; George Bronson, Feb. 25, 1846; and Charles Z., May 1, 1850. Mrs. Murdock died on the farm in 1895, and was buried in Meriden cemetery.

George Bronson Murdock attended the district schools, and the Russell Military Academy, at New Haven. He grew to manhood on the farm, where he has always remained, engaged in general agriculture, and he is one of the better known farmers of his section, highly respected for his industrious habits, kindly disposition and intelligence.

Mr. Murdock was married, in April, 1896, in Meriden, to Harriet Elizabeth Graves, a native of New Haven, a lady of charming disposition, a vocal artist of much ability, and known as a model wife and mother. They have three children, George Peter, Harriet Josephine and Bennet Bronson. Mr. Murdock is a Democrat, and has served on the school committee of the town. As one of the organizers of Meriden Grange he takes much interest in its work, and held the office of master for the first three years. Mrs. Murdock is also a member of this society.

JOHN N. POPP, late of Seymour, Conn., where his death occurred Oct. 2, 1897, was for nearly a third of a century one of the town's business men and commanded the esteem and respect of his fellow citizens and townsmen.

Mr. Popp was born in 1841 or 1842, in Bavaria, Germany, a son of Conrad and Katherina Popp, and in about 1865 came to America, and not long thereafter to Seymour, Conn., which place he ever afterward made his home. He was a merchant tailor by trade, and for a short time was employed at journey work. He then went into business for himself at Seymour, and continued therein up to the time of his death, meeting with deserved success. Of a kind disposition and generous nature, he was popular in the community and made a good citizen. Socially he was identified with a number of different orders or fraternities, among which were the Masonic fraternity and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He was also a member of the A. O. U. W., and of the New England Benefit Association, and of the German Society of Hermanns-Sohne. On Mr. Popp's death marked respect was shown his memory, the business houses of Sey-near closed during the funeral. Many beautiful floral tokens of esteem and respect came on that occasion from the various orders to which the deceased had belonged, and from personal friends. The funeral was largely attended, attesting the affection, esteem and respect of the community at large in the deceased as a friend, neighbor and citizen. The pall bearers were Charles Monwhiler, Henry Schneider, Antone Noe, Leonard Wyom, Wolfgang Schaeffer and Louis Miller.

Mr. Popp in his religious faith was a German Lutheran, but, there being no church of that denomination at Seymour, he attended there, with his wife, the Congregational Church. In his political views Mr. Popp had been a Democrat up to the campaign of 1896, but voted in that year for William McKinley for President.

In 1867 Mr. Popp was married to Miss Sarah E. Wirth, born in Seymour, Conn., the only daughter of Peter and Mary A. (Andrews) Wirth, the former a native of Bavaria, Germany, born in about 1825, and the latter a native of Olneyville, R. I., born in about 1828, a daughter of Denison and Lucia Andrews. Peter Wirth came to America in a sailing vessel when quite a young man and located in the town of Seymour, Conn., many years ago, and here lived the rest of his days. He was an industrious and law-abiding citizen, and he and his wife were respected and esteemed citizens. Mr. Wirth for years was connected as an employe with the manufacturing concern of Raymond French. His death occurred Nov. 16, 1871, and that of his wife April 6, 1886, when they were aged, respectively, forty-six and fifty-eight years.

THOMAS H. MAGUIRE, supervisor of the South Division of the Connecticut School for Boys, is not only a competent official of that institution, but is also well known in musical circles as leader of the Meriden Military Band. He has been a worthy resident of Meriden from early manhood.

Mr. Maguire was born Nov. 30, 1863, in Boston, Mass., one of the three children of Thomas and Catherine (Keys) Maguire, the former of whom died in Milwaukee, Wis., the latter in New Haven, Conn. Thomas H. attended the Boston public schools until he was ten years old, when he removed to Milwaukee, Wis., and there attended school until about eighteen years of age. His school days over, he returned East, locating at Meriden, and obtained employment at the Connecticut School for Boys, commencing in the engine room, where he had charge of the boilers. He faithfully performed his duties, and in time was promoted to the position of night watchman, where he exhibited the same fidelity to every trust. He rose by degrees until he reached his present position, that of supervisor of the South Division, the duties of which he has discharged to the general satisfaction of all concerned.

Concerning Mr. Maguire's musical career we quote from the Dominant, a musical journal, of April, 1898:

At the age of fifteen he became deeply interested in band music, and chose the baritone as his favorite instrument. Studying under the direction of first-class teachers he has nearly all the better class of solos for baritone, and is recognized as one of the best baritone players in his vicinity. Mr. Maguire has attained his present position by dint of hard work and constant study. He is the owner of a splendid library of music for band, orchestra, voice and piano, embracing some of the best European publications, and was for some years a regular subscriber to J. R. Lafleur Sons' Challenge Journal for Band, and Wright & Rounds' Liverpool Brass Band Notes. He has scored for military band such overtures as "William Tell," "Semiramide," "Oberon," and "Tannhauser," and the labor and care of scoring such works for band can only be appreciated by those who are familiar with the compositions. Recognizing the fact that in order to teach intelligently one must be familiar with the compass of all ordinary instruments, he has studied instrumentation in a most practical manner, viz.: Getting full scores of compositions direct from the composers.

At the last quarterly meeting of the Board of Directors of the Connecticut School for Boys, the matter of having a band was taken up, and as a result Mr. Maguire was appointed bandmaster. The course of instruction imparted the thirty boys who compose the school band may prove interesting to readers of The Dominant. The boys are divided into three classes, according to ability, and at their daily meetings, which occupy several hours, rehearse the scales in every form from key of C to Gb, and from C to key of A for bases, making key of F-sharp for Eb instruments. The blowing of sustained tones being the foundation of all instrumental practice, a great deal of attention is given to that much neglected course of instruction; and it is surprising the beautiful tone that can be produced by a well balanced band. If the time be taken up in this manner, the benefit will soon be noticed.

Mr. Maguire has studied voice culture, and the knowledge gained from that study is of great benefit in band work. He has adopted a new idea for so far as I am aware it has not been tried before. Every teacher knows how hard it is to teach players to read readily. He has taken Greenwood's two-part exercises for singing classes, and arranged the most important of them in different keys for full band. Scale practice is usually looked upon as dry study; but with the above exercises, you combine time with tune. The band is divided into sections; those on the right playing the simple scale in time; those on the left playing the counterpoint, four quarters to the measure; then reversing the parts, and so on till the value of all notes are mastered. Any one who adopts that method with new material will be amply repaid for his labor. After but three months' practice the boys play such pieces as "Sweet Brier Overture," "Philo Senate March," "American Belle March" etc. etc.

The school has a fine room which has been placed at the disposal of the band, and the boys have made it additionally attractive by adorning the walls with pictures of musical organizations and portraits of all the well-known band leaders. Among whom, here as elsewhere the only Sousa seems to be the favorite. Leader Maguire is very much attached to his art, and we have every reason to believe has a bright future before him.

We may add that the Meriden Military Band, which now has thirty-six members, has under Mr. Maguire's direction filled some very important engagements, chief of which might be mentioned the trips of ten days with Merriam Post, G. A. R., to the battlefields of Gettysburg and to Washington, D. C. Mr. Maguire has studied under Bandmaster John Lyon; harmony and composition with Prof. F. T. Southwick, of Meriden; voice culture with J. Jerome Hayes, of New Haven, and with George M. Greene, of New York. He has sung at various times in several of the local churches. He makes a practice of spending his annual vacation where the best of band music is performed, and in numerous other ways displays his enthusiastic devotion to his profession. His musical library, mentioned in the foregoing, embraces also many valuable works on musical literature, including some of the principal works of the masters.

Mr. Maguire was married in New York City, by Rev. Dr. Burtzell, to Miss Catherine Mulvaney, and they have two children, Mary Elizabeth and Francis Lawrence, both pupils at St. Rose's School. Mrs. Maguire is a woman of refinement and strong character. She fills the position of supervisor of the dining room in the Connecticut School for Boys. Mr. and Mrs. Maguire are members of St. Joseph's Church, Meriden. Socially he unites with Silver City Lodge, A. O. U. W.; the Modern Woodmen of America; the Amaranth Club; the Catholic Club; and the Meriden Turner Society.

JOHN HARWOOD PEARCE. A leading citizen of New Haven, who for many years has been prominently identified with the rubber industries of the country, is John H. Pearce, of this city, now the efficient superintendent of L. Candee & Co.

Richard Pearce, his grandfather, was born, reared and married in England, and was a miller by occupation. In his later years he moved to Centerville, Canada, where he died at a good old age, respected by the community.

Richard M. Pearce, son of Richard and father of John H., of this biography, was born in Barnstable, England, Feb. 1, 1828, and was married to Mary A. Harwood, in his native land. He was a leather sheemaker by trade in the old country. In 1850 he brought his family to Montreal, Canada, and there became the superintendent of the Canadian Rubber Co., remaining in that capacity for thirty years. He then removed to Boston, Mass., and entered the employ of the Boston Rubber Shoe Co., later becoming interested in the Lyeomg Rubber Co., at Williamsport, Pa. His death took place in New Haven, while on a visit to his son, April 15, 1886, his widow surviving until April 1, 1889, when she passed away in New Haven. His political sympathies were with the Republican party, and both he and wife were devoted to the Episcopal Church. The children born to Richard M. Pearce and wife were: Richard M., who is with the Hood Rubber Co., of Boston; Elizabeth A., who died at the age of twenty; and John Harwood, of this sketch.

John H. Pearce was born in Montreal, Canada, May 16, 1855, and spent his boyhood days in that city, remaining there until he was twenty-three. His education was acquired in the public and normal schools, upon the completion of which he entered into the rubber business, under his father, with the Canadian Rubber Co., remaining about eight years, and thoroughly mastering every detail. He then accepted a position with the Boston Rubber Shoe Co., at Malden, Mass., continuing there for the succeeding two years, when he was appointed assistant superintendent, with his father, at Williamsport, Pa., and remained with the Lyeomg Rubber Co., of that city, for four years. On May 20, 1884, he accepted the responsible position of foreman with L. Candee & Co., of New Haven, and efficiently and acceptably performed the duties of that position until 1892, when he became assistant superintendent, so continuing until Nov. 1, 1901, when he was made superintendent.

Although Mr. Pearce has been immersed in business ever since his location in New Haven, he has taken an active part in the civic life of the community, his services being recognized by his election as councilman in 1895, and as alderman from the Fifth ward in 1897, his friends regarding these elections as personal tributes, as the ward is decidedly Democratic, and Mr. Pearce is an ardent and active Republican. Mayor John P. Studley has recently recognized his merits by appointing him fire commissioner, showing a high degree of confidence.

On May 16, 1883, Mr. Pearce was married to Miss Estella A. Nichols, of Williamsport, a daughter of Jared P. Nichols, of old Connecticut stock, and five children have been born of this union: John Harwood, Jr.; Walter Nichols; Frederick Richard; and Bessie and Charles J., both deceased. Fraternally Mr. Pearce is connected with Hiram Lodge, No. 1, A. F. & A. M., of which he is past master; with Franklin Chapter, No. 2; Harmony Council, No. 8; Pyramid Temple, Mystic Shrine, of Bridgeport; New Haven Commandery, No. 2, Knights Templar; and has taken all the higher degrees, including the thirty-second. As a member of St. Paul's Episcopal Church he is highly esteemed and in business and social circles is favorably regarded. Aside from all his other duties, Mr. Pearce has interested himself in perfecting a number of useful inventions in the rubber business, and owns the patents on a number of them.

JOHN V. RATTELSDORFER. One of the prominent citizens of New Haven who has done much in the way of city legislation for its improvement, and who also is a successful man of business, is John V. Rattelsdorfer, who was born in New Haven April 21, 1858.

His father, John V. Rattelsdorfer, Sr., was born in Bavaria, Germany, and came to New York in 1848, and one year later to New Haven, serving in the Civil war as sergeant of Company C, 6th Conn. V. I., and he died from wounds and disease contracted at that time. By trade he was a weaver, and manufacturer of silk vests and similar goods, while his father was a gentleman of leisure. In Vienna he married Fackla Drexler, who was born in the province of Moravia, Austria, and who died in 1879. After coming to New Haven John A. Rattelsdorfer, Sr., went to work as a weaver in some of the manufacturing shops, and for a short time was employed by the New Haven Clock Co., and then engaged in business for himself, opening up a refreshment hall, and soon becoming a force in politics, and was the very first German Republican in New Haven. In his political ambitions he was encouraged by his able wife, who was a woman of great force of character, and together they had much influence with the German element. Twelve children were born to these most worthy people, but the others before the birth of our subject.

John A. Rattelsdorfer, our subject, spent his boyhood days in what was then the Fifth city ward, but is now the Sixth, and attended the Wooster grammar school, and later graduated from the Russell Commercial Collegiate Institute. After finishing his education he became a clerk in a meat business, but when he was about eighteen his careful and devoted mother sent him to Vienna for a visit of six months as a finish to his education. Upon his return he engaged in the meat business, on the corner of State and Clark streets, for a short time, later opening on State street, where he remained until other interests claimed his attention. The six following years were spent by Mr. Rattelsdorfer in clerking, and then he went to Fairhaven and started into business on the corner of Poplar and Grand streets, where he remained one year, later clerking for his old firm for some six months. He then opened up a business in his own ward, on the corner of Green and Wallace streets, where he was located for eight years, later purchasing his present location on the corner of Green and Chestnut streets. Here he has built up a fine brick block, and has conducted a large business in the meat and grocery line ever since April 5, 1892.

In 1893 Mr. Rattelsdorfer entered politics, and has been one of the most active members of the Republican party in this locality ever since. In 1895 he was a member of his ward committee, and was elected alderman, and served through 1895-6, in 1895 the vote being a tie. A new election was called and the result was the seating of our subject by twenty-five votes, although the ward was some four votes Democratic, which made Mr. Rattelsdorfer the first Republican alderman ever elected in it. Only one Republican has been elected since then, which followed our subject's term of office, he having secured re-election. Ever since that time he has been a leader in his ward, belongs to its committee, was elected a delegate to the State Convention at Hartford, one of the four from this city. In 1901 he was appointed chairman of the board of charities, by Mayor Stulley, which is considered a high selection on account of the conscientious manner in which he performs public duties. Mr.

Rattelsdorfer has been very active in furthering measures of public benefit, and it was through his instrumentality that permanent pavements were laid.

Fraternally our subject is very popular, and is connected with the Masonic fraternity in Connecticut Rock Lodge, Franklin Chapter, and Harmony Council; and he also belongs to the Royal Arcanum, New England Order of Protection, Ancient Order of United Workmen, Knights of the Macabees, Patriotic Sons of America, the German society Deutsche Gesellschaft, and others, and he is a member of the 2d Company of the Governor's Foot Guards.

On Oct. 20, 1878, Mr. Rattelsdorfer was married to Miss Anna B. Oppel, who was born in New Haven, although her parents were native Germans. Five children have blessed this union: John V., Jr.; Charles D.; Anna T.; Bessie J.; and Minnie V. Of these John V., Jr., married Minnie Rogerson. The religious connection of the family is with the St. Paul's Episcopal Church.

EDWARD J. MORSE, a well-known and highly esteemed citizen of New Haven, retired captain of the Second Company, Governor's Foot Guards, and the owner and successful manager of large greenhouses near Morris Cove, was born in Durham, Middlesex Co., Conn., Aug. 9, 1851.

Joseph I. Morse, the father of Edward J., was born in Wallingford May 24, 1810, a son of Jonathan, Jr., and grandson of Jonathan, Sr., and his wife, Esther Curtis. Jonathan Morse, Jr., who was a farmer in Wallingford, married Thankful Blakeslee. Joseph I. Morse married Elizabeth Hill, of Guilford, in 1833, and four children were born to them, as follows: Jane A., who married Charles L. Shepard and resides in New Haven; Augustus W., who is married and lives in Guilford; Lois E., who married Wilson Clark and lives in New Britain; and Joseph, the youngest, died in childhood. The mother of these children died in 1839. Joseph I. Morse married (second) Mary Nettleton, who was born in North Killingworth, and passed out of life in 1861. A family of seven children were born of this union, five of whom grew to maturity: Eckford I. is a painter in Durham; Rosella died young; Harriet L. married William T. Hayden and lives in Hartford; Frederick L. is an engineer and lives in West Haven; Herbert H. is an engineer in North Haven; Nelson died in infancy; Edward J. was the fourth in the family. In 1863 Joseph I. Morse married a third time, Phoebe Welmore becoming his wife. Their children were: Nellie, Joseph, Charlotte, George and Bertha, some of whom are now deceased. In politics Mr. Morse was a lifelong Democrat, and both he and wife were valued and consistent members of the Methodist Church. He died in 1881.

The boyhood of Edward J. Morse was spent in Durham, and there he attended school. When he was twelve years old he began to assist neighboring farmers during the summer months, and attended school during the winters, in both Northford and Wallingford. At the age of fifteen his school days were over, and a year later he went to Westville, where for four years he clerked in a meat market, and for seven years was a valued employe of S. E. Merwin, the pork packer, going then to Fairhaven, where he opened up a meat business of his own, which he conducted for ten years. Returning to Mr. Merwin, he took charge of his business in Allentown, and was successfully engaged there for five years, but in January, 1897, he opened up his present business, which is that of a florist. Mr. Morse is well situated for this line, near Morris Cove, and has extensive grounds, large greenhouses, fitted with all modern appliances, and has a very large trade which is constantly increasing.

On April 24, 1879, Mr. Morse was married to Miss Ida V. Smith, of New Haven, a daughter of Edward D. Smith, and a family of three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Morse, Jessie M., Ruby A. and Edward S. In politics Mr. Morse has been an active Republican, and is now efficiently serving as alderman of the Fifteenth ward, to which office he was elected in April, 1900. For eight years he served as captain of the Foot Guards, but has since retired from that body. Socially he was connected with Quinnipiac Lodge, No. 1, I. O. O. F., and he and family are highly regarded in the Methodist Church.

FRANK HENRY WHEELER, M. D. The subject of the present biography has been more than a spectator in the evolution of medical practice in the State of Connecticut, where he has passed the best years of his life, and is still an active factor in the profession. Dr. Wheeler was born in Montville, New London Co., Conn., July 18, 1856. Grandfather Henry Wheeler, also a native of Connecticut, married Lucretia Loomis, and reared a family of three children: William H.; Edwin; and Maria, who married Harvey Derrin, and resided in New Haven, Connecticut.

William H. Wheeler, the father of our subject was a prominent man in Montville, and when he removed in 1873, to New Haven, he threw himself heartily into all public enterprises, soon after being elected president of the board of councilmen. Socially he was connected with Somerset Lodge of Norwich, F. & A. M. Later he became a manufacturer of cotton goods, and also conducted both a saw and grist mill, but late in life engaged in the life insurance and real estate business. He married Waittelle E. Whalley, a native of Chesterfield, Conn., a daughter of James Whalley, who was a farmer of that locality, of English descent. Mrs. Wheeler is still living, Mr. Wheeler having died in 1886, in New Haven.

An only child, Frank Henry Wheeler had many educational advantages superior to those of many of his present colleagues not so fortunately situated. At the age of sixteen, after attendance on the district schools in Montville, his parents decided to leave the village in order to give their son opportunities he could not have at the old home. Mr. Wheeler was a man of education himself, particularly in the law, but our subject did not incline to that profession. After passing through the Hopkins Grammar school, graduating in 1876, he entered Yale College, graduating from the academic department in 1880, and he then entered the Medical school from which he graduated in 1882, the next year becoming an interne in the New Haven Hospital, acting for six months as house physician, and as surgeon for seven months, following this practice with a special course in New York, in the College of Physicians and Surgeons.

Enthusiastic in his profession, Dr. Wheeler then returned to New Haven, and here has won many triumphs by his skill as a surgeon and his thorough knowledge as a physician. Dr. Wheeler was married on Feb. 28, 1889, to Miss Florence Woodhouse, of New Haven, a daughter of Capt. James H. and Lucretia Charlotte (Gillette) Woodhouse, the latter of New Haven, the former of Wethersfield. Two children have been born to Dr. and Mrs. Wheeler: James Woodhouse born April 5, 1890, and Harold Whalley, born Aug. 26, 1898.

Dr. Wheeler has been prominently identified with the progress of medicine in New Haven, and for nine years was assistant professor of Pathology in Yale College, and at the same time at the New Haven Hospital; for six years he was connected with the New Haven Dispensary, and for fifteen years has been attending physician at the New Haven Orphan Asylum.

Politically Dr. Wheeler is a Democrat. In July, 1901, he was appointed by the Hon. Mayor John P. Studley as a member of the Board of Police Commissioners. Fraternally he belongs to Hiram Lodge, No. 1, A. F. & A. M., of which he is Past Master; is district deputy Grand Master for New Haven County and is a member of Franklin Chapter, No. 2; Harmony Council, No. 8; New Haven Commandery, No. 2; New Haven Chapter, Rose Croix; Lafayette Consistory, of Bridgeport; and Pyramid Temple, of the Mystic Shrine. For a number of years he has been connected with the A. O. U. W., and is now Grand Medical Examiner for Connecticut; in the Foresters he has been Supreme Treasurer, and has held other offices, and he is a valued member of the Graduates and of the Pequot Clubs. He is now President of the Yale Medical Alumni Association. Professionally, Dr. Wheeler is a member of the New Haven Medical Society, of which he is president; also of the New Haven County Medical Society and the Connecticut State Medical Society.

Dr. Wheeler is one of the busiest of men, at tools to the various organizations mentioned, looks carefully after a large practice, meets in consultation with other surgeons and physicians, and preserves the activities and medical tests which have made him well and favorably known over so wide a field, and an honor to his profession. With all the calls made upon him, he finds time to keep thoroughly posted upon the advances in his profession, and to maintain an intimate acquaintance with his well-filled library.

HUBERT LITTLE, a member of the well-known firm of Little, Somers & Hyatt, wholesale dealers in paints, papers and similar goods, is one of the prominent business men of Meriden, and was born in the town of Columbia, Tolland Co., Conn., Nov. 14, 1848, a descendant of one of the oldest and best families of the State. A full history of the family is found in connection with the biography of Saxton Bailey Little, which appears on another page.

William Buckingham Little, the father of Hubert, was born in Columbia, Conn., June 6, 1815, and died Dec. 10, 1897. He was a son of Samuel Little, and a brother of Saxton B. Little, of Meriden, and was reared on the farm of his father. His education was acquired in the Columbia schools, and for early all his life was spent on a farm which he owned and operated in Columbia. He was a man well known and much respected by the community, in which he served as probate judge for Columbia many years. As a member of the State Senate, to which he was elected on the Republican ticket, he served his constituency faithfully and well. His remains are resting in the Columbia Cemetery. In the Congregational Church he was known as a faithful and devoted member, and his domestic habits were keyed to high and pure mores. Mr. Little was married in Vernon, May 19, 1841, to Harriet N. Palmer, of Vernon, a daughter of Elliot and Ann (Loomis) Palmer. She is still living in Columbia, Conn., and is known as a lady of such domestic character, a devoted wife and mother, and an earnest and consecrated member of the Congregational Church. To Mr. and Mrs. Little were born the following children: (1) Myron Woodcock, born Oct. 11, 1842, married Emily Wright, Nov. 15, 1869; (2) Elliot Palmer, born Oct. 2, 1844, died June 31, 1855; (3) Anna Maria, born Dec. 23, 1846, died Oct. 25, 1855; (4) Hubert; (5) Albert, born April 17, 1851; (6) Elbert Corcoran, born Oct. 24, 1853; (7) Prescott Palmer, born Sept. 16, 1856; and (8) Payson Elliot, born Aug. 31, 1859.

Hubert Little spent his boyhood days on the paternal farm, where he attended the local school, and he finished his literary training in the high school in Wallingford. Until he was eighteen years old he resided at home, and at that age he came to Meriden, where he learned the painter's trade with Charles L. Little, his cousin, with whom he worked for several years. At the end of that period he bought out his instructor's establishment, and formed a partnership with his brother, Elbert C., to deal in paints and papers and conduct a general decorating business under the firm name of H. Little & Company. This partnership continued until 1884 when Mr. Somers bought out the interest of E. C. Little. In 1886 Isaac B. Hyatt bought into the firm, and for the past sixteen years it has been Little, Somers & Hyatt.

On Nov. 14, 1871, Mr. Little was married to Alice L., a daughter of Egbert Brown, of Columbia; she died May 20, 1877. Three children were born of this union: Flora L., born Nov. 18, 1872, died Jan. 14, 1875; Clayton E., born Dec. 19, 1874, died March 27, 1875; and Clinton E., who was born May 8, 1877, is a traveling salesman for the Beacon Falls Rubber Company. Mr. Little married for his second wife, Martha L., a daughter of William Williams, of Westfield, Conn. To this union were born: Edna M., born Jan. 28, 1879, died April 9, 1883; Thomas Saxton, born Nov. 27, 1882, died May 12, 1883; Harold Saxton, born July 7, 1884; and Burton Elbert, born May 4, 1890, died Oct. 30, 1891.

Mr. and Mrs. Little are members of Trinity Methodist Church, and he is a member of Pacific Lodge, I. O. O. F., and Pilgrim's Harbor Council, Royal Arcanum, at Meriden. In politics he is a Republican, but no office seeker. His domestic habits are of the best, and he is a good citizen, with a host of friends.

HORATIO NELSON SMITH, one of the leading citizens of Middlebury, first selectman of the town, and a butcher by occupation, is a native of that village, born June 22, 1851, in the house where the first Ecclesiastical society met over one hundred years ago.

Horatio Nelson Smith, his father, was a native of Naugatuck, Conn., and was a son of Elisha Smith, an old settler of that locality. Our subject's father received a common school education, and further instructed himself by abundant reading. He learned the trade of blacksmith in his native town, and when a young man removed to Middlebury, where he bought the home now owned by our subject (the one above referred to), and built a shop, in which he did general blacksmithing and repairing; he also engaged in general farming. Here he passed the rest of his days, dying in 1896, and was buried in Middlebury. He was a member of the M. E. Church, and in politics a Democrat. Twice married, his first wife was Nancy Nichols, of Naugatuck, who died in Middlebury, leaving two children: Nancy, who married Marlin J. Pratt, of Torrington, Conn.; and Anna, deceased wife of Alvie Wooster. For his second wife Mr. Smith wedded Maria Booth, daughter of Lewis Booth, and children as follows were born to them: Frederick, of Seymour, Conn.; Frank, proprietor of a livery in Waterbury; Perry, a farmer in the town of Middlebury; Charles, who died in Middlebury; Horatio Nelson, a sketch of whom follows; Anna, wife of George Curtis, of Torrington, Conn.; and Emma, who died unmarried. The mother of these died at the home of her daughter in Torrington, Conn., at the age of eighty-two years, and was buried in Middlebury. She was a member of the M. E. Church, a good Christian woman.

Horatio N. Smith, whose name introduces this sketch, received a liberal education at the schools of Middlebury, and while yet a youth followed the trade of carpenter, working as a jobber until 1881, in that year commencing the butchering business, which he has since followed in connection with farming pursuits. Through perseverance, industry, honorable dealing and politeness he has built up a fine trade and a constantly-increasing custom.

In 1880, in the town of Bethany, New Haven county, Horatio N. Smith was married to Mary A. Wright, who was born in Sullivan county, N. Y., a daughter of Artemus Wright, and eight children were born to them: Harry, Florence, Burton Grover, Lyman, Rodger, Wynford, Ray, and Kenneth E. Mrs. Smith is a lady of refinement and culture, a sterling wife and mother. She and her husband attend the Congregational Church. In politics Mr. Smith is a Democrat, and in 1895 he was elected to the State Legislature by the people of his native town; in 1897 was elected first selectman of the town, and re-elected in 1898, in itself showing his well-merited popularity.

DR. GEORGE I. HEMINGWAY, whose office is at No. 86 Broadway, New Haven, takes a prominent position among the physicians of the city, not only by reason of his high attainments and scientific spirit, but also by his personal attributes of high character. He was born in Woodbridge, Conn., May 26, 1867, a son of John I. Hemingway, a native of the same town.

Isaac Hemingway (2), the grandfather of George I., was born in Woodbridge in 1794, a son of Deacon Isaac, who was born in East Haven, in 1762, and was an early settler in Woodbridge where he followed farming. He was a deacon of the Congregational Church, and a prominent man in the community, and passed away at the age of eighty-seven. Isaac Hemingway (2) was also a farmer, and owned part of the original land grant to the family. He died at the early age of thirty-six. Abraham Hemingway, his brother, lived in New Haven, and died when seventy-five years old. Isaac Hemingway (2) married Esther Smith, who was born in Woodbridge, in 1793. She was the mother of only two children, John I. and Nancy, of whom the latter is still living in Westville unmarried. Mrs. Hemingway, who died at the age of fifty-two years, belonged to the Congregational Church, and was a lady of much character and many excellencies of mind and heart.

John I. Hemingway was born in Woodbridge, Dec. 13, 1828. His education was obtained in the public school and the Orange Free Academy. For many years he was a painter and decorator, making his home in Westville, and at New Haven. In his old age he came back to Westville, where he died March 25, 1901, at the age of seventy-two. Mary Platt Hemingway, his wife, who is still living, was born in Milford, Conn., a daughter of Col. William Platt, prominent in Milford affairs. One child, Dr. George I., blessed the home of John I. and Mary (Platt) Hemingway.

Col. William Platt, who was born in Milford in 1794, descended in the seventh generation from Richard Platt, the first settler in that town. He was a Colonel of the militia, and was a large and influential farmer. By his marriage with Anna Stowe, daughter of Jedediah and Sarah (Clark) Stowe, he became the father of seven children, six of whom are still living: William, Richard and Phineas all live in Milford; Charlotte married William C. Hall, who was employed for fifty years in the car shops in New Haven; Sarah married Linus Cornwall, of Berlin; and Mary is Mrs. Hemingway. Mrs. Anna (Stowe) Platt was born in Milford in 1793, and lived to be over ninety years old. With her husband, she belonged to the Congregational Church. Jedediah Stowe, father of Mrs. Platt, was a soldier in the Revolution, and in his later years drew a pension from the government for his services; he married Sarah Clark, who was born in Milford, and died in the faith of the Congregational Church at the age of eighty-eight, the mother of seven children. Stephen Stowe, the father of Jedediah, was also a hero of the Revolution, and gave food and shelter to American prisoners who escaped from the British prison ships by swimming ashore on a cold, bleak winter's night. These prisoners brought ship fever and smallpox with them, and while Mr. Stowe ministered to their needs, he fell a victim to the disease and died in the path of duty.

Dr. George I. Hemingway spent his early years in Westville, where he received his elementary education in the common schools, and in the Hopkins Grammar School. His medical education was begun in the College of Physicians and Surgeons, and was continued in the University of Vermont, from which institution he was graduated in 1897. The same year, after giving not a little thought to the matter, he selected New Haven for his home, and opened his office for practice here, Nov. 29, 1897. A very flattering success has attended his career in this city, and he has won an enviable standing both professionally and personally.

On Nov. 29, 1892, Dr. Hemingway was married to Miss Ida Hallenbeck, a native of Catskill, N. Y., where her father was a prominent citizen. She was the only child of her parents, and is the mother of one boy, Thornton W. Dr. Hemingway is a Republican, and is a member of the State and County Medical Societies of New Haven, where his devotion to his profession and high character command attention and inspire respect.

HORACE TEMPLE SMITH, who died Aug. 14, 1888, at his home in Meriden, was one of the most respected residents of that city. He was born Sept. 30, 1833, in Landgrove, Bennington Co., Vt., where his father, Solomon Smith, was a farmer.

Solomon Smith was a native of Guilford, Vt. He continued to till the soil in Landgrove and Plymouth, that State, going to the latter town soon after 1840, until past middle life. He came to Meriden about 1867, making his home with his son. He was killed by a train at Drury's crossing Feb. 14, 1873, and was buried in the West cemetery. Mr. Smith was much respected for his upright character. He married Hannah Holman, who died Oct. 23, 1850, in Plymouth, Vt., and was buried in Springfield, that State. They were the parents of eight children. Chauncey, the eldest, born Aug. 30, 1818, is a resident of Hiawatha, Neb. Sally, born July 12, 1820, died in San Bernardino county, Cal. Lucy died in infancy. Lydia, born April 30, 1826, first married Charles P. Stillwell, and for her second husband James Lawton; all are now deceased. Alva, born Nov. 4, 1828, is deceased. Lucy A., born June 30, 1821, is the widow of Almon Pratt, who was killed by a train in Meriden. Horace T. was the seventh. Sibyl, born March 30, 1836, married James Roberts, and resides in Ludlow, Vermont.

Horace T. Smith grew up in a rural community, and had such educational advantages as the region afforded. Before attaining his majority he engaged in teaming on his own account in Plymouth, Vt. In 1855 he settled in Meriden, and was employed until 1859 by Deacon R. B. Perkins, in the express business. At the end of this period he set up in business for himself, beginning with four horses. His genial manners, integrity and faithful attention to the wants of the public had already made him popular, and his business steadily increased until at the time of his death he was the owner of thirty-six horses, and had the largest patronage, so far, of the kind in Meriden. In 1877 he suffered a stroke of paralysis, and further ailments gradually took away—Aug. 14, 1888—one of the most enterprising and industrious citizens Meriden ever held. His remains rest in the West cemetery.

While not affiliated with any religious organization, Mr. Smith has an exemplary life, and sought to follow the injunction laid down by the Divine Word in the golden rule. He was not a politician, nor supporter of the principles of the Republican party, and among the first three votes as superintendent of jurors. His broad and benevolent heart was interested by the first church was started in 1860, and his principal fraternal and benevolent union, of the year 1871. He became a member of the Pythian Lodge, No. 87, I. O. O. F., Meriden Lodge, No. 4, Knights of Pythias, and Meridian Lodge, No. 77, A. F. & A. M., Keystone Chapter, No. 27, R. A. M., Hamilton Council, No. 22, R. & S. M., and St. Elmo Commandery, K. T., all of Meriden. He was always a patriotic supporter of the government, and when the Civil war began he wished to go to the front as a soldier, but the demands of his family kept him at home. However, when his name was found among those drawn by chance to serve, he procured a substitute, and thus aided in suppressing rebellion.

Mr. Smith was married, May 15, 1855, to Adeline Allen, daughter of Cyrus and Sally (Hall) Allen, of Ludlow, Vt. Four children came to Mr. and Mrs. Smith: (1) George P. is now a part owner of the H. T. Smith Express Co., of Meriden; he married Ella Desmond, and has five children, Horace T., Carl D., Allen C., Adeline T. and Stephen L. (2) Allen, the second child of Horace T., died when three years old. (3) Charles S., the third, is engaged in the express business at Shelburne Falls, Mass.; he married Lena Rachor, who died leaving one child, Harold E. (4) Nellie became the wife of Charles Tredennick, who is interested in the H. T. Smith Co., and has a son, Charles Max. Mrs. Smith has been connected with Meriden Chapter, No. 8, O. E. S., since 1869, and has served over twenty years as secretary of the chapter. She is also identified with Merriam Womans Relief Corps. A lady of high Christian character, she enjoys the esteem of a wide acquaintance, and takes part in many good works.

HON. JOHN WALTER MIX, United States Collector at the Port of New Haven, and for many years a prominent manufacturer and business man at the town of Cheshire, Conn., is one of the substantial and influential men of New Haven county.

Mr. Mix was born March 31, 1850, in Cheshire a son of John and Eliza (Merriman) Mix, and a descendant on both sides from early Colonial families. On the paternal side he descends from Thomas Mix (Mixx, or Meeks, as the spelling is varied), who came to New Haven from London, England, when a young man. In 1649 he married Rebecca Turner, daughter of Capt. Nathaniel Turner, one of the most prominent Pilgrim settlers in New England. Thomas Mix died in 1691, and was buried near the old church in the burying ground on the "Green" in New Haven.

(1) John Mix, son of Thomas, was born in 1649, and in 1670 removed to Wallingford. He married Elizabeth Heaton, of New Haven. He died Jan. 21, 1711, and she passed away Aug. 21, following.

(2) Daniel Mix was born Sept. 8, 1653. On May 2, 1678, he married Ruth, daughter of John and Sarah (Forsign) Rockwell, of Hartford, Conn.

(3) Thomas Mix, son of Daniel, was born March 25, 1670, and married on March 12, 1705, Deborah Roys.

(4) Thomas Mix (2), son of Thomas, was born Nov. 27, 1709, and married on April 5, 1736, to Ruth Manross.

He. J. Smith

(V) John Mix, son of Thomas (2), born Aug. 25, 1750, married Dec. 10, 1781, Elizabeth Hall, who died Sept. 7, 1845. He died Oct. 3, 1824.

(VI) John Mix (2), son of John, was born Feb. 10, 1784. On April 6, 1808, he married Olive Ives, who passed away Sept. 1, 1856. He died April 5, 1849.

(VII) John Mix (3), son of John (2), and father of John Walter, was born Jan. 10, 1813, and he became one of the pioneer manufacturers at Cheshire. About 1830 Edward A. Cornwall had a small shop which was operated with water power from the Canal below the second lock, at a place then called Beachport, now West Cheshire, and there made coffee mills. Mr. Mix leased this shop, and began making Britannia spoons in a small way, increasing his output as the years passed until he came to employ a working force of more than thirty hands. He was also engaged in the manufacture of gimlets and auger bits, and was in business until the abandonment of the Canal in 1846 took away his power. The place on Ten-Mile River afterward became Mixville, where a power had been improved to operate a small gristmill. Mr. Mix built new shops in which he made bits and gimlets. In 1853 he formed a stock company, entitled the John Mix Manufacturing Co., and finally leased the factory in Mixville to J. W. Mix & Co., who sold out and removed to Southington, and remained there eighteen months. Mr. Mix, however, continued the manufacture of edge tools in Cheshire until his retirement in 1876. His death occurred in March, 1889. He married Eliza Merriman, a daughter of Albert Merriman, a resident of Southington, and a man of much character and standing in his day.

(IX) John Walter Mix was educated in the Episcopal Military Academy of his native town and at Golden Hill Institute, Bridgeport, Conn. He became associated with his father in the manufacture of edge tools in 1876, and when his father retired, took full charge of the business, added a full line of carpenter's edge tools and, developing much business and mechanical ability, soon built up a very large business. In 1886 Mr. Mix took charge of a similar enterprise conducted by the firm of G. I. Mix & Co., at Yalesville, where he has made for himself a most admirable reputation in business circles, being well and favorably known, not only at home, but throughout the State.

From boyhood Mr. Mix has taken a deep interest in public affairs, and for years has been one of the prominent men in his native county, where he is now looked upon as an able and talented leader. In 1883 he was the representative of his town in the General Assembly. In 1892 he was defeated for State Senator, but in 1895 was triumphantly elected to that body, being re-elected in 1897, from the Sixth Senatorial District. His services to the State as a member of the Legislature were characterized by patriotic zeal, marked business ability, and won for him deserved distinction. In February, 1899, Mr. Mix was appointed by Pres. McKinley, Collector of the Port of New Haven, an important position which he has since filled with signal ability. He is a member of the Republican State Central Committee, the Union League, and the Young Men's Republican Club of New Haven, and the Home Club of Meriden. Collector Mix is one of the prominent Masons of the State, having taken the Thirty-Second Degree, and is now Past Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Connecticut, and is Grand Captain General of the Grand Commandery of the Knights Templar.

On Oct. 2, 1872, Mr. Mix was married to Miss Kate Wallace, daughter of Franklin Wallace of Cheshire. This union was blessed with six children: Edna, Tenna (died), Ethel, Helen, Clifford (died), and Breckenridge. Edna married Eugene A. Hall, treasurer of the town of Meriden, trustee of the State School for Boys, and treasurer and teller of the Meriden Savings Bank, and Eminent Commander of St. Elmo Commandery, K. T.; they have two children, Fanny and Edna. Helen graduated from the State Normal School at New Britain in 1902, and Mrs. Hall and Ethel from the Meriden High School. Mrs. Hall was a teacher in the public schools for five years, including three years in New Haven. Ethel has been teaching in the Wallingford schools three years. The son, Breckenridge, is now a member of the Boardman Training School of New Haven. Mr. Mix is a member of the Sons of the American Revolution. In January, 1902, Mr. Mix removed to Meriden, severing his connection with the manufactory at Yalesville.

LEW ALLEN LIPSETTE, better known as Lew Allen, editor and one of the founders of the Meriden Daily Journal, is one of the best-known newspaper men in the State, and, in point of service, the oldest in the city of Meriden. He was born Feb. 18, 1852, in the city of New York, where he received his education in the public schools. His first independent undertaking was in newspaper work, and for more than a quarter of a century he has been engaged in journalism in Connecticut. He was city editor of the New Haven Union until 1886, when he became interested with Francis Atwater, Thomas L. Reilly and Frank E. Sands in forming the Journal Publishing Company, which began the issue of the Meriden Daily Journal. Mr. Allen was made vice president of this company, and has been editor of the paper from its birth. It has grown steadily in size and influence, and is to-day one of the most enterprising and successful newspapers in the State. It is a violation of no confidence, nor of any rule of propriety, to say that much of this progress is due to the fertile mind and ready force of Mr. Allen.

In politics, Mr. Allen is an Independent, and he has served as a member of the Meriden Common Council. For a period of five years he was a member of Co. 1, 2nd Regiment, Conn. National Guard. He is connected with All Saints' Protestant Episcopal Church of Meriden. Fraternally he belongs to Pilgrims' Harbor Council, No. 543, Royal Arcanum.

In 1878 Mr. Allen married Miss Amelia Urlick, and his family includes two sons, Walter and Lewis, Jr., now students in the Meriden High School.

WILLIS L. MIX, who conducts one of the most popular and complete drug stores in the city of New Haven, and is prominent among druggists throughout the State, was born March 13, 1851, in New Haven, son of Lewis Mix, who is fully mentioned elsewhere.

Mr. Mix attended the public schools of his native city, and later was a student at Russell's Military Academy four years, after which, in 1867, he entered old Apothecaries Hall, acquiring his first knowledge of the drug business with Noyes & Shepard. He was subsequently with Lannam & Sevin, in Norwich, and his last employer was J. H. Klock, who carried on the drug business at our subject's present location, Church and Chapel streets. Mr. Mix continued with Mr. Klock until the latter's death. He had enjoyed a partnership in the business for eighteen months prior to that event, and has since been sole proprietor, having purchased the remaining interest. In 1901, Mr. Mix completely renovated and refitted his establishment, which is one of the largest and best appointed in the city, and also one of the best-known, having been carried on without interruption for over fifty years. It was known for many years as Klock's drug store. Our subject has a large and varied assortment in his stock, and the large patronage he enjoys requires the services of six clerks. Mr. Mix is well known to the trade generally all over Connecticut. He was formerly president of the Connecticut Pharmaceutical Association, and is at present one of the State Board of Commissioners of Pharmacy, consisting of three druggists appointed by the governor to examine candidates for druggists' licenses.

On Dec. 20, 1875, Mr. Mix was united in marriage with Miss Harriet E. Bradley, a native of New Haven, and they have had one child, Claribel, who was educated in New Haven and Northampton, Mass., and was married Nov. 20, 1901, to Albert L. Whitcomb, a photographer of Wallingford, this county. Mrs. Mix was one of the six children of Frederick and Elvira (Wakeley) Bradley, of whom Theodore S. is a resident of Meriden; Harriet E. is Mrs. Mix; Mrs. L. L. Camp resides in New York, and Mrs. George F. Strong lives in Malden, Mass. The mother is still living in New Haven. Mr. Bradley was engaged as a carriage manufacturer and was a prominent citizen of New Haven.

Mr. Mix stands high in Masonic circles, having taken the thirty-second degree. He holds membership in Wooster Lodge, F. & A. M., of which he is senior warden; Franklin Chapter; Harmony Council, No. 8, in which he has held all the offices; New Haven Commandery, No. 2, in which he has held a number of offices and was eminent commander in 1895; the Lodge of Perfection, of which he is grand senior warden; the Scottish Rite Masons; Pyramid Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S.; is a trustee of the Grand Lodge of the State of Connecticut; and is an active member of the Knights Templar Club. He also affiliates with the A. O. U. W., and is a member of the Sons of the American Revolution. Mr. Mix is a Republican in political sentiment. In religious connection he is a Congregationalist, belonging to the Dwight Place Church, is a member of the society's committee and of the Congregational Club. A worker in all the organizations with which he is identified, progressive in his chosen line of business, and honorable in all the relations of life, he ranks high among his associates as a man whose intelligence and worth commend him to the unqualified esteem of all who know him.

OSCAR C. HUPFER, the junior member of the grocery firm of Pierce & Hupfer, of Britannia St., Meriden, is one of the esteemed citizens and successful business men of this city. He was born at Haydenville, Hampshire Co., Mass., June 16, 1862, and is of German descent.

Christian Hupfer, his grandfather, was a native of Germany, and was the owner and operator of a flour mill. He was twice married, his first wife being Christina Herman, who died in Germany. His second wife was Belina Millenzuer, who came to America with him and family about 1871. From New York Mr. Hupfer removed to East Hampton, Mass. In his native land he had followed milling, but he now settled down on a small farm and spent the remainder of his days on it, dying in 1890, at the age of eighty-four years. His burial took place in East Hampton. In Germany he belonged to the Lutheran Church, but his religious views were broad enough to enable him to take comfort in the Congregational services held in his vicinity. He was a Democrat in his political belief. Mrs. Hupfer still resides in East Hampton. A family of twenty-four children was born to Mr. Hupfer, thirteen by his first marriage, the survivors being as follows: Charles Frederick; Minnie; Sidonia, who married William Sanford of Meriden; Augustina, who resides in East Hampton; Ernestina, who married Albert O. Hartenstine, of Meriden. Of the eleven children born to the second marriage, the survivors are as follows: Mary, who married Henry C. Kline, of Meriden; Sarah, who married Mr. Knobel, of East Hampton; Frederick; Richard; and Hattie, who resides at East Hampton.

Charles Frederick Hupfer, father of Oscar C., was born in Germany, and was given a good German education, and then learned the trade of goldsmith. His father having a large family and business prospects not looking very bright for the young man's future, he left home and emigrated to America while still in his teens. By the time he reached New York his means were pretty well exhausted, but his destination was Haydenville, Mass., and he managed to reach there, soon finding work at his trade with some of his countrymen. Later he removed to East Hampton, where he industriously followed his trade, quietly accumulating means, and in middle life was able to invest the same in a small farm, to which he then retired and which he is still engaged in operating. In his community, Mr. Hupfer is much respected for his honesty and industry, and he is a leading member of the Lutheran Church. In former years he was a Democrat, but later issues caused him to become a Republican.

In East Hampton, Mass., Mr. Hupfer married Wilhelmina (Minnie) Knipfer, born in Saxony, Germany, daughter of William Knipfer, who owned and operated a woolen mill, in Germany. Mrs. Hupfer, the mother of our subject, still resides in her home in East Hampton, Mass. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Hupfer were: Minnie, who married Frank Miller, resides in East Hampton, Mass.; Oscar C.; Max L., of Bridgeport, Conn.; Charles August, who resides in East Hampton; Flora, at home; and one that died in infancy.

Oscar C. Hupfer moved with his parents from Haydenville to East Hampton, where he had school advantages for a short time. As early as nine years he began to be a wage earner, in the East Hampton woolen mills, remaining there, a faithful employee, until he reached his majority, in the meantime contributing to the family support. From early childhood he had displayed musical talent, and as soon as he was able to do so, began the serious study of the clarinet, mastering this musical instrument, and becoming so perfect a performer upon it, that when he discontinued work at the mills, he was able to make this tuneful little instrument a source of income. He started out on the road on a trial trip with a minstrel troupe, and later was connected with the Si Perkins Comedy Co., the J. C. Lewis Comedy Co., as clarinet performer, and met with such success that he remained in the musical line for some six years, traveling all over the country.

In 1886 Mr. Hupfer decided to locate, and with this end in view came to Meriden and accepted a position with the lamp department of the Charles Parker Co., where he remained for five years, during all this time playing in the Meriden Opera House orchestra. Then Mr. Hupfer accepted a clerical position in a store conducted by Shaw Bros., on Britannia St., where he spent one year, when, in company with his brother-in-law, H. Atchison Pierce, he bought out the interest of Shaw Bros. and embarked in the grocery business. Since that time the business had been enlarged and extended and the firm name has become one associated with upright methods and honorable dealings. No concern in the city stands better with the trade and the general public than does that of Pierce & Hupfer. After a business life of eleven years they have the assurance that their efforts to secure and keep patronage meets with public approval.

On June 6, 1886, Mr. Hupfer was married in East Hampton, Mass., to Miss Edna E. Pierce, born in Windsor, Mass., daughter of Orris G. and Harriet Pierce. Three children have been born to this union: Raymond Douglas, Clarence Wellington and Emma Harriet. Fraternally Mr. Hupfer is connected with Center Lodge, No. 97, Meriden, A. F. & A. M.; Meriden Center Lodge, I. O. O. F., taking an active interest in both organizations. Mr. Hupfer is also deeply interested in musical matters in Meriden, and is a member of the Edwin D. Korn orchestra, contributing to it a high order of musical ability. In politics he is a Republican. His family attend the Congregational Church.

Although Mr. Hupfer is now one of the substantial men of Meriden, he was the architect of his own fortunes. His industry and ability have brought him from the very bottom of the ladder, and his present prosperity is justly deserved. He enjoys the respect of all classes for he is widely known for his upright character, his charitable actions and his devotion to the best interests of his community.

JAMES T. MORAN is one of the younger members of the New Haven bar, who has taken high rank in the profession, and who maintains a creditable position in society as a man and a citizen.

Mr. Moran was born Sept. 19, 1864, in the town of North Haven, Conn., a son of Thomas and Maria (Cullom) Moran. He attended the public schools of New Haven and the Hillhouse high school, from which he was graduated with the class of 1883. The following year he was graduated from the Yale Law School, with the degree of LL. B., and the following year received the graduate degree of M. L. from Yale University. Soon after his graduation he was admitted to the bar in New Haven, and he presently became a member of the prominent law firm of Tyler, Ingersoll & Moran. For the past seventeen years he has been earnestly and indefatigably engaged in the practice of his profession with abundant and deserved success, and he is the general attorney of the Southern New England Telephone Company.

Mr. Moran's political affiliations are with the Democratic party, and in municipal affairs he has been quite active and useful. His manly characteristics and faithful labors in his profession have commended him to the consideration of his fellow citizens. For three years he served as a member of the common council, being the president of that body in 1888. From 1888 to 1892 he was a director of the Free Public Library. Since 1893 he has been a valued member of the board of education, and is chairman of the committee on schools. For three years he was a member of the board of police commissioners, and has been president of the Hillhouse High School Alumni Association.

Mr. Moran was married April 27, 1898, to Miss Mary E. McKenzie, of New Haven, and they have one child, Helen, born Jan. 1, 1902. Socially Mr. Moran is a member of the Graduates Club and Knights of St. Patrick, both of New Haven, and of the Yale Club, of New York City.

BYRON DAVID WELTON. Prominent among the enterprising and successful business men of Waterbury, New Haven county, is this well-known dealer in grain, feed, coal and wood. He is one of the native sons of that town, having been born in Waterville, Nov. 21, 1851.

The Welton family is one of the oldest and most highly respected in the State. The first to come to America was John Welton, a native of England, and one of the first settlers of Farmington, Conn., as well as one of the pioneers of Waterbury, whither he came in 1679, and where he died June 18, 1720. His wife, Mary, died Oct. 18, 1716.

Richard Welton, son of John, was born and reared in Waterbury, and spent the last years of his life on Bucks Hill, that town, where he purchased a house and land of Joseph Gaylord, Jr. He died in 1755. In the year 1701 he wedded Mary, daughter of Stephen Upson, and to them were born nine children.

Richard Welton, Jr., the eldest child of Richard, was born in Waterbury Jan. 5, 1702, and removed with his parents to Bucks Hill, where he spent the remainder of his life engaged in agricultural pursuits. He was well known and was very prominent in public affairs. His death occurred Jan. 11, 1769, and his remains were interred on Bucks Hill. On Nov. 3, 1724, he married Anna Fenton, daughter of Jonathan Fenton, of Fairfield, Conn., and they had five children: Anna, born Aug. 17, 1725, married John Brown; John, the next in order of birth, is mentioned below; Abi was born Oct. 20, 1729; Titus, born Oct. 20, 1732, died July 9, 1757; and Abby, born Oct. 3, 1738, married Thomas Lenn.

John Welton, son of Richard, Jr., was born on Bucks Hill Jan. 26, 1727, and he spent his entire life at that place, where he owned and operated a farm. He was known as John Welton, Esq., and was a man of prominence in his community. He died Jan. 22, 1816, and was buried on Bucks Hill. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Dorcas Hickeyek, was born July 11, 1739, a daughter of Capt. Samuel and Mary (Hojkins) Hickeyek, and granddaughter of William Hickeyek. They had ten children: Abi, born Nov. 2, 1758, died May 14, 1828; the second died in infancy; Mary, born June 10, 1760, married Hezekiah Phelps and died

Sept. 6, 1811; Ann, born Feb. 11, 1762, died May 10, 1803; Titus was born July 3, 1764; Richard Fenton was born April 17, 1767; John, born Oct. 28, 1769, died Dec. 1, 1776; Dorcas, born Oct. 29, 1771, died July 23, 1793; Adrian is mentioned below; and John, born Jan. 13, 1778, died April 2, 1813.

Adrian Welton, son of John, was born on Bucks Hill, Feb. 15, 1775, and died Oct. 20, 1804.

Horace Clark Welton, son of Adrian, a farmer of Bucks Hill, was born Feb. 15, 1801, and was married June 20, 1823, to Sophia Bradley, who was born April 1, 1804, a daughter of Daniel Bradley, of Plymouth Bay. They had two children, of whom William Alonzo, born Dec. 20, 1824, was married Nov. 10, 1847, to Eliza Prichard, daughter of Leonard Prichard.

FREDERICK ALONZO WELTON, the younger son of Horace C., was born on Bucks Hill April 8, 1827, was reared on his father's farm, and received a district-school education. At the age of sixteen he went to Waterville, where he worked in a knife shop for several years, and then removed to New Haven, where he engaged in business for eighteen years. On his return to Waterville he resumed work in the knife shop, and was thus employed until he embarked in the grain, feed, coal and wood business, which he successfully carried on until his death, building up a large trade. He passed away Sept. 20, 1897, honored and respected by all who knew him, and was laid to rest in Bucks Hill cemetery. Politically he was first a Whig and later a Republican. In all the relations of life he was found true to every trust reposed in him, and he was very popular with his fellow citizens. On Jan. 1, 1851, Mr. Welton was united in marriage with Miss Harriet Maria Boyden, who was born Oct. 6, 1828, a daughter of David and Lucy Ann (Scott) Boyden, the former a native of Massachusetts. Mrs. Welton's maternal grandparents were Joel and Hannah (Bronson) Scott. Mrs. Welton, who was an earnest member of the Episcopal Church, and a most estimable lady, died in July, 1897, and was buried in Bucks Hill cemetery. To her marriage with Mr. Welton were born two sons: Byron David, our subject; and Edward, who died at the age of seven years.

During his boyhood Byron D. Welton pursued his studies in the district schools of Waterville and a private school at New Haven. He began his business career with his father in the knife shop at Waterville, and was thus employed until his father's death, when he assumed control of the grain, feed, coal and wood business, which he has since carried on with marked success, being a man of unusually good business ability and sound judgment. He holds membership in the Episcopal Church, and casts his ballot for the men and measures of the Republican party, but has never been a politician in the sense of office seeking. In Waterville he married Miss Harriet L. Hubbard, a native of

F. A. Welton

Terryville, Litchfield Co., Conn., and to them have been born two children: Clark Hubbard, now attending school; and Mary, who died at the age of four years.

WILLARD S. PAIN, superintendent of the works of the Aeolian Co., at Meriden, and secretary of the company, might well be termed a thoroughbred. He comes to his calling by birth and breeding, and so is naturally fitted for it. His fathers before him were musicians and musical mechanics, and he has a son preparing to follow him. He, himself, was born in the city of New York, Oct. 2, 1855.

Stephen Pain, his paternal grandfather, was a native of Dover, County Kent, England, and a musician and church organist there. He was also a composer, and a man devoted to his profession and its work. He married a Miss Willard, of the same town, and they had three children: Robert W., father of Willard S., and who is with his son in the employ of the Aeolian Co.; Annie, who married William Gardner; and Mary, who never married. These with their mother he brought to America, locating in New York, where he passed the remainder of his days, and where also his wife died. They were members of the M. E. Church.

Robert W. Pain, father of Willard S., and the only son of Stephen, was but five years of age when brought to this country, having been born in 1832. He attended school in New York, but started early to learn a trade. He first essayed roofing, probably because it was the first thing that offered, but he was not born for climbing of that kind and soon gave it up when opportunity opened in the factory of Nurns & Clark, piano manufacturers of New York, where he served a three-years' apprenticeship, and afterward followed the trade several years. When Carhart & Needham began the manufacture of Cabinet organs, he accepted a position with that firm and remained in it a number of years during many of which he had the position of master mechanic and expert; and when the mechanical musical instruments were brought out he perfected them, and was with the firm of E. P. Needham & Son. Thereafter he was engaged with the old Organet Company until the formation of the Aeolian Co., with which latter he is now. He is president of the company, and his employment is the important experimental work of this progressive concern, and though now in his seventieth year, he is acutely attentive and active in it. He is a great lover of music and musical instruments, has made many inventions and perfected many more, all musical. He is one of the best-known men in his business, is considered a "born genius," and is a thorough master of the art and craft to which his heart and life have been devoted, and in whose progress he still takes the keenest interest. He is a man of domestic tastes and habits, and a broad-minded citizen. He belongs to Mariner's Lodge, No. 67, A. F. & A. M., and to the Consistory. His wife was Elizabeth Wilson, born in Brooklyn, N. Y., daughter of Captain Wilson, a mariner who was lost at sea. She died in her home in 1871, and was buried in Evergreen cemetery, Brooklyn. She bore five children, three daughters and two sons, of whom only one of the sons survives. The others were George, Annie, Elizabeth and Mary.

Willard S. Pain, the only survivor of the five children of Robert W. and Elizabeth (Wilson) Pain, has some right to the natural heritage of all. He attended the public schools of New York until he was about sixteen years of age. He then entered the employ of E. P. Needham & Son in the capacity of cabinetmaker and turner, and remained therein until 1880, when he accepted a position with the Automatic Musical Paper Co., of Boston. He continued with that company till 1888; and when the Aeolian Co. came to Meriden he came with it, first in the capacity of foreman of the Music Department, in charge of the work of producing the rolls of music, its cutting, etc., at which he remained until 1900, when he was appointed general superintendent of the works, succeeding Mr. Chase. He has now filled this important and responsible position for two years, with ever increasing credit to himself and gratification of his employers and associates. He has seen the business increase more than one-half, and now has employed upward of 350 hands, with all of whom he enjoys the utmost confidence and respect. He is a man of very genial disposition, and is of a nature generous to a fault. He is also a man of intellect and intelligence, of inventive mind and skillful hand. Among his inventions may be mentioned those for music cutting and duplicating, a stencil machine, a machine for preparing patterns, etc. He has made and perfected a number of useful inventions relating to music and musical instruments. Mr. Pain's health is like his character and attainments. His sound mind dwells in a sound body. He has not lost a day's pay in twenty-five years. His good health comes from right living. He exemplifies in his living the noble doctrine of doing unto others as you would that they should do unto you, and treats his body as he would another that it may do likewise with himself, and give him always the best thoughts and feelings with strength for his duties. Politically he acts as an independent Republican, but he is in no sense a politician. He is a member of Alfred H. Hall Council, No. 1423, Royal Arcanum, of Meriden, a good man well liked and respected by all who know him. It might easily be guessed that his habits are domestic, and well they may be, surrounded, as he is, by a loving and devoted wife, his son Robert—now with him at the Aeolian factory—and his daughter Emily, a charming young woman of the most pleasing personality and manners, of general culture, a graduate of the Meriden high school, and a cultivated as well as natural musician.

Mrs. Pain was formerly Miss Emily Jane Sweet-

ney. She is a daughter of John and Avis (Chapman) Sweeney, and, like her husband, is a native of New York, where they were married in 1878. She is also a lovely woman, a member of the Episcopal Church, and devoted to her husband and children.

CAPT. LAURENCE O'BRIEN, whose name is written high in the military annals of his adopted country, and whose sacrifices for the freedom of his native land have endeared him to patriotic people everywhere, is one of those Irish-Americans we most delight to honor. He was born in County Tipperary, Ireland, April 7, 1842, a son of Edward O'Brien, a mason and builder, who came to New Haven in 1852. Edward O'Brien married Elizabeth Hammel, who was born in Tipperary and died in America, the mother of seven children, namely: Margaret, Ellen, Laurence, Mary Ann (who married Capt. William O'Keefe, of New Haven, a soldier in the Civil war), Elizabeth, Catherine and Felix.

Laurence O'Brien was but ten years of age when his parents brought him to this country. In his native Ireland he had attended the National schools, and after coming to New Haven he for a time studied in St. Patrick's parochial school. When he left school he learned the brick-layer's trade, and was engaged in this calling at the outbreak of the Civil war. In August, 1861, he enlisted in Company B, 9th Conn. V. I. Previous to this he had served in the Emmet Guards in New Haven, and the training there received enabled him to be of great assistance in the organization of the 9th Regiment. Gen. Russell, of the Military Academy, gave him considerable instruction, and in October, 1861, Mr. O'Brien was commissioned first lieutenant. On Oct. 15, 1862, he was promoted to the rank of captain, and given command of Company D, same regiment. One month previous to this promotion he had been wounded in the left hip, while on an expedition against guerrillas in the parish of St. Charles, La., and the following March was detailed by Gen. Banks as provost marshal for the parish of St. James, La., and one month later was appointed provost judge. One of the first engagements in which the 9th participated, after their enlistment in 1861, was the battle of Pass Christian, Miss., and for the part borne in this engagement Capt. O'Brien received honorable mention. He also took part in the capture of New Orleans, in 1862, and was also present at the capture of Forts Jackson and St. Phillip, first siege of Vicksburg, the engagement at Baton Rouge, and many others. Capt. O'Brien commanded the last detachment of the 10th Army Corps from Louisiana, reporting to Gen. Emery, commander of the 10th Army Corps, which was one of the corps under Gen. Sheridan in the Shenandoah Valley, in August, 1864, and subsequently taking part in all the engagements of that notable

General in that valley, including Winchester, Fisher's Hill and Cedar Creek. In October, 1864, the 9th Conn. V. I. was mustered out in New Haven. At the close of his army service Capt. O'Brien returned to New Haven, and followed his trade of bricklaying for eight months. Then came the call from Ireland to assist in a blow for freedom, and Capt. O'Brien was the first to respond. The record of that time is most graphically described by himself, as follows:

In 1865 I was State Center of the F. B. in Connecticut. In August I was informed that the fight for freedom would begin in Ireland as soon as the harvest was gathered, and we should see that none of it was allowed to go out of the country. I was also informed that all officers of military skill and ability, who expected to help in the fight, should be in Ireland before the rising as the blockade would be on, and it would be difficult to get in afterwards. I notified the officers who lived in my district, and we reported at headquarters in New York, and received our instructions, and when I was going aboard the steamer, to sail. I was informed that the council wanted me to remain in New York until further orders. After one week's delay in New York I was given a bag of 1,000 sovereigns in gold, a second bill of exchange of 1,500 pounds. I was also given a sealed dispatch, not to read until I was one day at sea. I was to commit it to memory and destroy it before I arrived in Ireland. I did so. I went to Tipperary and found all the young men willing and anxious to do their part. After one week in my native town, Cahir, I returned to Dublin. I was sent to Paris and received all money coming from America. During my stay in Paris, December, 1865, January, February and March, 1866, I received $113,000, all of which I sent to Ireland by messengers, and not one cent was lost or fell into the hands of the enemy. I left Paris for Dublin, but when I arrived in Liverpool, word was sent from headquarters to remain in Liverpool, and to ask the chief men there to find quarters for the officers who escaped arrest in Ireland, and I found places for all, among whom was Michael O'Brien, the Manchester martyr, who gave his life for the cause, whose last words were "God save Ireland." January, 1867, I went to Ireland, and at Clonmel prepared for action. I started for the place rendezvous by way of Cashel, where I tried to hire a car to take me to Golden, when I was arrested and committed to jail, for being a stranger. Not having any references, I was detained in Cashel for two weeks. A warrant was read to me to remove me to Clonmel jail by order of the lord lieutenant. When arrested I gave the name of Osborne, but in the lord lieutenant's warrant was Osborne or O'Brien. They learned who I was, but not from me. I was escorted in irons by armed police to Clonmel jail. After five months in that jail, it was galling monotonous, and this time I was charged with high treason against Her Most Gracious Majesty, and a separate charge of treason felony. I then saw that they were bound to kill me. I determined to escape. I received files and tools that I cut the bars with.

Mr. O'Brien had friends both inside and outside the prison. One of two prison guards was his chief aid. He informed his friends that he would come out between twelve and one o'clock on the night of September 18, which he did not quite succeed in doing, his escape being between four and five in the morning of the 19th. He describes his escape as follows:

My friends who were waiting for me went away in despair at three o'clock, and when I came to my senses, after being stunned in falling from the outside wall, at just before day-break, I started for the country, and met friends four miles away where I remained two days for rest. In the fall off the wall I broke my right shoulder-bone, and my face was badly disfigured. After four days I traveled nights by way of Mullinahone into the County of Kilkenny, along the Welsh mountains, crossed the river Suir at Granny Castle, by taking one of Lord Bessborough's pleasure boats, and when on the Waterford side pushed the boat adrift and soon was among friends, and after a few days was again back in Paris.

The effect of his escape upon the authorities there, and their surmises as to the methods he pursued, are well told in the following article in the Irish Citizen (New York paper), issue of Oct. 19 1867:

The editor of the Irish Citizen well knew Capt. O'Brien, who spent many months of last year in Paris. He is a genuine and gallant patriot, and an honorable man. It need not be added that we congratulate him heartily on his fortunate escape from the dangers of the enemy. We give the details of his escape from a Tipperary prison.

Considerable excitement was created at Clonmel on yesterday morning by the escape of Charles J. Osborne from our county jail, in which for some months past he has been confined on a charge of complicity in the Fenian movement. Osborne was arrested on the 28th of February, in the vicinity of Cashel. He had visited Clonmel with Gen. Bourke, and soon after parting with the latter his capture was effected; he was immediately transmitted to Clonmel, where he remained to the 12th of August, incarcerated under the Lord Lieutenant's warrant. On the 12th of August, however, the Honorable Martin J. French, R. M., held an investigation into the charges preferred against the prisoner, the result of which was his commitment for trial to the next assizes. Some time since informer Coridon was confronted by the prisoner, and he stated that his real name was Laurence O'Brien, and he further gave evidence as to his connection with Fenianism. Osborne, or O'Brien, is a fine-looking young man, about six feet high, and built in proportion. During his confinement he obeyed the prison rules unmurmuringly, and no one entertained the remotest suspicion of his attempting to escape, which, indeed, seemed hopeless. However, that he succeeded on Wednesday night, in a most daring manner, is now beyond a question. His cell was in the third story of the jail, and was lighted by a single window, which was guarded by thick wire bars. The prisoner was last seen by an official at half past ten o'clock on Tuesday night, when, having completed the inspection of the cells, the man on duty locked up the corridor for the night. On opening up the cell next morning at six o'clock, it was found that the prisoner had escaped. The bars had been cut through, leaving an aperture of eight inches by fourteen, a short rope was attached to another bar, and another rope was fastened around the embrasure of the main wall to the north side of the trap. Viewed from any point the escape appears most extraordinary. It he got through the window he must have had more than one accomplice outside, for he could not of himself get on to the parapet over the front of the jail, over which he must have passed, if he availed himself of the second rope. A medical gentleman, who inspected the iron bars, is of the opinion that they were cut by the clever employment of acids, while they have also the appearance of having been severed by a saw and oil. It was evidently not the work of one night, for the prisoner had used a piece of dark colored plaster to hide any indentation made from time to time in the bars. The work of Wednesday night, however, must have been arduous in the extreme. The prisoner managed to keep a bar of iron in his cell, which he cut around with a file and broke off in the center. One end of it appears to be forged chisel shape, and with this he knocked away the fittings of the bars, and made an opening for himself. The ropes must have been given to him from the outside; and if such was the case, a ladder must have been used by his accomplice to scale the main wall. The wildest conjectures have been formed as to the mode of his escape, and to a certainty, if he went through the window, the act was one of a character most daring. The matter was at once reported to the magistracy, and notwithstanding the most active and prompt exertion not the remotest trace of the fugitive has been discovered. Osborne wore the prison dress, and the police inquired of the people in the country, as they passed, if they had seen a lunatic in a gray dress going that way, but no one had seen or heard of such, and the search proved unavailing. We should mention that a small coil of rope was found unused in the cell occupied by the prisoner, as also the bar alluded to, a felt hat, in which were placed the stones removed from the window frame. His boots were found in the yard under the window of the cell. They had been fastened one to the other, and had evidently slipped off the arm or from the hold of the prisoner. The affair will, of course, undergo strict investigation, and the public will look forward eagerly to its further elucidation. The affair, in connection with the reports from Manchester, created unusual excitement in our town and vicinity.

After three years in the cause of the Fenians in Ireland, Capt. O'Brien returned to America and became superintendent of the Norwich water works. In 1870 he became interested in the building business, and in this he continued in New Haven. He has been successful in his work, putting into his business the enthusiasm and energy that made him a forceful character in military affairs.

In February, 1869, Capt. O'Brien married Catharine Divine, who was born in Norwich, Conn., a daughter of Timothy Divine, a native of Kilkenny, Ireland. She passed away in 1890, the mother of five children: Mary, Edward, Laurence Burke, James T. and Elizabeth. Of these Edward alone is married; and all the boys are interested in their father's business. In his political affiliations Capt. O'Brien is independent, and, while he has never in any way sought office, he was police commissioner for one term, and he has represented the Fifth ward in the common council. He belongs to the Knights of St. Patrick's Club, a social organization of the best element of the Irish citizens; and fraternally he is a member of Admiral Foote Post, G. A. R. On Oct. 26, 1893, he was elected Department Commander of the U. V. U., an honor of which any soldier may well be proud, and one which is conferred on no one whose war record cannot bear the closest scrutiny. That he conscientiously performed the duties of this office need not be stated, as Capt. O'Brien is a man who shirks no duty, but by his faithful performance lends honor to every task.

THEODORE H. MACDONALD, who was born in New Haven, March 11, 1862, takes a leading part in the political, social and business interests of his native city, where he is respected alike for his genuine manliness, business ability and genial disposition.

William D. Macdonald, the father of Theodore H., was born in Scotland, and, coming to this country a young man, attended Yale College, from which he was graduated with much credit. His death occurred when he was thirty-eight, and he left his son Theodore only seven years old. He was a Mason, and was highly respected in his day. Harriet Newell Nims, his wife, was born in Deerfield the home of her parents being near the old stockade and associated with Revolutionary events of an interesting character.

Theodore H. Macdonald went to work at an early age. The untimely death of his father threw the care of his mother on his shoulders, and at the age of ten he was a telegraph messenger boy. He then became a carrier for the newspaper house of Thomas H. Pease, and at an early age entered the gentlemen's furnishing store of Warner & Dudley. For eight years he was with Bradstreet's Agency and for eight and a half years he was in the newspaper business, being with the New Haven Union for the greater part of that time. After a year's service as clerk for the board of selectmen he entered the Internal Revenue Service of the United States, and was thus employed two years, at the end of which time he took an interest in the Evening Leader, which he assisted in starting, and with which he spent four years. His next position was in the office of the town agent, and for a year he was clerk of the board of selectmen. For six years he was chief clerk of the board of assessors, and at the present time he is a member of the board of assessors, his term extending to 1906. He is a strong Republican, and is chairman of the New Haven Republican town committee, secretary of the Connecticut Republican League; for five years was secretary of the Young Men's Republican Club, of which he is a life member, and which he is now serving on the executive committee; and is a member of the Union League. Fraternally Mr. Macdonald is associated with the Masons; the Odd Fellows; the Knights of Pythias; New Haven Tent, No. 9, K. O. T. M., of which he is treasurer; Israel Putnam Lodge, A. O. U. W.; the Legion of Honor, of New Haven; and the United Service Club. Mr. Macdonald has been a member of the Second Company, Governor's Foot Guards, for the past seven years, and holds the position of sergeant; for ten years previous he was a member of the New Haven Grays, serving as private, corporal, sergeant, first sergeant and second lieutenant.

Mr. Macdonald was married in 1895 to Miss Flora L. Hitchcock, of New Haven, and to them has come one child, who bears the name of Harry Nims.

GEORGE HENRY HAAS (deceased) was one of the most respected German settlers in Meriden, where for many years he was engaged in business as a very successful dairy farmer. He was born in Wilhelm, Wurtemberg, Germany, Nov. 5, 1829, a son of Henry Haas, who was also born in Wilhelm, and followed the occupation of farming during his life time. For many generations the family was connected with the Lutheran Church.

George Henry Haas received a good education in his native land, grew up on his father's farm, and remained under the parental roof until 1854, in which year he emigrated to this country. He had first engaged passage on a vessel which was lost at sea with all hands, but by some fortunate mistake missed it, and was obliged to take the next vessel, arriving safely in New York after a voyage of thirty days. Having a brother at Yalesville, he immediately sought that place, where he found work for a time in the auger factory, and for a number of years was in the employ of G. I. Mix & Co., where he worked in the polishing department. For a second time he became attached to the auger factory, and there remained until 1863, when he bought a farm in the town of Meriden, consisting of a tract of thirty acres. On this place he made many substantial and permanent improvements, and there for over thirty years was engaged in farming and dairying, with the most satisfactory results. His herd of cows increased until it became one of the most extensive in the town. He died on his farm Oct. 18, 1900, and was buried at Walnut Grove cemetery, Meriden.

Mr. Haas was one of the organizers of the Lutheran Church in Meriden, and was always an active worker in its behalf. In politics he was a Democrat, with independent proclivities. He belonged to Teutonia Lodge, No. 95, I. O. O. F., and the German Mutual Aid Society. Well known as an honest, industrious man, he was highly esteemed in the community in which he lived.

Mr. Haas was married in Yalesville, May 14, 1854, to Margaret Bader, a German compatriot, who came to this country on the same ship which brought him over. Mrs. Haas was born May 7, 1829, a daughter of George and Katherine (Brown) Bader, and died Jan. 17, 1896, and was buried in Walnut Grove cemetery. She was a member of the Lutheran Church. To Mr. and Mrs. Haas were born three children, namely: Henry W.; Albert Frederick, who died Aug. 16, 1879, at the age of twenty-two years, from the effects of a fall from a load of hay; and Katie B., who is at home.

HENRY W. HAAS was born March 14, 1855, in Tracy, where he attended the district school. When he became a young man he engaged in farming and dairying, with his father, and has now charge of the homestead. He is a skilled and progressive farmer, and is rapidly winning a place among the most successful dairymen of this part of the State.

Henry W. Haas married Mary C. Duis, who was born in 1880, in New Orleans, daughter of Herman C. Duis, a police officer of Meriden. They have a family of three children: Mabel H., Ida Katie and George H. Mr. Haas belongs to the Masonic fraternity, and is enrolled in Center Lodge, No. 87. He is also affiliated with Teutonia Lodge, No. 95, I. O. O. F., and belongs to the German Mutual Aid Society. In political matters he takes an independent stand, though preferring to act with the Democratic party. In the community he stands well, and is highly regarded by all who know him.

GEORGE H. HAAS.

MRS MARGARET HAAS

ALBERT CHANDLER COE, one of the most popular and successful of West Haven's younger business men, whose home has been in that town since 1878, was born June 21, 1864, in Bethany, now Beacon Falls, Conn. His course in the common schools was supplemented by two years' attendance at the high school in West Haven, and at the age of sixteen he was given a clerkship in a banking house, remaining there four years; after that period he entered the employ of L. Candee & Co., of New Haven, manufacturers of rubber boots and shoes, with which concern he is still identified. His business career affords a noteworthy illustration of the success which attends capability and fidelity. Beginning in a clerical capacity, he has steadily mounted the ladder of official promotion. For several years he acted as purchasing agent, for five years filled the dual position of secretary and assistant treasurer, and is at the present time treasurer of the company. He is also director in and secretary of the Shoe Hardware Co., of Waterbury, Connecticut.

On Oct. 19, 1887, Mr. Coe married Miss Mary Frederika Ward, and six children have been born to them, as follows: Frederick Julius, Marie Elizabeth, Katherine, Albert Douglas, Esther Louise and Charles Anson. Mrs. Coe's family is one of the oldest and most esteemed in West Haven. She is the granddaughter of Jacob Ward, and the daughter of Capt. Frederick S. Ward, a sea captain sailing to the West Indies, who died in New Haven, at the age of fifty years, and was buried in West Haven, the town of his birth. Mrs. Coe's mother was Mary E. Stevens, whose family settled in West Haven about 1700. Mrs. Coe is one of a family of seven children, five of whom are yet living, viz.: Frederick S., Jr., of New Haven; Elliott, of Chicago; Harry K., of West Haven; Josephine, the widow of Charles P. Whitney, of that town; and Mrs. Coe.

In private life Albert C. Coe is a genial and companionable man, fond of company, and faithful to every obligation. He built his present residence—one of the finest in the village—in 1893, and there he and his wife dispense a generous and refined hospitality. Both are communicants in Christ Episcopal Church, and Mr. Coe is senior warden in the same, to which office he was elected in 1897. Fraternally he is a high Mason, and Past Master of Annawon Lodge, No. 115, West Haven, Conn., besides being a member of the Chamber of Commerce and the Union League Club, of New Haven, and of the Connecticut Society of the Sons of the American Revolution.

The Coe family is descended from Robert Coe, a native of Suffolkshire, England, born there in 1506, married Anna (or Hannah) ———, born in 1591, and with his family—wife and three sons, John, Robert and Benjamin, born about 1626, 1627 and 1629—came in the ship "Frances," in 1634. Mr. Coe was of Boston and Watertown, Mass., and of Wethersfield and Stamford, Conn., and of Hempstead, L. I., removing with his family to the latter place in 1644. He died in 1659.

(II) Robert Coe (2), son of Robert, born in England about 1627, married Susanna ———, and settled in Stratford, Conn., in 1654, where he died in 1659.

(III) John Coe, only son of Robert (2), born May 10, 1658, in Stratford, married Dec. 20, 1682, Mary, daughter of Joseph Hawley, of Stratford. Mr. Coe died April 19, 1741.

(IV) Ebenezer Coe, son of John, born Aug. 18, 1704, married June 1, 1727, Mary Blackman, and died in Stratford in 1766.

(V) John Coe (2), son of Ebenezer, born Sept. 18, 1729, located when a young man in Derby, Conn. He married, Sept. 8, 1755, Hannah, daughter of John Chatfield. Mr. Coe resided in the old village of Derby, and died in 1783.

(VI) John Coe (3), son of John (2), born March 27, 1764, married Aug. 17, 1785, Ruth, born March 31, 1765, daughter of Isaac Johnson.

(VII) John Allen Coe, son of John (3), born Sept. 8, 1792, married, May 10, 1812, Grace, daughter of Joseph and Esther Smith. Mr. Coe died Sept. 23, 1849, and his wife passed away Jan. 21, 1869.

(VIII) John Coe (4), son of John Allen, born in Bethany Aug. 18, 1815, and spent his early school days there, later running the tannery. He sold the tannery and removed to Derby, and after a time returned to Bethany (now Beacon Falls), where he built a new tannery. About ten years prior to his death he came to New Haven and engaged in the leather business under the firm name of Ensign & Coe. He sold out to Mr. Ensign, and then removed to Derby, and was appointed treasurer of the Housatonic Water Company. At the time of his death he was overseeing the building of a reservoir. On Sept. 3, 1837, he married Mary Hoadley, of Naugatuck, Conn., and their children were: (1) Julius Curtis, born Aug. 6, 1838. (2) Frances Augusta, born July 28, 1840, married, Sept. 26, 1860, Rev. Bennett Tyler Abbott. (3) John Allen, born Nov. 18, 1844. (4) Charles Hoadley, born Nov. 10, 1849, died in June, 1900. (5) George Albert, born Aug. 5, 1854, died Oct. 13, 1855. (6) Benjamin Lee, born Jan. 27, 1860. Mr. John Coe was a good representative of the Coe family. In his later years he made Birmingham his residence, and was esteemed among the useful and most exemplary citizens. He was a consistent Methodist, waking after the example of his first ancestor and namesake in Derby; one of his peculiar traits being to watch and care for, in a quiet way, the poor of the community. He died greatly respected, Dec. 15, 1870.

(IX) Julius Curtis Coe, son of John (4), born in Bethany Aug. 6, 1838, married, Oct. 8, 1860,

Elizabeth Dougal Wakelee, and their children are: Albert Chandler, born June 21, 1804; and Rollin Wakelee, born Jan. 19, 1807, connected with Coe & Brown, of New Haven. Julius Curtis Coe was educated in Birmingham and Bethany. Six generations of the family have engaged in the leather business, and he was no exception. He learned the business with his father in Bethany, and later he and his brother, John Allen Coe, carried on the business. Julius C. Coe became the first town clerk, and treasurer of Beacon Falls, July, 1871, and so continued until his removal to West Haven in 1878; he represented the town in the Legislature in 1877. In 1878 he engaged in business with Harris Eames, and later the style became H. Eames & Co.; in 1884 the firm name became Coe & Brown. Mr. Coe's church connections, since his removal to West Haven, have been with the M. E. Church of that place. Socially he is a member of Harmony Lodge, I. O. O. F., and Savin Rock Lodge, Royal Arcanum. He has been a Republican all his life.

FRANK F. CHANDLER, who is to be mentioned in any summary of the successful and progressive citizens of New Haven, was born in that city, Nov. 2, 1858, a son of Frank Chandler, who was born in Germany.

Frank F. Chandler attended the New Haven public schools, and for about a year was employed as a clerk in the store of Lum & Rodick. This was followed by about a year in a tailoring store, and then he learned the tool making trade under the instruction of his uncle, Frank P. Pileghar, with whom he remained eight years. At the expiration of that time he went to Cleveland, Ohio, with Henry C. Hartz, builder of machinery and light tools. For one year he continued in the employ of that gentleman, when he entered the employ of the White Sewing Machine Co., remaining a year. In 1883 he returned to New Haven, and took a position in the mold room of the Winchester Repeating Arms Co. Here he remained until 1890, when he became contractor with the company, a position he has held to the present time. On Oct. 3, 1883, Mr. Chandler was married to Lena M. Arnold, who was born in New Haven, a daughter of Joseph Arnold, a native of Germany. A family of five children was born of this union: Alma, Ferdinand, Arthur and Edward, who are now living. One son, Frank, the first born, died at the age of four and a half years. Mr. Chandler is independent in politics, in religion belongs to St. Boniface Church, where his family also attend service.

Frank Chandler, the father, as noted above, was born at Landstat, Bavaria, Nov. 25, 1828, a son of Michael Chandler, who was in the German Postal service, and later came to this country. Frank Chandler grew up in the Old Country, where he learned the shoemaker's trade. In March, 1854, he came to this country, and making his appearance in New Haven the following July, this has been his home to the present time. Here he has followed the trade of shoemaker all his life, and when he was fifty years of age gave up active business. Mr. Chandler was married Aug. 6, 1854, to Elizabeth Clemens, a German compatriot, who died Oct. 14, 1859. To this union were born three children: Elisa, who died in 1859; Mary, who married Christian Richard, of New Haven; and Frank F. For his second wife Mr. Chandler married Mary E. Rutz, who was born in the same place in Germany, and they have had five children: Theckla, wife of R. L. Kraus, of Marshfield, Wis.; John J., who is married and lives in New Haven; George W., who is deceased; Catherine, deceased; Louise L., wife of Paul L. Baer, of New Haven.

Mr. Chandler is a Democrat, and has served on the board of relief fourteen years. He is a member of the St. Boniface Church.

FREDERICK DOUGLAS SLOANE, a well-known citizen of Meriden, where he is engaged in business as a cigar and tobacco dealer, was born in Rahway, N. J., August 18, 1851, son of the late Andrew Sloane, and a brother of James R. Sloane, of Meriden.

Frederick D. Sloane was educated in the city schools of Thompsonville, Conn., to which point he was taken by his parents when an infant, and at the age of eleven years worked on a farm of Eli Pease, of Enfield, Conn., receiving for his labor his board, clothes and the privilege of attending school during the winter months. After four years with Mr. Pease he removed to Broad Brook, where he worked as a farm hand for one year, and was then associated as a weaver with the Hartford Carpet Co., at Thompsonville, in the ingrain department. He was with this company for about a year, and then went to Springfield, to learn the timer's trade with Simpson Clark, but on account of illness he soon had to give up and return home. Later he secured a position as a clerk with S. Parsons, of Thompsonville, and spent a short time with him, after which he became clerk in the general house-furnishing store of Niles Pease, of Thompsonville, where he was head clerk for ten years. This position he resigned to become a partner with his brothers in the grocery business, continuing with them until the business was suspended, in June, 1882. After this experience Mr. Sloane came to Meriden, to take a position as clerk with the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railway Co., which he filled for two years, and was then appointed cashier of the freight department. For fifteen years he held that position, resigning in 1900 to accept a position with the freight department of the H. Wales Lines Co., which he very creditably filled two years. In January, 1902, he purchased his present business, on West Main street, and resigned his position to give personal attention to the new venture. His wide acquaintance and well-known business ability promise to secure and hold a remunerative trade.

Mr. Sloane was married in December, 1871, to Abbie M. Lacey, a daughter of Henry J. and Catherine (Johnson) Lacey, both of whom were natives of Leicestershire, England. Mrs. Sloane's father, who was a stockinet weaver, died in Thompsonville; he was a member of the Episcopal Church, and in politics was a Republican. Mr. and Mrs. Sloane have had one child, Lena, who married Richard Heckel, a conductor on the Electric Railway, and had one child, Mildred Abbie, now an exceedingly bright and winsome girl; Mr. Heckel died in July, 1900, and his remains rest in Walnut Grove cemetery.

Mr. Sloane is a member of the Knights of Honor, of Meriden, and in politics is a Republican, but no office seeker. In his daily walk and conversation he lives close to the Golden Rule, and is a good man, well liked and very popular in the community.

MRS. ARTHUR M. BROOKS, a pleasing contralto vocalist of Meriden, whose maiden name was Jennie Emma Hill, is a member of a family whose ancestral history extends back to 1674, the first of the name in this country having come to the Colonies about that date.

This founder of the Hill family was named John, and was born in North Hampshire, England, and upon his arrival in the New World took up his residence in Guilford, Conn. Here he spent a long and useful life, engaged in agricultural pursuits, dying in 1689. His second wife was Catherine Chalker, a daughter of Alexander Chalker, born Sept. 8, 1652, and married Sept. 23, 1673. Four children were born to this union: John, James, Sarah and Elizabeth, the last named marrying James Tipping.

(II) John Hill (2), the son of John (1), married Thankful Stowe, who was born in May, 1648, and died Nov. 18, 1711. He died May 8, 1690, and both are interred at Guilford. They left seven children.

(III) John Hill (3), son of John (2), was born July 12, 1672, and, like his father, spent his days in Guilford, where he died Feb. 10, 1740, having married Hannah Highland, who was born Jan. 29, 1670, and died May 19, 1752. Eight children were born of this marriage.

(IV) Thomas Hill, the second son of John (3), was born Sept. 27, 1708, and was engaged in farming and fishing in Guilford, where he was a well-known and prominent citizen. His death occurred Feb. 23, 1792, and his remains were interred in the old cemetery in Guilford. He married, May 23, 1734, Hannah Brinsen, of Bridgehampton, who died May 6, 1791. To this union four children were born.

(V) Thomas Hill, the only son and the youngest of the family, was born March 20, 1743, and followed the same occupations as his father, becoming a soldier in the Continental army, and faithfully performing his duties as a citizen until his death,

April 4, 1820. On Oct. 13, 1767, he married Elizabeth Fairchild, who died Feb. 20, 1812, and was buried in Guilford. The children of this marriage were: Thomas, born Nov. 16, 1770, died Dec. 10, 1827; William, born April 29, 1773, died Sept. 13, 1832; Anson, born April 13, 1775, married Polly Arnold; Mary, born Feb. 4, 1781, married Alexander McQuilla.

(VI) Thomas Hill, son of Thomas (2), was born in Guilford Nov. 16, 1770, and was a farmer and fisherman, spending his life in his native town. He died Dec. 10, 1827. On Nov. 10, 1794, he married Roxanna Benton, who was born Sept. 10, 1776, and the children born to this marriage were: William, born in April, 1796, married Laura Blakeslee, and died in January, 1878; George, born in May, 1798, married Rebecca Norton, and died in November, 1877; Thomas, born Nov. 16, 1800; Clarinda, born May 1, 1803, married William Drugin; Ralph, born Aug. 25, 1805, died Aug. 6, 1881, married Deney Ives; Reuben, born Feb. 23, 1808, died in April, 1887; Almira, born in October, 1810, married Alfred Allen; and Edward, born in August, 1813, married Laura Ann Hull.

(VII) Thomas, son of Thomas (3), was the great-grandfather of Mrs. Brooks, and was born in Guilford Nov. 16, 1800. He spent his life there, and died in 1879, his remains resting in the old Guilford cemetery. He married Mary Morse, who died in Guilford, leaving a son, William.

(VIII) William, son of Thomas (4), in his boyhood attended school in his native place, but at the age of fifteen went to Wallingford, where he learned the carpenter's and joiner's trade with Capt. Butler Ives, and followed that calling several years. He engaged in the manufacture of wood combs, brushes, spools and tooth-brushes, in the North Farms district, for a considerable period. Mr. Hill bought a farm of sixty acres, which he operated, with his sons, and they also carried on a business of wood-turning, under the firm name of William Hill & Sons, remaining in North Farms until the grandfather's death, Jan. 26, 1878. Taking a more prominent part in the affairs of his town than did the others of his family, Mr. Hill represented Wallingford in the Legislature, and filled the office of Major on the General Training days. A lifelong Democrat and a leading member of the Baptist Church, he was widely known and much respected. William Hill was married to Susan Hull, of Wallingford, and four children were born to them: Byron, who is engaged in farming in Wallingford; William, deceased; Franklin, who is conducting a sawmill and manufacturing vinegar in Wallingford (he married Hannah A. Fenn, a native of North Farms); and Oliver, an ice-dealer in Wallingford, who married Sarah A. Wheeler, a daughter of Joel Wheeler, and to this marriage one child was born, Carrie D. Mrs. Hill died June 1, 1876, and was buried in Wallingford.

(N) Franklin Hill, the son of William, is a prominent business man of Wallingford, and his estimable wife was a daughter of Abner and Mary L. Tuttle Conn. (See Conn. history in another portion of this volume.)

Jennie E. HUBBARD Brooks is the only living child of her parents, and is a lady of culture and high attainments, who has devoted herself to the perfection of her magnificent vocal powers. During her childhood, Mrs. Brooks attended school in Wallingford, and at an early age began the training of her voice, studying under Mr. Charles Bennett, of New Haven, and later with Mrs. Hattie Capper Morris, of New York. After having sung for some time, Mrs. Brooks was, at the early age of sixteen years, engaged by the First Congregational Church of Meriden, and after a few years by the New Britain South Congregational Church, but is now a member of the First Congregational Church Quartet of Meriden. Mrs. Brooks is a vocalist of note, and one of the leading musical artists of Meriden and the surrounding district. On May 7, 1889, she was married to Mr. Arthur M. Brooks, of Meriden, a well-known and popular gentleman, who is one of the trusted salesmen of the Bradley & Hubbard Manufacturing Co. To this marriage four children have been born: Agnes Louise, Arthur Hill, Marsden Todd and Howard Thomas. Socially she is a member of the Susan Carrington Clark Chapter, D. A. R., and though engaged as she is in her professional duties, she is a most devoted mother and wife, and her charming family bears testimony to her faithfulness in caring for the little ones entrusted to her guidance, and in making for them and her husband an ideal home.

WILLIAM D. BENNETT. There are few citizens of Meriden occupying positions of more responsibility than that filled by William D. Bennett, the efficient engineer for the Connecticut School for Boys, and who is also the overseer of the water, gas and steam apparatus in that great institution.

Mr. Bennett was born at Feltham, Suffolk, England, Aug. 9, 1848, son of George Bennett. The death of his mother, when he was but an infant, left him without her fostering care, but the father did his best for him. He went to school and remained on the farm with his father until he was thirteen years old, at which time he secured a position on a threshing machine, as water boy. This suited the boy very well, as he had a natural inclination toward mechanics, and by 1867 there was little knowledge about the working of an engine that he had not acquired. He had a half brother, seated at Southwold, On the 1st, and as soon as he could accomplish a more serious study for himself, with the assistance of making an hour or so in an engineering shop at Southwold, he secured a position on the Great Eastern Railroad as a watchman, and later was promoted to the position of fireman, controlling the engine in the work, continually learning and and more about engines. Then he came to Apponaug, R. I., where he worked as helper in an engine repair shop, operated by Jordan, Marsh & Co., of Boston. He was subsequently appointed to take charge of the engine in their printing department, remaining with that responsible firm for a period of nine years. The two succeeding years he spent as night engineer in the Rhode Island Reform School. It was in 1884 that Mr. Bennett was tendered his present position and urged to accept it, and here he has continued for the past eighteen years, devoted to the faithful performance of his duty, trusted by his employers, and fully comprehending the great responsibility resting upon him. The equipment of the establishment is large, and has been much improved under Mr. Bennett's administration. As a careful and accurate engineer, he cannot be surpassed, and he has many friends in the institution and also in the city.

Mr. Bennett was married, in Meriden, Conn., in 1891, to Margaret A. Canole, who was born in Ireland. She passed away June 18, 1901, and was buried in the Sacred Heart cemetery, in Meriden, she having been a consistent member of St. Rose's Roman Catholic Church. In political sentiment Mr. Bennett is independent. His religious connection is with the Episcopal Church.

JOHN ELAM WARNER, one of the leading farmers and dairymen of Highwood, New Haven county, comes from one of the oldest and most numerously represented families in Hamden. The Warners have for generations borne an honored name, and our subject has shown himself to be the type of citizen capable of worthily sustaining it on the same lofty plane.

Mr. Warner was born in Hamden July 10, 1842, on the farm where John Keepe now lives. His father, Horace Warner, and his grandfather, Elam Warner, were both natives of Hamden. Horace Warner was a prosperous farmer, a highly respected citizen, and well known in his town. About 1845 he removed to the farm at the corner of Dixwell avenue and Warner street, where he met with success in his chosen calling. He was a systematic agriculturist, and his management invariably secured the best results. Mr. Warner married Elizabeth Keepe, and to them were born four children: John E., our subject; Webster, deceased; Alice, Mrs. Elihu Davis, of Hamden; and Lizzie, who died young. The father died Aug. 6, 1870, and the mother passed away Aug. 27, 1870, aged fifty-four and forty-eight years, respectively. They are buried in Hamden.

John E. Warner was but a child when his parents removed to the farm where he has ever since lived. During his nearly fifty years of residence there he has seen many changes in the property and locality. He has seen Highwood transferred from a farming community to one of the most pleasant residence sections around New Haven, and distinct remembers when there were fewer houses between Hamden M. E. church and Broadway than may now be found in two blocks in Highwood. He was reared a farmer boy at a period when work was plenty and came first, regular attendance at school being a secondary consideration. His advantages were greatly inferior to those enjoyed by the present generation. He attended Alonzo P. Shear's private school, in Dixwell avenue, which with short periods of study at district schools comprised all his educational privileges. Reared under a father who was a successful farmer and opposed to having ideal boys around, he was thus "put into the harness" when quite young, and early acquired those habits of industry which have been important factors in his success. In 1870 Mr. Warner took charge of the farm, and has conducted it profitably ever since. His home tract contained about thirty-five acres, and he owns twenty-five acres elsewhere. In connection with general farming he is engaged extensively in the dairy business, selling his milk wholesale. In all of his labors he has prospered steadily, until now he is one of the well-to-do citizens of his town and one of its most substantial agriculturists. Our subject is of the progressive type, and his management of the farm and other interests is characterized by the modern methods which he has come to consider most effective, either by observation or experiment. Mr. Warner's home, on the corner of Dixwell avenue and Warner street, is very pleasant, and hospitality reigns supreme. The family are prominent in the social circles of the neighborhood, and the children are among the best known young people in the town.

In his political views Mr. Warner is a staunch Republican, but not a politician, preferring to attend strictly to his business cares, and whatever connection he has had with politics has been from purely unselfish motives, from his sense of duty as a citizen. He never withholds his support from any measure which he believes will be beneficial to the public. Mr. Warner is unassuming, a man of strict integrity, domestic in his disposition, and takes great interest in his home and family. He was fortunate in his selection of a wife, as Mrs. Warner has done well her part in the conduct of their home and the rearing of their family, who would reflect credit on any parentage.

On November 4, 1868, Mr. Warner married Miss Isabella Pardee, a native of Orange, born Feb. 18, 1844, daughter of Silas and Catherine (Merwin) Pardee. Mrs. Warner comes of excellent stock. Through the Merwins she is a descendant of one of the very oldest families of Milford, Conn., prominent in that town since its earliest history. Mrs. Warner has taken active interest in church affairs, being a member of the M. E. Church. Our subject and his wife have had children as follows: Arthur G., born Feb. 15, 1870, died when three years old; Gertrude K., born Jan.

3, 1874, died in childhood; Grace D., born Aug. 20, 1875, is living at home; Ella P., born Nov. 8, 1877, graduated from the New Haven Normal School, took a course at Wesley Academy, and is now engaged at teaching in New Haven; Ida M., born July 7, 1879, was valedictorian of the class of 1901 at the Boardman Training School, New Haven.

ARTHUR W. MARSH, M. D., is well and favorably known in the medical circles of Westville and New Haven, where he has been engaged in practice for the past ten years.

The Doctor is of remote English ancestry, George Marsh, the first of the family in this country, having come to America in 1635, from England. He landed at Charlestown, Mass., on June 8th, of that year, thence went to Hingham, Mass., and in 1674 to Haverhill. His descendants in the line in which we are interested remained in Massachusetts for several generations, the Doctor's great-grandfather moving to New Hampshire. James Marsh, his grandfather, was born at Salisbury, that State, and moved to Cabot, Vt., where he passed the remainder of his days, living to be over ninety. He followed farming. He was a strong Congregationalist and served as deacon of the church for many years. Of his large family there is now but one survivor, James, a resident of Cabot.

Barachias W. Marsh, father of our subject, was born Sept. 15, 1813, in Cabot, Vt., was reared to farming, and followed that calling throughout life. He also engaged successfully in the insurance business, doing the largest business for the Vermont Fire Insurance Co. of any local agent in Vermont, and traded considerably in other lines. He reached the age of seventy, dying March 28, 1884, at Cabot. Mr. Marsh married Louisa Cannon, also a native of that town, and five children were born to them: Julian H., who is mentioned fully below; William R. and Mary L. (Mrs. Phineas P. Garney), both residing in Cabot; Arthur W., whose name introduces these lines; and Ellen S., wife of William W. Cole, of New Hampshire. Mrs. Marsh's death occurred in 1878, when she was fifty-six years of age. Both parents were members of the Congregational Church. Mr. Marsh served two terms as selectman.

Arthur W. Marsh was born Sept. 13, 1857, in Cabot, where he spent his early years. He attended the common schools there and the academy at St. Johnsbury. His medical education was acquired in the University at Burlington, Vt., from which he was graduated in 1882; he was president of his class. The Doctor's first location for practice was at Oriskany Falls, N. Y., where he followed his profession for nine years, until his removal, in 1891, to Westville, where he has since remained. He is located at No. 1012 Whaley avenue. Dr. Marsh has, by close attention to the many demands of a growing practice, gained a wide patronage in his section of New Haven county, and he occupies a high position among his brother practitioners as well. He has written some valuable papers on medical topics. He is a member of the New Haven City, New Haven County and Connecticut State Medical Societies, and while in New York served as president of the Oneida County Medical Society. He also served as a member of the town committee, as town physician and health officer while in Oriskany Falls. The Doctor has always taken an active interest in public affairs, and in matters political as a staunch Republican, and he is a member of the Young Republican Club. Fraternally he affiliates with Olive Branch Lodge, F. & A. M., of which he is past master, and he has taken all the Masonic degrees up to and including the Scottish Rite; he is also a member of the A. O. U. W. and Woodmen of the World.

In 1883 Dr. Marsh married Miss Nellie S. Drought, who was born in Burlington, Vt., daughter of William and Margaret (Cummings) Drought, who had three children. Mr. Drought was a native of Scotland, but passed the greater part of his life in Burlington, where he died. A teacher by profession, he was in his day one of the prominent and representative citizens of Burlington. Two children have blessed the union of Dr. and Mrs. Marsh, a daughter who died in infancy, and a son named Arthur. The Doctor attends the Congregational Church, of which he is a member. Mrs. Marsh unites with the Episcopal Church.

JULIAN H. MARSH was born Feb. 19, 1845, in Cabot, Vt., received his education in the local public schools, and was reared to farming, remaining at home until he reached the age of twenty. For the next three years he was engaged in a general store, but he was obliged to give up that work on account of his health, and he spent the year following in the office of the general agent of the American Encyclopedia at Cincinnati. He has since been engaged in the drug business, which he learned in Lyndonville, Vt., remaining in the store where he commenced for several years. At the end of that time he came to Westville and bought the store he now conducts, meeting with such success here that he has remained continuously to the present. His establishment, which is located at No. 610 Whaley avenue, is the largest in Westville, and is conceded to be the finest and best equipped in the city. Mr. Marsh carries a complete line of drugs, perfumes, etc., and he commands a large trade, won by fair dealing and intelligent business methods. He is a member of the Connecticut State Pharmaceutical Association.

In November, 1880, Mr. Marsh married Miss Edna J. Morris, a native of Cabot, Vt., whose father was a farmer in that locality. He entered the army during the Civil war, and died while in the service, in 1865. Mrs. Marsh is one of a family of three children, all yet living, the other two in Cabot. To Mr. and Mrs. Marsh have been born two children: Ralph J. Marsh, who with the Crest Manufacturing Co., and Ralph J., who is still attending school.

Our subject and his wife attend the Congregational Church, in which he has held office. He is a Republican in political opinion, and socially unites with the A. O. U. W. and the Masons, holding membership in Green Mountain Lodge, No. 63, in Vermont. Mr. Marsh's standing in business circles is unquestioned, and he is equally well thought of in every other relation of life.

HERMAN L. BALDWIN, a member of one of the oldest and best known families of Milford, was born in that town May 12, 1852, son of James and grandson of Elnathan Baldwin.

Elnathan Baldwin was born in Milford, and after marriage he settled upon a farm there. His wife, Sally Stowe, was also a native of Milford. They had eight children, as follows: Elnathan and Charles were farmers; James is mentioned below; Esther died unmarried; Sarah married Charles Beardsley, of Milford; Phineas is a farmer in Milford; William was a cabinetmaker; Eunice, who died Nov. 25, 1876, was the wife of Joshua Baldwin, son of Hezekiah and Mary Ann Baldwin.

James Baldwin, our subject's father, was born in Milford Nov. 10, 1824, and grew to manhood upon the farm, but also learned the shoemaker's trade, which he followed for some years. He made his home upon the present farm at his marriage, and he and his wife, Elizabeth A. Smith, are both living. Of their five children our subject is the oldest; Ida L. married Edward Tuttle, of Milford; Henry M., unmarried, is a farmer in Milford; Frank E. is a carpenter and builder in Fairfield county; and Elizabeth L. married Frederick Woodward, of New Haven. Mrs. Baldwin is a daughter of Lewis Smith, and granddaughter of Amos Smith, of Milford. Her mother, whose maiden name was Abigail A. Baldwin, was a daughter of Hezekiah and Mary Ann Baldwin, of Milford. Mrs. Baldwin is the oldest in a family of four children, the others being Mary J., wife of Henry Smith, a farmer in Milford; Miss Martha A.; and Miles L., a carpenter in New Haven, who married Miss Kate Smith.

Our subject was reared upon the homestead, and his education was secured at the district schools. He learned the patternmaker's trade at Bridgeport, and followed it for many years, but at present he is not engaged in any business. Politically he is independent, and he and his family are members of the Congregational Church of Milford. He married Miss Sarah W. Bradley, of Bridgeport, and has one child, Edna H.

JOHN ALOYSIUS HURLEY, secretary and treasurer of the Meriden, Southington & Compounce Tramway Co., and one of Meriden's progressive and active business men, is a native of New Haven county, born April 30, 1854, in the city of New Haven. His parents, William and Ellen (Ray) Hurley, were natives of Ireland, born in Counties Tipperary and Limerick, respectively. The mother died in New Haven Oct. 9, 1892, and the father, now in the sixty-ninth year of his age, is a resident of Bridgeport, Connecticut.

The subject of this sketch received his education in the public schools of his native city, and began his business career at the age of eighteen years, in January, 1872. He entered the dry-goods establishment of Edward Malley, in New Haven, his first occupation being that of wrapper. Being capable, faithful and industrious, he steadily earned and received promotion, so that when he closed his connection with the house, at the end of the year 1878, he occupied the position of head bookkeeper and cashier. At this time he entered the employ of McMahon & Wren, wholesale liquor dealers of Bridgeport, in the capacity of bookkeeper. On Feb. 1, 1886, he became a partner in the business, and the name was changed to McMahon, Wren & Co. On Jan. 1, 1888, Mr. Hurley came to Meriden, where he has ever since resided, to take charge of the business of the Meriden Brewing Co., and continued in that connection until the close of the nineteenth century, resigning the position Jan. 1, 1901. His business ability was soon established among Meriden business men, and his genial nature and upright character readily made and retained friends. He was one of those who foresaw the capabilities of trolley systems, and his energetic and enterprising nature led him to join Francis Atwater in securing the charter under which they are now successfully operating, with benefit to themselves and the general public. This took place in August, 1897, the company was incorporated the next month, and such was the energy and industry of the promoters that the road was in operation by July 2, 1898, and has been continuously at the service of the public, without a hitch, ever since. Much credit for this state of affairs is due to the active manager, whose name heads this article. Mr. Hurley is president and treasurer of the Acme Manufacturing Co., of Plantsville, a recently organized industry, devoted to the production of a patent wagon wrench, a patent screw-driver, chisels and kindred articles. He is also a director and vice-president of the Connecticut Breweries Co.

On July 16, 1877, Mr. Hurley married Miss Margaret A. Byrne, who was born in New York City, daughter of Thomas Stanford and Mary (Mallon) Byrne, of Ireland. Mr. Byrne died in 1888, at the age of seventy-three years, and his widow, now in her eighty-sixth year, makes her home with her daughter in Meriden. She came to New York more than sixty years ago. Three of the children born to Mr. and Mrs. Hurley are now living, namely: Grace L., Margaret M. and John A., Jr., all of whom reside at home with their parents.

Being of a social disposition, Mr. Hurley is among the cherished members of the Amaranth Club, of Meriden Lodge, No. 35, B. P. O. E., and of Silver City Council, No. 2, Knights of Columbus. He is a trustee of St. Joseph's Church corporation.

In political affiliation our subject is a Democrat. When Mayor West took the chair, in 1901, he appointed Mr. Hurley a member of the board of apportionment and taxation for a term of two years. This is a fitting testimonial to his business standing, integrity and judgment, and indicates the cordial esteem in which he is held by all who are privileged to enjoy his acquaintance.

SEYMOUR CRANE LOOMIS, a substantial citizen and highly successful lawyer of New Haven, is a representative of an old and prominent Connecticut family.

Born in the town of Suffield, Conn., Nov. 12, 1861, Mr. Loomis is the son of George Wells and Ellen (Norton) Loomis, and a descendant in the eighth generation from Joseph Loomis, one of the first settlers of Windsor, Conn. This original American settler was a linen draper at Braintree, in the county of Essex, England, and was born probably about 1590. He sailed from London in 1638, in the ship "Susan and Ellen," to Boston, and as early as 1640 was at Windsor, where he had a plantation of twenty-one acres on the west side of the Connecticut river, adjoining the Farmington river, and also some land on the east side of the river. Five sons and three daughters came with him to New England. His wife died in 1652, and his death occurred six years later. From this immigrant settler the lineage of Seymour Crane Loomis is through Lieut. Samuel, William, Capt. Noah, Ham, John Wells and George Wells.

Lieut. Samuel Loomis, son of Joseph, was born in England, and was married Dec. 27, 1653, to Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Judd. Lieut. Loomis was made a freeman at Windsor in 1654, and was admitted to the church in 1661. About 1672 he removed to Westfield, Mass., where he died Oct. 1, 1689, his widow surviving until May 7, 1696. His grandson, Capt. Noah Loomis, of Southwick, Mass., served in the war of the Revolution.

George Wells Loomis, son of John Wells and Eliza (Whitney) Loomis, was born June 24, 1832, at Southwick. He removed to Suffield in 1852, and was married Jan. 4, 1860, to Ellen Norton, who was born June 6, 1836, daughter of Daniel W. and Mindwell (Pease) Norton, of Suffield. To this union came two children, Seymour Crane and Mindwell Pease, the latter born Jan. 18, 1865. The family home is in the town of Suffield, Connecticut.

Seymour Crane Loomis, son of George W., passed his boyhood days in the town of his nativity, where he prepared for college at the Connecticut Literary Institute, one of the old-established schools of the State, graduating as valedictorian in 1878. He received the degree of Bachelor of Arts from Yale University in 1882, and of LL. B. cum laude, from its law department two years later. Admitted to the Bar in June, 1884, he engaged in the practice of his chosen profession in New Haven, where for three years he was in the office of John W. Alling. From 1887 until 1893 he was associated with William B. Stoddard. Since that time he has conducted his office at No. 81 Church street, in the Connecticut Savings Bank building. Mr. Loomis was assistant city clerk in 1885 and 1886, serving as city clerk the latter part of the time. In 1893 and 1894 he was the Executive Secretary of the State of Connecticut, during the administration of the late Gov. Luzon B. Morris.

Mr. Loomis was married April 20, 1892, to Miss Catherine Canfield Northrop, a daughter of Samuel C. and Caroline (Bassett) Northrop, of New Milford, Connecticut.

CHARLES A. BEVAN, M. D., has for fourteen years been one of West Haven's successful and highly esteemed physicians, at the same time filling a prominent position in both social and fraternal circles.

Dr. Bevan is of English descent, and the name is of Welsh origin, being derived from "Ap Evan." The Doctor's great-grandfather served in the Revolution, and his grandfather in the war of 1812.

The latter, Timothy V. Bevan, was born in Stratford, Conn., and was one of five children. His father was a sea captain, and he too was a sea captain in early life. After abandoning that vocation he made his home at Trumbull, and engaged in farming there and at Monroe. He died after passing life's eighty-eighth milestone, in the faith of the Episcopal Church. Politically he was first a Whig and later a Republican. He married Samantha Hurd, who lived to the age of sixty-five, and they had nine children, viz.: (1) Julia, who married Cyrus Botsford, died in Humphreysville, Conn. (2) Russell, who was a hatter, died in Danbury, Conn. He was the father of George R. Bevan, chief of police of Danbury. (3) Charles was first a shoemaker and later a farmer; he died in Trumbull. (4) Lucy Ann married Samuel French, and died in Trumbull. (5) David C. was the father of our subject. (6) John, a carpenter and builder, lives in Bethel, Conn. (7) Samantha is the widow of Louis French, and resides in Bridgeport, Conn. (8) Ira Nichols, now living retired in Bristol, Conn., was born July 5, 1825, in Trumbull. (9) Susan N., Mrs. Knapp, lives in New York City.

David C. Bevan was born Sept. 29, 1816, in Trumbull, and in the common schools of that place received his rudimentary education. After leaving school he learned the trade of a carriage-maker, and later worked as a journeyman in Middlebury, Bridgeport and Plymouth. At the point last named he was for twenty-three years a foreman in the employ of Shelton & Tuttle. On leaving that firm he went to South Amenia, N. Y., engaging in the carriage business there for fifteen years. Feeling himself growing old, he retired and moved to West Haven, making his home with his son Charles A., at whose home he died March 20, 1895.

On April 7, 1830, David C. Bevan married Laura Wilson, a daughter of Charles and Martha (Bennett) Wilson, of Newtown, and a lineal descendant of John Rogers, who was burned at the stake in Rhode Island. Jonathan Bennett, grandfather of Mrs. Laura (Wilson) Bevan, was the inventor of the first shingle mill. He was a resident of Dutchess county, N. Y. Charles Wilson was a large land owner and prosperous farmer in Dutchess county, N. Y. He died at the age of sixty, and his wife at seventy-eight. Nine children were born to them. To the union of David C. Bevan and his wife were born three children, as follows: Samuel, who was in the employ of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., at Jersey City, N. J., up to the date of his death, which occurred Oct. 15, 1899; Emma J., who married Evelyn Beecher, and lives in New Haven; and Charles A., our subject. The mother of this family is still living, at the age of seventy-nine years, and has her home with our subject. Mr. Bevan and his wife were active members of the M. E. Church; he was chairman of the committee which built the edifice at Thomaston, and also served as steward. He was a Republican, always active in politics, and served as grand juror.

Charles A. Bevan was born Nov. 29, 1849, in Middlebury, and received his early education in the common schools of Plymouth and in the high school at Thomaston. After leaving the high school he acquired a thorough knowledge of the trade of machinist, which he followed for nine years at New Haven and Hartford, passing several years in Colt's Armory, with the Wetmore Machine Co. and Sargent & Co., of New Haven. Although a proficient workman, his tastes inclined toward a professional life, wherein he might gratify his innate yearning toward a higher training and a more scholarly pursuit. He began the study of medicine in the office of Dr. B. S. Lewis, of New Haven, and finally received the degree of M. D. from the Medico-Chirurgical College, of Philadelphia, April 6, 1887. Immediately upon graduation he settled in West Haven, where he has since been engaged in active practice, endearing himself to his patients alike by his scientific skill and the gentle kindness of his sympathetic nature. He is a member of Annawon Lodge, A. F. & A. M., of West Haven; Joseph Andrews Chapter, R. A. M.; City Lodge, I. O. O. F.; and Sassacus Encampment.

On June 27, 1885, the Doctor was married to Mary J. Andrews, of New Haven, daughter of James M. Andrews, a carriage painter of that city; her mother, Maria H. (Grinnell), was of English descent, her forefathers having been among the founders of New Haven. Mrs. Bevan is the sole survivor of a family of five children. To the union of Dr. Bevan and Mary J. Andrews have been born two children, Laura A. and Mary J. The Doctor is a Democrat in politics, has been a member of the school board for four years, and is at present filling the responsible position of health officer for Orange town. Both he and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and he has held the post of steward.

JOHN SHANE CRABB, who has been connected with the Connecticut School for Boys, at Meriden, since 1890, and is now supervisor of Cottage E, was born Oct. 11, 1845, in Ross township, Jefferson Co., Ohio. He is of German descent, his grandfather, Henry Krebs (as the name was then spelled), having been born in Germany. On his emigration to America he located in Ross township, Jefferson Co., Ohio, and was one of the early pioneers of that section, which was then virtually a wilderness. He engaged in farming, became a land owner, and spent the rest of his life there. In religious connection he was a Presbyterian.

John Crabb, son of Henry, and father of John S., was born on the home place in Ross township, and there grew to manhood, receiving such education as the schools of the locality afforded. He spent his entire life in his native township. He was a large land owner, and engaged in general farming and, on an extensive scale, wool growing, from which latter business he derived his principal revenue. He reached the ripe old age of ninety-two, and his death was caused by an accident; he tripped on a carpet and fell, breaking his hip, and died from his injuries. His remains rest in the family cemetery. Mr. Crabb was a staunch Republican in political sympathy, was one of the first anti-slavery advocates, and was not afraid to voice his sentiments at a time when such principles were considered a disgrace and their support was nothing short of dangerous. He was a conductor on the "underground railroad." He was a man of upright life, a good citizen, a kind husband and father, and thoroughly domestic in his tastes. He was especially fond of horses and fine stock, and gave all his interests the best of care.

John Crabb was married to Jane McLaughlin, who was born in Carroll county, Ohio, of Scotch-Irish descent, and belonged to one of the early families of that section, being a daughter of Robert McLaughlin. Mrs. Crabb is still living (1902), at the ripe old age of eighty-eight years, and makes her home on the homestead, with her son. She is a good Christian woman, a faithful member of the United Presbyterian Church, to which her husband also belonged, and proved a worthy and competent helpmeet to Mr. Crabb in his active career. Children as follows blessed their union: Henry K. enlisted for service in the Civil war, becoming a member of Company K, 52d O. V. I., and died while in the army; Robert Mitchell, who served a term in the Civil war, is a farmer and stock raiser near the old home; John S. is mentioned below; Ross lives on the old homestead with his mother; Annie is the wife of William K. Smith, a farmer and stock raiser and dealer in Ross township.

John Shane Crabb was reared on the home farm and attended the local schools during his boyhood. It was his ambition to become an educator, and he accordingly continued his studies in the college at Hopedale, Harrison Co., Ohio, where he fitted himself for his profession. He commenced teaching at the age of eighteen years, in his native town, and was engaged six years in the public schools, his vacations and spare time being spent at home, assisting his father with the farm. Having managed to save a little, he engaged in the mercantile business with J. M. George, under the firm name of Crabb & George, and they carried on a store in Moorestown, Jefferson Co., Ohio, for five years, at the end of which time our subject withdrew to become a member of the Salineville Lumber Co. Mr. Crabb was manager of the business, and he continued thus for three years, when, not having met with the success he anticipated, he sold out and returned to his profession. He accepted a position at the Ohio State Reform School, Lancaster, where he was supervisor of a cottage, and remained there four years, having under his charge seventy or more boys, in whose care he was ably assisted by his wife, who was engaged as teacher. This incumbency he was obliged to relinquish because of political changes, and took a similar charge in the House of Refuge, Cincinnati, under Major Oliver, retaining this situation until 1890. Having been tendered a position in the Connecticut School for Boys by Mr. Howe, who was then superintendent, he accepted and came to Meriden, and has ever since been connected with the institution, where he is regarded as one of the most efficient and painstaking officials. He was made supervisor of the North Division and the chair shop, having over 130 boys under his charge, and since 1896 he has held his present position, that of supervisor at Cottage E. Here he has fifty boys under him, and he has faithfully performed all the duties of this responsible charge, taking a deep interest in the welfare of his boys, and showing genuine devotion to his work, in which he takes personal pride and pleasure. He has won recognition by his own earnest efforts, and the high esteem in which he is held is ample testimony of his worth as a man, apart from his usefulness in his chosen field.

On Jan. 1, 1876, in Ross township, Jefferson Co., Ohio, Mr. Crabb married Miss Marietta McLennan, a native of Jefferson county, and a daughter of Kenneth McLennan; her family is of Scottish descent. Mrs. Crabb was educated in her native county and in Mt. Union College, near Alliance, Ohio, and like her husband has devoted her life to the teacher's profession, before her marriage engaging in the public schools of her native county, and since assisting him in his labors. She taught in the Ohio State Reform School, at Lancaster; in the House of Refuge, Cincinnati; and ever since she came to Meriden has been one of the best teachers in the Connecticut School for Boys, where her work has received deserved appreciation. She is a woman of marked culture and character, and under her wise direction many boys have been fitted to commence life's battle. Like her husband, she takes more than a professional interest in her charges, and it is the personal element in their work that gives it special value. One child has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Crabb, Janet. She attended public school in Ohio, graduating from the German-American school in Meriden and the Meriden high school, and is now a student at the Ontario Ladies College, at Whitby, Ontario, Canada, where she is receiving instruction in the higher branches. She possesses musical ability of a high order. The family circle is a charming one. Mr. Crabb is a man of pleasing manner and genial disposition, an interesting conversationalist, and is well liked among a wide acquaintanceship. He is a Republican in political faith, and a staunch supporter of the principles of that party. He and his family unite with the First Congregational Church, of which he is a deacon.

FRANCIS LYNCH, or as he was so well known, "Frank" Lynch, was, in his life time, one of the best-known Irish-Americans in Connecticut, and he was well known and highly respected in his home town, Meriden. He was born in County Meath, Ireland, a son of Michael Lynch. When he was but fifteen years old he made the voyage to America, and upon landing came direct to New Haven, where he found employment with Rogers, Smith & Co. During this time he was also a member of the Fire Department. The breaking out of the Civil war afforded him an opportunity to prove his devotion to the land of his adoption, and he enlisted, becoming a member of Co. A, 9th Conn. V. L., under Col. Caball and Capt. Duffey. He participated in several battles with Gen. Butler, was in New Orleans, and fought all through the campaign of the Gulf. After his term of enlistment had expired, he returned to New Haven, and again entered the employ of Rogers, Smith & Co. This company was soon bought out by the Britannia Co. and transferred to Meriden. Mr. Lynch continued in the same position in Meriden, under the new management, for eight years. He then started out in business for himself as a cigar manufacturer on Center St., and continued there until 1883, when he gave up the business, becoming agent for the Harbour Yeast in Hartford County, and at the time of his death he was associated with the Francis Gowdy Distillery Co., of Merose. He died at his home Jan. 3, 1901, and was buried in St. Patrick's cemetery in Meriden.

In his religious views, Mr. Lynch was a devout Roman Catholic, and was identified with St. Rose's parish, to which he contributed freely, and in which he was held in the highest esteem. In the days of the volunteer fire department, he was as stated a fireman, and belonged to the old Washington Hose Co. He was one of the organizers and a charter member of the First Division, A. O. H., and was also a member of Merriman Post, G. A. R. In his political faith he was a Democrat, and no man in the State of Connecticut was better known as a leader in the party. Unlike the majority of men in the political world, he sought no political office or honors for himself. He loved the battle of the campaign, and was very loyal to his friends. The Meriden Journal of Jan. 3, 1901, speaks of him as follows:

Mr. Lynch was a man of strong likes and dislikes. Loyalty to his friends, those who had done him good turns, was one of his strong praiseworthy qualities. He never forgot a favor and was out-poken against men and methods that did not appear to him to be right. He took an active interest in politics, local and State. He was the spirit of steadfastness to any cause he espoused—a tireless worker, a keen discernor, and a fighter in politics from the drop of the hat to the close of the polls, and when it was over, he held no animosity toward his opponent, but simply prepared the way to beat them again at the next contest if he could. That was the way he made so many staunch friends, and that was the secret of his success in winning so many contests in the First ward—unswerving loyalty to friends and eternal vigilance to opponents. Socially he was a big hearted, generous, honest man who took delight in doing favors for friends, and many were asked of him. When the emergencies of a campaign did not take him away he could always be found at home, for he was strictly a home man, devoted to his family and beloved by every member of it. Frank Lynch was a born leader, and in his plain, blunt way he exercised an influence over men that proved his right to command. He fought in the open, and leaves behind him a record that is clean in every way. He never sought office for himself, being content to let others enjoy the fruits that were in many cases entirely due to his planting and cultivating. He was, taken all in all, a strong, unique personage, who will be greatly missed in the circles in which he moved. He was well known throughout the State, especially in New Haven county, and when the news of his death becomes known, there will be many expressions of sorrow.

Attorney Walter L. Bevins, whose father, Le Grand Bevins, was a life-long friend of Mr. Lynch, paid the following tribute, which appeared in the Meriden Record, Jan. 4, 1901:

In the death of Francis Lynch, the local Democracy loses one of its most indefatigable supporters, and the community one of its most prominent citizens. For over thirty years Mr. Lynch had taken an active part in political affairs and no Democrat in this section of Connecticut was more widely known. While strongly partisan in his political views and sympathies, he was as just as he was generous to those with whom he differed in politics. No Democrat of Meriden ever showed greater personal interest in the welfare of his party, or worked harder for its triumphs. Few leaders have more conscientiously, or more intelligently, participated in their party's councils than Mr. Lynch, and in times that tried the stoutest hearts of Democracy, when overwhelming defeat temporarily gave the party only remnant stability, the ardent optimism of the man who was always looking to the future for better things made him a central figure around whom the doubting Thomases rallied with even more fervor than before the unlucky election day.

Mr. Lynch will not be longest remembered for his services as a public official, as he held very few offices and these were of minor importance. He will be most gratefully remembered for his earnest devotion to the interests of others. He was a most kind husband, and a more indulgent, or more thoughtful, father could not be found anywhere. He was always true to his friends, and hated self-seeking, tricking and double-dealing in others.

Never a personal claimant in the distribution of the spoils of political meetings, but always a warm advocate of the principle that a "public office is a public trust," and that office should seek the man, rather than the man the office, he gave liberally of his means to campaign funds, and during Grover Cleveland's first canvass for the presidency, it is understood that Mr. Lynch contributed $1,000 to Mr. Cleveland's election.

The tall, spare form of Mr. Lynch and the frank friendliness of his manner will be missed on our streets. His death will be mourned by a wide circle of friends in this city, New Haven, Hartford, and Waterbury.

On July 3, 1859, Mr. Lynch was married by the Rev. Father Matthew Hart, to Ellen Maloney, who was born in County Limerick, Ireland, a daughter of John Maloney, who died in Westport, Connecticut. Mrs. Lynch is a woman of strong character, and was greatly attached to her husband, to whom she was, in very truth, a helpmeet and companion. Their happy marriage was blessed with eleven children: (1) Francis W., born April 5, 1860, was educated in Meriden, and now resides in Hartford, where he is engaged in the cigar business. Under President Cleveland, he held the office of deputy collector. He married Mary A. A. Noland, who was born in Portland, Conn., a daughter of Peter and Bridget (Keeley) Noland. One child, Ellen, was born to this union, but she is now deceased. (2) John, born March 23, 1864, is a cigar manufacturer in Hartford. He married Frances Bennett, of New York, daughter of Fennimore Bennett, and has one child, Francis Fennimore. (3) Ellen, born April 23, 1866, died Feb. 23, 1867. (4) Thomas J., born Nov. 24, 1867, was educated in Meriden, and was graduated from Yale Business College in 1888, and died April 16, 1899. (5) Bernard C., born Feb. 22, 1870, is government storekeeper at Windsor Locks. He married Mary Batten, daughter of Thomas Batten of Meriden, and has two children, Ellen and Francis. (6) Mary, born March 20, 1872, died July 26, 1873. (7) William, born Nov. 11, 1873, died Nov. 22, 1874. (8) Anna C., born Sept. 28, 1875, was educated at St. Rose's school in Meriden, and graduated from Mount St. Joseph's, Hartford, in 1894. She is a fine musician, thoroughly proficient in both instrumental and vocal music. (9) James, born Feb. 10, 1878, attended New York City College of Pharmacy. (10) Catharine, born Jan. 20, 1881, was educated at St. Rose's school. (11) Edward, born Jan. 28, 1887, is at home.

CHARLES L. WEIL, one of the prominent business citizens of New Haven, who is also identified with its public, educational and social life, was born in this city, Dec. 19, 1863. Paul Weil, his father, was a native of Berlin, Germany.

Charles L. Weil was the second in the family born to his parents, and he spent his boyhood days in this beautiful city. Mr. Weil enjoyed superior educational advantages, passing from the Eaton school into the Yale Business College, and gaining a commercial training by associating with his father in the cigar business in this city, for a period of five years. Then, in partnership with his brother, Louis P. Weil, he took charge of this business for four years, under the firm style of Louis P. Weil & Brother, conducting it on State Street. He then became connected with the Springfield Brewery Co., being financially interested from 1889 to 1899. When this business was absorbed by the trust, Mr. Weil became connected with the Manila Anchor Brewing Co., of Dobbs Ferry, N. Y.

On Sept. 20, 1894, Mr. Weil was married to Miss Delia Zunder, daughter of Maier Zunder, a complete biographical sketch of this prominent family being found on another page. One little daughter has been born to this marriage, Regina Zunder. Mrs. Weil is a lady of superior educational and social graces, and is known and valued in educational enterprises and benevolent activities in New Haven.

Mr. Weil is one of the prominent members of the Democratic party, in this city, and has served in a number of positions where he has greatly benefited the city. From 1890 to 1892 he was councilman from the Sixth ward, and served for two terms as alderman from the same ward. In 1897 he was appointed fire commissioner, for a term of three years, by ex-Mayor Farnsworth, and was re-appointed by Mayor Studley. Mr. Weil is one of the leading members of the Synagogue, the Jewish Temple; is a director of the Hebrew Benevolent Society; secretary of the Harmonie Club; member of the A. O. U. W.; Yale Conclave of Heptasophs; Connecticut Commercial Travelers' Association; and the order I. O. B. B. In all these orders and organizations, covering the religious, social and business circles of the city, Mr. Weil is deservedly popular.

RICHARD WILLIAM MUELLER, proprietor of the Vienna Bakery, and one of the leading citizens of Meriden, where he is regarded as one of the most prominent German-Americans of the city, was born in Spremberg, Prussia, Sept. 5, 1853, a son of William Mueller, and a brother of William C. Mueller, a well-known attorney of Meriden.

William Mueller, the father of Richard, was born in the same Prussian town as his son, and there he grew to manhood, becoming engaged in a wool manufacturing business, at which he spent many years, securing a large patronage, and forming many associations with all parts of the business world. He was president of a corporation, in which he was a very large stockholder. The affairs of the company, which was a large exporter of manufactured cloth, suffered greatly from the unsettled condition of Europe, especially from the Franco-Prussian War, and in 1870 they suspended business. Mr. Mueller left Germany in 1873, not wishing that his sons should be compelled to serve in the army, and came to this country by way of Holland and Liverpool. He landed at Boston, and went from there to Meriden, where he found employment in the Malleable Iron Company's Works. After a short illness he died in 1879, and his remains were interred in the West Cemetery. He was a faithful member of the Lutheran Church, and was noted for his integrity and honesty.

Mr. Mueller was married in Germany, to Caroline Wilhelmina Senkel, who is still living, and has her home in Meriden. In 1874 she came to this country with four children, to make her home in Meriden, where she has lived to the present time. She is a member of the Lutheran Church, and reared her children to be upright and useful members of the community. She was a devoted wife, and of her only the best and kindest words are spoken. She is the mother of the following family: Richard W.; Emma, who married Lewis Krober, of Meriden; Frederick J., who is connected with the International Silver Company, of Meriden; Helen, who married Otto George Hirschfeld, of Meriden; and William C., an attorney of Meriden.

Richard W. Mueller attended school in his native town, where he received a good German education. He was also given a good business school training, and was employed in the office of his father until the removal of the family to Meriden. There young Richard was employed for a time in the finishing department of the Woollen mill, where he rose to be assistant foreman. For a short time he was employed in Philadelphia, and also at Holyoke, Mass. In 1878 he turned to the grocery trade, buying out the establishment of W. Balzer, which he conducted for seven years with somewhat indifferent success. In 1885 he bought the interest of George Stuck, who was engaged in a bakery business on East Main Street. There Mr. Mueller was located until 1890, when he built his present place, a large brick structure on East Main Street, which cost over $20,000. It is one of the finest bakeries in New England. Here Mr. Mueller has carried on his work to the present time and has built up a very extensive patronage. His supplies are bought in car load lots from the flour mills, and all his transactions are on a most extensive scale. He also has a confectionery business of considerable importance.

Mr. Mueller was married in 1878 to Tina Tartter, of Meriden, a native of Bavaria, Germany, where she was born, a daughter of Frederick Tartter. To this union have come four children: (1) Emily, who married George F. Winslow, a foreman of the International Silver Company, at Wallingford, where he has a very pleasant home; (2) Lucy, who died young; (3) Helen died young; and (4) William E., who is at home, and is engaged in the bakery business with his father.

Socially Mr. Mueller is a member of Alfred H. Hall Council, No. 1423, R. A., Meriden; of Meriden Lodge, No. 276, D. O. H.; of the local Turnverein and Saengerbund; and of the Cosmopolitan Club. He takes a lively interest in the welfare of the German-American School, and for ten years was its treasurer. In politics he is a Democrat. He and his family belong to St. Andrew's Episcopal Church.

Mr. Mueller has reason to felicitate himself upon his career. Starting poor, he has steadily worked himself up through his own pluck and energy to a very commendable place in the world. Men respect him for his integrity and business ability, and like him for his manly qualities and kindly disposition. Domestic in his habits, he sticks closely to his business, and gives to the world a most inspiring example of true worth and character.

WILLIAM C. MUELLER, brother of Richard W., is a lawyer, and a man of mark in Meriden. Born in Spremberg, Prussia, April 27, 1864, he came to this country with his parents when ten years old, and here he continued his education in the Corner and Prattsville District Schools of Meriden. From 1878 to 1884 he clerked for Howard Brothers, applying his leisure moments to the study of law at home. Fitting himself for entrance, he became a student in the Yale Law School in 1884, and was graduated from that institution in 1886. Immediately he became associated with W. F. Davis, forming the law firm of Davis & Mueller, which still exists. At the age of twenty-three, Mr. Mueller was elected collector of town taxes, defeating the occupant of the office for the ten years previous by the handsome majority of 534, and carrying the strong Republican ward in which the candidate resided by 60 votes. In 1888, and a third time in 1889, he was again elected to that office, which then became appointive. In 1890, 1891 and again in 1892, he was chosen by the board of selectmen to fill the position. In 1888, 1889, and in 1892 and 1893, he was city collector, over a million dollars passing through his hands without the slightest blunder or mistake. For eight years he was a ward committeeman in the Third ward, and he also served two years as chairman of the Democratic town and city committees, having full charge of the campaign of 1892. The following year he was appointed by Judge J. P. Platt, city attorney, a position which he had not sought, but which he has so admirably filled, that he is still retained therein, and his conservative and careful administration of the affairs of the office is recognized and highly commended. In 1900 Mr. Mueller was appointed water commissioner by Mayor West, and for two years has filled that position with dignity and marked ability. Mr. Mueller has built up a good private practice in his profession, and in the management of the cases which have been intrusted to him has been very successful. Socially he belongs to the various German societies, and he is also affiliated with several of the Masonic bodies of the city.

Mr. Mueller was married in June, 1895, to Miss Agnes Yost, a daughter of August Yost, a well-known citizen of Meriden.

FREDERICK S. WARD, one of the prominent business citizens of New Haven, and a member of a family distinguished in the Revolutionary war, successfully conducts a business in real estate and insurance in that city.

Frederick S. Ward

Mr. Ward was born in New Haven Jan. 14, 1851, son of Capt. Frederick S. Ward, and grandson of Jacob and Henrietta (Kimberly) Ward, natives of West Haven, Conn. His father, Frederick S. Ward, was born in West Haven in 1812, and died in New Haven in July, 1865, at the age of fifty-three years. By occupation he was a sea captain, and his father before him also followed the sea. At the time of his death Capt. Ward was engaged in the West India trade, and he had traveled almost all over the world, commanding vessels which went to California around the Horn, to South America, and to the Mediterranean, being part owner himself. He married Mary Elizabeth Stevens, a sister of the well-known Samuel A. Stevens, of whom more particular mention is made elsewhere. Her death occurred in 1882. Five children were born to Capt. Ward and his wife: Frederick S., subject of this sketch; Elliott, who lives in the city of New York; Harry K., employed in West Haven; Josephine, widow of Charles P. Whitney, living in West Haven; and Frederika, wife of Albert C. Coe, residing in West Haven. In politics Capt. Ward was staunchly Republican. Religiously he and his family were connected with the Congregational Church.

Frederick S. Ward spent his early boyhood in attendance at a private school in New Haven, later becoming a student in the Whiting street public school, the Webster school, the Washington street school, and the Dwight street school. At the age of thirteen years he was placed in the Winchester Institute, an excellent boarding school in Winchester, Conn., where he remained for two years. On the death of his father, in 1865, he accompanied his mother upon her removal to West Haven, and lived there until 1869. In 1867 he was employed by the Home Insurance Co., of New Haven, as office boy, and remained with that company for two years. In 1869 he entered the employ of the New Haven Steamboat Co., at Belle Dock, remaining one year on the wharf, and then about 1870 going aboard the steamer "Continental," as freight clerk. Until 1880, during this period, he continued in the same position on the steamers "Elm City," "C. H. Northam" and others. In the winter of 1880 Mr. Ward became associated with the Northampton Railroad Co., remaining for about a year, and in the spring of 1882 he went to work for the L. Candee Rubber Co. as an accountant, and remained with this company until 1894. For the succeeding two years our subject was associated with his uncle, W. W. Ward, in the ice business, and in June, 1896, he opened up his present line, in real estate and insurance.

On June 25, 1878, Mr. Ward was married to Miss Jennie L. Smith, of West Haven, who was a daughter of Cornelius and Emeline (Rich) Smith, also New Haven people, although Mrs. Ward's birth took place in Brooklyn, N. Y. One daughter, Harriette Smith, has been born to Mr.

and Mrs. Ward. The entire family belong to the Church of the Redeemer.

Politically Mr. Ward is an active Republican. He is identified officially with the Gounod Society, the leading vocal society of the city; with the Royal Arcanum, and with the Sons of the American Revolution, his mother's ancestry entitling him to membership in the latter society. Lieut. H. H. Ward, who was assigned to assist Judge Advocate Lemly in the Schley investigation proceedings, is a cousin of our subject.

MICHAEL HENRY O'BRIEN, the present superintendent of the town poor, superintendent of the town roads, and of the poor farm, is known as one of the most competent business men and public officials of the town of Meriden. He was born in the parish of Mageely, near Middleton, County Cork, Ireland, March 13, 1847, and belongs to an old Irish family which includes in its various generations many of the noted men of the last two hundred years and more.

Henry O'Brien, father of Michael H., was also born in Middleton. He was a tenant farmer, whose struggle for existence was a hard one, and he endured many privations in order to care for his family. Mary Walsh, his wife, was also a native of County Cork, where they were married, and her father, Maurice Walsh, was a native of South Cork. The family were conspicuous for their devotion to their country and faith. Many of Mrs. O'Brien's relatives have become prominent dignitaries in the Catholic Church, both in this country and in Ireland. To Mr. and Mrs. O'Brien were born three children: Fanny, who married John Lahey, of Meriden; Michael Henry; and Maurice, in the market known as the Meriden City Market. Henry O'Brien brought his family to the United States in 1865, and settled in Middletown, Conn., where he spent the remainder of his days in honorable retirement, after a long and industrious life, his sons giving him every attention. He was buried in St. Patrick's cemetery. He was honorable and upright in his business dealings and his personal and domestic character were beyond reproach. Both parents were devout members of the Roman Catholic Church. Mrs. O'Brien survived her husband some years, and was also buried in St. Patrick's cemetery.

Michael Henry O'Brien had limited opportunity for schooling, the exigencies of the domestic circumstances necessitating his early application to some money-producing occupation. From an early age he worked with his parents, and remained with them until he accompanied them to America. Here he was first employed in Stevens' factory, at Middletown, and also at Russell's factory, and for two and one-half years he was employed at the Douglass factory, where he learned the molder's trade. Later in life he came to Meriden, and was given work as a molder in the factory of Foster & Merriam. Here he soon, however, entered the butcher business, working for C. W. Cahill, later Coe & Cahill, remaining with that well-known firm for thirteen years. On the termination of his long engagement with them, in company with John Island, he began business for himself, under the firm name of Island & O'Brien. This firm had an existence of five years when it was dissolved by the retirement of the junior member, who took a position with Patton & Williams, meat dealers. Mr. O'Brien spent some years with them, and then began a fish business with Patrick Donavan, as O'Brien & Donavan, continuing thus for a year and a half, when he entered the employ of Pitkin & Preston. In January, 1888, Mr. O'Brien received the appointment of superintendent of the poor asylum and farm, and also the position of superintendent of town roads and bridges. For fourteen years he has faithfully discharged the duties of these important positions, to the very general satisfaction of the public. Mr. O'Brien was a strong advocate of the new poor house, which is now complete, and is regarded as one of the very finest buildings of the kind to be found in the State. Our subject is a quiet and unassuming gentleman, and is very popular with all classes. He is a Democrat, and takes an active interest in political affairs.

Mr. O'Brien was married in Middletown, Jan. 26, 1872, to Ellen Dorgan, who was born in County Cork, Ireland, daughter of Michael and Mary Dorgan, both of whom settled in Middletown many years ago. They were members of the Roman Catholic Church. Mrs. O'Brien is matron of the town poor, and bears the reputation of being one of the most efficient and kind-hearted ladies ever appointed in the State to fill that position. Mr. and Mrs. O'Brien have had ten children, five of whom are still living, namely: (1) Mary A. was educated at St. Rose's Convent School, Meriden, and at the Meriden high school, from which she was graduated, and has taught in the King street school for nine years. (2) Fanny, educated at St. Rose's Convent School, Meriden, is assistant matron at the almshouse. (3) Michael, (4) Josephine, (5) Maurice (6) Nettie and (7) Lillie, died young. (8) Catharine, (9) William Henry and (10) Arthur Benedict are at school. The family, formerly connected with St. Rose's Catholic Church, are now identified with St. Joseph's, and they are counted among the best families in the city associated therewith. Mrs. O'Brien and her two eldest daughters are members of the Catholic Club, to which Mr. O'Brien also belongs, and he holds membership besides in the A. O. U. W., at Meriden and in Boston, the Independent Order of Foresters, the Knights of Columbus, and the Amaranth Club. He is a member of the First Building Association in Meriden.

IRVING LUCIUS HOLT. The meaning of the name Holt is given as a grove or small forest. Nicholas Holt, the emigrant ancestor of Irving L., was born about 1602, in England, and was a passenger on the ship "James," of London, which sailed from the port of Southampton in April, 1635, and arrived in Boston the following June. The same year he located at Newbury, Mass., of which place he was one of the first settlers, and in 1644 he became one of the first settlers of Andover, Mass., where he died in 1665.

Nicholas Holt, son of Nicholas, was born in 1647, in Andover, where in 1679 he married Mary Russell. He died in Andover in 1715.

Abiel Holt, son of Nicholas, was born in 1698, and married (first) Hannah, daughter of William and Elizabeth (Geary) Abbott. In 1718 he removed from Andover to Windham, Conn., where they were among the early members of the Church, and there he died in 1772.

Caleb Holt, son of Abiel, born in Windham, March 6, 1729, married (first) Mary Merrick, and (second) Chloe Hatch. He was one of the early settlers of the town of Willington, Conn., and was a delegate to the State convention called to ratify the Constitution of the United States.

Caleb Holt, son of Caleb, was born in Willington, in 1759, and died Sept. 8, 1826, aged sixty-seven years. By his marriage with Sarah Goodale he was the father of five children: Horace, Ryal, Joshua, Ralph and Julianna. Caleb was a wealthy farmer, and gave each of his sons a farm.

Ryal Holt, second son of Caleb and Sarah, was born Dec. 2, 1780, in Willington, where he spent the greater part of his life, and died there in 1864. He married Lovina Lamb, a native of Vermont, whose father served in the war of the Revolution, from the age of sixteen, as a waiter boy for Gen. Washington, continuing thus until the end of the war. Ryal and Lovina Holt had seven sons and five daughters, nine of whom spent their days in Connecticut, and six of them lived to exceed three-score and ten. All inherited robust constitutions, and large physiques, were genial, handsome and of ready wit, though practical and business-like. All were reared in the faith of the Baptist Church, although in later years many drifted into other denominations.

Austin Holt, eldest son of Ryal, was born in East Windsor, Conn., Aug. 4, 1810, and died in Willimantic April 13, 1884. By his marriage with Almira Dimmock he had four children: Henry, born in Rockville in 1830, died in Willimantic April 26, 1873; Parmelia Louise was born in Manchester, Conn., in 1845; Julia Alice, born in Manchester in 1848, in 1875 married Arthur Carpenter, of Willimantic, who died April 12, 1898; and George was born Jan. 16, 1850. Austin Holt was a manufacturer, living in Rockville, Manchester and Willimantic.

Mary L. Holt, eldest daughter of Ryal, was born in Willington, Conn., March 9, 1812, and died in North Haven, Conn., Aug. 25, 1876. On Oct. 25, 1842, she married Nathan W. Brown, of Willington, and for many years they resided in North Haven, where Mr. Brown was station agent.

J. L. Foet.

Their only daughter, Mary J., was born April 18, 1844, married Francis S. Smith, of New Haven, and had three children—Laura Minerva, born July 27, 1871, who died July 15, 1872; Sherman Woodward, born Nov. 25, 1873, who died July 11, 1874; and Frances Sherman, born Dec. 8, 1874.

Otis Holt, second son of Ryal, was born in Willington, Dec. 13, 1813, and died in Rockville, May 10, 1857. He married Clarissa Allen, of Vernon, Conn., and they had three children: Rhoda, born Aug. 9, 1840, married Origin Dodge, May 12, 1866, and died at Mansfield, Conn., April 7, 1872. Roland, born July 10, 1846, died June 17, 1873; he served in the Civil war. Horace Winslow, born June 20, 1853, married Nov. 20, 1883, Ellen Slattery, of Northampton, Mass., and their only child, Hazel May, was born in Rockville, Dec. 24, 1884. He is a gardener by occupation.

Almira Holt, second daughter of Ryal, was born Aug. 5, 1815, at Willington, Conn., married Harvey Lyman, of Andover in 1841, and died in Andover April 14, 1889. They had four children: Julia and Llewellyn died in childhood. Julius Austin was born Aug. 14, 1849, married Edna Curtis in 1881, and their only child died infancy. Clark Lyman was born June 6, 1855.

Clark Holt, third son of Ryal, was born in Willington Oct. 6, 1817, and in 1841 married Mary A. Winchell, daughter of Chauncy and Mary Vibert Winchell, of Rockville. Their only son, Grenville, died in infancy. Clark Holt died in Manchester July 22, 1888.

Sarah G. Holt, third daughter of Ryal, was born Nov. 6, 1819, at Willington, and died at Mansfield, Oct. 6, 1890. She married Abel Johnson, of Willington, and they had five children: (1) Legrand, born in 1844, married Louisa Manning, of Willington, April 5, 1866. (2) Elisha, born Aug. 25, 1845, died July 13, 1863; he served in the Civil war as a member of Company D, 14th Conn. V. I. (3) Frederick E., born June 5, 1847, married Bessie Fisk Sept. 10, 1874, and on June 10, 1885, for his second wife, wedded Emma Jacques, of Brooklyn, N. Y.; he is a physician at Mansfield Depot. (4) Grace, only daughter of Abel and Sarah G. (Holt) Johnson, was born in Willington, Aug. 1, 1852, and in 1876 married R. Rogers Frisbie, of New Haven, who died in 1882; their only son, William, was born Sept. 11, 1877. For her second husband she married George A. Huntington, of Mansfield, on Sept. 11, 1889; their home is in Sharon, Mass. (5) Truman was born in Willington in 1854 and married Jennie A. Bixby, who was born in Burmah, India, in 1855, a daughter of Rev. Moses Bixby, of Providence, R. I. Truman Johnson is a missionary to Burmah.

Amirett Holt, fourth daughter of Ryal, was born Oct. 21, 1821, at Willington, and on Nov. 20, 1840, married Otis Freeman, of Mansfield, where they first resided, later moving to Hartford, and still later to Southern Illinois. They had four children: Eugenia, born in 1841, who died April 2, 1872, was a teacher of mathematics in the Chicago schools. Mary J., born in 1844, died Jan. 15, 1853. Fred, born in 1846, died the same year. Edwin, born in 1851, in 1882 married Isabella Hooker, of Murphysborough, Illinois.

Elijah Holt, fourth son of Ryal, was born in Willington Nov. 6, 1823, and died in Rockville March 17, 1866, aged seventy-two years. His first wife was Nancy E. Harwood, daughter of Ebenezer and Minerva (Dimmock) Harwood, of Crystal Lake, Conn., and they had two sons, Grenville E. and Irving Lucius. The former was born in Manchester March 6, 1847, married Isabella Jackson, of Shelton, Conn., and has two sons, Irving Lines and Clifton Jackson. Grenville E. Holt is superintendent of the Seth Thomas clock factory, at Thomaston.

Caleb Holt, fifth son of Ryal, was born in Willington in 1826, was a merchant, and died in Providence, R. I. He married Elizabeth Coggsball, and had two sons, Warren H. and Frederick.

Ryal Gilbert Holt, seventh son of Ryal, was born in Willington in 1830, and died at Rockville July 15, 1891. In 1852 he married Eliza Matson, of Windsorville, Conn., where he was engaged in manufacturing, and they had two sons, Frank L. and Charles H.

Ann Eliza Holt, youngest daughter of Ryal was born in South Coventry, Conn., Oct. 31, 1832. In 1856 she married Chauncy Hibbard, of Rockville, who died in 1856. In 1862 she married George P. Lines, who died June 10, 1874.

Ryal and Lovina (Lamb) Holt had twelve children, thirty-one grandchildren, eighteen great-grandchildren, and two great-great-grandchildren.

Irving Lucius Holt, second son of Elijah and Nancy L. Harwood Holt, was born in Somers, Conn., Sept. 5, 1851. A ripe student, and a thorough man of business, Mr. Holt well represents the honorable family from which he springs. During his early years he worked a short period in the Glasgow thread mill, but spent the greater part of his time in school, going from Williston Seminary, in East Hampton, Mass., to Meriden, while still a youth, to teach his first school at South Manchester. His parents had removed to Meriden, and he returned there, and was engaged as a teacher in the State Reform School, remaining in charge for two and one-half years. His aim was to save enough to enable him to take a course in the Sheffield Scientific School, of Yale, and in this he was successful, completing his course with honor.

Upon his return to Meriden, Mr. Holt was called to the Prattsville school, as principal, and there he taught until, a year later, he entered the office of the Meriden Fire Insurance Co., as assistant secretary. He spent nineteen busy years in that employ, and when the company went out of business associated himself with F. A. Stevens in the formation of the firm of Holt & Stevens, general insurance agents, who represent the following named insurance companies: Agricultural Co., of Watertown, N. Y.; American Co., of Newark, N. J.; American Co., of Boston, Mass.; American Co., of New York; British-American Assurance Co., of Toronto; Capital Co., of Concord, N. H.; Continental Co., of N. Y.; Fire Association, of Philadelphia; Firemen's Co., of Newark, N. J.; Firemen's Fund Co., of San Francisco, Cal.; Franklin Co., of Philadelphia; German-American Co., of New York; Girard Co., of Philadelphia; Granite State Co., of Portsmouth, N. H.; Greenwich Co., of New York; Hamburg-Bremen Co., of Germany; Holyoke Mutual Co., of Salem, Mass.; London and Lancashire Co., England; Liverpool & London & Globe Co., of England; Magdeburg Fire Co., of Germany; Manchester Assurance Co., of England; Merchants' Co., of Newark, N. J.; New London County Mutual, of Norwich, Conn.; New York Underwriters' Agency, of New York; Niagara Co., of New York; Northern Assurance Co., of England; North British & Mercantile Co., of England; Norwalk Co., of Norwalk, Conn.; Phoenix Co., of Brooklyn, N. Y.; Royal Co., of Liverpool, England; Security Co., of New Haven, Conn.; Springfield F. & M. Co., of Springfield, Mass.; Western Assurance Co., of Toronto, Canada; Westchester Co., of New York; and Fire Co., county of Philadelphia. The firm also represents the Northwest Life Co., of Milwaukee; the Anna Life and Accident Cos., of Hartford, Conn.; the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., of Baltimore; and the New York Plate Glass Co., of New York.

In political life Mr. Holt is a staunch Republican, and from 1888 to 1892 was chairman of the Republican town committee; was registrar of voters for one year; and in 1893 was elected tax collector for the town of Meriden, and for the past eight years has been re-elected. During this time he has collected over one million dollars for the town. In religious views his ambition has always been to live up to the Golden Rule, and he has won the respect and esteem of his fellow citizens. Fraternally he is connected with Meridian Lodge, No. 77, A. F. & A. M., and St. Elmo Commandery, No. 9, K. T.

On Aug. 11, 1875, Mr. Holt was married in Meriden to Ella M. Rice, a lady of the highest culture and refinement. Two children have come to this union: Harry H., born May 28, 1876, a graduate of the Meriden high school, who is now with his father in the insurance business; and Ralph G., who died in infancy.

The Rice Family, of which Mrs. Irving L. Holt, of Meriden, is a descendant, is one of the oldest in Connecticut. The original spelling of the name was Royce, and the founder of the family in America was Robert Royce, who came from England and was in Stratford in 1644.

Samuel Royce (as the name was then written), the progenitor of the family in New Haven county, was a son of Robert Royce, who died in New London in 1676. Robert Royce was made a freeman in 1634, in Boston. Before 1650 and until 1657 he is known to have been in Stratford, Conn. He removed to New London, where in 1660 he was constable—a very important position at that time. None of his sons remained in New London. His son Samuel settled with his sons in Wallingford, and they were among the first families of what is known as the New Colony.

Samuel Royce settled in Wallingford in 1672, married Sarah Baldwin, and later Hannah Benedict, who died Jan. 12, 1761, at the age of ninety years. His death took place in Meriden, May 14, 1757. He was made a deacon of the church in Meriden when it was organized, Dec. 14, 1729. His children were: Abigail, who married Joseph Cole; Prudence, born in 1680; Deborah, who married Thomas Mix; Isaac, born in 1688; Ebenezer, born in 1690; Nathaniel, born in 1692; John, born in 1694; Mary, born in 1695; Jacob, born in 1697, who married Thankful, daughter of Moses Beach; Hannah, born in 1699, who married John Ives; Ezekiel, who married Anna Merwin; Samuel, who married Martha Moss, and settled in Cheshire; Abel, born in 1700; Benjamin, born May 23, 1705, who married Mindwell Rice; Melitabile; and Ebenezer, who died Oct. 18, 1752, in Meriden.

Benjamin Rice, son of Deacon Samuel, was born in Wallingford, was a clerk in the mines, and spent his life in that locality, dying in January, 1758. To his marriage with Mindwell Royce or Rice, a relative, came two children, Benjamin and Solomon. She was born Oct. 12, 1703, and died May 13, 1776.

Benjamin Rice, son of Benjamin, was born April 1, 1730, and married, April 15, 1755, Phebe Halsey, of Long Island, who died June 13, 1776. He passed away in February, 1777. Their children were: Phebe; Benjamin; Halsey; Isaac; Halsey (2); Elizabeth, who married Nathaniel Stevens, of Norfolk; Silas; and Levi. Benjamin was a private at the Lexington Alarm, under Capt. John Couch.

Silas Rice, the grandfather of Mrs. Holt, was born Oct. 19, 1770, and was a farmer all his life. In 1796 he bought the farm now owned by William Benjamin, son of Benjamin Rice, in Meriden, and there he died, in 1852, and was buried in the East cemetery. Silas Rice was a deacon in the Center Congregational Church of Meriden and a member of the Washington Benevolent Society. His political views made him a staunch Whig. His first marriage, on Aug. 4, 1796, was to Ruth Curtis, a sister of Alfred Curtis, of Meriden, and the children of this union were: Almira, born May 24, 1797, married Avery Hough; Phebe, born Feb. 23, 1799, died Aug. 13, 1799. The mother died March 30, 1801. The second marriage was March 18, 1802, in Meriden, to Rebecca Hubbard, who was born Nov. 25, 1783, a daughter of Isaac and Jane Hubbard, and died in February, 1855. Thirteen children came to this marriage, viz.: (1) Ruth Curtis, born Oct. 14, 1803, married Lyman Hough. (2) Jane, born July 1, 1805, died Feb. 13, 1824. (3) Silas, born June 29, 1807, died the same day. (4) Mary, born March 9, 1809, married Joel Hough, of Wallingford. (5) Silas Hubbard, born April 5, 1811, married Fanny Brooks, of Chatham, and they had three children—Levi Woodley (born July 2, 1837), Mary Ameret (Sept. 23, 1841), and John W. (March 8, 1844). (6) Phebe Rebecca, born Sept. 9, 1812, died July 30, 1814. (7) Henry, born Nov. 20, 1814, married Emily Lane. (8) Joseph, born March 29, 1817, died March 30, 1817. (9) Benjamin Halsey, born June 20, 1818, married Mary Ann Bradley, and for his second wife, Mrs. Abigail Cecelia (Harvey) Smith, who was born in Durham, a daughter of Asahel Harvey; she is living with her family on the farm, where Mr. Halsey's death occurred June 25, 1898. (10) Emily Rebecca, born Sept. 16, 1820, married Samuel A. Tuttle, of Cheshire. (11) Hinsdale Silliman, the father of Mrs. Holt, is mentioned below. (12) Elizabeth Jane, born Aug. 31, 1825, died April 13, 1842. (13) Samuel Atwater, born Jan. 26, 1828, married Mary L. Wetherell, of Canaan, Connecticut.

Hinsdale Silliman Rice was born April 11, 1823, and first married Nancy Munson, of Southington, who died in February, 1855, the mother of two children: Ella Maria, Mrs. Holt, born Oct. 31, 1851; and Emma Jane, who died Nov. 1, 1854. For his second wife Mr. Rice married Sarah Gaylord, now a resident of Meriden, and an aunt of Dr. Gaylord, of Branford. There were no children by this union. Hinsdale S. Rice died Oct. 26, 1887.

SUMNER C. REILLY, the efficient superintendent of the M. Seward & Sons Co., of New Haven, for many years has been a skilled machinist, and has held various positions of responsibility. His birth occurred in Deansville, Oneida Co., New York.

John S. and Harriet (Green) Reilly, the parents of Sumner C., were natives of Rhode Island, and the former died while his children were still small. The latter was a daughter of Nathan Green, a direct descendant of Gen. Green, of Revolutionary fame, who also came to Oneida county from Rhode Island and engaged in stove making, later in farming. Mrs. Reilly survived until 1901. Her nine children were: John S.; Sumner C.; Nathan; Thomas; Frank; Edward; Kate, who married Frank Huntley, and lives in Binghamton, New York; Alpha, who married Henry Shiermerhorn, and lives in Carthage, N. Y.; and Nellie, who married Judge Joseph Logan, of Cleveland, Ohio.

Sumner C. Reilly was reared in Clayville, N. Y., and while still a youth became interested in machinery, all of his brothers also becoming machinists. His trade was learned in the works of S. A. Melard, manufacturer of edge tools, etc., and he remained with that house six years, becoming thoroughly instructed in every branch and detail of the business. Then he went to Ilion, N. Y., and there took a contract in the Remington gun shop, where he remained several years, going from there to Binghamton, where he became superintendent of the Bowles Tool Co. In this responsible position he continued for ten years, and from that great establishment went to Terre Haute, Ind., and built there the works for the Terre Haute Shovel & Tool Co., remaining as superintendent for three years. In 1891 he came to New Haven and took his present responsible position.

Mr. Reilly was married on May 7, 1878, to Miss Celia Cochran, who was born in Chadwick Mills, N. Y., daughter of Robert Cochran, a manufacturer of cotton goods, formerly a resident of England. One child was born to Mr. and Mrs. Reilly, Edith Lila.

In politics Mr. Reilly upholds the principles of the Republican party, and socially he is a member of Ottensino Lodge, A. F. & A. M., of Binghamton, N. Y., belonging also to the Chapter and Consistory. As an energetic and successful man of business and an honorable and upright citizen, Mr. Reilly enjoys the esteem of all with whom he comes in contact, both in public and in private life.

ROBERT LUTZ takes a leading position among the prominent and substantial business men of New Haven, being justly regarded as one of the city's representative dealers in meats, groceries and provisions. His location at Howard avenue and First street is one of the finest in the southern part of the city, while the equipment of his store is second to none in New Haven.

Robert Lutz is a native of the city, born June 13, 1860, son of George Lutz, who was a native of Germany. The latter came to New Haven when he was a young man, and followed the trade of springmaker. His wife was also of German birth, and they reared four children, all of whom were born and still reside in New Haven, namely: George, who is a grocer in the city; Minnie, who married George Macheleidt; Fred, who is a merchant in New Haven; and Robert, the subject of this sketch. The mother died in New Haven in 1889. The father was a Democrat in political attachment, and served as a member of the city council. He died June 12, 1900. Both parents belonged to the German Lutheran Church.

Robert Lutz had little financial assistance when he started out in his business career, but he had been afforded excellent educational advantages. After completing the course in the Webster school he attended Yale Business College, and then took a clerical position with Glason Hall, in the meat business. Mr. Lutz remained with Mr. Hall for eleven years, at the end of this period embarking intelligently in the business for himself, opening up a store on Crown street, between Church and Temple streets. After occupying that location for eleven years he came to his present site, on the corner of First street and Howard avenue, and in 1896 built his brick block at that location, which continues to be one of the most ornamental structures in that part of the city, reflecting credit upon owner and architect. In his business affairs Mr. Lutz has been unusually successful, and he has the satisfaction of realizing that his prosperity has come through his own efforts. He is noted for his honesty and uprightness, dealing justly by everyone. He is well-known in New Haven, and has as large a circle of personal friends as business ones, all of whom regard him with feelings of high esteem.

On Jan. 28, 1886, Mr. Lutz was married to Miss Irene Smith, who was born in Wilton, Conn., daughter of William Smith, who died when she was a child. No children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Lutz.

In politics Mr. Lutz formerly voted with the Democratic party, but is now independent. Fraternally he is connected with Rock Lodge, No. 92, F. & A. M., and Germania Lodge, No. 78, I. O. O. F.

Mr. Lutz indulges his love of fine horses, and in his stables are usually some excellent animals.

JARED ATWATER (deceased) was one of the honored and highly esteemed citizens of Hamden, New Haven Co., Conn., and was prominently identified with its agricultural interests. He was a native of that town, born near Mt. Carmel in 1779, a son of Samuel Atwater, and grandson of Samuel Atwater, Sr., both natives of Hamden. Throughout life our subject followed the occupation of farming with marked success, and made his home in Hamden.

On Oct. 28, 1807, Mr. Atwater married Lucy Hall, of Wallingford, Conn., daughter of Hezekiah Hall, and to them were born seven children, namely: Harriet, born Aug. 18, 1808, died March 18, 1883; Laura, born Dec. 5, 1810, married Edmund Bradford, and died in February, 1890; Ruth D., born April 11, 1812, married Leverett Hotchkiss, and died in July, 1835; Jared, born Oct. 2, 1814, died July 16, 1866; Elizabeth, born Sept. 23, 1816, died when four weeks old; Mary, born July 7, 1810, died April 24, 1838; and Betsey, born Aug. 22, 1821, is mentioned below. Mr. Atwater died Oct. 13, 1850, at the age of seventy-one years, his wife Aug. 30, 1870, at the age of eighty-eight. Both were earnest and consistent members of the Congregational Church, and were held in high regard by all who knew them. In all the relations of life Mr. Atwater was found true to every trust reposed in him, and his life was such as to command the confidence of all with whom he came in contact.

On Jan. 11, 1840, Miss Betsey Atwater was united in marriage with Charles G. Atwater, who died April 4, 1874. Soon after their marriage they located upon the farm in Hamden where she now resides, and where he was successfully engaged in the occupation of farming throughout the remainder of his life. He also operated a stone quarry, and in all his undertakings prospered. He was an industrious, energetic and progressive man, was of a kindly, generous disposition, and was an active member of what was then Chapel Street Congregational Church of New Haven. He died at the age of fifty-two years, honored and respected by all who knew him. Mrs. Atwater was again married, in 1881, her second union being with Samuel A. Baldwin, a native of New York State and a carpenter by trade, who died in November, 1893. For many years Mrs. Baldwin has been a devout member of the Congregational Church, and is a most estimable lady, who has a large circle of friends and acquaintances who appreciate her sterling worth.

DOOLITTLE. The branch of this family now at Meriden, of which Hon. Edgar J. Doolittle, for nearly forty years a leading citizen and prominent business man and manufacturer of that city, is now the head, and whose father, Rev. Edgar J. Doolittle, identified through a long and useful life with the religious and social life of this community, was a most striking character, has descended from an ancestry older in this locality than the city and county of New Haven.

Abraham Doolittle, understood to be the emigrant ancestor of all the Doolittles in this part of the world, came from England about the year 1640. In 1641 he took the oath of fidelity to the Colony and acted as an executive officer at New Haven, and had to do with the first organization of the town of Wallingford. In that region the Doolittle name for several generations was not an uncommon one.

The late Rev. Edgar J. Doolittle, before mentioned, was a descendant of Abraham Doolittle, and was born Oct. 19, 1810, in New Haven, son of Jared and Anna (Jones) Doolittle. Liberally educated, he was a graduate of Yale, in the class of 1830, and became a clergyman of the Congregational Church, where his scholarly abilities, his rare spiritual fervor and devotion, and his transparent character, gave him large influence over the lives and hearts of the faithful of that communion, entitling him also to a leading position in the community where he dwelt. From May 18, 1842, to Dec. 14, 1852, he was the settled pastor of the First Church in Hebron. From Hebron he was installed over the church in Chester, where as stated supply and settled pastor he served thirteen years. The closing years of his life were passed at Wallingford, where his kindly disposition, old-fashioned courtesy and high character commanded the respect and love of a large circle of friends and acquaintances.

Mr. Doolittle was married in 1842 to Jane E. Sage, a daughter of Isaac and Harriet (Sage) Sage,

Chas. G. Atwater

Betsy Abigail Pickens

of Middletown. The Sage family is an old one in New England, and descends from David Sage, who was born in Wales in 1639, and came to Middletown in 1652. He was twice married, and became the father of eight children. Many of his descendants in the intervening generations occupied prominent positions in the community, and were people of marked ability. Capt. William Sage was a soldier in the Revolutionary army, and fought in the battle of Bunker Hill. To this family belongs Russell Sage, the noted financier of New York City. To Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Doolittle were born the following family: (1) Edgar Sage, born July 11, 1843, died May 10, 1844; (2) Edgar J., Jr., was born Jan. 29, 1845; (3) Isaac Sage, born Jan. 26, 1847, died when a young man; (4) Henry Nathaniel was born Jan. 11, 1849; (5) Annis Merrill, born March 12, 1851, died Nov. 23, 1872; (6) Harriet Anna, born April 1, 1856, died May 8, 1857; (7) Jane Elizabeth was born Dec. 1, 1859; (8) Orrin Sage was born Dec. 29, 1863.

EDGAR J. DOOLITTLE, of Meriden, was born in the town of Hebron, Conn., and received a good education in the common schools and in the Guilford Institute, then in charge of Prof. Eli Mack, from which he was graduated in 1861. Mr. Doolittle began his business career, in which he has risen to eminence in the commercial world, as a manufacturer of boxes. Meriden is known the world over for the excellence of its manufactured goods, and the output of Mr. Doolittle's establishment is of the very highest grade. The Doolittle box factory is finely located on Camp Street, and has a railroad frontage of three hundred feet. It has the latest machinery, and its capacity is equal to any demand that may be made upon it. The best of workmen are employed, and every variety of paper boxes produced, from the cheapest patterns, to hold the roughest goods, to the finest boxes, lined with silk, satin and plush, and used in the packing of silver and bronze art goods. Large quantities of gold, silver and embossed paper are used, and the range of selection is so wide that universal satisfaction is given the trading public. Mr. Doolittle is one of the most prominent business men of the city, and holds many notable and responsible positions, including those of director and vice-president of the Home National Bank, director of the Meriden Gas Light Co., secretary of the Meriden Hospital, and trustee in the Meriden Savings Bank. He is largely interested in many of the local industries. Mr. Doolittle is a man universally trusted and admired, and has many times received honors political and social at the hands of his fellow townsmen, and in the several positions to which he has been called he has proven himself—by his fidelity, ability and public spirit—richly worthy of the honor. Five times chosen mayor of Meriden, he was unanimously nominated for a sixth term, but declined to accept it. His fifth term as mayor closed Jan. 3, 1887, in which year he was elected to the State Senate, where he served with distinction and ability. Mr. Doolittle is a prominent Mason, a Knight Templar, and has risen to the thirty-second degree, being a Mystic Shriner.

The paternal grandfather of Mr. Doolittle having been a soldier in the Revolution, that gentleman has taken advantage of his right and belongs to the Sons of the American Revolution. This privilege also comes to him from his maternal grandfather, Capt. Sage, who is noted above as taking part in the battle of Bunker Hill.

Mr. Doolittle was married, Nov. 13, 1867, to Martha W., daughter of George and Mary (Warner) Couch, of Meriden, and they have one daughter, Dorothy.

CONRAD WEISS, one of the progressive, enterprising and successful business men of New Haven, who, since 1899, has been the popular and useful alderman of the Sixth ward, is of German birth and ancestry.

The birth of Mr. Weiss occurred in Bavaria, Germany, in the town of Nuremberg, March 21, 1864. His parents were George and Mary (Kopmann) Weiss, neither of whom ever came to America; the former was a merchant in the historic old city of his birth. The five children born to George Weiss and wife were: Conrad, John, Frederick, William and Francis, of whom, John is a baker in Bavaria; two of the sons are with their father in his business; and two others are serving in the German army, Conrad being the only one who has established himself in the United States.

Until he was seventeen years old, Conrad Weiss remained with his father as a clerk in the store, but he was an ambitious youth and longed for wider opportunities, this resulting in his arrival in America in 1882. His first location was at Milltown, N. J., where he found work in a rubber factory for some two years, and then remained for the following two years in a town in Long Island, engaged in the same kind of work, coming to New Haven in 1886. Here he entered the Candee Rubber factory, remaining two years, and then for the following three years clerked for Otto Dietter.

This was all a preparation for a business career for himself, and on Jan. 1, 1891, he opened up a stock of groceries and meats, at No. 485 Chapel street, where ever since he has done a flourishing business, the excellence of his goods securing the best trade in the city in his vicinity.

On June 26, 1891, Mr. Weiss was married to Miss Anna Kapitzke, who was born in New Haven, a daughter of August Kapitzke, a native of Berlin, Germany, and two children have been born of this union: George M. and Florence M. They reside in their home at No. 501 Chapel Street.

As a Democratic politician, Mr. Weiss has been very active, and in 1899 was elected alderman of the Sixth ward, which he is faithfully serving. One of his measures which he has strongly advocated in the city council is the wharfage law, by which the city shall own all city wharfage rights, and which has the support of the business men, irrespective of party. Fraternally, Mr. Weiss is a member of Humboldt Lodge, No. 91, I. O. O. F.; Aurora Encampment; and is also a member of the Retail Butchers and Grocers Association; the United Order of Good Fellows; and with insurance companies, he has policies in New York Life, Washington, Berkshire, and the Mutual of New Jersey. The religious connection of the family is with the German Lutheran Church. As an honest, progressive and industrious citizen, Mr. Weiss has a clean record, and in public affairs he is looked upon as one of the rising men of the city.

REV. JAMES O'REILLY SHERIDEN is pastor of St. Francis Catholic Church, in Naugatuck, and one of the most esteemed citizens of that town.

Father Sheridan was born in County Longford, Ireland, Feb. 10, 1855. His father and grandfather, both of whom were christened Thomas, were farmers in the same county. His grandmother's maiden name was Margaret Martin, and she and her husband had five children, of whom Thomas, the father of Father Sheridan, was the youngest. The others in order of birth were named John, James, Philip and Margaret. Thomas only remained in the old home and followed in the steps of his father and grandfather, cultivating the farm on which he first saw the light of day. James and Philip crossed the ocean and settled in Philadelphia, in which city they engaged in business, and where they both died. Margaret also came to America, but not until after the death of her husband, John O'Farrell. Of her children, one, Rev. John O'Farrell, died in Hartford, thirty-five years ago; another, Thomas, became a physician, and died some years ago at New Britain; and Alice, one of her daughters, became a Sister of Charity.

Thomas Sheridan, Jr., added to his agricultural pursuits the business of linen and grain merchant. He came to this country while a young man, but after a short time returned to his native country, where he remained until his death, in 1890. He married Catherine O'Reilly, who, like himself, was born in County Longford, as were her parents, Thomas and Catherine (Sheriden) O'Reilly. Mrs. Sheridan came of a distinguished family, whose seigns have attained prominence in both the old and the new world, in orders, at the Bar, and as physicians, as well as in commercial life. She was the youngest of a family of three daughters and six sons, all of whom are deceased: Catherine, Alice, Margaret, Bernard, William, Thomas, James, Michael and John. Of the sons, two received a vocation to the priesthood, Bernard and William. The first named became the second bishop of the Diocese of Hartford, while William, who died at Newport, R. I., was his vicar general. Thomas was a celebrated physician in Ireland, and James and Michael were farmers and merchants in the old country. John emigrated to the United States and settled in Texas, where he died after accumulating a large fortune through judicious investments in real estate. Mrs. Sheridan died in 1857, the mother of a large family, nine of whom reached mature years: Annie, Thomas, Bernard, Catherine, Margaret, John, William, James O'Reilly and Francis. In this generation three sons received holy orders: Bernard, permanent rector of St. John's Catholic Church, at Middletown; William, who, after filling a pastorate at several points in Connecticut, died in 1892; and the reverend gentleman whose devoted, useful life forms the subject of this brief biographical sketch. The careers of the other children may be briefly outlined. Annie, the widow of Dennis Gray, lives in Ireland. Thomas studied medicine, and died while engaged in the practice of his profession, in Texas. Catherine, the widow of Patrick Mulligan, resides at Aughnaccliff, where she is postmistress and general storekeeper. Margaret died at home, shortly after being married. John is a farmer on the old homestead. Francis lives with his sister, Mrs. Mulligan, whose business he assists in conducting.

Father Sheridan himself is in the prime of life. It is but little more than five years since he began his pastorate in Naugatuck, yet under the divine blessing he has been able already to accomplish a great work. He came to America in boyhood, and received his academic education at the College of the Holy Cross, graduating therefrom in 1875. A course of three years study at the Grand Seminary at Montreal followed, and in 1878 he was ordained a priest. His first assignment was to the assistant pastorate of the Church of the Immaculate Conception, at Waterbury, where he remained six years. In June, 1884, he was placed in charge of the parish at Windsor Locks. There he displayed a power of mental concentration, a capacity to plan and an ability to execute. During the twelve years of his rectorate there he put new life in the flock committed to his care. The sacred edifice was improved by the installation of a steam-heating plant, the substitution of new stone steps for the old wooden ones, and the remodeling of the interior. The parochial residence, too, was put in repair, new curbing, coping and concrete laid down and every obligation incurred therefor discharged in full. He also purchased a site for a school and convent, and erected a substantial school house, which he cleared of debt in three years. He also erected the Church of the Sacred Heart in Suffield, which was ready for dedication on Thanksgiving Day, 1886, and St. Joseph's Church, in Poquonock, which was dedicated Jan. 30, 1887. To erect churches and school houses on credit is comparatively easy, when the builder can command sufficient confidence. Such was not, however, Father Sheridan's policy. Within five years of the erection of the church at Suffield the eleven acres of land occupied, costing $12,000, were paid for in full.

In was on Jan. 9, 1896, that Father Sheriden became pastor at Naugatuck. Within that comparatively short period he has not only endeared himself to his parishioners, but by his prudent and blameless life has acquired and held the sincere, undisguised respect of the entire town, Protestant and Catholic alike. The church building suffered severe damage during a flood within a month after his arrival, but he grappled with the situation without hesitation and without apprehension, feeling confident of the support of a higher power than his own. A new system of drainage with sewers was established, a lawn laid out, a granite wall erected, a handsome concrete walk laid, and the basement remodeled and refurnished. The cost was $10,000. An electric lighting apparatus was put in and various parishioners contributed liberally for the adornment of the House of God, among the ornaments being costly chandeliers and handsome statues. Father Sheriden has also greatly improved the cemetery, building a house and barn thereon, sinking an artesian well and cutting away the underbrush. His predecessor in the pastorate, Father Lenehan, had purchased a building for a convent, and here, in February, 1897, Father Sheriden installed four Sisters of Mercy, who there conducted a select day academy for three years. He has now (1901) completed, at a cost of $60,000, a splendid parochial school, being thoroughly in accord in the matter of early training with that eminent educator, Rev. Francis L. Patton, D. D., president of Princeton University, who holds that "whether or no education be regarded as an end or means to an end, it is incomplete and unsatisfactory unless it has a religious side." This new school building Father Sheriden is justly proud of, and he has reason to be, for it is without question the handsomest and best equipped school in the State. It contains twelve handsome school rooms, has a large and handsome hall, and four fine rooms, for societies of the parish to meet in. It is indeed a model school building, and is justly looked upon as the pride of the borough of Naugatuck.

As a man Father Sheriden is scholarly, genial and courteous; as a citizen, loyal and public-spirited; as a priest, self-sacrificing and devoted, charitable toward human imperfections, yet always ready to point the way toward a higher, truer and nobler life.

JOHN C. MILROY, son and successor of the late Samuel Milroy, was born in Meriden Aug. 20, 1850. He attended the district school of his native town, and at an early age began work for the Charles Parker Co., in the screw shop, where he spent but a short time, accepting a position under his father in the shipping department of the Meriden Britannia Co. Here he began at the bottom round, working up through merit, and when his father resigned, in 1879, he was appointed to succeed him. For the past twenty-two years he has filled the position with ability and given general satisfaction, proving a worthy successor of his father.

Mr. Milroy was married April 29, 1875, to Julia Sadler, who was born in England, a daughter of William and Julia Sadler, both of whom were natives of Coventry, England. The former died here, in 1898, and the latter in 1899, and both are buried in Walnut Grove cemetery. Mrs. Milroy is a model housewife and a devoted wife and mother. Three children have blessed this union: (1) John William, born in Meriden, and educated in the public schools and Morse's Business College, of Hartford, is assistant to his father in the shipping department of the Meriden Britannia Co. He is a young man of ability, and is a fine pianist, having studied under George Marble, of Meriden. (2) Jessie Julia, aged fourteen, is a pupil in the West End Institute, where she is fitting for the high school. She is a pianist of no mean ability and is under the instruction of Prof. George Marble. She accompanies her brother, Carl, and they have frequent calls to play at entertainments. (3) Carl is a student in the public schools, and although but ten years old (1901) is a celebrated violinist, having as a master the well-known violinist, Prof. William Kerr. Mr. Milroy is a member of the N. E. O. P. Politically he is an independent Republican. The family attend the Congregational Church, and are highly respected by those who know them best.

WALLACE. For three-quarters of a century this name has stood as a tower of strength in and about Wallingford, where have lived the late Robert Wallace and his sons, Robert B., George M., Frank A. and Henry L., the sons being actively connected with the leading industry of the town, the two last named as president and secretary, respectively, of the Wallace Manufacturing Co., while George M. represents the business at Chicago, and Robert B. in Brooklyn.

The late Robert Wallace, manufacturer of Wallingford, belonged to and was contemporaneous with that galaxy of men whose genius, ability, pluck and determination from the humblest beginnings built fortunes for themselves and others, and made the towns of Wallingford and Meriden famous industrial centers, especially for Britannia metal ware, throughout the civilized world. That group of eminent New Englanders was made up of Horace C. Wilcox, Isaac C. Lewis, George R. Curtis, Lemuel J. Curtis, Samuel Simpson, Robert Wallace and others, now all gone to their reward.

Robert Wallace was born Nov. 13, 1815, in Prospect, New Haven Co., Conn., son of James and Urania (Williams) Wallace. The father, a small farmer of that town, came of Scottish and English origin. The son received only a limited education, such as was offered to the sons of the farmers of that period. At the age of eighteen he began the manufacture of spoons on his own account, in an old gristmill shop in Cheshire, and was destined soon to link his name with an event that was to mark a new epoch in the manufacture of metal goods in the United States. He had only been at work a short time in the old mill when he was shown a spoon made of a metal new to him, called German silver. A chemist, Dr. Louis Feuchtwanger, was known to have brought a small bar of the metal from Germany. This bar Mr. Wallace purchased, and had it rolled into spoons. Later he found a gentleman who had brought the recipe for making the metal, and who sold it to him for twenty-five dollars. Here in his factory Mr. Wallace compounded the first German silver made in America, and to him is due the honor of being the pioneer in this new industry. At this time he removed his simple machinery from Cheshire to a point on the Quinnipiac below Wallingford, and began the manufacture of spoons and flat ware on a more extended scale. In the old mill at Cheshire the output was three dozen spoons a day. Here it was nine dozen. The industry gradually assumed large proportions. New machinery was devised by Mr. Wallace, and in 1855 the business represented an investment of $12,000, which very soon became $14,000. In 1865 it became $100,000, and the style of the corporation was Wallace, Simpson & Co. The manufacturing capacity was more than correspondingly increased. In 1871 Mr. Wallace bought out Mr. Simpson, and with two of his sons formed the R. Wallace & Sons Manufacturing Co. The factory now had added to its list of goods already made a large number of new and desirable articles, sterling goods, high-grade nickle-silver plated ware, both flat and hollow. Still later, by experiment, Mr. Wallace devised a new process of manufacture from steel, by which a less bulky, firmer and lighter basis for silver plating was secured. A new company was formed (the old being still continued), consisting of himself, his sons and sons-in-law, under the style of Wallace Brothers, and this factory and business have since grown to be the largest in the world devoted to the manufacture of flat table ware. About three tons of steel are in daily demand, and one-half that amount of nickle silver. The company has selling houses in New York and Chicago, and never lacks orders. The present officers of the company are: Frank A. Wallace, president; Henry L. Wallace, secretary; and W. J. Leavenworth, a son-in-law of the late Robert Wallace, treasurer. The senior member of the firm passed away June 1, 1892, since which time the sons and son-in-law have continued the business.

Robert Wallace belonged to the old school of men, plain and unassuming to a marked degree. His tastes were simple, and he seemed happiest when at the bench in the factory, away from the office and its complicated interests. Here he was seen until within a short time before his last illness, always affable and courteous. The great ambition of his life seemed to be to excel as a manufacturer. Accumulating wealth, and widely known, he could have had any position in the gift of his townsmen, had he desired such honors, but all these he uniformly declined when proffered him. Notoriety he dreaded, and his life is a fine illustration of steady and lifelong devotion to one calling.

On March 23, 1839, Mr. Wallace married Harriet Louise Moulthrop, of North Haven, Conn., and their union was blessed with the following children: A son who died in infancy; William J., who died at the age of thirty; Adeline, Mrs. Morris, of Wallingford; Nettie A., wife of W. J. Leavenworth, of Wallingford; Robert E., of Brooklyn, N. Y.; Hattie E. and Henry L., residents of Wallingford; Adela C., Mrs. Sisson, of New York; George W., in Chicago; and Frank A., in Wallingford.

JOSHUA G. GLADWIN, one of the public officials of New Haven, and a very prominent Republican, was born in Clinton, March 14 1856.

The ancestry of the family is traced back to the grandfather Joshua G., who married Phoebe Dawson Manwarren, died at an advanced age. The father, William R. Gladwin, was born in Clinton, and was a farmer, but also engaged in teaming and hauling timber, and died at the age of sixty-six. In politics he was a Republican, and served very acceptably as road master for many years. His wife, Harriet M. Crocker, was born in Niantic, daughter of Charles Crocker, a farmer of that locality, who later removed to Killingworth. Of the family of seven children born to her parents Mrs. William R. Gladwin is the eldest now living, the others being: Fanny, residing in Waterford, Conn.; Henry, in Guilford; Benjamin, in New Haven. The parents of our subject had the following family: Mrs. Niles Sherwood, of New Haven; Joshua G.; and Mrs. Joseph Kegelmeier. Mrs. Gladwin resides at the old home in Clinton, Conn. She attends the Methodist Church, as did her husband.

The early years of Joshua G. Gladwin were spent in Clinton, where he attended the common school, but when seventeen he commenced his business career by pound fishing for two seasons, and with the money thus earned went to Guilford and entered the employ of Deacon Hall to learn the trade of joiner. Later he went to John Norton, a carpenter in Guilford, and within two years had learned his trade. His next venture was upon a farm owned by Charles A. Goodyear, where he had charge of the horses as well as the farm, being manager of the property. Desiring to reside in a city, he later came to New Haven and worked for three years at his trade for the Winchester Repeating Arms Company. At the expiration of this time he went to work on the outside for John Osborn, Smith & McQueen, and Charles Loveland. On July 15, 1884, he entered the Fire Department as a substitute, and so efficient did he prove that on March 31, 1885, he was made call hoseman. On Jan. 11, 1887, he was appointed permanent hoseman; April 3, 1888, he was made hose driver No. 1; May 30, 1892, came another promotion, when he was made Lieutenant of Hook and Ladder No. 2; March 1, 1894, he was appointed Captain No. 2; June 1, 1898, he was transferred to No. 9 as Captain, and on Nov. 1, of the same year, was appointed Fire Marshal, and now has charge of the department in the absence of the chief, and has rendered very valuable service to the people of New Haven in protecting their property.

Mr. Gladwin is also building inspector, issuing all the building permits, fireworks, kerosene oil licenses for the city of New Haven. That this office demands a large portion of his attention, is shown by the following statistics: During 1899: Frame houses, 101; brick houses, 15; brick buildings, 24; brick buildings, 15; stores 25; and tenements, 253. During 1900: Frame houses, 74; brick houses, 14; stores, 26; and tenements, 193. Cost of buildings, $1,373,930. Repairs, $168,950. In addition, during both years, Mr. Gladwin issued a large number of licenses for the sale of various inflammable materials.

On Nov. 11, 1877, Mr. Gladwin married Florence A. Dudley, born in Madison, a daughter of Jason Dudley, a farmer still living at the old homestead. Mrs. Gladwin is one of two children, the other member of her family being a brother, Clark F., who resides with the parents. Mr. Gladwin is a member of Wooster Lodge, No. 79, A. F. & A. M.; Franklin Chapter, No. 2; Harmony Council, No. 8; New Haven Commandery, No. 2, Knight Templars; Pyramid Lodge, A. O. U. W.; and he is foreman in the Garfield Council of the American Mechanics; charter member of Firemen's Mutual Aid and State Firemen's Associations, and he has been president of the County Aid Association for two years. Both he and his excellent wife attend the Baptist Church. Mr. Gladwin is recognized to be one of the representative men of New Haven, and his public spirit is unquestioned. Combined with these excellent qualities, are many others which have made for him many friends, who rejoice in the success which is attending his efforts.

DENNIS A. KIMBERLY, one of the prominent and representative citizens of the town of Orange, Conn., was born on Sept. 3, 1844, in Derby, Conn., and traces his line of ancestry through James Lester, Eliakim, Silas, Nathaniel (3), Nathaniel (2), Nathaniel (1), to Thomas Kimberly, who came from London, England, to New Haven, Conn., in 1638, and died in Stratford, Conn., in 1673. Thomas Kimberly had four sons, one of whom, Elizur, was the first white male child born in New Haven, and in after years filled for a long period the office of secretary of State.

Nathaniel Kimberly, son of Thomas, died at West Haven in 1705.

Nathaniel Kimberly (2), son of Nathaniel, died at West Haven, in 1720.

Nathaniel Kimberly (3), son of Nathaniel (2), died at West Haven in 1780.

Silas Kimberly, son of Nathaniel (3), married Mary, daughter of Jonathan Smith, and died in 1803.

Eliakim Kimberly, son of Silas, married Martha Kimberly.

James L. Kimberly, son of Eliakim, married Mary A. Lum, of Derby, Conn., and their children were: Dennis A.; Fannie A. married Miles Good-year, and died in 1883; Edward L. died March 1, 1887.

Dennis A. Kimberly spent his early school days in West Haven, Conn., and during several years, lived in the Western States. Since 1883 his residence has been in West Haven. In 1861 he enlisted, in the 1st N. Y. Cav., and again, in 1862, entering then the 15th Conn. V. I., in which he gallantly served until the close of the Civil war. During his cavalry service, he was at one time seriously injured by the kick of a horse, but otherwise returned from the army without hurt. After the war Mr. Kimberly went to Michigan, where he remained one year and then, from 1866 to 1867, he was with the produce firm of John T. Gill, in West Haven, and in 1868 ran a branch house on State street. Until 1870 he was engaged in business relations with the office of the Northampton Railroad, on Chapel street, and then went to Wichita, Kansas, which at that time was a hamlet of two houses, and there engaged in the cattle business until 1883.

Mr. Kimberly has taken a deep interest in all matters pertaining to the best advancement of his town and served as burgess of West Haven in 1888, 1889, 1890 and 1891, was warden in 1896 and 1897, was selectman in 1901, and was elected warden December, 1901. Fraternally he is connected with Admiral Foote Post, G. A. R., of New Haven, Annawon Lodge, No. 115, F. & A. M., Joseph Andrews Chapter, R. A. M.

On Jan. 10, 1876, Mr. Kimberly was married to Miss Nellie A. Norton, a daughter of Alonzo Norton, of Madison, and these children have been born to the union: Fannie E.; F. Lester; Jennie A.; Dennis; Edward B.; and Marian A. F. Lester Kimberly is well known in West Haven, where he is a popular newsdealer and contractor; he was married Nov. 27, 1901, to Miss Annie L. Shannon. The family is one that is universally esteemed in West Haven and is prominent both in business and social circles.

HERMAN MICHAELIS, foreman of the lamp department of the Bradley & Hubbard Manufacturing Co., is one of the leading German-American citizens of the "Silver City." He was born May 23, 1852, in the city of Luckenwalde, near Berlin, Germany, a son of Ludwig Michaelis, now deceased. The latter was a native of Braunschweig, Germany, where he grew to manhood. On attaining his majority, he settled in Luckenwalde, where he engaged in the manufacture of kid gloves and suspenders and similar wares, in which he continued throughout his life. There he died at a ripe old age, and was buried. His wife, Henrietta Lohbauer, was born in Potsdam, and died and was buried in her native place. Both were consistent members of the Lutheran Church. Of their children, four died in infancy; one more, Hermine, is now deceased, two reside in Meriden; and the others in Germany. The living are: Louis, a leading baker of Meriden, Paulina, Emma, Herman and Emil.

Herman Michaelis received a good education in his native land, and was early made acquainted with the manufacturing business conducted by his father, with whom he continued until twenty years old, when he joined the German army. During his three years' military service, he had opportunity to show his mettle, and was made a non-commissioned officer, and acquitted himself honorably. One year of this time was spent in France, during the closing scenes of the Franco-Prussian war of 1871, an opportunity which does not fall to the lot of every soldier, which he made the most of. The training thus received has made him a better citizen, and its experiences will never be forgotten.

Upon the close of his term of enlistment, Mr. Michaelis came to the United States and immediately settled in Meriden, whose manufacturing possibilities were apparent to his experienced eye. He at once attached himself to the great manufacturing establishment of the Bradley & Hubbard Manufacturing Co., entering the lamp department. Here his abilities and industry soon gained recognition, and in 1883 he was placed in charge of the department, one of the prominent ones of the establishment, and for the past nineteen years has conducted it with signal success. His straightforward business methods have made him a favorite with his employers, and secured the respect and esteem of all his associates, in either business or social life.

On May 24, 1882, Mr. Michaelis was married to Miss Louise Ernst, daughter of Charles and Minnie (Konold) Ernst. Mrs. Michaelis was born in Meriden, and her parents were natives of Germany, who died at Meriden, and were buried in Walnut Grove Cemetery. They attended religious services at the Universalist Church. Three of their six children died in infancy. Those living are: Louis; Amelia, wife of Augustus Rayen, and Carrie, wife of Charles H. Drechsler; all reside in Meriden.

Of the children born to Mr. and Mrs. Michaelis, the second, Herman Walter, died in infancy. The third, Marie Louise, was educated in the American schools, and became a student at White College, Ontario, Canada. Mr. Michaelis is a member of the Meriden Singers and, as such, he has been prominent and is now treasurer. He is a member of the Universalist Church. In politics he is independent, and never seeks any political favors. An industrious and thrifty citizen, he enjoys the comforts of his own fireside, and leaves public strife to those whose taste inclines to such matters. His home on Hanover street, which he purchased several years since, is one of the finest on that thoroughfare, and is presided over by his devoted wife with the ease and grace which come from good breeding. Having come to Meriden with no capital, a stranger in a strange land, Mr. Michaelis has achieved a success of which he may be justly proud, and which may well be taken by rising generations of Americans as an inspiration and example.

CANDEE. For over two centuries the name of Candee, or Cande, has appeared in the annals of Connecticut. Their most interesting record is as follows:

(I) Zaccheus Candee first appears in New Haven at the time of his marriage, Dec. 5, 1670, to Rebecca, daughter of Henry Bristow (or Bristol), of New Haven. Mr. Candee lived and died in West Haven, probably at the corner of the "Green," where down to a late day remained the dwelling of his son Samuel. He is called Zachariah on his tombstone, on which the date of his death and age are given as 1720, aged eighty years; and on a similar stone the death and age of his wife Rebecca appear as Sept. 22, 1739, aged ninety-one years.

(II) Samuel Candee, son of Zaccheus, born July 24, 1678, in West Haven, Conn., married April 28, 1703, Abigail, daughter of Thomas Pineon, of New Haven. Mr. Candee served respectively as lieutenant and captain of the West Haven Company. He lived and died in that town, his home being beautifully located at the corner of the "Green," and the building stood there until taken down, in 1877. Capt. Candee died Feb. 28, 1748-49, and his wife passed away Jan. 9, 1743. Thomas Pineon, the father of Mrs. Candee, was of Sudbury, Mass., in 1661, likely a son of Nicholas Pinon, of Lynn, 1647.

(III) Caleb Candee, son of Samuel, was born about 1722 in West Haven. He married Lois Malory, of West Haven or Milford, and settled in the town of Oxford, Conn., as a farmer. There he died, according to the inscription on his tombstone, Oct. 4, 1777.

The following is extracted from the Army and Navy Journal, March 27, 1880:

A family which has been represented in the Army and Navy of the United States from the earliest period in the history of this country furnishes one of the curiosities of genealogy which is worthy of mention. Early in the sixteenth century a Huguenot family of the same name as the one now considered, fled from France and took up their residence in Scotland. One of the family afterward emigrated to America and settled in Connecticut. He had a son, John Candee, born in New Haven in 1640, from which it may be seen the name of Candee in this country are descended from a hardy race, of a mixture of Huguenot and Puritan, and they lived principally in the township of Oxford, in New Haven county. One of them, Caleb by name, married in 1742 Lois Mallory, and of this marriage were born nine sons, one of whom reached the age of ninety-four, three of them eighty-seven, one eighty-six, and one eighty-three, one seventy-six, one seventy, and one sixty-nine, an average of a little more than eighty-two years. The seventh son, Nehemiah, was the grandfather of Gen. Innes Palmer and Major George W. Candee, Paymaster U. S. Army, and the great-grandfather of Mrs. Dr. Walter S. Schofield, of the Navy, and many citizens of New York and vicinity. He had ten children who lived to mature age, three of them living, viz., Mr. W. L. Candee, of Milwaukee, now in his eighty-ninth year; Mrs. Susan Palmer, mother of Gen. Palmer, in her eighty-eighth year; and Mr. G. W. Candee, of New York, in his eighty-seventh year. Those of the family who have died attained the ages, respectively, of ninety-two, ninety, eighty-two, seventy-six, seventy-four, fifty-six and fifty-three. The average age of the two generations, viz., the families of Caleb and Nehemiah (nineteen children), would be now about eighty years and three months. All of the children of Caleb were born subjects of Great Britain, and all of them, we believe, served in the Revolutionary army.

Frederick C. Lander

(IV) David Candee, son of Caleb, was born in 1747, in Oxford, Conn. On Feb. 5, 1772, he married Dinah Bristol, of West Haven, who died June 17, 1785, aged thirty-three years. He married (second) April 11, 1787, Abigail Buckingham. Mr. Candee resided in Oxford and in Harwinton, Conn. He and his wife were baptized into the church in Oxford Sept. 10, 1774, and Jan. 6, 1797, he is recommended to the church in Harwinton, Conn. In 1807 he was of the committee to build the new church. He was frequently a selectman. Mr. Candee died at Harwinton, Conn., May 12, 1841, aged ninety-four years.

(V) David Candee (2), son of David, was baptized Sept. 22, 1782, and on Nov. 16, 1808, married Hannah, daughter of Abijah Catlin, of Harwinton. His mother dying when he was a child, David was adopted by Timothy Candee, of Oxford, and afterward of Pompey, N. Y. David accompanied Timothy to Pompey, but after remaining there a year or two returned to Connecticut, locating at Milford, where he resided with a Mr. Woodruff, who kept a hotel. Later he spent three years trading in the South with a Mr. Cone. They returned and bought the hotel and store in Oxford, and opened trade there. Later Mr. Candee bought his partner's interest and continued the business alone. He was a man of sound judgment, and in his manners, a gentleman of the Old School. He was a respected and leading citizen of the town, and in the course of a steadily successful business accumulated a fortune. He died July 11, 1851. Mrs. Hannah (Catlin) Candee was a lady of education and intelligence. She was active, and long survived her husband, dying in October, 1874.

(VI) Frederic Augustus Candee, son of David (2), was born June 15, 1818, and married Oct. 7, 1845, Louisa A. Hotchkiss. He was a merchant in Oxford, and also kept a hotel until within a few years of his death. His constitution had never been robust, and he fell a victim to consumption, passing away Feb. 25, 1859. In his business affairs he had displayed rare judgment, and had accumulated quite a fortune. In his religious faith he was reared a Congregationalist, but after marriage he united with the Episcopal Church, in which faith he, as well as his family, remained.

(VII) FREDERICK CATLIN CANDEE, son of Frederic A., was born in Oxford, Conn., Aug. 15, 1854. He was educated in the schools of his native village and at Lovell's Lancasterian School, in New Haven. His training in his youth was chiefly along agricultural lines, and after leaving school he engaged in farming, and he owns a valuable farm in Prospect, Conn. Public affairs occupied his attention to a considerable degree, and he served three terms as selectman in Oxford at a time when the Democrats had a majority of fifty. Politically he is a Republican, and a staunch member of the party. In 1884 he located in New Haven, where he has since been successfully engaged in the livery business.

On May 28, 1874, Mr. Candee married Lucy Ann Davis, who died the same year. She was a daughter of William H. Davis. On Nov. 13, 1878, Mr. Candee wedded Julia Allison Keeney, of Southford, Conn., daughter of Frederick Keeney. Children as follows were born to this union: Frederick (born in 1880), Harry E., Agnes and Julia, living; and two others, a boy and a girl, who died in infancy.

FRANCIS FOOTE ANDREWS, a representative farmer and leading citizen of East Haven, New Haven Co., Conn., was born in that town where his brother Samuel W. now lives, March 18, 1828, and belongs to one of its old and honored families. His grandfather, Nathan Andrews, was also a native of East Haven and a soldier of the Revolutionary war. Both he and his father, Elisha Andrews, lived to the advanced age of ninety-three years, while his wife, who bore the maiden name of Mahitable Pardee, lived to the age of ninety-one.

Rond Andrews, father of our subject, was born in East Haven, March 18, 1800, and in early manhood married Olive Foote, daughter of Samuel Foote. To them were born seven children, namely: Celesta, who married Noah W. Bradley, and is still living; Francis F., our subject; Ann L., who died at the age of sixteen years; Minerva, who married John A. Blackstone and lives in Branford, Conn.; one who died in infancy; Eveline, who married Samuel Thompson and is deceased; and W. F., a merchant and postmaster of New Haven. The father carried on the old tavern at East Haven, and also ran a hay press, baling hay which was shipped to the West Indies. He took a very active and prominent part in public affairs, serving as selectman of East Haven for a great many years; town clerk for twenty years; postmaster for thirty consecutive years; and justice of the peace many years. He was also a deacon in the Congregational Church for fifteen years, and took a great interest in the Church and its work. He was widely known and held in high regard by all with whom he came in contact. He died at the age of sixty-four years, his wife at the age of ninety-one.

Our subject acquired his literary education in the common schools of his native town, and has spent his entire life in East Haven, his time and attention being devoted to general farming and the dairy business since attaining to man's estate. He owns a valuable farm of about 100 acres partly in the town of Branford, and has placed the land under a high state of cultivation and made many improvements thereon.

Mr. Andrews was married, July 5, 1852, to Miss Mary A. Hemingway, a daughter of Harvey Hemingway, and to them were born three children: Mary O., who died in infancy; Francis Rouel and Harvey Lincoln, both farmers of East Haven. The wife and mother died in 1895. The Republican party finds in Mr. Andrews an earnest advocate and staunch supporter of its principles, and he has been quite prominently identified with local politics. He has served as justice of the peace several years; was selectman of East Haven two years; and represented his town in the State Legislature in 1896 and 1897, with credit to himself and to the entire satisfaction of his constituents.

DAVID BLOOMFIELD. The city of Meriden numbers among its intelligent resident professional men several who take high rank with the architects of this country, and a prominent representative of this branch of art is David Bloomfield.

Mr. Bloomfield was born Nov. 6, 1851, in the town of Cromwell, Middlesex Co., Conn. David Bloomfield, his grandfather, was a native of Woodbridge, N. J., where he spent his entire life engaged in farming. He was an earnest member of the Congregational Church. The family, which is of Welsh origin, was planted in this country soon after the Revolution.

Nathan Bloomfield, a son of David (1), and father of David (2), the subject of this notice, was born on his father's farm in New Jersey, and his boyhood days were spent in farming and attending the district school. When he had attained to man's estate he went to Hoboken, N. J., and learned the trade of shipbuilder. After his marriage he removed to Cromwell, Conn., and worked as a ship carpenter; later locating in Middle Haddam and forming a partnership with Andrew F. Parker, in a ship building business, which continued for several years, during which time he helped in the construction of the U. S. gunboat "Cayuga." He was also associated with a Mr. Gildersleeve, in Portland, Conn., in shipbuilding, and in all of his ventures was eminently successful. The immediate cause of his death, which occurred in April, 1861, was the breaking of a blood vessel, and he was interred in Middle Haddam, where his wife also lies. Mr. Bloomfield was married in Staten Island, N. Y., to Elizabeth Butler, a woman of fine character and many lovable qualities. She was a consistent member of the Congregational Church, and her husband was liberal in his religious views; both were most excellent people. In political matters the father was a Democrat, but aside from giving his earnest support to the candidates of his party he never took an active part in politics. To himself and wife were born seven children, namely: Emily, who died young; Garry, a builder of Meriden, Conn.; Mary, who was killed while only twenty years of age by being thrown from a carriage, in Middle Haddam; David; Franklin, who died when young; Frank, deceased; and Nathan, who died at the age of twenty.

David Bloomfield was taken by his parents to Middle Haddam, and while attending school, also helped his father. When but seventeen years old, he began to learn the carpenter's trade, and in 1869 came to Meriden with his brother, following his trade in this city. Being ambitious, he began the study of architecture and mechanical drawing, later taking a course under the celebrated architect, Henry C. Shute, of Massachusetts. While still studying under this gentleman, Mr. Bloomfield designed several private residences that gave evidence of his great ability in this line. In 1887, Mr. Bloomfield opened an office at No. 129 State street, Meriden, and he has met with unqualified success. Among the buildings which bear testimony to his skill may be mentioned the residences of W. L. Squire, A. S. Thomas, Mrs. Mary Wilson, and scores of others. The Pacific Lodge and Journal Publishing Co. buildings, the Turner Hall, the Columbia, Franklin and Center street schools, St. Mary's Roman Catholic and the German Lutheran Immanuel churches, and many other public and private buildings in Meriden, were designed by him, as well as elegant structures in Hartford and New Haven. In all of his work Mr. Bloomfield displays a thorough understanding of all modern requirements and an originality of design that mark it as distinctively his own, and his success has been almost phenomenal.

Mr. Bloomfield was married June 12, 1884, in Bristol, Conn., to Clara R. Richards, who was born at Goshen, Conn., a daughter of Charles A. Richards. No children have been born of this union. Socially, Mr. Bloomfield is a member of Montowese Tribe, I. O. O. F. In political matters he has always taken a leading part, in 1893 representing the Fifth ward in the city council, having been elected on the Republican ticket. He is now Fire Marshal, having served in that capacity for nine years; and he has been inspector of plumbing seven years. Religiously Mr. Bloomfield is very liberal, giving freely to works designed to relieve suffering and to promote the general betterment of humanity, regardless of church affiliations. Trustworthy and talented, upright, thoroughly conversant with all the details of his profession, Mr. Bloomfield is one of the men of whom Meriden feels justly proud, and who numbers his friends by legions.

WILLIAM HENRY ELY, the subject of this biography, is a prominent member of the Connecticut Bar, and former Corporation Counsel of the city of New Haven. His descent in several lines is from an early Puritan ancestry who were among the first settlers of New England, one line reaching back to the coming of the "Mayflower."

Mr. Ely was born Nov. 27, 1856, in the city of Hartford, a son of William Brewster and Elizabeth Smith (Morgan) Ely, descending, on his mother's side from the Morgans of Stonington, who figured in the war of the Revolution, and also from Thomas Seymour, who was King's attorney before the Revolution, as well as from a Huguenot family by the name of Chenevard, while on his father's side his descent was no less illustrious. Among his ancestors are Elder William Brewster, of "Mayflower" fame, and Nathan Ely, who came from Kent, England, in 1625. Nathan Ely was made a freeman in New England, at Cambridge, Mass., in 1635, and went to Hartford, Conn., with Rev. Thomas Hooker in 1636, and became one of the original proprietors of the town in 1639. From this emigrant ancestor William Henry Ely, of New Haven, is a descendant in the eighth generation, his line being through Samuel, Deacon John, Caleb, William, Eli and William B.

Samuel Ely, son of Nathan Ely, was born in Cambridge, and in 1659 married Mary Day, born in 1641, in Hartford, a daughter of Robert and Editha (Stebbins) Day, and accompanied his father to Springfield, Mass., where he was successful in the acquisition of property, and where he died.

Deacon John Ely, son of Samuel, was born in 1678, in Springfield, Mass., and in 1703, married Mercy Bliss, born in 1680, a daughter of Samuel and Mary (Leonard) Bliss. Deacon Ely died in 1758, and his widow in 1763, both in West Springfield.

Caleb Ely, a son of Deacon John, was born in 1714, in West Springfield, and in 1740 married Mary Edwards, who was born in Hartford in 1721, a daughter of Deacon John and Christianna (Williamson) Edwards, the former of whom was an uncle to Rev. Jonathan Edwards, once president of Princeton College.

William Ely, son of Caleb, was born in 1743, in West Springfield, and in 1766 married Drusilla Brewster, born in 1745, a daughter of William Brewster, who was a descendant of the Elder Brewster of the "Mayflower." William Ely died in West Springfield, in 1825, and his widow two years later.

Eli Ely, son of William, was born in 1772, in West Springfield, and in 1798, in Hartford, married Bathsheba Blake, born in 1777, a daughter of Abraham and Hannah (Babcock) Blake, of Milton, Mass. For years he was a successful merchant of Hartford. His wife died in 1832, and he survived ten years.

William B. Ely, son of Eli, was born in 1812, in Hartford, and in 1845, in that city, married Elizabeth Smith Morgan, born in 1821, a daughter of William H. and Margaret J. (Chenevard) Morgan. Mr. Ely was long known in the wholesale grocery, flour and feed business, in Hartford.

William Henry Ely, son of William B., was reared in Hartford, Conn., where he received his early education, and graduated from the Hartford High school, in 1873, and then entered Amherst (Mass.) College, from which he graduated in the class of 1877, with credit to himself and his Alma Mater. Selecting the law as his choice of profession, our subject became a student in the office of the well-known firm of Briscoe & Maltbie, of Hartford, and applied himself so diligently that he was admitted to the Bar in that city, May 27, 1879, commencing the practice of his profession in Winsted, Conn., in the following September. Possessing those qualities which insure success, Mr. Ely came rapidly to the front, and remained in Winsted until he desired a wider field, locating in New Haven on June 28, 1884, where he entered into a partnership with William C. Case, and this connection has lasted until the present time.

Taking a prominent position among the leaders of thought, Mr. Ely soon became identified with the active wing of the Republican party, and in January, 1895, was elected to the honorable position of Corporation Counsel of the city of New Haven, so efficiently performing the duties of this position that he was unanimously chosen as his own successor in 1897, irrespective of party lines, a testimony of value to any public citizen.

On Oct. 18, 1881, Mr. Ely was married to Miss Mary Gertrude Little, a native of Sheffield, Mass., and one son has been born to this union, William Brewster, born Oct. 10, 1882. Activity has marked the career of our subject in almost every line, his social relations being with the Quinipiac Club, the Sons of the Revolution, and his political affiliations with the Republican League and the Young Men's Republican Club.

I. P. BRONSON, a well-known contractor and builder, who now makes his home in Hamden, is a native of New Haven county, born in Middlebury, Aug. 4, 1854. His father, Lester Bronson, and his grandfather, Jared Bronson, were born on the same farm in that town. The first of the family to locate there was Amos Bronson, the great-grandfather of our subject, who was born in Wool-bury, Litchfield Co., Conn., and became a large land owner and extensive farmer of Middlebury. He lived to be nearly ninety years of age. By occupation the father of our subject was a farmer, wood and lumber dealer, and also engaged in the manufacture of charcoal. He was quite a prominent and influential man in his community, and was elected to several local offices, including those of selectman and assessor. He married Miss Sarah Seovile, of Middlebury, and to them were born six children: Francis E., Chester B., Alice L., L. P., Julia E. and Beverly, all residents of Middlebury with the exception of our subject. The father died at the age of fifty-six years, and the mother at the age of forty-eight.

The first fifteen years of his life, L. P. Bronson spent upon the home farm, and then went to Seymour, Conn., to learn the carpenter's trade with Samuel D. Bronson, serving a three years' apprenticeship. He continued to work at his trade in Seymour for fourteen years, the last two as a contractor and builder, and then went to Florida, where after a year spent in contracting and building he went to St. Augustine, that State, and accepted a position as foreman with the contractors building the Ponce de Leon Hotel at that place, where he remained three years and two months. On his return North, he located in Hamden, where he worked at his trade two years, and since that time has been principally engaged in contracting and building houses in New Haven.

Mr. Bronson was married, Nov. 14, 1880, to Miss Lizzie J. Benham, of Hamden, and to them have been born two children: Isabella E. and Irvin P., Jr. In 1890 our subject erected a beautiful modern residence on Dixwell avenue, where he and his family now reside, and where they delight to entertain their many friends. Politically he is identified with the Republican party, and fraternally is a member of the Masonic Lodge of New Haven, and the Knights of Pythias. He also belongs to the Highwood Club. He is quite popular both in business and social circles, and wherever known is held in high regard.

EDGAR K. PARKER, one of the prominent and highly respected citizens of New Haven, was born in Windsor, Vt., Oct. 12, 1845, son of Reuben M. Parker, who was born in Woodstock, Vt., in 1818, and died Nov. 11, 1882.

Eleazer Parker was his great grandfather, and his grandfather was named Joseph Parker, a shoemaker and haverseeper, who married a Miss Muzzy and settled in Woodstock, where he reared a family of four children: Sarah, Reuben M. (father of Edgar K.), John and Ezra. John Parker, the third in this family, was a dealer in shoes until the war broke out, when he went to Washington, D. C., and there held a government position until his death, which occurred after many years of faithful service.

Reuben M. Parker grew to manhood in Woodstock, following the trade of shoemaker. Later he was employed in a government gun factory at Windsor, Vt., where he died. He married Julia Burnham, a native of Windsor, Vt., who died Sept. 25, 1855, and five children were born to them: Harriet, who married John Parker, and resides in New Haven; Marian, who died unmarried; Ella, who married John Boyd; Edgar K.; and Lizzie, who is unmarried. Politically Reuben M. Parker was a Republican, but never an office seeker. The entire family were members of the Episcopal Church.

Edgar K. Parker spent his boyhood days in Windsor, Vt., attending school in Windsor and Woodstock. At the age of fifteen, in 1860, he removed to New Haven, Conn., and worked in a gun shop for a short period, and later was a conductor on the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad from New Haven to New York, being engaged on that line for about twenty years in all. His first service was from 1860 until September, 1863, when he enlisted in the United States navy for one year, serving under Lieut. Commander William B. Cushman. He previously had made two trips to Europe. At the expiration of his term he returned to the employ of the New York & New Haven Railroad Co. (now known as the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co.), and remained with them until Jan. 2, 1879, after which he was in the electroplating business until 1881. On the request of the officers of the railroad company he returned to them for about one year. In May, 1883, he entered the employ of the Connecticut Lighting Co., continuing with them until they discontinued business, in August of the same year. On Sept. 23, 1883, he was engaged by the New Haven Electric Co., which was absorbed by the United Illuminating Co., of which he is now superintendent in New Haven.

On Feb. 21, 1876, Mr. Parker was married to Louisa E. Gedney, of Mamaroneck, Westchester Co., N. Y., daughter of John Gedney, of the same place. The Gedney family is an old one in New York State. Four children have been born of this union: May L. (who died in 1891, at the age of fifteen), Herbert G., Edgar K. and Julia B.

Mr. Parker is a Republican, but has never accepted office, although nomination to various positions within the gift of the people has been offered him; he has also refused appointment as police commissioner. Socially he is a member of the Masonic fraternity, uniting with Wooster Lodge, No. 79; New Haven Commandery, No. 2; Lafayette Consistory, of Bridgeport; and Pyramid Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., having attained to the thirty-second degree. Mr. Parker is also a member of the Veterans of the Navy and Admiral Foote Post, G. A. R. The family are members of the Episcopal Church, and are very active in its work.

E. K. Parker

Ever since coming to New Haven Mr. Parker has had the welfare of the city at heart, and has proved himself a public-spirited, energetic man. Mr. Parker is a past master in his line of business, thoroughly understanding its every detail. In manner he is genial and pleasant, and makes friends wherever he goes.

JESSE EDWIN STILLMAN, the popular and successful manager of the Singer Sewing Machine Co., for the district of Meriden, which includes Wallingford and Cheshire, is a descendant of one of the old and honorable families of Connecticut.

George Stillman, the founder of the family in America, was a native of London, England, where he was born in 1659, a son of a London merchant. The family were staunch supporters of Oliver Cromwell, during the days of the Commonwealth, and upon the restoration of Charles, the Second, were forced, for safety, to assume another name, selecting that of Pritchard, or Pickering. George Stillman became a merchant. He was married in London, and had a son, George. Those were stormy times and soon many of the Cromwell advocates found it necessary to secretly emigrate to America. This was the case with Mr. Stillman, and in 1680, leaving little George with friends in London, he with his wife, set out on the voyage to the free land across the ocean. Mrs. Stillman never reached it, dying on the voyage, but her husband located at Hadley, Mass., and in 1685 there married Rebecca Smith. Later, he moved to Wethersfield, Conn., and there spent the remainder of his days, dying there in 1728, and his remains lie in the old cemetery there, with the dust of so many other early settlers. George and wife were the parents of eleven children: George, whom he left in England, came later to America, with a party of Seventh Day Baptists, and settled in Rhode Island; Nathaniel; Benjamin; John; Henry; Martha; Rebecca; and others.

John Stillman, son of George, was born in Hadley, Mass., on Feb. 19, 1693, and removed to Wethersfield, Conn., with his parents, where he spent the remainder of his days, engaged in farming. A prominent citizen, and a deacon in the church, he died, full of years, in 1775, and was buried in Wethersfield. He was married May 26, 1715, to Mary Wolcott, born May 14, 1694, a daughter of Mrs. Judith Wolcott and a granddaughter of Samuel Appleton, of Wethersfield, and she died in 1777, the mother of the following children: John; May; Abigail; Martha; Sarah; Elisha; Abigail (2); Appleton; Huldah; and Benjamin.

John Stillman, son of Deacon John, was born in Wethersfield, Aug. 9, 1717, and there he grew to manhood, and married, on Oct. 26, 1738, Rachel Robbins, a daughter of Richard and Martha (Curtis) Robbins, of that town. In 1757, he removed with his wife and family to Sandisfield, Berkshire Co., Mass., where he spent the remainder of his days, and died July 15, 1782. His widow removed to Colebrook, Litchfield Co., Conn., where she died, July 12, 1807, at the age of eighty-nine years, and was buried in the old cemetery there. John Stillman was one of the founders of the church in Sandisfield. The children born to John and Rachel were: Joseph, born April 1, 1740; Hannah, born Feb. 13, 1742; John, born Jan. 6, 1744; Joshua; Roger; Appleton; and Robert.

Roger Stillman, son of John, was born in Wethersfield, on July 4, 1754, and removed with his parents to Sandisfield, where he grew to manhood, and later removed to Colebrook, Conn., where he located. Roger Stillman was one of the first to enlist in the patriot army, for service in the Revolutionary war, participating in the battle of Bunker Hill, and many other engagements, being finally honorably discharged at Lake Champlain. In 1780 he located at Colebrook, where he spent the remainder of his days, dying Dec. 8, 1832, and was engaged in building his house on the morning of the Dark Day. Both his name and that of his wife occur among the founders of the church in Colebrook. His wife was Mehitable Hurd, who was born March 4, 1757, in Killingworth, Conn., now Clinton, and died in Colebrook, Aug. 24, 1828. She was buried there, having been the mother of ten children, five of whom were sons: William, Daniel, Osburn, Edmund and Chester.

Chester Stillman, son of Roger, was born in Colebrook, Conn., April 9, 1797, on a farm, one-half mile south of the main road. He became a landowner and farmer in Colebrook, where he built a home in 1825, and made other improvements. His death occurred Jan. 25, 1865, and he was buried in Stillman's cemetery, in Colebrook. On Dec. 10, 1815, he united with the Church and was appointed deacon in 1838. On March 2, 1820, he was married to Clarissa Esther De Wolf, born Aug. 1, 1797, at Otis, Mass., and died May 14, 1864, and was laid to rest in Stillman's cemetery. Her ancestry was French. Eight children were born to Chester Stillman and wife, four of whom were sons: Edwin C., Dorwin E., Lester R. and Collin L.

Edwin C. Stillman, the father of our subject, was born in Colebrook, in Beach Hill district, Sept. 14, 1821, and grew to manhood in his native home, making his avocation farming. He graduated from Oberlin College and studied for the ministry, but failing eyesight compelled him to abandon his plans in that direction. Later, with his family, he moved to Southington, Conn., where he settled down to farming and dairying and spent the balance of his days, and where he died, June 6, 1895, and was buried. Mr. Stillman was a consistent member of the Congregational Church, liberal minded and progressive, a most worthy citizen, an exemplary father and husband. In politics he was a Republican, but was never an office seeker.

On June 28, 1846, Mr. Stillman was married to Sarah M. Doolittle, who was born in Westfield, Middlesex Co., Conn., April 18, 1828, a daughter of Seth Doolittle, who removed from Westfield to Pleasant Valley, then to Barkhamsted, where he died. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Stillman were: Frank R.; William C., a dealer in butter and eggs, in Meriden; Jesse E.; and Waldo R., the proprietor of a restaurant in this city.

The Doolittle family of which Jesse Edwin Stillman is a descendant, on the maternal side, is one of the oldest in Wallingford. Abraham Doolittle, the first of that name in Wallingford, was a native of England who came to America and located in New Haven before 1642, later removed to Wallingford, as one of the earliest settlers, and there died Aug. 11, 1690. He was twice married, the second wife being Abigail Moss, who died Nov. 5, 1710.

Daniel Doolittle, the tenth child of Abraham Doolittle, was born Dec. 29, 1675, and married Hannah Cornwall, of Middletown, Conn., and later removed to Middletown, where he spent several years, returning again to Wallingford, where he died, in 1755 at the ripe old age of eighty. His wife had passed away on Jan. 16, 1736.

Daniel Doolittle, son of Daniel Doolittle, was born Feb. 3, 1707, and was engaged in farming near the North Haven line, where he spent his days, and died there in September, 1791, at the age of eighty-four. His marriage was to Elizabeth Dayton, and to them seven children were born.

Michael Doolittle, son of Daniel, was a farmer by occupation, and became a deacon in the Baptist Church, in Wallingford, where he lived to a ripe old age. He married Millicent Hough, of Wallingford.

Seth Doolittle, son of Michael and Millicent Doolittle, was born in Wallingford, but later removed to Westfield parish, Middletown, where he followed the trade of wagon-maker, but still later removed his family to Barkhamsted, where he pursued his trade and died there. His marriage was to Betsey Healey, and their daughter, Sarah M. Doolittle, married Edwin C. Stillman, who is at present a resident of Southington.

Jesse Edwin Stillman, the immediate subject of this biography, was born in Colebrook, Litchfield Co., Conn., in 1856, and attended the district schools of his native home until the age of eight years, removing then, with his parents, to Southington, where he resumed attendance at school and assisted his father in the farm, later entering the dairy business. In 1878 he came to Meriden and entered the employ of Rogers Bros., later was with the Edward Miller Co., and also was employed at one period in Plainville. In 1893 Mr. Stillman accepted the agency of the Meriden district, for the Singer Sewing Machine Co., and has been its efficient manager ever since, employing additional men and giving excellent satisfaction over a large district. His success in this line has demonstrated the fact that he possesses tact, industry and energy, and is a very valuable acquisition to the great business with which he has connected himself.

Mr. Stillman was married, Dec. 25, 1882, in Meriden, to Miss Lucretia, daughter of Theodore Bailey, an old and respected citizen, whose biography appears elsewhere. One child has been born of this union, Emily M., a student in the Meriden high school. Mrs. Stillman is a cultured and refined lady, assisting her husband ably in the social matters which claim a part of their attention, possesses good business ability, and is a devoted wife and mother. She is a member of Susan Carrington Clark Chapter, D. A. R. Mr. Stillman is fraternally connected with the I. O. O. F., at Plainville, and Alfred Hall Council, No. 1423, Royal Arcanum. He is also a charter member of the club. Both he and his wife attend the Congregational Church.

WILLIAM HALE (deceased) was during his long life a well-known and highly respected citizen of Meriden. His birth took place in Middlefield, Middlesex county, Feb. 15, 1812, and he was a worthy descendant of an old and esteemed family of New England.

Hezekiah Hale, grandfather of the late William Hale, was one of Middlefield's highly respected citizens, was prominent in the church there, and for many years was the sexton. His house stood on Jackson Hill, almost opposite to the Joseph Cbe home. His death occurred Nov. 18, 1813. He was twice married, and became the father of children as follows: Hezekiah, born Oct. 31, 1778; Joseph, born Aug. 26, 1780, who died Aug. 16, 1855 (he married Julia Stowe Sept. 15, 1810); Hannah; Jerusha, who married Thomas Bailey, of Canton, Pa.; Eunice, Mrs. Turner; and Submit, who married Samuel Geer, who died in 1835, she surviving until 1852.

Hezekiah Hale, son of Hezekiah, was born Oct. 31, 1778, in Middlefield, Conn., became a large land owner there, and passed his life in agricultural pursuits. He died Oct. 31, 1826, at the age of forty-eight years, and was buried in his native place. On Oct. 30, 1805, he was united in marriage with Nancy Miller, who was born April 6, 1786, and died Aug. 31, 1878, at the ripe old age of ninety-two years and four months. Their children were: (1) Cornelia, born July 31, 1806, was married April 25, 1826, to David B. Miller, and died Sept. 14, 1844, of consumption. She had children Nancy, born March 26, 1827, died in September, 1855; Hezekiah Hale, born Oct. 22, 1820, married Harriet Atwood (he is a member of the grocery firm of Collins & Miller, of Meriden); Cornelia, born Dec. 5, 1832, died Dec. 30, 1864 (she was the wife of Ichabod M. Roberts); Lucy J., born Aug. 14, 1835, married Dec. 20, 1866, Walter P. Hall, who died in 1892, and she is now the wife of Charles L.

William Hale

Phoebe J. Hale

Miller, of Middlefield; Isaac R., born April 4, 1839, died July 20, 1865, of consumption; and Milton H., born Nov. 27, 1842, married Nov. 20, 1866, Frances D. Hubbard. (2) Eunice, born Dec. 3, 1808, died unmarried June 6, 1836, of consumption. (3) William was born Feb. 15, 1812. (4) Roswell, born Sept. 4, 1816, died Feb. 6, 1849, of consumption, on the old homestead. (5) Phineas, born Aug. 9, 1818, died Jan. 20, 1845, of consumption.

William Hale, son of Hezekiah (2), was educated in Middlefield, Conn. He grew up on the home farm, and cared for his mother, who was left a widow when the son was fourteen years old. When he reached manhood he married, and thereafter lived five years on the homestead. In 1839 he settled on a large farm in the town of Meriden, which he operated for some six years. However, this life did not altogether satisfy him, as he was of a mechanical turn of mind, and he resolved to become a manufacturer, beginning this business as a maker of suspenders on the farm. He subsequently located his factory in what was then called West Meriden, and in time added carpet bags to his output. He was associated in this line with H. H. Miller and E. H. Loomis. This business was disposed of to Jedediah Wilcox, and Mr. Hale then began the manufacture of sewing birds and tape measures, being interested with Junius Norton. For a long period he was the owner of the "Meriden House," in Meriden, and he also had several other pieces of realty in the city. For many years that hostelry was his home, and there he died Oct. 16, 1874; he was buried in the East cemetery. A man of industrious habits, he achieved success in business by his own efforts. Both he and his wife were valued members of the Baptist Church, and he was an honest and worthy citizen in every way. A lifelong Democrat, he never sought any political honors, being thoroughly satisfied to uphold law and order through the ballot, in the way he considered best for the happiness of the whole country. Devoted to his family, health not permitting, he gave little attention to outside matters. His tastes were fine, and he spent money in a manner then considered lavish, for the adornment of his home and family interests. All his actions were ruled by a kindly heart, and he was charitable toward the faults of his fellow men. He was a lover of animals, especially of fine horses, and owned a number of them. Horseback riding was then in vogue, and he kept saddle horses for family use, and single and double carriage horses. Looking for perfection, Mr. Hale never quite found his ideal in horseflesh. He gave some time to hunting and fishing, of which he was very fond.

William Hale was married in Meriden, in April, 1833, to Phebe Ann Ives, who was born in Meriden, daughter of Watrous and Polly (Yale) Ives, and two children were born to this union, Frances Augusta and Hezekiah Watrous. The latter, born Dec. 8, 1835, married Harriet Endecott Haven, of Worcester, Mass., and both now sleep in the old East cemetery. He died of consumption. They left two children, William Henry and Susan Nellie, both of whom were reared and educated by their grandfather. The former was born Sept. 25, 1857, graduated from the Cheshire Military Academy, and is a thorough master of English; he was several years engaged in newspaper work, and is now a resident of New York. Susan Nellie was born July 27, 1859, in Meriden. Like her husband, Mrs. Hale was an expert in handling horses. She was a brilliant and attractive woman, who shone in society, where she was much at home.

Frances Augusta Hale was married in Meriden, Dec. 5, 1853, to Edwin H. Loomis, a native of Coventry, Conn., who was born July 9, 1827, and died in March, 1890. They had three children: Frederick Hale, born Jan. 6, 1868; and two that died in infancy. Mrs. Loomis has an active mind, and a great desire to acquire knowledge and be helpful to her fellow travelers on life's journey. She is a moving spirit in the higher intellectual circles of the city of Meriden. Her early education was received in Meriden Academy, and later she attended a young ladies seminary in Hartford, conducted by the Miss Drapers. Perhaps no one in the city is better known as the instigator and promoter of humane and charitable enterprises. Mrs. Loomis was one of the organizers of the Humane Society of Meriden. Wherever she is located she exerts an uplifting and refining influence upon her surroundings, being a lady of culture, traveled, and thoroughly educated on many subjects far beyond the usual trend in social life, and she is valued as a friend and intellectual comrade by some of the brightest intellects of the day. Many abstruse subjects have claimed her attention, and she has become much interested in the teachings of Catherine Thingley, in theosophy, is president of the Theosophical Society of Meriden, and has attended its conventions at headquarters at Point Loma, Cal., and other points. With a trained and analytic mind, she best enjoys life when surrounded by her books and music, or deep in meditation upon her favorite science.

HERMAN D. CLARK. Success is determined by one's ability to recognize opportunity, and to pursue this with a resolute and unflagging energy. It results from continued labor, and the man who thus accomplishes his purpose usually becomes an important factor in the business circles of the community with which he is connected. Mr. Clark, a well-known silk manufacturer of Mt. Carmel, has, through such means, attained a leading place among the representative men of Hamden, and his well-spent and honorable life commands the respect of all.

The Clark family is one of the oldest and best known in New Haven county. Amos Clark, the great-grandfather of our subject, was a native of the town of Chatham, Middlesex Co., Conn., where he later owned and operated a farm. He served as an officer in the Colonial army during the Revolutionary war, and during the remainder of his life drew a pension of $112 per year from the government. He died in East Hampton, in the town of Chatham, and was buried in Lake View cemetery. In politics he was a Whig and in religious faith a Congregationalist. He married a Miss Sears, of East Hampton, who was also a member of the Congregational Church, and at her death was laid to rest in Lake View cemetery. In their family were five children: Amos, the grandfather of our subject; Abner, a physician; Philena, who married Nathan Hardin and had twelve children, one of whom was Gen. Hardin, of the Civil war; Annie, who married a Mr. Waters and had eleven children; and Sarah, who married a Mr. Meach, of East Haddam. All are now deceased.

Amos Clark, grandfather of our subject, was born Dec. 26, 1794, in Chatham and received a good common school education, which he put in practical use as a school teacher for several seasons. He also engaged in farming, and while still a young man sold clocks throughout the Southern States, and later sold books, etc., as a traveling salesman. He made his home in East Hampton, where he died, and his remains were interred in the Lake View cemetery. Religiously he was a member of the Congregational Church, and politically was first a Whig and later a Republican. In the town of Chatham he married Betsey Mary Smith, a native of that place and a daughter of Sparrow Smith, who belonged to an old and highly respected family, and enlisted in the Continental army during the Revolutionary war at the age of sixteen years. She too was a consistent member of the Congregational Church. Both she and her husband lived to the advanced age of ninety years. They had nine children, namely: Allen Cushman, a resident of Chatham; Amelia, deceased wife of C. Bevin; Orlando L., a retired manufacturer of Montreal, Canada; Richard Sparrow, father of our subject; Mary Elizabeth Norton, who married Reuben Payne, of Portland, Conn., and both are now deceased; Edward L., a retired citizen of New Haven; Herman D., also a resident of that city; Matilda, deceased wife of Leverett Sexton, of East Hampton; and Rufus Don, deceased.

Richard S. Clark, father of our subject, was born in East Hampton, Dec. 26, 1825, and during his boyhood attended the schools of his district and of New Haven, completing his education, however, at the Colchester Academy. He successfully engaged in teaching school for nine terms in Chatham, four terms in Glastonbury, and two terms in Portland and Wethersfield, Conn. For a time he worked at the manufacture of bells with Bevin Brothers, and then embarked in the same business on his own account in partnership with Messrs. Cough and Abel. Later he was connected with D. W. Watrous for eight years, during which time he established a branch manufactory at Montreal, Canada, of which his brother Orlando L. had charge. They finally dissolved partnership, Mr. Watrous taking the business at East Hampton, and Mr. Clark that at Montreal, which he continued to carry on until 1867, in that year selling out to his brother and coming to Hamden, where he also engaged in the manufacture of bells until 1882. During this time he became interested in the manufacture of silk, but after meeting with business reverses lived retired near Mt. Carmel, in the town of Hamden. He was a well read man, keeping thoroughly posted on matters of general interest and the leading questions and issues of the day. He was progressive and enterprising, and in disposition genial and pleasant. Religiously he was an earnest member of the Congregational Church, and politically always affiliated with either the Whig or Republican parties. He passed away June 17, 1900. On June 22, 1852, at Bolton, Conn., Mr. Clark married Miss Elizabeth Strong, a good Christian woman, who died in Hamden, in 1882, and was buried in Centerville cemetery. To them were born seven children, namely: George, a metal dealer in Boston; Herman D., our subject; Cornelia P. ("Nellie"), wife of Willis Doolittle; Amelia E., of Brooklyn, N. Y.; Clarence L., a resident of Brooklyn, N. Y.; Cleon R., a resident of New York; and one who died in infancy.

Herman D. Clark was born March 1, 1856, in East Hampton, Conn., and is indebted to the district schools of East Hampton, and the high schools of New Haven, for his educational privileges. During his youth he worked at the bell business with his father, and also became familiar with silk manufacture, so that when his father retired he was able to take up the business, and for the past twelve years has engaged in the manufacture of silk, furnishing employment to a number of hands. He is a thorough business man, energetic and progressive, and upright and honorable in all his dealings. He is a member of the Episcopal Church, and in politics is a Republican. Fraternally he affiliates with Day Spring Lodge, No. 30, F. & A. M., of Hamden, of which he is a past master.

On Oct. 9, 1880, Mr. Clark was married, in North Haven, to Miss Ida E. Fowler.

CHARLES F. TUTTLE (deceased), for many years a well-known business man of New Haven, was a native of Connecticut, born April 25, 1831, in New Haven, in the old Tuttle homestead, a small wooden structure located on the site of his late commodious residence.

The first of the family in this country was William Tuttle, who was born in 1690, in Devonshire, England, where he married, and whence, in the year 1635, he came to this country with his wife and several children, on the ship "Planter." He arrived in Boston, Mass., in July, after a voyage of some ten weeks, and became what was in those days called a husbandman, while it also appears on the records of a petition on a bill in Boston, Mass., that he was a merchant some time in the year 1637. Together with Eaton and Davenport and others he came to New Haven in the interests of the Colony, to choose a suitable location for settlement, and Quinnipiack, in what is now the town of North Haven, was selected as the most suitable spot. They built some log houses, and left seven men in charge, to remain over the winter, the remainder of the party returning to Boston. In 1638 this William Tuttle came with his family to what is now New Haven and settled on a lot of land on the square now bounded by Grove, State, Elm and Church streets, it being one of eight allotments into which the square was divided; and it was on a part of this purchase that the subject of our sketch was living at the time of his death.

Jonathan Tuttle, son of William, was born, it is supposed, in 1637, and the church records of his birthplace, Charlestown, Mass., show that he was baptized July 8, that year. About 1670 he began a settlement at what is now the town of North Haven. For many years the planters there attended church and buried their dead at New Haven. Jonathan Tuttle built a bridge, known as the "Tuttle bridge," over the Quinnipiack river at North Haven, and by a decree of the court he was allowed to collect twopence in money for each man and horse crossing the bridge, and threepence in barter, exceptions being made in the cases of deputies going to and from court. He was also permitted to take moderate compensation for refreshments of any kind (except strong drinks) furnished by him to travelers. In February, 1704-05, he consigned to his brother Joseph a one-sixth part of three divisions that were left to him by his father in a land grant. Jonathan Tuttle died in 1707, and in the following year his son Simon was appointed administrator of his estate.

Simon Tuttle, mentioned in the foregoing, was, according to various North Haven records, born March 11, 1671, and his gravestone is the oldest in the North Haven burial ground. He died July 6, 1725, the owner of eighty-four acres in the Blue Hills, near Mt. Carmel, and his estate was valued at £847.

Isaiah Tuttle, son of Simon, was born July 10, 1704, was an ensign in 1737, a deacon of the Congregational Church, a justice of the peace, and much employed in settling estates. He lived in New Haven for thirty-five years.

Jonathan Tuttle, son of Isaiah, born May 19, 1728, settled in the southwest corner of the town of Wallingford, near the foot of the Blue Hills. He died May 29, 1793, aged sixty-five years.

David Justus Tuttle, son of Jonathan, and the grandfather of our subject, was born Jan. 27, 1765, in the town of Hamden, New Haven county, in the vicinity of Mt. Carmel. He married Polly Tuttle, and their son, Jesse, served in the war of 1812.

Julius Tuttle, son of David J., and the father of our subject, was born Dec. 2, 1798, in the town of Wallingford, and died in February, 1888. He built the Tuttle homestead in New Haven, and lived there for years. This home is one of the oldest brick houses on the street. In the forties Julius Tuttle removed to Hamden township, after having suffered the loss of his house on College street, New Haven, by fire. His infant son, Charles F., was in the cradle at the time, and in the fright and hurry was forgotten. Several Yale students entered the burning building and rescued the child, and, taking him to the old North College, cared for him until he was returned to his distracted family.

Charles F. Tuttle (son of Julius), whose name opens this sketch, at an early age entered the John E. Lovell school, and finished his education at the "Gunnery," at Washington, Conn. On completing his studies he entered the grocery store of Howard Ensign, brother of the late Wooster Ensign. Subsequently he was clerk for John B. Beecher, an old merchant of Broadway, and later of the Ives-Beecher Co. of New York. In 1848 the Tuttle business was established in Broadway by William Tuttle (brother of our subject), who died several years ago. Charles F. Tuttle was then clerk. In a few years William Tuttle was succeeded by another brother, Allen, who died in 1861. Allen Tuttle retired in 1856, and Charles F. Tuttle became the sole proprietor and continued the business for forty-five years.

Mr. Tuttle died of paralysis Sept. 30, 1899, at his residence, No. 122 College street. He was a conservative business man, upright in his dealings and well-liked; contributed much for charity; but never favored having his name exposed in connection with his giving; and gave largely to Christ Church, where the family attend, and to other institutions. He was kind-hearted, and helped financially many who were experiencing business reverses. Socially he was a member of the F. & A. M., Hiram Lodge, and also of New Haven Commandery, Knights Templar. Mr. Tuttle took much pleasure in driving, and made frequent trips to his large farm in Hamden, while nearly every day, for several years, during the summer, he would visit his summer home at Stony Creek, among the Thimble Islands, where his family was sojourning. In 1856 Mr. Tuttle, in company with Philip Pinkerman and Jas. King, an aeronaut, ascended in a balloon from New Haven "Green;" they sailed over the Sound and drifted to a point of land on Giver's Island, one of the Thimble Islands, which Mr. Tuttle subsequently bought, and which is now in the possession of the family. This was the first balloon seen in New Haven.

In 1857 Mr. Tuttle married Mary C., daughter of Clark Serry, and they had one child, Charles Allen, born Nov. 30, 1858, who, with his mother, is now living at the old home, which is surrounded by Yale College. This land, or allotment, was where Yale College was first founded, and for thirty years was the only land owned by the Yale Association; in fact it was one of a long series of purchases extending through a period of one hundred years. This land has been in the possession of only five parties since its original purchase from the Indians, William Tuttle being the last before it went into the possession of Yale College.

CHARLES ALLEN TUTTLE, son of Charles F. Tuttle, was born Nov. 30, 1858, and educated at the Episcopal Academy, Cheshire, Conn., from which institution he was graduated in 1878. He was a member of the class of 1884 at Yale College. In 1882 he was one of the founders of the New Haven Morning News, and was associated with that paper three years; then was engaged as a general broker in New Haven from 1885 to 1889, after which he was associated with his father in business. He is now retired.

Charles A. Tuttle has been twice married. On April 1, 1888, he wedded Florence I. Graham, of New Haven, who died Jan. 12, 1890. On Oct. 15, 1893, Mr. Tuttle married (second) Juliet Vibbert Gibbons, of Middletown, Conn. Mr. Tuttle has traveled extensively, and is of a literary turn of mind, very popular, and, withal, public-spirited and generous.

ALBERT FORBES, a well-known market gardener and dairy farmer of East Haven, was born in that town on the farm where Alexander Richmond now resides, July 15, 1825, and is a son of Samuel Forbes, who was also born in East Haven, in 1790. The grandfather, Samuel Forbes, Sr., was a native of Halifax, Nova Scotia, and a sea captain, commanding a vessel running between this country and the West Indies. He married Elizabeth Auger, and was lost at sea when the father of our subject was but eight years old. In his family were three children, the others being Amy and Mary. Throughout life Samuel Forbes, Jr., followed the occupation of a farmer, and soon after his marriage removed to the farm where our subject was born. He married Betsey Forbes, daughter of Eli Forbes, both of whom were natives of East Haven, and she was third in order of birth in a family of five children, namely: Morris, Isaac, Betsey, Almira, and Sally, who died young. She died in 1873, at the age of eighty-three years, and her husband in 1874, at the age of eighty-four. They had five children: Albert, our subject; Sarah, wife of Isaac Culver, living near Fair Haven; Jennette, who died in 1883; Jerome, who died young; and Jerome (2nd), who died in 1884.

The subject of this sketch attended the common schools of East Haven and Joseph Rodgers' private school on Townsend avenue. He remained with his father upon the home farm until thirty-two years of age, and in 1854 erected the house which he still occupies. He has successfully engaged in market gardening and dairy farming, and in 1849 was owner of the sailing vessel "Friendship," which was destroyed by fire at sea while on a voyage to the Sandwich Islands that year.

Mr. Forbes was married, April 8, 1857, to Miss Harriet C. Hemingway, of Fair Haven, who was born in 1832, and they had two children: Elizabeth A., now the wife of Clifford Street; and Sarah, who died in 1882, at the age of thirteen years. Politically Mr. Forbes is a Jacksonian Democrat, and has filled the office of selectman in a most creditable and satisfactory manner. Honorable and upright in all his dealings he has met with well-deserved success in life, and can say what few men can, that he has never borrowed a dollar during his entire life. He is highly respected and esteemed by all who know him for his sterling worth and strict integrity.

JAMES TOOTHE, foreman of the soldering department of the Meriden Britannia factory, is one of the city's best known and highly esteemed citizens. A native of England, he was born Feb. 12, 1842, in the great industrial city of Birmingham, son of Thomas and Jane (Ward) Toothe, the former of whom was a son of James Toothe, also of Birmingham, who in turn was a son of a Thomas Toothe, who followed the trade of shoemaker in that city, where he was known as a respected citizen and consistent member of the Church of England.

Thomas Toothe, son of James, was born in 1802, and learned the trade of metal spinner, at which he worked for a number of years. In his native city he married Jane Ward, who was born in Birmingham, daughter of William Ward, a bricklayer, both of whom died in Birmingham. There were ten children born to Thomas and Jane Toothe, namely: William, who is vice-president of the Nathan Manufacturing Co., of New York, whose daughter, Jennie Ward Toothe, married Dr. O. J. D. Hughes, consul general at Coburg, Germany; Charles, who is a metal spinner and resides in Wallingford; James, of this biography; Henry, a traveling salesman, who resides in Brooklyn, N. Y.; Thomas, who died in infancy; Thomas (2), who died in infancy; Mary, who died young; Sophia, who died unmarried; Sarah Maria Elizabeth, who died at the age of eight years; and Alfred, who died young. The mother of these children was a consistent and worthy member of the Church of England, and was ever a devoted wife and loving mother. After her death, in her native city, Mr. Toothe with his sons emigrated to America and located in Meriden, Conn., where the remainder of his life was passed. Here he died in 1882 after some years of retirement from active life, and his remains repose in West cemetery. He was a devoted member of the Established Church in his native country, and always attended the Episcopal Church in Meriden. His simple, gentlemanly demeanor won the respect of all who knew him.

James Toothe, son of Thomas, received his early education in the school conducted by the Baptist Church, experience, however, completing his instruction. At the age of fourteen years he started to learn the Britannia business, and served an apprenticeship of seven years, following which he worked as a journeyman in his native land, receiving excellent wages as he was competent to do good work. His brothers were already established in America, and in 1871 he came also, spending a short time in New York City, and coming thence to Meriden, where he has resided for the past thirty years. Mr. Toothe has been all this time identified with the Britannia Co., of that city, his efficiency being recognized by his appointment, in 1895, as foreman in the soldering department, and for the past seven years he has capably filled a position requiring close and careful attention, complete knowledge of details, and considerable executive ability.

In 1864 Mr. Toothe was married, at St. Ann's Church, in Birmingham, England, to Lucy Baker, who was born in that city, daughter of William Baker; the latter lived to the advanced age of ninety years, dying in his Birmingham home. Mr. Toothe owns a comfortable home which he built on Linsley avenue, in 1884, and here he and his most estimable wife pass a life of happiness and contentment, the center of a large circle of friends. Both are members of All Saints' Episcopal Church, Meriden. Mr. Toothe has taken part in the political life of the city to some extent, and in 1886 was elected, on the Republican ticket, a member of the city council, from the Third ward, serving most efficiently on the Park and License committees. Fraternally he is connected with Enterprise Lodge, No. 880, K. of Honor, and has been treasurer of that organization. He is a very pleasant, agreeable gentleman, domestic in his tastes and a lover of his home. Both he and his wife delight to offer its hospitality, and they number among their personal friends the best people in Meriden.

DANIEL COLWELL, one of the originators of the great social and benefit order of the Roman Catholics, the Knights of Columbus, is a well-known business man and public servant in New Haven, Conn. He was born in North Adams, Mass., July 7, 1848, a son of Bernard and Catherine (Reilly) Colwell.

Bernard Colwell was born in County Leitrim, Province of Connaught, Ireland. With a firm belief in the glowing tales of the opportunities offered to young men in the New World, Mr. Colwell determined to make an effort to secure a new home in America. Accordingly he crossed the Atlantic and located at various places, finally moving to Troy, N. Y., and in 1846 moving thence to North Adams, Mass. In his early life in Ireland he was a weaver, but after coming to this country he worked at the trade of stone mason. When the Civil war threatened to disrupt the Union he promptly shouldered his musket, and went forth to battle for his adopted land, being assigned to the 13th Vt. V. I. Before leaving Ireland Mr. Colwell married Catherine Reilly, who passed away in North Adams, in 1865, the mother of six sons and one daughter. Of these children we have the following record: Patrick, born in Ireland, resides in Plymouth, Mass.; Mary A., born in Montreal, Canada, died in Pittsfield, Mass., in 1870; John, born in Montreal, died in Pittsfield, Mass., in 1893; Bernard, born in Millerton, N. Y., was killed in battle June 18, 1864; Reilly, born in Schaghticoke, N. Y., served in the 49th Mass. V. I. in the Civil war, and lives in Pittsfield, Mass.; William, born in Schaghticoke, N. Y., resides in Pownal, Vt.; Daniel Colwell is the subject of sketch. Bernard Colwell, the father, died in 1886, highly respected for his many sterling qualities. His family ancestry can be traced back a thousand years in Ireland.

Daniel Colwell received his education in the public schools, and when quite young took up the burden of life for himself by working in a cotton factory. At the age of fourteen he went to Washington Co., N. Y., and there was apprenticed to the boot maker's trade. On July 15, 1865, he came to New Haven and began work at his trade. He prospered from the start, and for years kept a shoe store in Congress avenue.

Mr. Colwell has always been interested in public affairs, and since attaining his majority has taken an active interest in politics. He was elected town constable in 1876, and was continued in office until he resigned seven years later. For years he was court officer of the Superior Criminal Court, and had charge of many noted prisoners, including the Malley boys, Anderson, the murderer, and many others. He was one of the organizers of the Sarsfield Guard, and was also identified with the social order known as the "Red Knights," from which sprang the great Catholic order Knights of Columbus. This last order, now so well known and so strong throughout the country, was organized for the purpose of giving the men of the Church of Rome a social and benefit order like the Masonic fraternity of the Protestants. In Mr. Colwell's office was held the first meeting to perfect an organization; he it was who drafted the articles of incorporation, and he was chairman of the committee that filed the constitution and report of the order. He was also chairman of the committee on Ritual, and prepared the original three degrees, and ceremonies of institution and installation. In 1884 Mr. Colwell was elected general secretary of the order, and has ever since held that position. He is also prominently identified with the Knights of St. Patrick, of which he is at present the efficient president.

On Dec. 28, 1868, Daniel Colwell was united in marriage with Miss Catherine B. Mullen, daughter of Hugh Mullen, of New Haven, where she was born. Seven children have shed their bright sunshine on this happy home: Edward B., born Oct. 28, 1871; Margaret M., May 14, 1873; Daniel, Jr., in 1875 (died in 1878); William, in 1878 (died the same year); Francis A., in 1881; Catherine J., March 9, 1883; and Alice, Aug. 4, 1885.

JAMES C. KENWORTHY, foreman of the shipping department of Manning, Bowman & Co., and fire commissioner of the city of Meriden, was born May 26, 1851, in Tariffville, Conn.

James Kenworthy, his father, was a native of Leeds, Yorkshire, England, where he learned the trade of silversmith, and was engaged in the manufacture of German silver ware. There he married Elizabeth Worsley, who bore him six children, all of whom are residents of Meriden, namely: Samuel; Eda, widow of George Noble; Mary, wife of James Morris Tolles, a police officer; Annie, wife of William Tyler; Sarah (Sadie) and James C. The last two were born in Connecticut. About 1842 he left his native home, with his wife and four children, crossed the Atlantic on a sailing vessel and landed at New York. Proceeding at once to Hartford Co., Conn., he located at Spoonville, in the town of East Granby, and began the production of German silver forks and spoons. He was the first to introduce figures on these goods in this country, but did not protect his invention by taking out a patent, and was shortly driven out of the business by other manufacturers with large capital. Selling out his business to Charles Parker, of Meriden, about 1857, he took charge of the latter's spoon shop at Yalesville for some years. For a short time he worked in the Parker shop in Meriden, and then went to the Meriden Silver Plate Co., as a burnisher. His last years were spent in the service of Manning, Bowman & Co., and he continued to work every day up to the time of his death, which occurred in August, 1899, at the age of eighty years. On the morning of the day he died, he rose and prepared for work as usual, but feeling somewhat weak, returned to his bed, where his life passed out before the day was done. His body was interred in Walnut Grove cemetery. His life was modeled by Christian standards, and he was universally respected as an honest man. In political matters he affiliated with the Democratic party. His wife died Dec. 31, 1891, and was buried in Walnut Grove cemetery. She was a member of the M. E. Church, a devoted wife and mother, a good, Christian woman.

James C. Kenworthy was an infant when his parents removed to Meriden, where he attended the district schools. At an early age he began to learn the trade of painter under Capt. Barrio, with whom he spent three years. After working as a journeyman painter at Middletown three years, he returned to Meriden and entered the factory of the Meriden Silver Plate Co., and became a burnisher, continuing in this employ five years. His connection with Manning, Bowman & Co. began in 1877, and for two years he was engaged in burnishing. Since that time he has been in the shipping department, holding the position of foreman during the past twenty-three years. His uniform courtesy and fair dealing have made him alike popular with employers and employes, and he enjoys the good will and respect of a large circle of acquaintances.

On June 4, 1871, Mr. Kenworthy married, in Meriden, Miss Sophia Williams, who was born in Westfield, Conn., daughter of the late William and Anna (Hughes) Williams, the former a native of England, the latter of Wales. Mrs. Kenworthy is a sister of Mrs. Hubert Little, elsewhere mentioned in this work. Only the last of three children born to Mr. and Mrs. Kenworthy is living. William H. died in infancy, and Maude W. in girlhood. Ivy June is a student at the public schools.

The upright and industrious nature of Mr. Kenworthy naturally attracted the attention of his fellow citizens, and he has been called upon to serve in a public capacity. Elected on the Democratic ticket a member of the City Council, from the Fifth ward, he served on the Fire and Street committees. He was appointed a member of the Fire Commission by Mayor Ives and re-appointed by Mayor West, still holding that position. His previous experience had well fitted him for the duties of this responsible station, as he was one of the first members of the Charter Oak Volunteer Fire Company, in which he served upwards of six years. His wife is a member of the Broad Street Baptist Church, with whose faith and work he is in sympathy, and both are esteemed as honest, industrious, useful citizens of the "Silver City."

ROYAL M. BASSETT. The Bassett family, long one of the most prominent and influential in New Haven county, traces its lineage through an unbroken chain, extending through two hundred and fifty years, to John Bassett of England, and its history is indissolubly connected with the story of the virtues and the faults, the trials and the triumphs, of the early New England Colonists, as well as with the growth and development of Connecticut.

Several generations of Bassetts have been born in Derby, with the building up of which city they have been prominently and honorably identified. More than two and one-half centuries have elapsed since Robert Bassett, son of John, sought a home in the New World. The precise date of his immigration cannot be stated, but he is known to have been a resident of New Haven in 1643. He was a shoemaker by trade, and held the now extinct office of "town drummer." From New Haven he removed to Stratford. He reared a family of several children. Full details of his life history are wanting, but he appears to have been a man of profound conviction and pronounced individuality. He was one of a number of citizens of Stratford and Stamford who caused not a little commotion in their day and generation through their vigorous protest against the denial of the right of suffrage to non-church members; and it is believed that the woman who bore his name and was executed for witchcraft in 1651 was his wife. Robert Bassett (2), son of Robert, the next in the line of Royal M. Bassett's ancestors, was a sergeant in the militia. He was born in Stratford, and lived and died there, passing away August 5, 1720. Samuel Bassett, son of Robert (2), was the first of the family to settle in Derby. He went thither in 1716 or 1717, to occupy and cultivate a farm given him by his father, at the foot of Great Hill, which is still known as the "Bassett place." He took a lively interest in military affairs, being commissioned ensign in 1722, lieutenant in 1732, and captain in 1735. He was held in high regard by his neighbors, and for several years filled the office of justice of peace. On Jan. 1, 1719, he married Deborah Bennett, of Newtown. Ebenezer Bassett, son of Samuel and Deborah (Bennett), was born upon the paternal farm, and died May 20, 1760. James Bassett, son of Ebenezer, born Sept. 16, 1757, was the great-grandfather of Royal M. He died Oct. 24, 1848.

William Bassett, the grandfather of the subject of this article, was born in Derby July 18, 1781, and was for many years a successful merchant there, dying there Nov. 28, 1863, at the advanced age of eighty-two years. He married Lucy Smith, also of Derby, and their only child, Sheldon, was the father of Royal M.

Sheldon Bassett was one of the leading, substantial and influential citizens of his native place. He held the office of town clerk. He was associated with his father in business during his early life, but in later years was identified with the Birmingham Iron Foundry Co., which was incorporated in 1850. He was a prominent Odd Fellow, having held the highest offices in the State within the gift of that fraternity, and organizing its first lodge in Derby. Mr. Bassett died June 26, 1864, honored and mourned by the community at large; and warmly beloved by the innumerable friends whom he had attracted to himself by his amiable disposition and his sterling moral worth. He married Harriet L. Hull, who survived him until July 22, 1872. She was a daughter of Lieut. Samuel Hull, and a niece of those distinguished patriots whose name are as familiar to every American, Gen. William and Commodore Isaac Hull. To Sheldon Bassett and his wife were born seven children, of whom Royal M. was second in order of birth. The eldest son, William H., was born Oct. 21, 1827, and died July 18, 1864; he was a hardware merchant in New York. Lavinia H., the third child and eldest daughter, became the wife of Thomas D. De Forest, of Derby, and died Aug. 7, 1868. Lucy M. died in infancy. Lucy P. married Charles F. Colt, of New York, and died May 25, 1872. Ellen S. became Mrs. George H. Norton, of New Haven, and is also deceased, having passed away Oct. 26, 1853. Theodore S., the youngest member of the family, is a manufacturer of rubber goods in New York.

Royal M. Bassett was born in Derby Oct. 22, 1828. His training at the public schools was supplemented by a year at Haddam Academy, and two years' attendance at the Stiles and Truman French Academy, at New Haven. His father destined him for business pursuits, and time has abundantly and convincingly demonstrated the soundness of the parental judgment. From youth and through his entire life Mr. Bassett has manifested commercial genius of the highest order. He has displayed a comprehension of mercantile possibilities, a ready grasp of existing situations, and a capability for handling enterprises of the highest magnitude, which are exceptional. The ability and fidelity with which he has met and discharged the onerous responsibilities devolving upon him are attested by the universal esteem in which he is held by the business world. He began his long and successful career as secretary of the Birmingham Iron Foundry Co., which, as has been said above, was organized in 1850. This office he filled until the death of his father, Sheldon Bassett, in 1864, when he succeeded to the presidency, his brother Theodore S. becoming secretary and treasurer. In addition to his connection with the concern named, he has extensive business interests in various parts of the country. From 1857 until 1887 he was associated with Nelson H. Downs in the manufacture of hoop skirts and corsets. The style of the firm was Downs & Bassett, and the co-partnership continued until Mr. Downs' death. Mr. Bassett was also one of the incorporators of the Housatonic Water and the Derby Gas Companies. With a keen foresight of the wants of the Pacific railways, he has built and operated extensive rolling mills along the lines of the Union and Kansas Pacific Companies. He has also been connected with various railroad enterprises in the far West, having been president of the Utah Northern and trustee for the bondholders of the Utah Western Railway Co.; after it was reorganized, in Utah and Nevada, he was chosen president. He has also been a director of the Naugatuck Railroad Co. since 1870.

From the foregoing sketch of Mr. Bassett's life the reader may glean the more important facts of his ancestry and his business career. Of his personal characteristics, it is enough to add that he is a public-spirited citizen, a devoted father, a true friend and an upright man. He is deeply interested in the cause of popular education, and was for fifteen or twenty years chairman of the Derby school board. He is a Freemason, being a member of King Hiram Lodge, No. 6, of Derby. His political affiliation is with the Democratic party.

On Nov. 9, 1858, Mr. Bassett married Miss Frances J. Stratton, a daughter of Sherwood E. Stratton, Esq., of Bridgeport. She died Feb. 14, 1876, and Mr. Bassett has not married again. To their union came three children: Lucy, who died Feb. 4, 1879, at the age of nineteen; Royal E., a lovable boy, who passed out of the world Jan. 9, 1865; and Sheldon H. The last named was born April 11, 1867, at Birmingham, Conn., and for a period of three years was connected with the Bradley Pulverizing Co., of Boston, who manufacture machines for crushing Cement Co., of Iola, Kans., whose main office is at ores. He is now at the head of the Iola Portland St. Louis, Mo., in which city Mr. Bassett makes his home. On May 3, 1896, he was married, at Kansas City, to Miss Florence Shaffenbergh.

HENRY MINOR. Ninety-two years of life, filled with useful effort and crowned with the respect and esteem of his fellow citizens, have left this venerable resident of Wolcott still hale and hearty, with every prospect of continued health for years to come. He has served as town clerk for over half a century, and his faithful service in public life as well as his personal worth make the following history of general interest not only to the readers of the present day but to future historians of this section.

The progenitor of the Minor family in America was Thomas Minor, a native of Somerset, England, and one of the four children born to Clement Minor, who died in Somersetshire March 31, 1640. The son crossed the Atlantic and took up his residence in Stonington, Conn., in 1683. His children were John, who located in Woodbury, Conn.; Thomas; Clement, who settled in New London; Ephraim, who settled in Stonington; Judah; Manassah, who settled in Stonington; Joseph; Samuel; Ann; Maria; Eunice; Elizabeth; and Hannah.

Jedediah Minor, the great-grandfather of our subject, and a descendant of Clement Minor, was born in Lyme, Conn., and came to Wolcott about 1756, locating near Wolcott Center, where he owned land and engaged in farming until his death. His remains were interred in Wolcott cemetery. He married Elizabeth Marvin, of Lyme, and to them were born ten children: Betsy, wife of William Roberts, of Bristol; Joseph; Esther, wife of Samuel Atkins; Daniel, who was a Revolutionary soldier, and died of smallpox while in the army; Caleb; Lucretia, wife of Michael Dayton, of Watertown; Lucy, wife of Jesse Alcox; Theda, wife of William Barnes, of Southington; Joshua; and Elizabeth.

Joseph Minor, our subject's grandfather, was born in Lyme, and was twelve years of age when he came with his parents to Wolcott. He engaged in farming throughout life upon the farm where his father first located, and where our subject now resides. For seven long years he fought for American independence as a soldier of the Revolutionary war and rose to the rank of sergeant. He was a supporter of the Democratic party, and as one of the prominent citizens of his community he was called upon to fill public offices. He died on the home farm, and was buried in the old Wolcott cemetery. He wedded Mary Upson, daughter of Capt. Samuel Upson, and to them were born children as follows: One who died in infancy, May 3, 1783; Archibald, born May 23, 1784; Joseph, April 23, 1786; Wealthy (wife of Elihu Moulthrop), Dec. 8, 1787; Marcus, July 17, 1790; Marvin, in August, 1792; Nancy (wife of Orrin Hall), July 12, 1798; and Mary (wife of Ephraim Hall), Nov. 23, 1800.

Archibald Minor, father of our subject, spent his entire life on the old homestead in Wolcott and lived to a ripe old age. By occupation he was a farmer, and in politics he was first a Democrat and later a Republican. He was an accomplished penman, and was gifted with a rich voice. He was recognized as one of the most valued and useful citizens of his community, was honored with many town offices, and most efficiently served as justice of the peace, selectman of Wolcott, town clerk for twenty-five years, and member of the State Legislature when sessions were held both in New Haven and Hartford. On Oct. 27, 1808, he married Betsy Tuttle, a native of Plymouth, Conn., and a daughter of Daniel Tuttle. She died on the home farm, and was laid to rest by the side of her husband in Wolcott cemetery. Both were members of the Episcopal Church, and were held in high regard by all who knew them. They had two children, of whom our subject is the older. Harriet, born Dec. 8, 1811, married George W. Wilton, of Waterbury.

Henry Minor, whose name introduces this review, was born Dec. 17, 1809, and is now the oldest citizen of Wolcott. He attended the district schools of Wolcott and also a private school taught by John Clarke, but is mostly self-educated. He never left the parental roof, and when old enough to be of any assistance he began to aid in the work of the farm, having been engaged in agricultural pursuits on the homestead ever since. In 1836 he was united in marriage with Miss Sarah J. Clark, a native of Waterbury, and a daughter of Elias and Eliza Clark. To them was born one son, Theron C. A., now a resident of Waterbury, who was married Dec. 1, 1861, to Sarah J. Warner, a daughter of Erastus Warner, of Wolcott, and has two children, Martin W. and Henry W. Mrs. Minor, who was a most estimable woman and faithful helpmeet, died in October, 1895, and was laid to rest in the old cemetery.

Politically Mr. Minor has been a lifelong Democrat, casting his first Presidential vote for Andrew Jackson, and in 1896 voting for Palmer and Buckner. One of the prominent and influential citizens of his community, he has been called upon to fill a number of official positions of honor and trust, having served as assessor, justice of the peace, and selectman of Wolcott for twenty years. In 1847 he was first elected town clerk, and has since filled that office in a most creditable and satisfactory manner, having served as such longer than any other town clerk in the State. He has represented his town in the Legislature four times, both at New Haven and Hartford. He is still quite active, possesses an excellent memory, and keeps well posted on the questions and issues of the day, as well as on topics of general interest. He is widely and favorably known, and is one of the most honored residents of his section of the county.

DR. AMOS SHEPARD BLAKE, an inventor of considerable note, the first resident dentist at Waterbury, and for many years one of its leading manufacturers and citizens, was born Jan. 18, 1812, in Brookfield, Vt., son of Joseph and Prudence (Shepard) Blake.

Mr. Blake received his education at Southmade Academy and in Scott's Military School, at Montpelier, Vt. He studied dentistry under the direction of his brother, Dr. E. W. Blake, and resided at Alstead, N. H., Montpelier and Chelsea, Vt., and Watertown, Conn., before coming to Waterbury, in 1844. Here he established himself, as the first resident dentist of the place, and for a number of years enjoyed an extensive practice. From 1852 to 1855 he was superintendent of mines in the Lake Superior region, making his home at Eagle Harbor, Mich. With that exception Dr. Blake made Waterbury his home from 1844 until called to his reward, Feb. 18, 1895. At the beginning of the Civil war he withdrew from the practice of his profession and became interested in manufacturing. He was quite a genius, and of an inventive turn of mind. During the winter of 1830-31 he constructed the first locomotive ever seen in New England. It was designed to illustrate the practicability of travel by railroad, and was large enough to carry two passengers at a time, around a hall, on a circular track. This model engine was extensively exhibited throughout the New England States by Asa Harrington, of Middlesex, Vt. During his lifetime Dr. Blake invented some nineteen devices and procured patents on the same. During the Civil war the Doctor was superintendent of the American Flask & Cap Co., which in a single year delivered one hundred tons of percussion caps to the National Government. He was the originator of Blake, Lamb & Co., in 1865, manufacturers of articles patented by himself, the firm consisting then of Dr. Blake, William Lamb and Henry R. Chambers. The concern was incorporated in 1867, with a capital of $9,000, Dr. Blake becoming the first president. There was no change in the company until the death of Mr. Lamb, in 1872, at which time the other members purchased the interest previously held by him. Dr. Blake sold his interest in 1883.

For a number of years while in Vermont Dr. Blake was one of the judges of jail delivery, where until recent years the law authorized imprisonment for debt. He was one of the selectmen of Waterbury in 1846, and during his stay in Michigan he was a county commissioner. He held the position of councilman, alderman, assessor and road commissioner, and represented Waterbury in the State Legislature in 1869, 1874 and 1875. He was one of the originators of the Riverside Cemetery Association, and was active in promoting the scheme for raising money by subscription for the cemetery site. He also took an active part in naming the streets of Waterbury and getting the street names officially adopted.

Dr. Blake married Eliza Cordelia, daughter of Henry Woodward, of Chelsea, Vt., and children as follows were born of this union: Mrs. John A. Hitchcock, of Liverpool, England; Caroline B., wife of Edward T. Root; and two sons who died in childhood. The mother of these died Feb. 25, 1895.

HON. ARTHUR H. BARTHOLOMEW, first mayor of the city of Ansonia, is one of the most active business men and most enterprising citizens, and has long held a high place in the esteem of the public. He is a son of the late Jeremiah H. Bartholomew, and was given unusual educational facilities in his youth. After an attendance at the public schools he entered the "Gunnery," at Washington, Conn., and from there went to Auburndale, Mass., where he spent several months in an academy. At the age of sixteen he began his apprenticeship in the works of the Ansonia Brass & Copper Co. He was quick to take advantage of every opportunity, and his insight into the mechanism of clocks soon made him invaluable to the company. He rapidly rose to an honored place, but he was ever looking to the time he could go into business for himself, and was endeavoring by strict economy to save enough to make his start. In 1881 he saw his ambition realized, and he became a member of the firm of Phelps & Bartholomew, and at once assumed a well-deserved place in the manufacturing world. The Phelps & Bartholomew Co. manufacture clocks, and their goods find a ready market. Through much competition and considerable persecution their business has rapidly increased, owing to the reliability of their goods. In 1886 the firm became a corporation, and now over one hundred hands are employed.

Mr. Bartholomew has become largely interested in many concerns outside of the factory, and has worthily filled several positions of honor and trust, among them that of director of the Ansonia National Bank, trustee of the Ansonia Savings Bank, president of the Pine Grove Cemetery Association, director of the Ansonia Water Co., secretary of the Ansonia Hall Co., and president of the Ansonia Furniture and Carpet Co. He is also a member of the Ansonia Board of Trade.

In spite of his many duties connected with his commercial enterprises, he has had time to look after the public welfare as few busy men find time to do. When Ansonia was incorporated as a city, he was elected for the first mayor, and his careful business administration has proven of inestimable benefit to the town, and established a precedent for succeeding magistrates. In his political affiliations he is a Republican, but in local affairs he endeavors to avoid all partisan dealing, and steadfastly adheres to his determination to keep out of the so-called "ring." While in office he was loyal to his friends, but at the same time he never lost sight of the fact that he was mayor of the city, and sworn to administer its affairs to the best of his ability, so that his appointments were often outside of the Republican ranks. Educational affairs find in him a warm friend, and for ten years he served as chairman of the board of education. So popular is he that when his name appears on a ticket it is sure to win consideration from men of all parties, as he acts wisely and well for the general good. During the time he was in the Legislature, 1886, 1887 and 1893, he served on the committee on Cities and Boroughs, and in 1887 and in 1893 he was House chairman of the committee on Corporations. His interest in his home city is unbounded, and he has given his hearty support to all things tending to develop its resources. Fraternally Mr. Bartholomew is a member of the Masonic and Odd Fellows organizations, having risen to the Knight Templar degree in the former. His home is one of the handsome modern residences of the city, and is substantially the same as that in which he passed his earlier days.

On Jan. 14, 1874, Mr. Bartholomew married Miss Henrietta E. Cable, of Oxford, Conn., and daughter of Horace and Ann (Curtis) Cable, and they have had four children, the eldest of whom, Emma, died when two years of age; the others are Henrietta Cable, Eloise, and Arthur H., Jr. Mrs. Bartholomew's father was a farmer by occupation, and was a file major of the State militia for many years. He died some thirty years ago, his wife ten years ago. Mrs. Bartholomew's grandfather Curtis was a prominent man, a civil engineer, and represented his district several years in the Connecticut Legislature.

JAMES PORTER, an honored and highly esteemed citizen of Waterbury, now living a retired life, is the oldest representative of the Porter family in that town. He is a descendant of Daniel Porter, an early settler of the Connecticut Colony, who was one of the first to locate in Farmington. Daniel Porter was a physician, and was licensed to practice by the General Court in 1654, his fees being established by law. He was also required to visit the sick in Hartford, Windsor, Wethersfield and Middletown. He was more particularly a bone setter. His death occurred in Farmington in 1690, and his remains were interred there. He and his wife, Mary, had the following children: Daniel, born Feb. 2, 1652, is mentioned below; Mary, born Feb. 5, 1654, married Eleazer Knowles, of Woodbury; Nehemiah, born Oct. 24, 1656, married Hannah Lumm, of Woodbury; Richard was born March 24, 1658; Anna, born in 1660, died unmarried; John, born Nov. 14, 1662, married Rebecca Woodford; and Samuel, born Oct. 24, 1665, was married in 1702 to Abigail Humphreys, of Simsbury.

Daniel Porter, son of Dr. Daniel, after reaching manhood moved to Waterbury, where he spent the remainder of his life, dying there Jan. 18, 1726. He married Deborah Holcomb (daughter of Joshua and Ruth (Sherwood) Holcomb), who died May 4, 1765, at the advanced age of ninety-three years. Their children were as follows: Daniel, born March 5, 1699, is mentioned below; James, born April 20, 1700, died in 1786; Thomas, born April 1, 1702, died in 1797; Deborah, born March 6, 1703, married James Baldwin, and died in Waterbury in January, 1801; Ebenezer, born Dec. 24, 1708, died in 1803; and Ann, born April 28, 1712, married Thomas Judd and (second) James Nicholas, and died at an old age. The father of these children was also a physician and surgeon, and in addition to his medical practice engaged in land surveying. He was quite a prominent citizen of Waterbury and died after making his home there for over half a century, leaving a large estate. His was a long-lived family. The Connecticut Journal of March 5, 1801, contains the following interesting item concerning persons whose descendants are numerous in this vicinity, and some of whom still give evidence that the vigor of the sturdy stock is but little impaired: "Died in Waterbury, Mrs. Deborah Baldwin, aged ninety-seven, daughter of Dr. Daniel Porter, Jr., one of the first settlers of Waterbury, who died at an advanced age. Her mother died aged ninety-three; her eldest brother, Dr. Daniel, died at seventy-six; her second brother, Dr. James Porter, at eighty-six; her third brother, Capt. Thomas Porter, at ninety-five; her fourth brother, Ebenezer, now living at ninety-three; and also one sister Ann (the wife of James Nichols), now living at ninety."

Daniel Porter (3) was born in Waterbury, and died there Nov. 14, 1772. Like his father and grandfather, he also engaged in the practice of medicine and surgery. He was a man of influence in his community, and was honored and respected by all who knew him. He owned a tract of land between East Main and Mill streets and Mad river, and lived on East Main street. On June 3, 1728, he married Hannah Hopkins, a daughter of John and Hannah Hopkins, and sister of Stephen and Timothy Hopkins. John Hopkins was a son of Stephen Hopkins and his wife Dorcas Bronson (daughter of John Bronson), and a grandson of John Hopkins. Daniel Porter and his wife Hannah had children as follows: Preserve, born Nov.

James Porter

23, 1729, was the eldest; Daniel, born March 17, 1731, was a physician and surgeon, died of small-pox in 1759 at Crown Point, while in the army; Hannah, born June 10, 1733, married Obediah Scoville; Timothy, born June 19, 1735, is mentioned below; Susanna, born July 7, 1737, married Daniel Killum and (second) John Cossett; and Anna, born Dec. 6, 1738, married David Bronson. The mother of these children died Dec. 31, 1739. By his second wife, Joanna, the father had two children: Elizabeth, who was married in 1764, to Ard Warner; and Jemima, was married in 1762 to Timothy Scoville.

Timothy Porter, son of Daniel Porter (3), was a lifelong resident of Waterbury. He, too, devoted his time and attention to the medical profession, was the principal practicing physician of his town and vicinity, and served as surgeon in the Revolutionary war. He was a man of marked ability, progressive and enterprising, and was a staunch advocate of higher education. He married Margaret Skinner, a daughter of Gideon Skinner, of Bolton, Conn. She was born in 1739, and died in 1813. In their family were seven children: Daniel, born Sept. 23, 1768, was the grandfather of our subject; Sylvia C. was born Feb. 24, 1771; Joseph, born Sept. 3, 1772, a physician, married Levinia Porter, and died May 6, 1848; Olive, born July 26, 1775, married Moses Hall; Anna, born April 5, 1777, married R. F. Welton; Chauncey, born April 24, 1779, moved to Pittsford, N. Y.; Timothy Hopkins, born Nov. 28, 1785, was a representative in the United States Congress about 1828.

Daniel Porter, grandfather of our subject, was a well-educated man and highly respected citizen of Waterbury. He was a surveyor, and also a lawyer of much ability, practicing in the justice courts of his town. He owned quite a large amount of land in Waterbury, where he spent his entire life. He always took an active part in politics and held many offices of trust and responsibility, including that of selectman. On June 9, 1789, he married Anna Clark, and they had six children, whose names and dates of birth were as follows: Horace, Sept. 30, 1790; Timothy, Jan. 30, 1792; Elias, May 14, 1795; Alma Anna (wife of William Orton), April 18, 1800; Daniel (a physician), May 20, 1805; and Joseph, July 11, 1807. Mrs. Anna (Clark) Porter was a daughter of Ingham Clark and his wife Sarah (Beach), who were married in 1767. Ingham Clark was a son of Israel and Mehitable (Ingham) Clark (married in 1743), a grandson of Samuel Clark (2) and his wife Mary Brown (married in 1694), a great-grandson of Samuel (1) and Hannah (Tuttle) Clark (married in 1672). Mrs. Mary (Brown) Clark, wife of Samuel (2), was a daughter of Ebenezer and Hannah (Vincent) Brown. Mrs. Hannah (Tuttle) Clark, wife of Samuel (1), was a daughter of John and Catherine (Lane) Tuttle (married in 1653), and granddaughter of William Tuttle.

Elias Porter, father of our subject, owned and operated a farm at Mill Plain, and always made his home in Waterbury, spending the latter part of his life with our subject. He died in 1871, at a ripe old age, and was laid to rest in Pine Grove cemetery. On Jan. 22, 1817, he married Alma Tyler, who was born Dec. 17, 1791, a daughter of Lyman and Esther (Hoadley) Tyler, of Prospect, Conn., who were married in 1791. Their only child was our subject. The mother died in 1866, and now sleeps by the side of her husband in Pine Grove cemetery. They were held in high regard by all who knew them. Politically the father was first a Federalist, later a Whig, and still later a Republican.

Lyman Tyler, father of Mrs. Elias Porter, was a son of Abraham Tyler, a grandson of Isaac and Susanna (Miles) Tyler (married in 1732), a great-grandson of John and Abigail (Hall) Tyler (married in 1694), and a great-great-grandson of William Tyler. Mrs. Abigail (Hall) Tyler was a daughter of Thomas and Grace Hall (married June 5, 1673), of whom the former, Thomas Hall, was a son of John and Jane (Woolen) Hall. Mrs. Esther (Hoadley) Tyler, mother of Mrs. Elias Porter, was a daughter of William (3) and Esther (Porter) Hoadley (married in 1761), a granddaughter of William (2) and Sarah (Frisbie) Hoadley (married in 1724), and a great-granddaughter of William (1) and Elizabeth (Frost) Hoadley. Mrs. Esther (Porter) Hoadley, wife of William (3), was a daughter of Joshua and Elizabeth (Burnham) Porter (married in 1734), and a granddaughter of Richard and Ruth Porter. Mrs. Sarah (Frisbie) Hoadley, wife of William (2), was a daughter of Eben Frisbie. Mrs. Elizabeth (Frost) Hoadley, wife of William (1), was a daughter of John and Mercy (Payne) Frost.

James Porter, whose name introduces this review, was born March 26, 1818, on the old homestead at Mill Plain, and during his boyhood attended the district schools and also the Waterbury Academy. He assisted his father in the operation of the farm until twenty years of age, when he commenced work in a woolen mill. Subsequently he was employed in a roller mill for six years, and in 1843 learned the trade of a caster at the John D. Johnson rolling mills, after which he was employed two years in the Brown & Elton rolling mills, and in the same capacity seventeen years in the Waterbury Brass Co.'s mill. For three years he was a caster for the Scovill Manufacturing Co., and then became a German-silver caster for the same firm, remaining with them until 1874, during which time he started silver casting at Wolcottville, Bristol and Thomaston. He then retired from business, and has since made his home on the East Farms road, in Waterbury. Although eighty-four years of age he still possesses all his faculties, and is quite active. He is an intellectual and well-informed man, of genial disposition and upright character. Mr. Porter cast his first presidential vote for William H. Harrison, the Whig candidate, and his last for William McKinley, the Republican nominee, being a staunch supporter of the Republican party and sound money principles. He is an earnest Christian, a member of the Episcopal Church, is domestic in his tastes, and is a loving husband and father.

On June 1, 1845, in Waterbury, Mr. Porter was united in marriage with Miss Sophia Beecher, a daughter of Benjamin Dutton and Pamela (Tuttle) Beecher. Her father was a well-known inventor, having invented, in 1835, the first propeller, which was used on canal boats, afterward on ocean steamers. Mrs. Porter is still living, and enjoys good health. Mr. and Mrs. Porter have five children, namely: (1) Emily Sophia was married July 1, 1868, to James Elliott, of Elmira, N. Y., and they had seven children—Nellie May, born March 28, 1869, died Dec. 10, 1877; James Porter, born Dec. 1, 1870, was married Nov. 28, 1895, to Ida Moakley, and they have two children, Irving Beecher (born Dec. 5, 1897) and James Porter (born Sept. 2, 1900); Sarah Beecher was born May 13, 1873; Fanny Amelia was born March 13, 1875; Sophia Alma, born Dec. 21, 1876; George Ward was born March 25, 1879; Charles Luther, born July 3, 1884, died Aug. 31, 1892. (2) Sarah Jane was married to John Hine Sept. 1, 1875, and has four children—John Wallace, born May 14, 1877; Mary Annie, born Jan. 9, 1879; George Ward, born Sept. 1, 1880; and Frederick William, born March 18, 1882. (3) James Ward Beecher was married Jan. 18, 1876, to Elizabeth Collins, and they have six children—John Beecher, born Oct. 28, 1876; Fannie Elizabeth, born July 9, 1878; Nellie Florence, born March 25, 1880; James Ward, born June 16, 1881; Bessie Sophia, born Aug. 11, 1882, died July 17, 1883, and Harry Clinton, born March 13, 1885. (4) Fannie Amelia and (5) Mary Florence (twins) are at home with their parents, to whom they are very devoted. They are ladies of culture and refinement, and are quite active and prominent members of the Daughters of the American Revolution, the Women's Club and other social organizations.

The following lines from Mr. Porter's pen are characteristic:

PSALM XXXII, 17.

Happy the truly honest man
With no alluring wile,
But cheerfully, he treats you well
In whom there is no guile.

He never will put on deceit
For sake of gaining spoil,
He is the one that you can trust
In whom there is no guile.

May the good Lord deliver us
From all that's low or vile;
So finally it will be said
In him there is no guile.

Dec. 26, 1901.

JAMES PORTER.

DAVID BROOKS, late of Brooks Vale, in the town of Cheshire, was a worthy representative of one of the prominent old families of New Haven county.

The first of the name to come to America were two brothers, Henry and John Brooks, both natives of the County of Chester, England. Henry was a staunch supporter of Oliver Cromwell, and fought under his banner. Upon the restoration of Charles II to the British throne many of the followers of Cromwell, known as Roundheads, fled to different parts of the world, a large number coming to America. Among the latter were Henry and John Brooks, who settled in New Haven about 1670, and were among the founders of New Haven Colony. Some time later they removed to Wallingford, and, about the beginning of the eighteenth century, took up land in a part of the Colony which was afterward set off from the town of Wallingford, and to which they gave the name of Cheshire, for their native county in England. Henry Brooks, who came from Cheshire, in England, became a land owner in Cheshire, Conn., and it was in his house that the first religious services in that place were held. He was an earnest, consistent Christian, and took a deep interest in the Cheshire Colony, and the infant church which he was instrumental in establishing. He was married Dec. 21, 1676, to Hannah Blakeley.

(II) Lieut. Thomas Brooks, son of Henry, was born in the New Haven Colony March 27, 1679, and about 1705 removed with his parents to Cheshire, where he spent the remainder of his life. He was deeply interested in public affairs, especially the welfare of his adopted town, and was the first to petition the General Assembly to organize the Congregational Church in Cheshire, in 1723, prior to which time religious services were held in his home. He died of smallpox May 18, 1732, and was buried in Cheshire. He was a true and earnest Christian, self-sacrificing and unselfish, doing all in his power to advance the educational and moral interests of his community, and his loss was deeply felt by the church. He secured his title as lieutenant in the militia. In Wallingford he married, March 25, 1701, Martha Hotchkiss, a native of that town, a daughter of Ensign Joshua Hotchkiss, and a granddaughter of Samuel and Elizabeth (Cleaverly) Hotchkiss. To this union were born ten children, whose names and dates of birth were as follows: Stephen, May 28, 1702; Marv, May 14, 1704; Thomas, Feb. 14, 1706; Enos, Feb. 15, 1708; Cornelius, Sept. 10, 1711; Martha, Feb. 21, 1714; Mehitable, Feb. 23, 1716; Benjamin, April 23, 1720; Henry, March 2, 1723; and Thankful, Dec. 10, 1725.

(III) Capt. Enos Brooks, son of Lieut. Thomas, was born Feb. 15, 1708, and spent his entire life in Cheshire, where he owned a large amount of land. Enos was the first Brooks to locate in the southwestern part of the town, now called Brooks Vale. There, in about 1732, he erected an old-style "lean-to" house, on the ground where the present Brooks homestead stands. There he died Sept. 22, 1771, and was laid to rest in the family burying plot in Cheshire cemetery. He was captain of a company in the militia, and was a liberal supporter and active member of the church. He was noted for his industrious habits, honorable dealings and sterling worth. His wife, Tamar, was born in 1706, and died Oct. 7, 1775. Her remains were also interred in Cheshire cemetery.

(IV) Rev. David Brooks, son of Capt. Enos, and the father of the man whose name introduces this article, was born in Cheshire, in 1744, and was graduated from Yale in 1768; he held the degree of Master of Arts. He was an ordained minister of the Congregational Church, but on account of the unsettled state of the country, due to the Revolution, was never pastor, permanently, of any church. At the request of his kinsman, Gen. David Wooster, he prepared and delivered a discourse in Derby, Conn., in 1774, on the religion of the Revolution. This discourse attracted much attention, was published and helped to move public sentiment in favor of the struggle for independence; a copy of this sermon is now in the possession of his descendants. He was a soldier in the Continental army, being among the first quota of men furnished by the parish of New Cheshire, and was in the service for eight months; he entered as a private, but was afterward appointed quartermaster of his regiment. He was a member of the Legislature at the time of Burgoyne's surrender, and in January, 1788, he was a delegate to the State Convention held in Hartford to ratify and adopt the Constitution of the United States. He was a broad-minded man, an honorable citizen and a good Christian. He died in Cheshire in December, 1810, and was buried in the family plot in the cemetery. Rev. David Brooks married Elizabeth Doolittle, who was born in 1753, and died Aug. 15, 1831. In their family were ten children, including David (our subject); Gen. Micah Brooks, a distinguished citizen of Livingston county, N. Y., and a member of Congress; and Benedict Brooks, a prominent citizen of Wyoming county, that State.

(V) David Brooks, whose name introduces this sketch, was born in Brooks Vale July 26, 1791, and grew to manhood in his native town, where he attended school, and where he afterward followed farming on the old Brooks homestead. There he died July 24, 1873, at the age of eighty-two years, and his remains were interred in Cheshire cemetery, where a suitable monument has been erected to his memory. He was one of the leading and popular citizens of his community, and was widely and favorably known throughout his county, being held in high regard by all with whom he came in contact. He was married in Cheshire to Miss Linda Hull, a native of that town, and a daughter of Samuel Hull, who is mentioned below. She died at Brooks Vale April 30, 1865, and now sleeps by the side of her husband in Cheshire cemetery. To this worthy couple came the following children: Monzo, born in 1814, died in 1887; Clarissa L. married S. S. Cowles, and died in Farmington, Conn., in 1861; David, born Jan. 26, 1820, is mentioned below; Stella Law married William Seth Knowlton, of Bridgeport, and died in Cheshire July 14, 1884; Samuel Hull is a resident of New Haven; Elizabeth Brooks, born in 1829, married Henry W. Chatfield, of Brooklyn, N. Y., and died at Brooks Vale July 12, 1899; Edwin Micah, born in 1831, died in 1860; and Rosa, born Oct. 6, 1835, married Joseph H. Martin, of Grand Rapids, Mich., a native of Northampton, England.

(VI) David Brooks, son of (V) David, was a man of high attainments and ripe scholarship. He went to Philadelphia, and with S. F. B. Morse was engaged in constructing the first telegraph line in this country. He became widely known as an eminent electrician, and invented an underground cable for which the Western Union Telegraph Co. paid him a large sum. He met with excellent success in his undertakings, and was highly respected and esteemed for his sterling worth and many excellencies of character. His death occurred in Philadelphia May 30, 1891, and his remains were brought back to Cheshire for interment. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Lydia A. Gilbert, was born in Hamden, Conn., Feb. 11, 1823, and died in Philadelphia Sept. 22, 1893. Their children were Laura Gilbert, wife of J. Lowrie Bell; David; Linda, wife of Edward Troth; Anna Le Conte, wife of Henry S. Snow; and Edwin M.

Linda Hull, the wife of (V) David Brooks, traced her ancestry to Richard Hull, a native of Derbyshire, England, who came to America with the first settlers, and was made a freeman in Dorchester, Mass., in 1634. About 1637 he removed to Boston, and from there came to New Haven, where he took the oath of fidelity. He was one of the founders of the New Haven Colony, and was a land owner in this county, and lived on what is now called Chapel street. He was a God-fearing man and a good citizen, but not a Puritan, and on that account came to New Haven, where he died in September, 1662. He had two sons—John and Joseph—and one daughter. From Joseph descended Gen. William Hull and Commodore Isaac Hull.

(II) John Hull, son of Richard, was born in 1640, in New Haven, and there grew to manhood. In 1661 he removed to Stratford, Conn., where he was numbered among the planters for seven years. In 1668 he went to Pawgassett, now Derby, Conn., and it is supposed that he was one of the first settlers of that town, which he named Derby for his father's old home in England. There he made his home until 1677, and built several dwelling houses for his sons. He also built the first corn-flour mill in Wallingford, to which town he removed in 1687, there buying 700 acres of land, which now forms a part of Cheshire. He was known as Dr. John Hull, and is supposed to have been a physician. His death occurred in Wallingford Dec. 6, 1711, and he was buried there. He was three times married, and the name of his first wife is unknown. On Oct. 19, 1671, he wedded Mary Jones, and on Sept. 20, 1699, married Rebecca Turner. His children by the first marriage were: John, born March 14, 1661; Samuel, Feb. 4, 1663; Mary, Oct. 31, 1664; and Joseph, 1662 (who is mentioned below). By the second union there were five children: Benjamin, born Oct. 7, 1672, was married Dec. 14, 1695, to Elizabeth Andrews, and engaged in the practice of medicine; Ebenezer, born in 1673, was married March 4, 1706, to Lydia Mix, and died in 1709; Richard was born in 1674; Jeremiah, born in 1679, married Hannah Cook, of Wallingford, and was also a physician; and Archer completed the family.

(III) Capt. Joseph Hull, son of Dr. John Hull, was born in 1662 in Derby, and there spent his entire life, engaged in commercial and agricultural pursuits. He was a man of great influence in the community; represented his town in the General Assembly; was a worthy member of the Congregational Church; and a captain in the militia. He died in Derby in 1744, and was buried there. He was the great-grandfather of Commodore Isaac Hull, who commanded the celebrated frigate "Constitution." In 1691 he wedded Mary Nichols, a daughter of Isaac Nichols. She died in 1733, and two years later he married Hannah Botsford, widow of John Prindle. She died in Derby, and was buried there. In his family were children as follows: Samuel, born in 1692 (he made his home in Derby); Joseph, in 1694; Caleb, mentioned below; Abijah, born in 1697; Andrew, in 1698; Mary (Mrs. Russell, of Derby), in 1699; Sarah (Mrs. Beach, of Stamford), in 1701; and Nathan, in 1709.

(IV) Caleb Hull, son of Capt. Joseph Hull, was born in Derby Feb. 4, 1695, and at the age of fourteen went to live with his grandfather, Dr. John Hull, in Wallingford, at that gentleman's request. The Doctor gave him one hundred acres of land at Broad Swamp, now a part of Cheshire, where he built a house and made many other improvements. He died there in September, 1788, and was buried in Cheshire. A true patriot and loyal American, he answered to the first call for troops during the Revolution, although eighty years of age, and went to the defense of Boston. He also answered to the Lexington call, together with his son and grandson. He was a man of honor and integrity, and was one of the representative citizens of his community. On May 1, 1721, he married Mercy Benham, a native of Wallingford, who died April 19, 1766, and was laid to rest in Cheshire cemetery. They had twelve children, namely: Sarah, born April 25, 1725, married Reuben Atwater, of Cheshire; Andrew, born Aug. 23, 1726, died Sept. 21, 1774; Mary, born April 27, 1728, was married Oct. 3, 1745, to Jonathan Hitchcock; Samuel, born March 22, 1730, is mentioned below; Joseph, born Aug. 20, 1732, died in infancy; Abijah, born Oct. 11, 1733, died Dec. 14, 1733; Joseph, born June 10, 1735, died Dec. 4, 1735; Caleb, born May 31, 1736, died Aug. 8, 1739; Submit, born Dec. 12, 1737, died Feb. 13, 1738; Patience, born Oct. 15, 1740, died in September, 1764; Joseph was born April 18, 1741; and Caleb, born Dec. 16, 1742, married Mary Street, and died June 4, 1797.

(V) Samuel Hull, son of Caleb, was a well-known and highly respected citizen of Cheshire, where he was born and reared, and later followed farming, owning land in that town. He was a member of the Congregational Church. He served as a soldier in the Revolutionary war. He died April 27, 1791, and was buried in Cheshire cemetery. In Wallingford he was married, Dec. 26, 1753, to Eunice Cook, who was born June 29, 1735, a daughter of Capt. Samuel and Hannah (Lewis) Cook, and granddaughter of Samuel and Hannah (Ives) Cook, and of Ebenezer and Elizabeth (Merriman) Lewis, of Wallingford. The children of this union were as follows: A son, born Jan. 1, 1755, died in infancy; Jedediah was born Feb. 26, 1756; a son, born Feb. 2, 1758, died in infancy; Samuel, born May 27, 1759, is mentioned below; Zephaniah, born May 1, 1761, made his home in Wallingford, Vt., where he died Feb. 20, 1840; Epaphras, born April 9, 1763, also died in Wallingford, Vt., April 13, 1827; Eunice, born April 16, 1765, married Sheriff Whipple, of Cazenovia, N. Y., and died Dec. 18, 1820; Lois, born Feb. 1, 1767, died Oct. 20, 1777; Caleb, born Nov. 9, 1768, died in Wallingford, Vt., Aug. 9, 1816; Elizabeth, born Oct. 28, 1770, died Aug. 13, 1777; Josephus, born Aug. 24, 1772, died in Wallingford, Vt., March 18, 1813; and Hannah, born Oct. 11, 1775, married A. Meacham, of Wallingford, Vt., and died in 1850.

(VI) Samuel Hull, son of Samuel, Sr., and father of Mrs. David Brooks, was born on the old Hull homestead in Cheshire, and like his father and grandfather was a soldier of the Revolutionary war. Throughout life he followed the occupation of farming in his native town, and was one of the most highly esteemed and honored citizens of his community. He died upon his farm Oct. 27, 1848, and was laid to rest in Cheshire cemetery. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Abigail Doolittle, was born May 26, 1766, and died Oct. 10, 1835; her remains were interred in the same cemetery. They had ten children, namely: Stella, born March 27, 1786, married Jonathan Law, and died Dec. 13, 1841; Jedediah was born in 1788; Anne was born Jan. 13, 1794; Linda, born Feb. 6, 1796, was the wife of David Brooks, our subject; Eunice, born Nov. 12, 1798, married Birdsey Booth, of Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio; Charlotte L., born Sept. 9, 1800, married John Olmsted, of Hartford, Conn.; Samuel Cook, born Aug. 4, 1802, died Aug. 26, 1804; Samuel, born Feb. 4, 1805, died in Morris, Grundy Co., Ill.; Julius, born July 1, 1807, married Lucy Ives, and removed to Ohio; and Andrew Franklin, born Jan. 13, 1811, married Adeline Munson, and died Jan. 1, 1845.

HON. WILLIAM E. DOWNES, of New Haven, now retired, was, a generation ago, one of the leading manufacturers and prominent citizens of New Haven county, where his active career of lawyer, legislator and manufacturer for twenty-five years was passed.

Mr. Downes was born Aug. 22, 1824, in the town of Milford, Conn., and is strictly a New Englander, a product of Connecticut, for here his ancestors have figured from the very dawn of the Colonial period. He is the son of the late Horatio and Nancy (Smith) Downes, who had much of the Puritan in their character and aspect, and grandson of John and Hannah (Stone) Downes, the former a patriot of the Revolution, and in the family is a very interesting diary which was kept by him from 1764 to 1810, containing, with very few exceptions, an entry for every day during that long period. Among the ancestors of our subject through his grandmother, Hannah (Stone) Downes, was one of the founders of the church in Connecticut—Rev. Thomas Hooker, of Hartford; and through his mother he is in direct line from Gov. Robert Treat, Rev. Samuel Andrew, of Milford, one of the leading men in New England and one of the principal founders of Yale College, and for a dozen or more years from 1707 rector of it; and he is also through the same channel in direct line from Edmund Tapp, one of the first settlers of Milford, and one of the first five judges of that town.

In boyhood William E. Downes attended the district schools of his native town and afterward completed his studies, preparatory to entering college, with the Rev. Asa M. Train, of Milford. He entered Yale College in 1841, and four years later was graduated in the class of '45, the valedictorian being James G. Gould, a fine scholar and most gifted man. Mr. Downes chose the profession of the law as a life work, and in the preparation for it studied one year under the direction of the late distinguished lawyer, Hon. Alfred Blackman, of New Haven. He then entered the Yale Law School, and after the usual course of study was admitted to the Bar of the State of Connecticut in Danbury, in 1848. In December of the same year he opened an office in Birmingham, Conn., and began the practice of his profession, continuing therein until 1863, when he relinquished it and succeeded the late Dr. Howe, his father-in-law, in the management of the business of the Howe Manufacturing Co., of Birmingham, and remained in its active management until 1875, when the burden of the work was turned over to other hands. As a lawyer Mr. Downes gained and kept the confidence, respect and esteem of the community in which he lived, as well as that of his brethren at the Bar. His business surely and steadily increased as his worth and ability became known, and when he relinquished his practice, it was a source of sincere regret to a numerous clientele.

Since the retirement of Mr. Downes from the active management of the Howe Manufacturing Co. he has given his time to the management of his own affairs, and in the performance of the duties of the many positions of trust and responsibility which he has filled. For a decade or more he was president of the Derby Savings Bank. He is a director and member of the executive committee of the Ousatic Water Co., and a director and valued counsellor and adviser in many other corporations in Derby and elsewhere. With the Ousatic Water Co. he has been prominently identified from the beginning, having been employed as one of the counsel to obtain a charter for the company from the Legislature of Connecticut. As early as 1855 he was sent to the State Legislature from the town of Derby. He again represented that town in the same body in 1882, and for the third time in 1883. He took a prominent part in the establishment of the "Board of Pardons," and was chiefly instrumental in procuring the passage of the "Act Concerning Insane Persons," in the year 1889, and modestly says that such satisfaction as he has derived from his legislative experience arises from his connection with these two acts. For several years Mr. Downes, at some sacrifice, filled the office of justice of the peace in the town of Derby.

In referring to his make-up, a writer has said:

Mr. Downes is possessed of certain qualities rarely found, as in him, in harmonious combination. While a lover of books, and of reading and with the instincts and tastes of a scholar, he is at the same time a practical man of affairs, with an aptitude for business born of a thorough legal and business training, and of a large and varied experience. In the many corporations with which he is connected, his opinion carries much weight, and his counsel is rarely disregarded. While modest and retiring in disposition, and willing to yield to the judgment of others in matters of minor importance, he is steadfast in matters of principle and loyal to his convictions at all times, without regard to consequence. His conclusions are generally reached only after mature reflection and although they are held with firmness, the firmness never degenerates into obstinacy. He has an instinct for justice and a sense of honor "that feels a stain like a wound." His keen perception of the humorous side of human nature and conduct, coupled with a genial, kindly disposition, makes him a delightful companion, and relieves the "prosiness" of many a business meeting.

Politically Mr. Downes has generally acted with the Republican party. His religious faith is that of the Congregational Church.

In 1851 Mr. Downes was married to Jane M., only child of Dr. John I. Howe, of Birmingham, Conn., and their children are: Mrs. Helen G. Atwater, of New Haven, Conn.; William Howe, of Boston, Mass.; and Mrs. Catherine I. Whiting and John I. H., of New Haven. Since 1887 Mr. Downes has made his home in New Haven.

The late Dr. JOHN I. HOWE, father of Mrs. Downes, was born in 1793, in Ridgefield, Conn., and was graduated from the Medical University of New York. He was married to Cornelia Ann, daughter of George Ireland, of New York, and for many years practiced his profession with skill and success in that city. As early as 1828 he obtained a patent on rubber compounds. In 1832 and 1833 he devised a machine for making pins, and in 1835 the Howe Manufacturing Co. was organized in New York for the manufacturing of that article. For thirty years Dr. Howe had the sole management of the manufacturing department of the company. In 1838 the concern was removed to Birmingham, Connecticut.

Dr. Howe was in the lead as the first practical and successful pin manufacturer by means of automatic machinery, one of the most useful inventions of the country. His death occurred in 1876, when aged eighty-four years.

DANIEL HUMISTON. Only those lives are worthy of record that have been potential factors in the public progress, in promoting the general welfare, or advancing the educational or moral interests of the community. Daniel Humiston, of Cheshire, was ever faithful to his duties of citizenship, and by the successful conduct of his business interests not only promoted his individual success, but also advanced the general prosperity. In his life span of seventy-seven years he accomplished much, and left behind him an honorable record, well worthy of perpetuation. He was born in the town of Cheshire, Sept. 23, 1788, and died Oct. 22, 1865.

The Humiston family is one of the oldest and most respected in New Haven county, where it was founded about 1650 by Henry Humiston, who spent the remainder of his life in Wallingford, dying Jan. 16, 1663. He was married Aug. 28, 1651, to Joanna Walker, and they had four children, namely: Samuel, born Aug. 7, 1652; Nathaniel, Jan. 13, 1654; Thomas, Oct. 19, 1656; and Abigail, May 17, 1661.

James Humiston, grandson of the progenitor of the family in this country, was born in New Haven, and from there removed to Wallingford, where he died Aug. 17, 1747. On Jan. 7, 1719, he married Sarah Atwater, and in their family were six children: Daniel, born Nov. 16, 1721; Stephen, born Nov. 9, 1723; Noah, born March 1, 1729, died Sept. 3, 1729; James, born Oct. 28, 1734 (married Abiah Ives); Hannah; and Noah, born June 13, 1745.

Daniel Humiston, a son of James, and the grandfather of our subject, was born in Wallingford, and when a young man came to Cheshire, where he owned land and engaged in farming throughout his active business life. There he died July 27, 1767, and was buried in Cheshire cemetery. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Abigail Doolittle, died Jan. 1, 1800, at the age of eighty-three years. In their family were eight children, whose names and dates of birth were as follows: Sarah, Dec. 14, 1744; Hannah, March 2, 1747; Stephen, July 17, 1751; Lydia, March 17, 1754; Patience, Nov. 28, 1756; Daniel, April 10, 1759; John, June 30, 1761; and Jesse, March 12, 1764.

Jesse Humiston, just mentioned, was born and reared on his father's farm in Cheshire, and after his marriage located on a farm in West Cheshire, where he spent the remainder of his life, devoting his time and attention to agricultural pursuits. He was well known and highly respected. He died March 12, 1832, and was laid to rest in the family cemetery, in Cheshire. He married Lois Doolittle, a daughter of Amos Doolittle, and she departed this life Feb. 8, 1847, at the age of eighty-four years. Politically he was a Whig, and religiously a member of the Episcopal Church. His children were Daniel, our subject; Lois, who died at the age of twenty; Jesse A., who married Eliza Preston, daughter of Reuben Preston; Alma, who married Samuel Hull, of Cheshire; and John, who married Rhoda Nichols, of Wolcott, Connecticut.

At the age of three years Daniel Humiston received a physical injury which it was thought would unfit him for the active work of farm life, hence it was determined to prepare him for a profession. He pursued a thorough course in the Episcopal Academy of his native town, from which he graduated at the age of seventeen, his scholarship being highly commended by his teachers and classmates. His ailment having, meantime, been much alleviated, he resolved to engage in farming, to which occupation he was always partial. He industriously pursued that vocation as his life work, and was rewarded with a fair measure of success, owning and successfully operating a tract of 165 acres of land in the western part of Cheshire, upon which he made extensive improvements. He died upon his farm and was laid to rest in the Cheshire cemetery. He was an active and prominent member of St. Peter's Episcopal parish, served as vestryman of the church for some years and for many years previous and up to his death was parish clerk.

Politically Daniel Humiston was first a Whig and later a Republican. He was a modest, unobtrusive man, with no inclination for public life, but his townsmen, appreciating his good qualities, called him to serve in various offices, and in 1840 elected him as one of their representatives in the State Legislature. He also filled the office of selectman in Cheshire. Those who were most intimately associated with him speak in unqualified terms of his sterling integrity, his honor in business and his fidelity to all the duties of public and private life. He was faithful to his church, to his country and to his friends, and in his home was a most exemplary husband and father. His death occasioned deep regret throughout the community, and Cheshire thereby lost one of its most valued citizens.

On June 16, 1816, Daniel Humiston wedded Juliana Ives, a native of Cheshire, and a daughter of Jared and Aehsah (Doolittle) Ives. She was a lady of culture and refinement, an excellent wife and mother, and a consistent member of the Episcopal Church. She died Dec. 23, 1833, and was laid to rest in St. Peter's Church cemetery. In the family were three children: Chauncey Ives, who resided on the home farm until his death, Nov. 11, 1884; John D., who was engaged in business in New York, and there died Jan. 19, 1867; and Julia A., the only survivor. Miss Julia resides in West Cheshire, and is beloved and respected by all who know her. With a charity that knows no limit, she seems to find her greatest happiness in doing good to those around her. Even the dumb animals have received her attention, and for them she placed a watering tank in West Cheshire; she gave to the village the town clock; a receiving vault in Cheshire cemetery; and many other things. She takes a deep interest in educational affairs, is highly intellectual and cultured, and is quite popular with the public.

JOSEPH NOYES NICHOLS (deceased) was one of the leading citizens and successful agriculturists of Waterbury, where he was born Dec. 17, 1824. The Nichols family is one of the oldest in Connecticut. Sergt. Francis Nichols, the first of the name in New England, was a native of England, and one of the first settlers of Stratford, Fairfield Co., Conn., where he located in 1639. He is supposed to have been closely related to Sir Richard Nichols, the first English governor of New York. Before coming to this country he was a member of the Horse Guards of London. He owned property in Stratford, Conn., and Southland, Long Island, and spent his last days in the former place, where he died and was buried. For his second wife he married Barnabas Wines, who after his death wedded John Elton, of Southland, Long Island. By his first marriage he had four children: Isaac, Caleb and John, who were all born in England; and Mrs. Richard Mills. The only child of the second union was Ann, wife of Christopher Young.

Isaac Nichols, son of Francis, came with his parents to the New World and spent the remainder of his life in Stratford, Conn., where he owned and operated a farm. He died in 1695, and was buried there. By his wife, Margaret, he had the following children: Mary, who was born Feb. 2, 1648, and married Rev. Israel Channev; Sarah, who was born Nov. 1, 1649, and married Stephen Burrett; Josiah, born Jan. 29, 1652; Isaac, March 12, 1654; Jonathan, Dec. 10, 1655; Ephraim, Dec. 15, 1657; Patience, Feb. 2, 1660; Temperance, May 17, 1662; Margery, Nov. 30, 1663; Benjamin, Feb. 2, 1666; and Elizabeth, who was born April 2, 1668, and was married July 9, 1691, to Rev. Joseph Webb.

Isaac Nichols, Jr., a son of Isaac, was also a life-long resident of Stratford, a farmer and land owner. There he died in 1690. By his wife, Mary, he had three children: Francis, June 3, 1676; Richard, Nov. 26, 1678; and Joseph, Nov. 1, 1680.

Joseph Nichols, a son of Isaac, Jr., was born and reared in Stratford, whence he removed to Long Island, and in 1728 came to Waterbury, where he owned property. Here he died March 10, 1733, and was buried in Waterbury cemetery. He married Elizabeth Wood, of Stratford, and they had a family of eight children: James, born on Long Island June 27, 1712; George, born at the same place July 14, 1714; Elizabeth, who was married in 1740 to Ebenezer Waklee; Richard; Joseph, born in 1724; Maria; Isaac, who was born May 4, 1729, and died in the British army in 1776; and Benjamin, born May 14, 1731.

Joseph Nichols, Jr., son of Joseph, was born on Long Island, and came with his parents to Waterbury, where he subsequently owned and operated a farm until called from this life, Jan. 24, 1773. On Sept. 6, 1750, in Waterbury, he married Tamar Bronson, daughter of Lieut. John Bronson, and to them were born two children: Seymour, mentioned below; and Eunice, who was born Sept. 6, 1753, and married Michael Bronson. The mother of these children died Nov. 14, 1755, and on Dec. 15, 1757, the father married Annie Webster, by whom he had one child, Lucy, who was born Dec. 5, 1758, and married Luke Adams.

Seymour Nichols, son of Joseph, Jr., was born April 20, 1751, in Waterbury, where he spent his entire life as a farmer, land owner and highly respected citizen. On June 15, 1775, he married Martha Hotchkiss, and to them were born ten children, whose names and dates of birth were as follows: Joseph, April 21, 1776; Tamar (wife of James Chatfield), Dec. 25, 1778; Humphrey, Nov. 23, 1781; Abigail, March 2, 1784; Chloe, July 30, 1786; Amy, Nov. 25, 1788; William, August, 1791; Chauncey, February, 1794; Simon, 1796; and Philo, June, 1798.

Humphrey Nichols, son of Seymour, and the father of our subject, made his home throughout life in Waterbury, where he owned a farm, and like his ancestors he engaged in agricultural pursuits. His remains were interred in the old cemetery where the Bronson Library now stands. He married Esther Hotchkiss, also a native of Waterbury, and a daughter of Stephen Hotchkiss. In their family were the following children: Harriet, born Feb. 3, 1810, married G. A. Hall; Emeline, born May 20, 1811, married David Terrell; Stephen H. was born April 25, 1813; Isaac, born Sept. 27, 1814, married Lydia Frisbee; William, born Jan. 27, 1817, married into the well-known Atwood family; Ann, born Feb. 8, 1819, died May 12, 1835; Nancy, born June 15, 1821, married Marvin Hills; Eli, born Sept. 15, 1822, married Jane Mann; Joseph N., our subject, and David complete the family.

Joseph N. Nichols grew to manhood in Waterbury, and became a prosperous farmer and land owner of that town. He owned the homestead farm at Simonville, and also the large Hill farm on Town Plot, Waterbury, upon which he made many improvements. It was the Garry Hull tract of eighty acres, and has since been divided into lots for building purposes. He was united in marriage with Miss Lucena Clark, of New Milford, a daughter of Daniel and Lucy (Hanes) Clark, and by this union were born seven children: (1) Daniel Humphrey, who died in 1800, first married Mary C. Gladding, by whom he had two sons, Frank Bacon and Arthur W., both members of St. John's Church choir. For his second wife he married Albertha Lobdell, by whom he had one child, Harvey Humphrey. (2) Clark Holmes is mentioned below. (3) Joseph Hayden married first Nellie Jackson, by whom he had two children, Louis Hayden and Carl Humphrey, and for his second wife married Alice Palmer, by whom he had one child, Nellie Alice. (4) Lucy Esther resides on the old homestead. (5) Emma C. died in April, 1885. (6) Anna L. died Feb. 28, 1887. (7) William Francis, who is connected with the United States mail service and resides in Waterbury, married Annie O'Rourke, and they have three children, Gertrude E., Charles and William. Our subject died April 21, 1878, his wife Sept. 14, 1887, and both were laid to rest in Riverside cemetery. They were faithful members of St. John's Episcopal Church, and were highly respected and esteemed by all who knew them. In his political affiliations Mr. Nichols was a Democrat, and he ever took a commendable interest in those enterprises calculated to advance the moral, social or material welfare of his town and county. He was a kind father, a loving husband and true friend.

CLARK H. NICHOLS, son of Joseph N., was born on the home farm in Waterbury April 29, 1859, and was educated in the public schools of Town Plot. He remained under the parental roof until he attained his majority, and then learned the trade of a brass caster, which he followed in Ansonia for nine years. At the end of that period he returned to Waterbury, and was employed as a caster in the Scoville foundry for eight years. He then purchased the David Blodgett place, where he has since made his home, and now gives his entire time and attention to dealing in and training horses, traveling in Canada and other sections of the country. He is a wide-awake, progressive business man, and is meeting with success in his business ventures. He is independent in politics, and a member of the Knights of Pythias fraternity. In Providence, R. I., Oct. 4, 1883, he married Miss Annie Wilson, of Bristol, Conn., who died May 22, 1895.

EDWIN YALE BULL, one of the highly respected and well-known citizens of Yalesville, has been a resident of this community for more than half a century, and he is known as one of the most widely read and thoroughly posted men of Wallingford. Mr. Bull was born in the town of Meriden, Feb. 19, 1823, a son of William Bull, also a native of Meriden. William Bull was a well-known citizen of Meriden, where he worked at his trade and cultivated his farm. In politics he was a Democrat, and in religion a Universalist. Ruth Hall, his wife, was born Aug. 25, 1789, a daughter of Benajah and Ruth (Francis) Hall, and she died in Meriden.

Edwin Yale Bull was educated in the common schools of Meriden, and in the Connecticut Literary Institute of Suffield. He started life for himself at an early age, his first work being the burnishing of spoons at the munificent salary of forty-five cents per gross. When not employed in the shop he worked at home on the farm. After a time he was taken into the German-silver shop at Meriden as a buffer, and then was made a forger of fine wares. For some years he was employed in a Britannia spoon factory, and for three and a half years worked for Steadman & Clark, with whom he thoroughly learned the tin and sheet iron trade. For ten years he was a journeyman worker at this trade, and in 1853 came to Yalesville to take a place as a die sinker, a trade he mastered for himself, and one in which he takes a high standing. The following year he secured a similar position with Garry I. Mix, at $2.00 per day, which was gradually increased to $2,000 per year. In 1860 Mr. Bull entered the employ of R. Wallace & Co., where he remained for two years, and he was two years with Hall, Elton & Co., when he resumed his work with G. I. Mix. For twenty-five years he was steadily at work as die sinker, but for the last twelve years he has lived a retired life, spending his leisure hours in the making of violins, in which he seems to have the touch of a genius. Violins that come from his hands give forth the sweetest tones, and his name is familiar to all who love this kind of musical instruments.

Mr. Bull is a ripe scholar, and is a man of wide reading. Latin, French and other languages have been mastered by him, and he is familiar with classical lore. In politics he is a Republican, and was a member of the "Wide Awakes" in the first Lincoln campaign. Mr. Bull has been assessor of the town, and holds the unstinted confidence of his fellow citizens. He began life as a poor boy, and by industry, economy and forethought has become well-to-do. Mr. Bull has never married, and has lived a life of kindly deeds, finding delight and companionship, not only in the world of books, but in the great open world of nature around him.

ELISHA CHAPMAN BISHOP, a prominent citizen of Guilford, is a representative of one of the oldest New England families. Mr. Bishop is a descendant in the eighth generation from John Bishop, a native of England, who founded the family in America, and who was one of the original settlers of Guilford, Conn. He was the second person of the twenty-five who signed the Plantation Covenant, June 1, 1639, on the voyage from England, and was one of the four persons who had at first the sole direction of the affairs of the Colony until the formation of the church. He was married in England, but the family name of his wife Anne has not been ascertained. After his migration to America John Bishop remained permanently in Guilford, where he died in February, 1661. His wife died in Hartford in 1676. To John and Anne Bishop were born three children: John, who died in

Edwin V. Bull

October, 1683; Stephen, who died in June, 1690; and Bethya, who married James Steel. The line of descent to our subject is through John.

(II) John Bishop, son of (1) John, married Dec. 13, 1650, Susanna Goldham, who died Nov. 1, 1703. Their children were as follows: (1) Mary, born Sept. 28, 1652, married John Hodgkin; (2) John, sketch of whom follows; (3) Susanna, born in 1657, married Moses Blatchley, and died in October, 1729; (4) Elizabeth, born in 1660, married John Scranton, and died in August, 1727; (5) Daniel, born in 1665, married Hannah Bradley, and died April 17, 1751; (6) Nathaniel, born in 1666, married Mary Hughes, and died May 1, 1714; (7) Samuel, born Oct. 28, 1670, married Abigail Witmore, and died Feb. 17, 1753; (8) Sarah, born Jan. 22, 1674, died May 12, 1712; (9) Abigail, born Jan. 26, 1681, married Samuel Lee, and died June 5, 1751.

(III) John Bishop, born in 1655, died Nov. 25, 1751. He married July 3, 1689, Elizabeth Hitchcock, who died March 14, 1712, and for his second wife he wedded March 8, 1713, May Johnson. His children were as follows: (1) Elizabeth, born Oct. 14, 1690, married Samuel Scranton; (2) John, born Aug. 12, 1692, married Abigail Spinning, and died Jan. 28, 1752; (3) Ann, born Feb. 15, 1695, married David Field, and died in 1731; (4) David, sketch of whom follows; (5) Jonathan, born Nov. 8, 1699, married Hannah Chittenden; (6) Mary, born in December, 1700, married Caleb Jones, and died June 23, 1724; (7) Deborah, born Feb. 19, 1702; (8) Nathaniel, born May 6, 1704, married Margaret Blinn, and died April 11, 1778; (9) Timothy, born in 1708, married Hannah Blinn, and died in 1794; (10) William was born Oct. 18, 1714; (11) Enos, born May 27, 1717, married Abigail Burgis, and died in April, 1802; (12) Esther was born Feb. 24, 1719; (13) Mercy, born May 7, 1722, married Abraham Dowd, and died Dec. 3, 1793.

(IV) David Bishop, born Jan. 6, 1697, died Aug. 20, 1773. He married May 17, 1724, Deborah Stanley, and their children were: (1) Deborah, born Jan. 17, 1725, married Jehiel Evarts; (2) Hulda was born Aug. 5, 1726; (3) David, sketch of whom follows; (4) Chloe, born July 15, 1733, married Handy Bushnell; (5) Sarah, born Aug. 18, 1736, married Miles Hall, and died April 8, 1792.

(V) David Bishop, born Sept. 20, 1728, died Jan. 25, 1792. He married April 17, 1755, Audrea Fowler, who was born Sept. 12, 1724, and died Jan. 24, 1815. Their children were: (1) Audrea, born Feb. 28, 1756, died March 28, 1757. (2) David, born July 20, 1757, married Deborah Fowler, and died April 19, 1833. (3) Huldah, born March 4, 1759, died Oct. 19, 1836; she married Eber Lee. (4) Margaret, born Nov. 10, 1760, died Sept. 21, 1764. (5) Jonathan, sketch of whom follows. (6) Jared, born Oct. 22, 1764, married Mary Mason, and died Nov. 26, 1839.

(VI) Jonathan Bishop (grandfather of Elisha C.), born Oct. 19, 1762, died Sept. 23, 1826. He married Feb. 21, 1787, Huldah Chapman, born Dec. 1, 1762, who died Sept. 17, 1828. Their two children were Jonathan, born Dec. 19, 1787, who died Dec. 22, 1787; and Jonathan (2), a sketch of whom follows. (VI) Jonathan Bishop was a lifelong farmer and land owner in the town of Guilford, where he was a well-known and highly-respected citizen. During the Revolutionary war he was a member of the Home Guard, for coast defense, keeping the Tories from supplying the English troops with produce, etc. In politics he was a Federalist, and in religious faith a member of the Congregational Church.

(VII) Jonathan Bishop (father of Elisha C.), born March 30, 1797, received his education in the schools of Guilford, and by close reading and observation of men and things he became well versed in the leading topics of the day. In his younger days he followed the sea, chiefly engaged in the coasting trade, and rose to the position of mate of a vessel plying in the cotton trade between Southern ports and New York. Later in life he settled down to farming on the homestead, where he passed the rest of his days, dying March 16, 1887, and he was laid to rest in the East cemetery. In religious faith he was a Congregationalist, in politics a Whig and Republican.

On June 18, 1821, Jonathan Bishop married Polly Maria Bishop, born Jan. 30, 1796, a daughter of Seth and Hannah (Parmelee) Bishop. She died in July, 1839, and for his second wife Mr. Bishop wedded, March 16, 1840, Fanny Maria Dennison, born March 1, 1803, who died March 15, 1865. For his third wife he married, March 15, 1866, Electa Maria Stone, born Oct. 30, 1810. The children of Jonathan Bishop were: (1) Ann Maria, born Jan. 22, 1822, died May 27, 1841; (2) Elisha Chapman, sketch of whom follows; (3) Richard L., born Dec. 29, 1825, married Mary G. Hand, and died Sept. 7, 1889; (4) Hulda J., born April 7, 1828, married George Hull, and died April 26, 1889; (5) Sophia Fowler, born May 13, 1835, married Thomas Griswold; (6) Allen, born July 2, 1837, died Jan. 13, 1861; (7) a son, born in July, 1839, died July 26, 1839; (8) Alfred Griswold was born Oct. 19, 1842; (9) William Edwin, born Nov. 3, 1855, married Ellen A. Stone.

(VIII) Elisha C. Bishop, our subject, was born April 10, 1824, attended the district schools of Guilford, and remained on the home farm until he was twenty years old. At that time he commenced to learn the trade of machinist, and worked at same in Guilford, on his own account. In 1861 he embarked in business in the oil fields, on his own speculation, at Titusville, Crawford Co., Pa., and after he had been so engaged some ten years, meeting with good success, he returned to Guilford, in 1870. He then settled down to general farming, and has been engaged in that occupation ever since.

In 1874 he built one of the finest dwellings in Guilford, commodious and comfortable, and fitted up with all modern improvements. In his political predilections Mr. Bishop was formerly a Republican, but is now a Prohibitionist in principle. In 1882 he represented the town of Guilford in the State Legislature; was selectman seven or eight years; member of the school committee; and was warden of the borough, also Burgess. In religious faith he is a member of the Congregational Church.

On July 5, 1846, Elisha C. Bishop was married to Charlotte G. Fowler, and they had children as follows: (1) Frederick Chapman, born May 15, 1847 (died July 27, 1847); (2) Frederick C. (2), Dec. 23, 1848; (3) Robert D., June 14, 1850 (died Aug. 15, 1850); (4) Robert Allen, March 16, 1851; (5) Edward Fowler, March 11, 1852; (6) Mary Cornelia, Aug. 27, 1853; (7) Frank H., March 22, 1857; (8) Ida and (9) Eva S. (twins), April 19, 1859; (10) Richard Matthew, May 5, 1861 (died Sept. 22, 1861); (11) Marilla Canfield, Jan. 28, 1864; (12) Ernest Smith, Oct. 28, 1866 (is a physician in New York). The mother of these died Oct. 6, 1885, and for his second wife Elisha C. Bishop wedded Cornelia F. Fowler, sister to his first wife.

THE FOWLER FAMILY, of which Mrs. Elisha C. Bishop is a member, is descended from (1) Abraham Fowler, who was born at Guilford Aug. 29, 1652, and died Sept. 30, 1719. He married Aug. 29, 1677, Elizabeth Bartlett, daughter of George and Mary (Cruttenden) Bartlett, born in March, 1653, died Oct. 4, 1742. Children: (1) Abigail, born in 1679, married Pelatiah Leete, and died Oct. 22, 1769; (2) Mary, born in 1681, married Samuel Hopson, and died Oct. 17, 1717; (3) Abraham, born in 1683, married Elizabeth Hubbard, and died Oct. 11, 1754; (4) Ebenezer, sketch of whom follows; (5) Daniel, born in 1686, married Grace Baron, and died Dec. 20, 1776; (6) Josiah, born in 1688, married Hannah Baldwin, and died Sept. 7, 1757; (7) Caleb, born in 1690, died in January, 1724; (8) Elizabeth, born in 1694, died Feb. 26, 1794, married Andrew Ward.

(II) Ebenezer Fowler, born in 1684, in Guilford, died there Nov. 28, 1768. He married May 1, 1817, Elizabeth Starr, born Nov. 26, 1695, died March 26, 1765. Children: (1) Ebenezer, born Jan. 11, 1719, married Desire Bristol, and died Feb. 19, 1800; (2) Nathaniel, sketch of whom follows; (3) Huldah, born March 6, 1722, married Samuel Chittenden, and died Nov. 17, 1820; (4) Caleb, born Jan. 21, 1726, died March 17, 1726; (5) Caleb (2), born Jan. 21, 1727, died Sept. 22, 1753; (6) Elizabeth, born May 26, 1732, died Dec. 22, 1810; (7) Lucy, born Feb. 19, 1735, married Joseph Weld, and died Sept. 5, 1800; (8) William, born Aug. 6, 1738, died in December, 1739.

(III) Nathaniel Fowler, born March 21, 1721, died Nov. 12, 1764. He married Nov. 2, 1757, Lucy Chittenden, born March 12, 1735, died March 5, 1807. Children: (1) Nathaniel, sketch of whom follows; (2) Reuben, born June 11, 1760, married Adah Willard, and died Sept. 2, 1832; (3) Lucy, born Sept. 21, 1761, married Benjamin Chittenden, and died June 9, 1835; (4) Hannah, born May 8, 1765, died June 1, 1835, married Gilbert Cruttenden.

(IV) Nathaniel Fowler, born July 14, 1758, died Feb. 24, 1841. He was a private in the war of the Revolution (1776) under Col. Talcott, in Capt. Hand's Company. He married Ruth Evarts, born June 30, 1760, daughter of Timothy and Ann (Dudley) Evarts. Children: (1) Ruth, born Feb. 11, 1783, married Eber Cruttenden, and died May 13, 1866; (2) Ann, born Sept. 12, 1787, died May 25, 1868; (3) Nathaniel, born Nov. 24, 1788, married Sally Cruttenden, and died Nov. 28, 1857; (4) Elisha, born April 6, 1790, died Dec. 13, 1876, married Mary Parmelee; (5) Richard, born May 5, 1794, married Polly Hart, and died May 6, 1831; (6) Lyman, sketch of whom follows.

(V) Lyman Fowler, born Jan. 6, 1800, died Feb. 16, 1877. On Nov. 24, 1822, he married Mary Griffing, who was born July 27, 1802, daughter of Peter and Polly (Fairchild) Griffing, and died March 18, 1885. Children: (1) Charlotte G., born Dec. 15, 1823, married Elisha Chapman Bishop. (2) Cornelia F., born Oct. 7, 1826, is the wife of Elisha C. Bishop. (3) Alonzo, born Jan. 23, 1829, died Sept. 1, 1839. (4) Edwin A., born July 2, 1834, married Emeline B. Spencer. Peter Griffing, the father of the above named Peter, was a captain in the Revolutionary army, was taken prisoner, and died aboard the "Jersey" prison ship in New York harbor.

GEORGE WASHINGTON HAZARD, a prominent citizen of Cheshire, who is now successfully engaged in fruit growing, was born in Berlin, Hartford Co., Conn., Dec. 3, 1828, and is a son of William and Lydia (Bills) Hazard, natives of Columbia, this State. The father was a farmer by occupation, and spent most of his life in his native town, where he died in 1847. He was a brother of Col. Hazard, the founder of the Hazard Powder Co., whom he educated. Our subject's paternal grandfather, Thomas Hazard, of Wapping, Conn., was a seafaring man in early life, and his maternal grandfather, Elizer Bills, was a farmer of Columbia.

At the age of five years our subject was taken by his parents to Columbia, where he grew to manhood, receiving his education in its common schools. After serving a three years' apprenticeship to the cabinetmaker's trade, he worked at clock-making in Bristol for a time, and later engaged in business for himself as a manufacturer at Waterbury, where he owned a good home and where he continued to reside nineteen years. For twelve years he was in the employ of the Wheeler & Wilson Sewing Machine Co., at Bridgeport, and for five years was a resident of Vineland, N. J., where he erected a dwelling for himself. In 1896 he came to Cheshire, New Haven county, and purchased the Hamock place, upon which he has made many valuable improvements, including the erection of a pleasant residence and good barn. He has set out 300 peach trees and 250 grape vines, and is now devoting his attention to fruit culture.

In October, 1849, Mr. Hazard was united in marriage with Miss Sophronia Platt, a daughter of Enoch Platt, of Waterbury, and to them have been born two sons: Emerson W. and Adelbert E. During the dark days of the Civil war Mr. Hazard enlisted, in the fall of 1862, in the 2d Connecticut Light Battery, and participated in the battles of Gettysburg and Fort Blakely and the siege of Mobile, remaining in the service until hostilities ceased, when he was honorably discharged, in 1865. He is a member of the Grand Army Post at Vineland, N. J. In politics he is a staunch Republican. Although he is comparatively a recent arrival in Cheshire, he has already made many warm friends, and is held in high regard by all who know him.

GEORGE WELLINGTON PLANT, a very successful farmer and fruit grower of the town of Branford, was born March 12, 1834, on the farm where he is still to be found, alert and vigorous, son of John and Angeline (Beach) Plant.

Mr. Plant's father was born May 19, 1806, and died May 22, 1881. The mother was born Oct. 9, 1807, and died Jan. 13, 1883. To them were born the following children: Mary E., now Mrs. William T. Norton; Anderson W.; Sarah J.; George Wellington; John B.; Angelina B., deceased; Emily S.; Elizabeth R., Mrs. Edward A. Ancelet; John A.; and Angelina B. (2), Mrs. Henry F. Swift. Samuel Plant, the paternal grandfather of George W., was born April 1, 1772, married Sarah, a daughter of Joseph and Sarah (Rogers) Frisbee, and died Feb. 11, 1795. He lived at Branford, and acted as a coast guard during the war of 1812. Samuel Plant was a son of Benjamin and Lorain (Beckwith) Plant, the former born in Branford in 1732; he died Aug. 11, 1808. John Plant, his father, was born in Branford in 1678, and died Feb. 10, 1752; Hannah Plant, his wife, was a daughter of Thomas and Hannah (Barnes) Wheadon, of Branford. This John Plant was the son of John Plant, the progenitor of the family in Connecticut, who settled in Branford in 1676, and was a soldier in the Narragansett war.

George Wellington Plant was educated in the public schools and remained on the paternal estate, where he has always followed farming and fruit growing. In these lines of agriculture his success has been marked, principally because he has studied the conditions of profitable operations, and has "mixed brains" with his labor in the tilling of the soil. Mr. Plant was married Oct. 7, 1857, to Eliza E. N. Lane, a daughter of Ebenezer Lane, of New Haven, and to this marriage came one son, John L.; he married Mary E., a daughter of Egbert and Grace (Bunnell) Bishop, of Branford, and they have one child, Ethel E. Mr. Plant and his family are members of the First Congregational Church of Branford, and are highly esteemed for their good works and Christian character. In politics he is a Republican, but has taken little part in the manipulations of party machinery.

WILLET B. FORBES (deceased) was one of the most prosperous and successful farmers of East Haven, as well as one of its most highly esteemed citizens. He always faithfully performed his duties of citizenship and took a deep and commendable interest in the welfare of his town and county. Becoming widely and favorably known, he made many friends, and his death was a loss to the entire community.

Mr. Forbes was born in East Haven Nov. 23, 1830, a son of Henry and Almira Forbes, and was reared on a farm in his native town, acquiring his education in the common schools of the neighborhood. He remained with his parents until his marriage, which was celebrated Sept. 26, 1872, Miss Marietta S. Bradley becoming his wife. She was also born at East Haven, Sept. 17, 1840, a daughter of Justin and Esther S. (Tyler) Bradley, both natives of East Haven. Her grandfather, Samuel Bradley, was also born there, and became a very prominent and influential man of the town, serving as selectman for several years. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity. By occupation he was a carpenter. His father, Azariah Bradley, was born in 1734. Justin Bradley, Mrs. Forbes' father, was born in 1815, and was a very successful and prosperous farmer. He died in March, 1895. He also was quite prominently connected with public affairs; was a member of the State Legislature in 1885; and was an active worker in the Episcopal Church. His first wife, Esther S. (Tyler) Bradley, daughter of John S. and Eve E. (Smith) Tyler, died in 1882, and he subsequently married Frances E. Paddock, daughter of Charles L. Paddock, of Meriden, Conn. By the first marriage there were three children: Marietta S., now Mrs. Forbes; George W., who was born in 1845 and lives on the old homestead in East Haven, where his grandfather located and built in 1792; and Louise, born in April, 1849, who died in May, 1851. By the second marriage there were no children.

Mr. and Mrs. Forbes began their domestic life upon his own farm, and to the cultivation and improvement of his property he devoted his energies throughout the remainder of his life. He was considered one of the hardest workers in East Haven, and also one of its most successful and skillful agriculturists, making a specialty of market gardening and dairy farming.

To our subject and his wife came two children: Louise Tyler, born Aug. 17, 1873, died Jan. 9, 1899. May Etta, born April 9, 1875, was educated at Vassar College, and was married Oct. 25, 1899, to Herbert C. Nickerson, of East Haven, who is now engineer at the New Haven Water Works. Mr. Nickerson was born in New Canaan, Conn., March 5, 1874, son of Richard G. and Belle T. (Seymour) Nickerson. He is a Republican politically. Mr. Forbes died Dec. 3, 1887, and since his death his widow and her daughter have successfully managed the property. In 1808 they erected a beautiful modern residence, one of the finest homes in East Haven. Mrs. Forbes is an estimable lady, possessed of many sterling qualities, and has a large circle of friends in the community. She holds membership in the Congregational Church, which her husband also attended. In politics he was a Republican.

DANIEL SEYMOUR BRINSMADE, civil engineer of Shelton, stands prominent among the native-born business men of his county, and is one of the most honored and influential citizens of this region.

Mr. Brinsmade was born Feb. 17, 1845, in the town of Trumbull, Fairfield Co., Conn., youngest son of Daniel Stiles and Catherine (Mallette) Brinsmade. He is a direct descendant in the eighth generation from William Brinsmade, who came to this country from England in 1630, locating in Dorchester, Massachusetts.

John Brinsmade, the eldest son of William, settled in Charlestown, Mass., where on May 2, 1638, he was made a freeman, and the same year married Mary Carter. About 1642 he moved to the town of Stratford, Conn., which at that time comprised within its limits both Trumbull and Huntington; and it is interesting to note that John Brinsmade and his descendants have maintained a continuous residence within the limits of the original town of Stratford from the year 1642 to the present day—a period of over two hundred and fifty years.

Daniel Seymour Brinsmade, whose name introduces these lines, received his earlier education in the public schools of his native place and in the Gunnery, at Washington, Conn. In 1867 he matriculated in the Scientific Department of Yale College, and graduated in 1870, having taken the engineering course. Immediately thereafter he went to Huntington, locating in that part now known as Shelton, and became assistant engineer on the construction of the dam there (which is the largest in the State), at that time being constructed by the Ousatic Water Co. In the fall of 1870 he was made chief engineer of the company, and the further development of the water-power and its surroundings, including the laying-out of the borough of Shelton, together with its system of sewers and water works, have since been under his charge. In 1891 the dam built by the Ousatic Water Co. in 1870 was swept away by an immense freshet accompanied by large quantities of ice, and upon Mr. Brinsmade devolved the responsibility of designing and constructing a new dam, one containing such features as would make it safe beyond peradventure, and capable of meeting the conditions which resulted in the destruction of the original dam. The efficiency and general plan, as regards strength and engineering skill, of the present Ousatic dam are due to Mr. Brinsmade's success in this important work.

The intimate connection which the Ousatic Water Co. bears to the building up of both Shelton and Derby has naturally brought Mr. Brinsmade—as president and treasurer of that company—into close relations with the financial and manufacturing interests of the community. At present he is vice-president of the Home Trust Co. and a director in the Birmingham National Bank, also in several manufacturing companies.

Politically a Republican, our subject represented the town of Huntington in the Legislature of 1882, during which session he was largely instrumental in securing the charter for the borough of Shelton, and for much of the time since he has served that borough in some capacity. In religious faith he is a member of the Congregational Church of Derby.

JOHN P. HUBBELL, a well-to-do and influential farmer of Oxford, is a native of New Haven county, born Nov. 8, 1834, in Derby, where he remained until five years of age. The family then removed to Oxford, where our subject grew to manhood, upon a farm, and attended the common schools of the locality. At the age of fifteen he commenced work at the mason's trade, which he learned under his father's direction, and continued to work with him for four years. He followed his trade uninterruptedly until after the Civil war broke out, when, in 1862, he became a private in Company B, 20th Conn. V. I., and was mustered into service at New Haven. He first went to Washington, D. C., and from there to Sandy Hook, near Harper's Ferry, where he was injured while unloading army supplies from a train, a box of ammunition falling upon him. After several months spent in the field hospital he was discharged, in December, 1863, and returned to Oxford, but did not recover from the effects of the accident for two years.

On finally regaining his health Mr. Hubbell began taking contracts in mason work, and was engaged in that business at Naugatuck for fifteen years, also doing blacksmith and wagon work for four years. In 1887 he returned to Oxford and located on the farm where he now lives. Here he owns 110 acres of land, which he has placed under a high state of cultivation, and upon which he has made many useful and valuable improvements. He is engaged in general farming and the dairy business, and in his labors is meeting with most gratifying success.

Mr. Hubbell was married Oct. 4, 1858, to Miss Celestia Whittlesey, and to them have been born six sons and one daughter, namely: Silas, George,

Dr. Brinwald

Charles, Harold (deceased), Leslie, Edwin (deceased), and Frances Isbell (deceased). Mr. Hubbell is unwavering in his support of the men and measures of the Republican party, and for over ten years he most capably filled the office of constable. Those who know him best are numbered among his warmest friends, and no citizen in Oxford is more highly respected than John P. Hubbell.

DAVID B. HULL, one of the most progressive and enterprising business men in Waterbury, was born Feb. 21, 1833, on the farm in that town where his father, Garry Hull, was born, Jan. 10, 1803. His grandfather, John Hull, was born there Feb. 21, 1772, and was a son of Ezra Hull, so that our subject is of the fourth generation to make his home in Waterbury.

John Hull, grandfather of David B., was a farmer by calling. He married Sena Adams, and they had two children: Garry, the father of our subject; and Sarah, who died in Waterbury, unmarried.

Garry Hull was reared a farmer, and agriculture was his life-long vocation. He resided in the town of Waterbury. On Feb. 15, 1825, he married Melissa Baldwin, who was born in the neighborhood of Waterbury—the street, or neighborhood, being named in honor of her family. Her father, David Baldwin, was a carpenter in early life, and later became a successful farmer in Waterbury, his native town. After their marriage Garry Hull and his wife settled on a farm in Waterbury and there reared a family of five children, born in the following order: Ellen L., now deceased, was first married to B. J. Bristol, and afterward to A. B. Potter; Harriet M. married B. H. Lewis, who came from Naugatuck (he is now deceased); Stiles D. died in infancy; David B. is the subject of this sketch; John L. died April 1, 1858, at the age of about twenty years. The mother died Aug. 5, 1887. In politics Garry Hull was originally a Whig, but upon the disintegration of that party became a staunch Republican.

David B. Hull assisted on the home farm, and attended the district school until eighteen years of age, when he came to the city of Waterbury and learned the carpenter's trade under Chester Curtis. After finishing his apprenticeship he worked as a journeyman until 1865, when he began contracting and building on his own account, continuing thus until about 1890, during which period he realized a competence. He then quietly embarked in the real-estate business as being less onerous.

On Oct. 7, 1855, David B. Hull was joined in marriage with Miss Harriet A. Lines, who was born in Thomaston, Conn., daughter of Sherman Lines, a native of Oxford, and a son of Zebulon Lines. Sherman Lines married Harriet French, daughter of Asa French, of Oxford. One child has been born to Mr. and Mrs. David B. Hull, John B., who is still under the parental roof; he is a carpenter by trade. Politically Mr. Hull is a Republican, but he has never evinced any ambition for office. In religion the family are Congregationalists and fully live up to the teachings of that sect.

Noah Baldwin, the father of David Baldwin, after whom the subject of this sketch was named, was born Jan. 23, 1755, and married Elizabeth Ives. He died Jan. 9, 1813. Jonathan Baldwin, father of Noah, was a lieutenant colonel in the Revolutionary war; he married Mary Bronson, daughter of Ebenezer Bronson. The Colonel died April 2, 1802, and his widow May 17, 1821. They were the parents of the following named children: Eunice, Melicent, Benjamin, Noah, Jonathan, Hannah, David, Eunice and Mary. The father of Lieut. Col. Baldwin, also named Jonathan, was born Jan. 31, 1679-80, and married Mary Tibballs, who was born May 27, 1690. They had born to them the following named children: Mary, Martha, Abigail, Rachel, Jonathan, Eunice, Hannah, Esther and Eunice. The mother of this family passed away Nov. 10, 1759, and the father died Jan. 5, 1761.

THEODORE P. TERRY, a highly-esteemed resident of Ansonia, is the oldest merchant in that city, and during his long and successful business career he has seen the population increase from 1,500 to 13,000. When he first located there Derby and Birmingham were one town, and Shelton and other thriving villages of to-day were not in existence, the section being devoted almost exclusively to farming.

Mr. Terry was born Feb. 2, 1835, in Bristol, Hartford county, where his family is well-known. His grandfather, Samuel Terry, who lived to the age of 88 years, was a native and life-long resident of the town, and owned a large tract of land there, being engaged in farming throughout his active years. He was a wheelwright by trade, but became a clock maker and made the first clock ever placed in a town hall in America. A brother made the first house clock completed in this country.

Theodore Terry, our subject's father, was born and reared in Bristol, and learned the clock makers' trade, which he followed for a number of years in partnership with Franklyn Andrews. At one time he had all his brothers working for him, and later he had four factories in successful operation. Meeting Anson G. Phelps, he decided to engage in business with him at Ansonia, where they built a factory and carried on a large business for some years under the name of the Ansonia Clock Co. The building burned, and for a time Mr. Terry made clock movements, while later, in company with P. T. Barnum, he built a factory at East Bridgeport; Mr. Terry also built and conducted a factory at Terryville, and he built quite a number of houses in Ansonia for his employees. He then traveled extensively, giving his attention to oil speculations, but his last years were spent in New Haven where he died at the age of seventy-two. As a man of sound judgment, his opinions were valued by his fellow-citizens, and while residing in Bristol he served as selectman. In religious faith he was a Congregationalist. His wife, Julietta Pierce, who lived to be over seventy years old, was born in Bristol, daughter of Philo Pierce, a farmer, who died at the age of eighty-eight years. Her mother, whose maiden name was Sally Norton, died aged eighty-four years. Mr. and Mrs. Terry had one daughter and two sons, one of whom, Hubbell, is cashier of the Hadley Falls Bank at Holyoke, Mass.; Ellen, the daughter, died in Pennsylvania when nineteen.

Theodore P. Terry spent his early years in Bristol, but when fifteen years old went with his parents to Ansonia, and his education was gained mainly in the common schools of these towns, although he also attended a school at Troy, N. Y., and spent two years at a school at Sand Lake, N. Y. As a boy he learned the details of clockmaking, and after his marriage he worked for two years in a clock shop at Terryville. On returning to Ansonia he purchased a small gristmill which he conducted two years, and on disposing of the business he tried to enlist in the army. He was three times rejected, and finally he went to the front as a sutler with the 23d Conn. V. I., and carried on a large business. During this time he accompanied Banks' Division to Ship Island. Returning to Ansonia he bought a small stove and tinware store, at the site of the present fine establishment, where the business has now been continuously carried on for thirty-eight years. In the year 1883 his son, Frank T. Terry, was taken into the business, and in 1892, owing to ill-health, Mr. Terry turned the store over to his son, who owns the present building, which was erected in 1896, and is one of the finest of its kind in New England. The store is stocked with a full line of hardware, plumbers' materials, crockery, china, silverware, house furnishing goods, paints and oils, mill supplies and wooden ware, and the trade is constantly on the increase. Upon completing his handsome residence, Mr. Terry presented it to his wife, who for twenty years has made all the improvements in the place. In politics he is a Republican, of Whig antecedents, but he has never been willing to enter public life. He and his family are members of the Congregational church at Ansonia, and he is now deacon and chairman of the committee of that society, of which he is one of the oldest members; he first united with the church in Terryville. Mr. Terry is also a director in the Y. M. C. A.

In 1854 Mr. Terry married Miss Sophronia A. Bartholomew, who was born in Plainville, daughter of J. H. Bartholomew, for many years a leading resident of Ansonia. They have had four children, of whom three are living: (1) Addie L. married N. E. Barker, a native of New Haven, who is now president of the First National Bank at Birmingham, Ala. They have had three sons, Terry L., Nelson and William C. (2) Frank, who now has charge of the business, is a director in the Business Men's Association, a member of the local Board of Trade and one of the Sinking Fund Commission, a director of the Ansonia Water Co., and is regarded as a leader among the younger business men of the town. He married Miss Jennie Montague, and has one son, Theodore M. (3) Another son died at the age of about two years. (4) Caroline married W. A. Sadd, of Chattanooga, Tenn., and has one child, Margaret T. Mr. Sadd was reared at Wapping, near Hartford, Conn., where his father was an influential citizen. He graduated from the civil engineering department of Yale College, and is now secretary of the Chattanooga Savings Bank.

Mrs. Terry is a member of the D. A. R., and took a prominent part in the organization of the chapter in Ansonia, of which she was first regent, filling that office for two years. She is a member of the Woman's Club of Ansonia and Derby, and an earnest worker in the Congregational church, of which she is a member—and of all of its different societies. Mr. Terry has been quite an extensive traveler, and has visited nearly every State in the Union, and has made trips to Cuba and Alaska.

JEROME COAN (deceased), a twin brother of Joseph Coan, was born in North Guilford June 19, 1834, and during his lifetime was one of the more prominent men of that section. He received a common school education, and began life for himself very early as clerk in a store in North Guilford. He was employed in the same capacity at Branford at the breaking out of the Civil war. He and his brother Joseph enlisted in Company E, 15th Conn. V. I., and our subject participated in many battles and skirmishes, discharging his duties with such intrepidity that he was made a corporal. During the latter part of his military career he was detailed for duty in the office of the provost marshal, and was so engaged when the war ended.

Jerome Coan returned to Guilford, engaged in farming for a time, eventually embarking in a mercantile career, in which he was highly successful. For more than thirty years he was one of the leading business men of the community, and until he died, Nov. 4, 1899, held the regard and confidence of the public to a marked degree. He was buried in the local cemetery. Mr. Coan was a leading and highly respected member of the Masonic fraternity, and affiliated with St. Alban's Lodge, of Guilford. He also belonged to Parmelee Post, G. A. R. As a member of the Congregational Church his life reflected no discredit upon his faith. In his early life he was a member of the Democratic party, but in his later years he became a Republican. For some years he served as justice of the peace.

Mr. Coan was twice married, his first wife being Frances D. Griswold, a daughter of Russell

Griswold, and a native of North Guilford, where she died. On Sept. 14, 1869, he was married to Mary Frances Judd, who was born in Bloomfield, Conn., daughter of Henry Green and Sarah Rebecca (Raymond) Judd. Mr. Coan's son, Joseph Franklin, is now engaged in a store at North Guilford, and has already displayed marked aptitude for a mercantile career. His youngest child and only daughter, Fannie Louise, a teacher of music, married Charles O. Bartlett, of North Guilford, Jan. 1, 1901.

Mrs. Coan is a lady of marked character and refinement, a devoted mother and a notable housewife. The family is one of the most respected in the community, and it is a comfort to the bereaved widow to feel that her children are beginning life on so high a plane of character and ambition.

JOHN BRADLEY YALE, who is drawing near his seventy-first birthday, is one of the best-known and most highly valued citizens of Naugatuck. Three generations of the family have been born in Litchfield county, his grandfather, Eber, his father, Charles, and himself, and both of his nearest lineal progenitors were farmers.

Thomas Yale, son of David and Ann (Morton) Yale, born in England or Wales about 1616, came to America in 1637 with his step-father, Gov. Theophilus Eaton, and others. After the death of David Yale, his widow, Ann, married Theophilus Eaton, then an opulent merchant of London. Mr. Eaton settled as a merchant in New Haven in 1638, with an estate of £300. Gov. Eaton died at New Haven in 1657, and in 1658 Thomas Yale accompanied his mother and Hannah Eaton, his half-sister, son Elihu and brother David, to England, from which country Mrs. Ann (Morton) Eaton never returned. In the following year, 1659, Thomas Yale returned to New Haven, and purchased lands in part of the town which is now North Haven, settling on them as early as 1660. He had married, in 1645, Mary, daughter of Capt. Nathaniel Turner, of New Haven. Mr. Yale was one of the principal men in the colony, a signer of the Plantation Covenant of New Haven, and filled with honor many offices of trust with credit to himself and to the satisfaction of his friends and fellow colonists. He died in 1683, leaving an estate of £479. His wife Mary died in 1704.

(II) Thomas Yale (2), son of Thomas the settler, born in New Haven about 1647, married (first) Dec. 11, 1667, Rebecca Gibbards, born Feb. 26, 1650, daughter of William Gibbards, of New Haven. Mr. Yale became one of the first settlers of Wallingford, removing thither in 1670, with a small band of other adventurers. By the records of that town it appears that he was one of the most active and energetic men among them. He assisted in the formation of the church, and in the call of the first and second ministers, Rev. Samuel Street and Rev. Samuel Whittelsey. Mr. Yale was a justice of the peace, captain of the train-band and moderator of their meetings. He died in Wallingford, Jan. 26, 1736, and Rebecca, his first wife, and the mother of all his children, died in Wallingford.

(III) Theophilus Yale, son of Thomas (2), born Nov. 13, 1675, married Sarah, daughter of Rev. Samuel and Alma Street, of the same town (Wallingford). Mr. Yale was a magistrate from about 1724 to the date of his death, Sept. 13, 1760. He also filled many other offices, both civil and military. His widow, Sarah, passed away aged ninety-four years.

(IV) Elihu Yale, son of Theophilus, born May 25, 1703, married (second) Jan. 19, 1732, Judith Howe, and died at Cape Breton, Dec. 31, 1745, having gone there in the expedition against the French. He was a farmer of Wallingford.

(V) Elisha Yale, son of Elihu, born Aug. 29, 1742, married in 1771 Rebecca North, of Farmington. Mr. Yale was a farmer of Wallingford, and afterward in Canaan, Conn. He died April 1, 1825.

(VI) Eber Yale, son of Elisha, and grandfather of John B., was born Aug. 1, 1776, and settled in South Canaan, where he married Phebe Pendleton. He died there Nov. 25, 1816. He was the father of two daughters—Julia and Caroline—and four sons—Frederick, Roderick, Charles and Eber. Julia married Constant Southwick, a mechanic of Great Barrington, Mass., and Caroline became the wife of L. B. Miller, of the same place. Frederick (deceased) lived in South Canaan, and was the father of two sons—Henry, a joiner in that town, and John, who resides in Hartford. Roderick was a farmer in Canaan, Conn., and reared a family of five children, Grove Edward, Dexter, George, Elizabeth and Maria. Eber, the youngest child of Eber (1), was likewise a farmer in South Canaan; his children were three in number, Wells, Albert and Eliza.

(VII) Charles Yale, the father of John B., was the fifth of the family in order of birth. He was born April 25, 1800, grew to manhood upon his father's farm, and died in Litchfield county about 1851. In 1820 he married Laura Phelps, daughter of Samuel Phelps, also a South Canaan farmer. She survived her husband some twenty-eight years, dying about 1879. Charles Yale and his wife were the parents of six sons and three daughters, John B. being the fourth son and fifth child. The others were as follows: Caroline, born Nov. 30, 1822, died Dec. 7, 1847. William, born Nov. 16, 1824, married Nov. 7, 1848, Lucy Roberts, of Colebrook, and is now deceased; in company with his brother Pitkin he operated a tannery, having learned the trade, and he was also a farmer, conducted a hotel, and in later life practiced surgery. Pitkin, born Oct. 1, 1826, is deceased. Frederick, born Dec. 10, 1828, is a farmer living in East Hartford. Albert, born Nov. 15, 1832, died in 1897; he was a farmer. Lucy, born Nov. 10, 1834, became the wife of Charles Meigs, and died in California. Charles, born Nov. 20, 1837, is the proprietor of a market in East Haven. Nettie Cebelia, born Sept. 27, 1840, is the wife of Philo B. Norton, a well-known liveryman of Waterbury. Charles Yale, the elder, was a Democrat in politics, and he and his family attended the services of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

The boyhood of John B. Yale was spent after much the same fashion as that of the sons of other Connecticut farmers of his day and generation. He was born Nov. 8, 1830, and the first twenty-four years of his life were passed upon his father's farm. In 1854 he came to Naugatuck, to enter the employ of the Goodyear Rubber Shoe Co., with which corporation he was connected for forty years, retiring to private life in 1894, with a handsome fortune, accumulated through persistent perseverance, indomitable industry, sound judgment and quick foresight. His home is one of the most beautiful in Naugatuck, and there he dispenses generous hospitality to his friends. He is fond of horses, and in his stable may be found some of the finest specimens in New Haven county. Generous and genial in private life, he is never derelict to his obligations as a citizen, nor unmindful of other and more serious duties which have devolved upon him as a churchman. He is one of the town's most public-spirited residents, and an earnest and consistent member of the Episcopal Church in Naugatuck, which he was largely instrumental in founding, subscribing liberally to its establishment, and going about personally to solicit contributions for the cause. In personal appearance Mr. Yale is of fine physique, bearing his threescore and ten years with the same ease with which men of less vigor carry the weight of half a century. He is a Republican in politics, and a member of the Masonic Fraternity.

In 1860 Mr. Yale married Miss Frances E. Isbell, whose father, John Isbell, was an old and highly esteemed resident of Naugatuck. Her only brother, John, was a gallant soldier during the Civil war, and died from a fever contracted while in the service. Mr. and Mrs. Yale have but one child, a daughter Laura Yale, who became the wife of Charles H. Ensign, of Hartford. They had one child, Howard Yale Ensign.

NELSON JAMES WELTON, who was born Feb. 15, 1820, in Waterbury, at Buck's Hill, three miles north of the Center, is a descendant in direct line from John Welton. The latter was born in Wales, and came to America, settling in Saybrook, living for a time in Farmington, and finally, in 1679, moving to Waterbury, where he died June 18, 1726. Seven consecutive generations of the Weltons have lived in Waterbury, and six have died there.

Richard Welton, the first male child of European parentage born in Waterbury, was a son of John, the emigrant, and was born Sept. 27, 1679; he died in 1755. He was a builder, and erected the home at Buck's Hill. There was a fort at Waterbury where the settlers would gather to sleep at night under protection from hostile Indians. Eliakim Welton, son of Richard, was born Jan. 21, 1715, and died Nov. 20, 1794.

Richard Welton, son of Eliakim, was born on the old home Oct. 10, 1743, and died Feb. 26, 1820.

Thomas Welton, son of Richard, was born Dec. 8, 1774, was baptized Jan. 5, 1775, and died April 18, 1856. He married Sybil Cook, of Wallingford, and had a family of six children, of whom the eldest was Lyman, the father of Nelson J.; Eveline, born Jan. 23, 1800; Minerva, born March 19, 1802; Sally D., deceased in infancy; Sally D. (2) was born June 14, 1810; and Nancy, born April 12, 1812. Eveline married Anson Downs, of Waterbury. Minerva married Burton Payne, of Bristol. Sally D. married Henry Bronson, of Middlebury, and Nancy became Mrs. Frederick A. Bradley, of Bridgeport.

Lyman Welton was born June 15, 1798, and died Nov. 18, 1882. He was a farmer all his life, residing on the old place at Buck's Hill. He married Minerva Judd, who was born in Watertown June 29, 1800, a daughter of Benjamin H. and Anna (Prindle) Judd, the latter of whom was a daughter of the Rev. Chauncey Prindle. Three children came to Lyman Welton and his wife: Henry A., born Dec. 2, 1823, is a retired mechanic, now living in Hartford. Franklin L., born Dec. 11, 1827, died Nov. 1, 1886; he was engaged in the fire insurance business in Waterbury, where he held the office of town clerk and selectman. Nelson J. is mentioned below.

Benjamin H. Judd, father of Mrs. Lyman Welton, was born Sept. 30, 1770, a son of Joel Judd, and died May 26, 1860. He was a mechanic and cabinetmaker of Watertown. The Judd family is descended from one Deacon Thomas Judd, who emigrated from England about 1633, and settled in Cambridge, Mass. In 1636 he moved to Hartford, and in 1644 to Farmington. He was one of the deputies to the General Court in 1647. His death occurred in 1688. Lieut. Thomas Judd, the representative of the second generation of the family in America, came to Waterbury, where he was one of the first planters, and represented the town in the General Sessions for eleven years. He died in 1703, aged about sixty-five. John Judd, son of Lieut. Thomas, was born in Farmington, married, and became the father of Benjamin Judd. He died in 1717. Benjamin Judd was born Aug. 28, 1710, became a physician of considerable ability, and married Abigail Adams, who bore him several children. Among them was Joel Judd, who was born in Waterbury, July 15, 1748, and became a soldier in the Revolutionary war, in which he was wounded by a bullet which he carried the remainder of his life. Joel Judd married Mercy Hickox, and became the father of Benjamin H., mentioned above as the father of Mrs. Lyman Welton.

Nelson F. Wilton

Nelson J. Welton spent his boyhood days on the farm at Buck's Hill. He was educated in the district school and the Waterbury Academy, where he studied surveying and civil engineering under Charles Fabrique. At the age of eighteen he began teaching a district school, and for five years taught school in the winters in Wolcott and Naugatuck, and spent his summers in surveying. In 1850, at the age of twenty-one, he was appointed county surveyor for New Haven county. For more than fifty years Mr. Welton has been a civil engineer and surveyor, and for many years was the only surveyor in this part of the county. He still has his office and is a consulting civil and hydraulic engineer. The building in which his office is located was built in 1856, and on its completion Mr. Welton took up his quarters there. In politics Mr. Welton is a Democrat, and has held many important offices in the gift of his party, although his personal popularity has gained him many votes outside of the strict party vote. From 1853 to 1885 he was city engineer; for five years from 1853 he was city clerk; from 1852 to 1856, grand juror; from 1856 to 1863, town clerk; for twenty-eight years justice of the peace; in 1859, judge of probate for the district of Waterbury; in 1861, representative from Waterbury to the General Assembly; in 1863 and 1864, recorder of the city court of Waterbury; in 1867, president of the board of water commissioners, a position he held until 1896, with the exception of a break of two years. He built the water works, and for more than thirty years was the general manager. He was engineer in charge of the construction of the city's system of sewerage, and in 1878 was appointed one of the State Board of Engineers for the inspection of reservoirs and dams, which position he still holds. From the formation of the Riverside Cemetery Association in 1853 Mr. Welton has been its secretary and superintendent, and since 1865 has served also as its treasurer. He has served several terms as alderman of the city, was acting mayor (in the absence of Mayor Spencer) and rendered valuable service in securing the bequest under the will of the late Silas Bronson, and in the establishment of the Bronson library in 1870. Mr. Welton has been identified with many of the progressive institutions of Waterbury, being one of the incorporators of the Waterbury Savings Bank, of which he is at present a director, and he is also a director in the Waterbury National Bank. He is greatly interested in the cause of education, and is a member of the corporation and the present treasurer of St. Margaret's School for Girls in Waterbury.

In religious connection Mr. Welton is a communicant of the Episcopal Church, where his kindred on both sides have been found. He is a member and senior warden of St. John's Church, is agent of the parish and vestry, and is active in all Church work. For fifty-two years he was connected with the Sunday-school as pupil and teacher, and for thirty-two years was a vestryman. From 1877 to 1889 he was parish clerk. In the Masonic fraternity he has taken high rank. He took his first degree of Masonry in Harmony Lodge, No. 42, F. & A. M., Waterbury, Feb. 14, 1856, and was made a Master Mason March 20, same year. As Master of the lodge he did good work from 1865 to 1866, and on the formation of Continental Lodge, No. 76, he became one of its charter members. Mr. Welton was made a Royal Arch Mason in Eureka Chapter, No. 22, R. A. M., March 10, 1858, and was High Priest of the chapter in 1863 and 1864. On October 13, 1865, he was knighted in New Haven Commandery, No. 2, and became a charter member of Clark Commandery, No. 7, K. T., of which he was Eminent Commander in 1873 and 1874. In 1881 he received the Scottish Rite degrees in E. G. Storer Lodge of Perfection, in Elm City Council, P. of J., and New Haven Chapter, Rose Croix. The next year he became a 32d degree Mason, receiving the consistory grade in Lafayette Consistory, Bridgeport, Conn. He also belongs to Pyramid Temple, Ancient Arabic Order, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, Bridgeport, and is an honorary member of Mecca Temple, New York City. In the Grand Masonic bodies of Connecticut Sir Nelson J. Welton served as Grand Commander of the Grand Commandery of Connecticut in 1881 and 1882.

On Jan. 20, 1869, Mr. Welton was married to Mrs. Frances R. P. Lyon, who was born in Smyrna, N. Y., Oct. 17, 1832, and died Aug. 9, 1900. She was the daughter of John and Abbie (Chapin) Phillips.

GEORGE MARSHALL AVERILL, the genial proprietor of "The Ark" at Indian Neck, town of Branford, was born in that town Oct. 12, 1838, a son of John and Almira (Hemingway) Averill, and grandson of David Averill (a seafaring man of Branford) and his wife, Polly Morris.

John Averill made his home in Branford and followed the sea. He was a coaster speculator and captain of vessels for several years, and built several vessels. He was a native of Branford, in which town he ever made his home. He married Almira Hemingway, daughter of Stephen and Polly (Andrews) Hemingway of East Haven, and his children were: George M., Harriet J. (Mrs. Lewis Frisbie), Roland G., Asahel, Frank and Alvira (Mrs. Adrian Ely).

George M. Averill was educated in the common schools and Branford Academy, and for a number of years followed the coast, holding all possible positions from cook to captain. For twenty-two years he has been proprietor of "The Ark," a most popular resort on Indian Neck, famous for its shore dinners. The cheery welcome of the proprietor and the excellency of the entertainment have won the good will of the public.

On March 20, 1864, Mr. Averill was united in marriage with Miss Harriet E., daughter of Russell Babcock, of North Lyme, Conn., and this union has been blessed with five children: Fred L., an attorney by profession, and the present clerk of the Court of Common Pleas; George Walter, John R., Louis S. and Ernest L. In politics Mr. Averill is a staunch Republican, and fraternally is identified with Widows Sons Lodge, No. 66, F. & A. M.

HENRY WATSON FRENCH, the subject of this sketch, was born in the town of Chicopee, Mass., July 23, 1837, son of Arasmus French, who was born in Wendell, Mass., in March, 1813, and died in New Haven, Conn., in June, 1890.

Samuel French, grandfather of Henry W., was born in Wendell, Mass., where he lived all his days and died at a good old age. He married Lucy Norcross, and a family of seven children was born to them: Allen, who died young; Arasmus, father of Henry W.; Arad, of whom little is known, as he was of a roving disposition, and after reaching manhood wandered away and was never heard from; Adaline, who was blind, and died unmarried; Elmira, now deceased, who married a Mr. Armstrong and lived in Montague, Mass.; Thankfull, who married Milton Sawyer and removed to Glens Falls, N. Y. (both are deceased); and Lucy, a school teacher in her younger days, who married a Mr. Upham and lived in Royalston, Mass., and now a resident of Athol, that State (she is now about eighty years of age). Samuel French was the "village blacksmith" of his town. He served in the war of the Revolution and in the war of 1812. His ancestry served in the French and Indian war.

Arasmus French, the father of Henry W., spent his boyhood days in his native town, Wendell, working with his father, the village blacksmith. It is said of him that at the age of twelve he could shoe horses. At the age of sixteen he walked to the town of Lowell, Mass., where he learned the trade of machinist with the Lowell Machine Co. From Lowell he moved to the town of Chicopee, Mass., and at the age of twenty-one married Lydia Morton, daughter of Dr. Joshua Morton, of Athol, Mass., where she was born in March, 1811. She died in September, 1892, in New Haven, Conn. Six children were born to this union: Lucy Jane married J. L. Hungerford, of New Haven, and died in that city; Henry Watson is the subject proper of these lines; Ellen Maria died in infancy; Carrie Ardelia died in Ravenswood, L. I., at the age of three years; William Arasmus is a machinist and lives in Ansonia, Conn.; Emma Morton married Charles L. Denning, and lives in New Haven.

Arasmus French was connected with the Ames Manufacturing Co. of Chicopee for over ten years, and while there conceived the idea of knitting stockings by machinery and invented the necessary apparatus. The machine was considered a great wonder at the time, and was on exhibition in Boston and later in Barun's Museum, New York. The patents covering the invention were first secured by Philadelphia parties, and later by a company in Waterbury, Conn., and it was the foundation of the American Hosiery Co., one of the industries of the latter city. About 1850 Mr. French removed to New Haven and became connected with the Winchester Arms Co. He was one of the early inventors of what is now known as the Winchester Repeating Rifle, and he had much to do with selecting the necessary ammunition therefor. He was connected with this company at different periods for nearly forty years. He was also the inventor of the process of making paper boxes from paper and other pulp, and of many other devices of value now in use. In politics Mr. French was a Whig and later a Republican. In religion he was first a Congregationalist, and later in life a free-thinker and spiritualist. Both the French and Morton families were of the old New England type, and were associated with the history and development of that part of Massachusetts to which they were native. Arasmus French and his wife are buried in the New Haven cemetery, New Haven, Connecticut.

Henry W. French, son of Arasmus, spent his early boyhood days in the town of Chicopee, Mass., where he was born, and at the age of six removed with his parents to Boston, Mass., and later to New York, where he attended the public schools of the city up to the age of twelve. It then became necessary for him to begin to do for himself. He worked in various offices and stores until, at about the age of fifteen, he went to the town of Ravenswood, L. I., where his father was engaged in the manufacture of ammunition. In 1852 the entire factory was destroyed by an explosion of powder, and twenty-eight people were killed. Upon this disaster the father gave up that dangerous business and removed to Waterbury, Conn. At this time—at the age of sixteen—Henry W. took up an unfinished order for a million cartridges for the use of the insurgents in Cuba, and completed the same in West Troy, N. Y. On the completion of this work he took a position with an uncle in New Bedford, Mass., who was a merchant. In 1854 he went to Waterbury and was with his father's family again, and here he learned the trade of machinist with the Blake & Johnson Co., by whom he was employed for about ten years. He then accepted a position as toolmaker with the Waterbury Button Co., with whom he remained two years. The manufacture of cloth buttons was then in its infancy in this country, and Mr. French made some valuable improvements in the manufacture. After leaving the last named concern he engaged with the Lane Manufacturing Co., taking charge of their tool-department, and later advanced to the position of superintendent, which he held for twelve years. In 1891 he was placed in charge of the claim department of his city. In 1892 he became connected with the Waterbury Horse Railway Co. and had considerable to do with the amendment of their charter.

which changed the name to "Electric Co." and permitted them to extend the line to Naugatuck. After this work was finished Mr. French accepted a position with the Connecticut Indemnity Association and had charge of their renewal department in New York City, retaining his residence, however, in Waterbury. After four years with this company he engaged with the Monarch Manufacturing Co., of Waterbury, which later changed its name to the Consolidated Engine Stop Co., and has for several years been representative and salesman of this concern in the United States.

Mr. French in politics has always been a Republican, and he has taken an active part in the work of the party in his city. He represented his ward for twelve consecutive terms (twelve years) as councilman and alderman in the city government. In 1892 he was elected tax collector, and he has filled other positions of honor and trust in Waterbury. In 1860 he entered the military service, joining the Connecticut National Guard, and served continuously until his honorable discharge, in 1871. He is a past noble grand in the I. O. O. F., a member of the Grand Lodge, also of the Royal Arcanum and other lodges and societies.

On Oct. 28, 1857, Mr. French married Anna Maria Taylor, who was born in Waterbury March 13, 1838, and has always lived on Cherry street, in that city. Samuel Taylor, her father, was born in 1812 in Birmingham, England, and came to this country at the age of nineteen to assist in the manufacture of gilt buttons, his work being the burnishing or polishing. He was first employed in Attleboro, Mass., but in 1835 removed to Waterbury, and was almost continuously employed by the Scovill Manufacturing Co. for over fifty years, until his death, in 1893. Mr. Taylor married Harriet H. Price, daughter of Edward Price, of Attleboro, Mass., who came from England to engage in the manufacture of jewelry. Both Mr. and Mrs. Taylor were life-long members of the Methodist Church, and were much respected.

Four children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. French: (1) Charles Henry, born Jan. 29, 1850; (2) George Taylor, born Jan. 1, 1865, who died March 25, 1870; (3) Edward Rutledge, born Feb. 8, 1871; and (4) Cherrie Morton, born April 8, 1876.

Charles Henry French commenced his education in the schools of Waterbury, and continued his studies at the Wesleyan Academy, Wilbraham, Mass., Yale Medical College, New Haven, and Bellevue Hospital Medical College, New York City, where he graduated in the class of 1880. After two years of service on the medical staff of the Charity Hospital, Blackwell's Island, he commenced the practice of medicine in his native city, Waterbury, and three years later located in Pawtucket, R. I., where he now resides. He is a prominent citizen of that city, is president of the Rhode Island Medical Society, State medical director, on the brigade staff of the Rhode Island National Guard (with the rank of lieutenant colonel), an associate member of the United States Military Association of Surgeons, trustee of the Providence County Savings Bank, director in the National Bank, a vestryman of St. Paul's Church, and a member of various lodges and clubs. In 1884 Dr. French married Florence S. Wells, daughter of Horace and Lydia Ann Wells, of Waterbury, and three children have been born to them, Horace Wells, Morton Taylor and Dorothy.

Edward Rutledge French attended the local schools and graduated from the Waterbury high school, class of 1888, receiving the highest honors, at the age of seventeen. Two months later he presented himself as candidate for admission to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Boston, Mass., and entered that institution the same year, graduating four years later, in the class of 1892, course of Electrical Engineering, receiving the degree of B. S. He at once accepted the position of assistant manager of the Suburban Electric Co., Elizabeth, N. J., and on the death of the manager was advanced to his position. After five years' service with this company he accepted a position with the American Electric Heating Corporation at their New York office, and later at the main office, Cambridge, Mass., where he now resides. In 1895 he married Miss Josephene W. Nelson, of Stamford, Conn., daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John C. Nelson, of that city. They have had one child, Reba, born Nov. 28, 1898.

Cherrie Morton French attended the public schools of her native city, Waterbury, up to the age of fifteen, and continued her education at the Wesleyan Academy, Wilbraham, Mass., St. Margaret's School, Waterbury, and graduated valedictorian of the class of 1896 from the Drew Ladies College, Carmel, N. Y., at the age of twenty, receiving the degree of A. M. She took a post-graduate course at the same college the year following, winning a scholarship for the Woman's College of Baltimore, and is a member of Pi Beta Phi sorority. At the breaking out of the Spanish-American war, having had previous experience at hospitals, she volunteered her services to the American National Red Cross Society. She was accepted, and went immediately on duty at the Red Cross Hospital, New York, and on July 4, 1898, with others, left New York to join Clara Barton in Cuba, entering the harbor of Santiago the day after its capitulation. Later on she sailed with Gen. Miles on his expedition to Porto Rico, and was present at the shelling and capture of the forts in Guanica harbor, by Lieut. Wainwright, of the "Glocester." She was one of the first ladies to accompany a fleet of war vessels in actual duty and service. She returned to the United States on the U. S. transport "Lampasses," with about one hundred and fifty sick and wounded soldiers of the army bound for the government hospital at Old Point Comfort, Va., and later was detailed to duty at Camp Wikoff, Montauk Point, L. I. Here she was stricken with Spanish malarial fever and taken to Bellevue Hospital, New York, and later to her home in Waterbury, Conn. She recovered from this illness, and is now on the staff of nurses at the Presbyterian Hospital, New York City.

Miss French received much praise and honor for her heroic work during the war. She was presented with a valuable token by the ladies of Auxiliary No. 3, New York Red Cross Society, accompanied by a letter from Mrs. Whitelaw Reid, which read:

NEW YORK, Jan. 14, 1899.

DEAR MISS FRENCH:

I have been instructed by the ladies of the board of managers of Auxiliary No. 3 to send you the enclosed ring as a token of their appreciation of the faithful and most satisfactory work you have accomplished for the said Auxiliary this summer. The ladies also herewith tender you their thanks and feel they are much indebted to you for your aid in so worthily fulfilling the purpose for which this Auxiliary was formed.

I am yours very sincerely,

[Signed] ELIZABETH MILLS REID,
Secretary Auxiliary No. 3, New York.

Upon the return of Miss French to her home in Waterbury the citizens, through the mayor and board of aldermen, presented her with a very beautiful and valuable gold and diamond-studded badge of honor especially prepared for her. She is a member of the Daughters of the American Revolution, and distributed many articles of comfort sent her by that society during her stay in Porto Rico.

PLINY HITCHCOCK (deceased) was one of the honored citizens and leading farmers of Cheshire, and a representative of one of the pioneer families of New Haven county.

The first to settle here was John Hitchcock, who took up his residence in the town of Wallingford about 1675. To him and his wife Abigail came nine children, namely: Mary, born Dec. 10, 1676; Nathaniel, born April 18, 1679, who died May 12, 1710; Margery, born Sept. 9, 1681; Elizabeth, born April 8, 1684; John, born Oct. 18, 1685, who was married Nov. 21, 1712, to Marlon Munson; Mathias, born May 26, 1688, who is mentioned below; Hannah, born Jan. 6, 1690; Damaris, born June 11, 1693; and Benjamin, born March 24, 1696, who married Elizabeth Ives.

Mathias Hitchcock, son of John, spent his entire life in Wallingford, and his remains were interred there. He was married in the year 1710 to Thankful Andrews, and they had thirteen children, whose names and dates of birth were as follows: Mathias, June 10, 1711 (who died April 7, 1726); Nathaniel, Oct. 15, 1712 (who died young); Valentine, Feb. 14, 1715; Oliver, Nov. 14, 1716; Jason, Aug. 16, 1718; William, Oct. 16, 1720; Thankful, March 29, 1725; Mathias, Feb. 11, 1727; Ebenezer, Sept. 14, 1728; Tabitha, Feb. 26, 1730; Nathaniel, May 7, 1733; and Enos and Hannah, twins, April 27, 1735.

Jason Hitchcock, son of Mathias, was also a life long resident of Wallingford and a farmer by occupation. He married Lydia Cook, Sept. 20, 1743, and to them were born seven children: William, June 26, 1744; Thomas, Dec. 20, 1746; Lemuel, Dec. 20, 1749; Jason, July 12, 1752 (died in infancy); Jason (2), Oct. 10, 1755; Ichabod, Dec. 18, 1756; and Thankful, March 20, 1761.

Ichabod Hitchcock, son of Jason, and father of our subject, was born in Wallingford, and from there removed to Cheshire, where he spent his last days. During his entire life he engaged in agricultural pursuits. He was twice married, his first wife being Lurinda Cook, by whom he had five children, namely: Pliny, our subject; Sarilla, wife of George Stevens, of Burton, Ohio; Jason; Hannah, wife of T. L. Gaylord; and Lucinda, wife of Richard Beach, of Burton, Ohio. By the second marriage there was one child, Abigail, who married and went South.

During his boyhood Pliny Hitchcock pursued his studies in the public schools of Cheshire and the Cheshire Academy, and also learned the stonemason's trade, which he followed during the greater part of his life. He was born June 30, 1791, and always made his home in Cheshire, where he owned two farms near Cheshire Centre, in the southern part of the town, aggregating 100 acres. To the improvement and cultivation of these he devoted a part of his time. He was a worthy member of the Congregational Church, and in politics was a supporter of the Whig and Republican parties. He was domestic in his tastes, temperate in his habits and a good Christian man, one who commanded the respect and confidence of all with whom he came in contact, in either business or social life. He died upon his farm March 13, 1864, and was buried in Cheshire cemetery.

Mr. Hitchcock married Miss Sally Bradley, a native of Cheshire, born Jan. 18, 1793, a daughter of Reuben and Roxanna (Frisbie) Bradley. She, too, was a member of the Congregational Church, and a most estimable lady. She died on the home farm, Jan. 13, 1874, and was laid to rest by the side of her husband. In their family were the following children: (1) Jason Cook, the eldest, is deceased. (2) Lydia (deceased) engaged in school teaching and later married Levi Munson, by whom she had one child, Marv, now deceased. (3) Roxanna is one of the best-known women in Cheshire, where she was successfully engaged in dressmaking and the millinery business for a number of years. She is well-read and refined, and presides with gracious dignity over a beautiful home in Cheshire, planned by herself. (4) Sarah was also a school teacher, and is now the widow of Norman Steele, of Waterbury. (5) Lucinda married Samuel Cook, and both are now deceased. (6) Jason died in infancy. (7) John Augustus is engaged in mercantile business in Liverpool, England. (8) Ann

Pliny Hitchcock

Amelia, who in early life engaged in school teaching, and (9) Cornelia A. both reside with their sister Roxanna, in Cheshire. The family is well-known and very highly respected in the community where its members have so long made their home.

STILLMAN BASSETT DOOLITTLE, a successful farmer of Pond Hill, Wallingford, was born on the old family homestead on Pond Hill Nov. 15, 1841.

Abraham Doolittle, our subject's emigrant ancestor, was the progenitor of all who bear the name in this country. He and his brother John were in Massachusetts at a very early day. John died childless. Abraham Doolittle was in New Haven before 1642, and was the owner of a house. In 1644 he took the freeman's oath, and was made the chief executive officer (or sheriff) of the county. He was chosen by the people of New Haven as one of the committee to superintend the affairs of the new settlement, then (1609) just commenced at the village. The name of the village was changed to Wallingford, and it was incorporated May 12, 1670, by an act of the General Court, then sitting at Hartford. Abraham Doolittle was one of the first to settle in the place, and was there some two or three years before the incorporation. He died Aug. 11, 1690, aged seventy.

Abraham Doolittle (2), son of Abraham, was born Feb. 12, 1649, and died in 1732, aged eighty-three years.

Samuel Doolittle (1), son of Abraham (2), was born March 14, 1698.

Samuel Doolittle (2), son of Samuel (1), was born Feb. 28, 1725.

Samuel Doolittle (3), son of Samuel (2), was born April 11, 1749.

Chauncey Doolittle, Sr., son of Samuel (3), was born in 1777 in Wallingford, and died May 17, 1833, in his fifty-sixth year. He was a wagon-maker by trade, had a shop at Pond Hill, and supplied the surrounding country for a wide extent with his wares. His trade included joiner work, and he also farmed his estate, continuing in the active performance of his duties until his death. Mr. Doolittle was well known, and no man was more highly respected. His political convictions made him a Democrat, and he was one of the pillars of the M. E. Church in Wallingford.

Chauncey Doolittle, Jr., son of Chauncey, Sr., was born July 2, 1810, at Pond Hill, and lived out his exemplary life in this quiet village, dying Feb. 15, 1854. Like his father, he was a member of the Democratic party. He worked as an apprentice until he became of age (1831), and was subsequently employed at his trade by Jared Mansfield, in North Haven, until about the time of his marriage, when he returned to the old homestead. On Dec. 28, 1834, he married Betsey Bassett, of North Haven, daughter of Joel and Betsey Bassett, and they became the parents of three children: Jannette, born Oct. 17, 1836, died Jan. 1, 1837. Stillman Bassett is our subject. Sophronia, born July 2, 1844, died July 11, 1860. Mrs. Doolittle made her home with her only son until her death, on June 1, 1894, when she was aged eighty years, eleven days.

As a loving and unselfish mother, as a Christian woman and a kind sympathizing friend, she set an example worthy of record. Her religious connection was with the Congregational Church.

Stillman Bassett Doolittle was educated in the common schools, and grew to manhood on the farm, to which he has devoted the greater portion of his time during many years. Agriculture interests him, and he has found a general line of farming quite profitable. He has also been quite successful in breeding good cattle from poor stock.

The death of his mother was a severe blow to Mr. Doolittle, as, beyond everything, he was a devoted son. Her last years were made comfortable through his loving care. Probably there is no more highly esteemed citizen in his part of Wallingford than Stillman Bassett Doolittle.

WALTER GOODRICH BISHOP, one of the honorable and meritorious citizens of the town of Guilford, where he has long conducted a fine farm, was born in Meriden, New Haven county, June 26, 1827, and is a descendant of one of the oldest families in the State. Benjamin Bishop, his grandfather, was a native of North Haven, where he lived and died. He owned a gristmill and was engaged in farming.

Martin Bishop, father of Walter G., was born in North Haven. He was very largely self-educated, and became a good mathematician. At the age of fourteen Mr. Bishop entered a factory in Meriden, and was employed by Squire Yale, learning the tinner's trade, at which he worked for a number of years, being for many years employed as a journeyman tinner. He made pocket lanterns, and was the first in this country to manufacture lanterns for policemen's use. Later in life he moved to Stony Creek, where he kept a boarding house and continued the manufacture of lanterns. There he died and was buried. He was a man of active spirit and progressive ideas. He contracted for and built one mile of the New Haven & Hartford Railroad. In religion he was a member of the Baptist Church, and in politics a Democrat. In Meriden he married Salvina E. Bradley, a daughter of James Bradley, and a native of Meriden. Their children were: Walter G.; Sarah H., who died young; Nathaniel H., a resident of Stony Creek; and Frances, who died in early womanhood. Mrs. Salvina E. Bishop died at Stony Creek. She had been a member of the Baptist Church at Meriden for many years.

Walter Goodrich Bishop attended the district school and later the high school. He remained on the farm with his father until he was fifteen years old, and his first employment away from home was with Coles & Stephens, under whom he learned monument stonecutting. While still in his teens he entered the Parker foundry and learned the molder's trade thoroughly, working there sixteen years. After some months' employment in Hartford he returned to Meriden and worked two years for the Isabel Curtis Co. From Meriden he went to the town of Orange, where he bought a farm once owned by Deacon Pardee, and cultivated same for seven years, selling at the end of that time and coming to Guilford, where he bought the Charles Fowler farm. This place consisted of twenty-four acres, and Mr. Bishop has since purchased two other farms, aggregating in all 162 acres. He also bought 100 acres which he sold. He has made extensive improvements on his place, and is engaged in general and dairy farming, doing a very successful business. He is president of the Dexter L. Bishop Co., and by his energy and enterprise has won a good position in commercial circles.

Walter G. Bishop was married in Meriden to Dorcas J. Hungerford, by whom he had one child, Sarah H., now deceased. His first wife dying, Mr. Bishop married Nancy M. Leete, a daughter of the late Rufus N. Leete, and a native of Leete Island, and to this union came three children: Dexter L. is an ice and lumber dealer in Meriden; he married Esther Johnson. Burton W., a farmer in Guilford, married Lillian R. Remington. Grace S., a graduate of the Guilford high school, was a bookkeeper for her brother Dexter, but now resides at home. Mrs. Nancy M. Bishop died in 1886, and Mr. Bishop married her sister Ellen M.

In politics Mr. Bishop was originally a Democrat, but is now a Republican. He belongs to the Baptist Church at Meriden, but attends the First Congregational Church of Guilford. Socially he holds membership in Center Lodge, No. 68, I. O. O. F., Meriden, of which he is past grand.

WILLIAM M. TYLER is one of the most successful and progressive agriculturists on Bucks Hill, Waterbury. He devotes considerable attention to fruit growing and dairy farming, and has made his special field of industry an eminent success.

A native of New Haven county, Mr. Tyler was born in the town of Middlebury Jan. 30, 1837, and is descended from one of its old and highly respected families, founded here by three brothers, James, Josiah and Daniel Tyler, who came from Branford, Conn., and located in what is now known as Tylers-town, Middlebury. There they married and reared families. They were land owners and farmers. Their remains were interred in the old cemetery of Middlebury.

Daniel Tyler, Jr., son of the Daniel previously mentioned, was a large land owner and farmer in Middlebury, as well as one of the leading citizens, taking quite a prominent part in public affairs. He was a Whig in politics, represented the town in the State Legislature and held many local offices. He was a member of the church. His death occurred upon his farm in Middlebury, and his remains were interred in the old cemetery there. He married Miss Sally, daughter of Asabel Bronson, a soldier of the Revolutionary war, and to them were born eight children, namely: Asabel, father of our subject; Daniel; Lucius; Mary, wife of Samuel Bloss; James; William O.; Eli; and Sally, who died at the age of three years.

Asabel Tyler was born on the old homestead at Tylers-town, where he grew to manhood, and was reared to agricultural pursuits. In 1843 he removed to Woodbury, Litchfield Co., Conn., where he engaged in farming and stock dealing until 1864, when he located in Oakville, same county. In 1871 he came to Bucks Hill, New Haven county, later removed to Plymouth, Conn., and from there to Lebanon, Mo., where he spent two years. At the end of that time he returned to Waterbury, Conn., and he passed the remaining years of his life on Bucks Hill, where he died; he was buried in Woodbury cemetery. Mr. Tyler was a well-to-do farmer, owning considerable property. He was liberal in his religious views, attended the Congregational Church, and in politics was first a Democrat and later a Republican. He married Amy Amalga Morris, of Woodbury, by whom he had two children: William M., our subject; and Jennette, wife of Nathan Burton. Mrs. Tyler died in her native town and was buried there. She was a consistent member of the Congregational Church. For his second wife Asabel Tyler married Virginia Shea, who was of French descent.

During his boyhood William M. Tyler attended the district schools of Woodbury and Roxbury, and completed his education in the high schools of Woodbury and Waterbury. He remained at home until twenty-two years of age, when he settled on Bunker Hill, Waterbury, and he was one of the first men of that section to engage in the dairy business. In 1860 he removed to Bucks Hill, locating on the Col. Welton farm, a tract of 140 acres, which he has greatly improved. He is still extensively engaged in the dairy business, and is one of the largest peach growers in the Naugatuck Valley, having over thirty-five acres of land devoted to peaches. He also buys and sells produce, and in all his undertakings has been remarkably successful. Besides his property in this county he owns land in Missouri and other parts of the West.

On Jan. 4, 1871, in Plymouth, Conn., Mr. Tyler was united in marriage with Miss Ida J. Painter, a native of that place, daughter of Capt. Edward and Clarinda (Palmer) Painter, and granddaughter of Thomas Painter and John Palmer. She was educated in the high school of East Hampton, Mass. Mrs. Tyler has many noble traits of character. She has been an invalid for several years, but bears her sufferings with patience and Christian fortitude.

Mr. and Mrs. Tyler have two children: Bessie Clarinda, who graduated from the Waterbury high school and has successfully engaged in teaching for four years; and Robert William, who is engaged in peach growing. He married Inza Gertrude Phillips. The father and daughter are members of Mad River Grange, in which he has served as master, and she as organist. Mr. and Mrs. Tyler hold membership in St. John's Episcopal Church of Waterbury. In politics he is an independent Democrat. As a public-spirited, progressive citizen, he takes a deep and commendable interest in all enterprises calculated to prove of public benefit.

WILLIAM EDWIN WELD, one of the oldest and most highly respected citizens of the town of Guilford, is a native of that locality, born Aug. 30, 1815, and is descended from one of the earliest and best families of New England.

Rev. Thomas Weld and his brother Joseph were the first of the name in America. The former came from England to these shores on the ship "William Francis," landing at Boston, June 5, 1632. His brother Joseph arriving a year later, and both resided in Roxbury, Mass., the former becoming minister of a church there.

Daniel Weld, supposed to be a son or grandson of one of the above brothers, was born in Roxbury, and there grew to manhood, afterward removing of Long Meadow, Mass., thence to Durham, Conn., where he passed the rest of his days. He married Mary Warren, a sister of Gen. Joseph Warren, who fell at the battle of Bunker Hill, and two children were born to them: Daniel, who married Elizabeth Starr; and Joseph.

(II) Joseph Weld, the first of the name in Guilford, was born in Durham, Conn., in 1727; was educated and served his apprenticeship in Boston, Mass., and was a weaver by occupation. Removing to Guilford, he there carried on an extensive business, and there died April 28, 1806, at a very advanced age, his remains being interred in Guilford cemetery. On Oct. 31, 1759, he married Lucy Fowler, who was born in Guilford Feb. 19, 1735, a daughter of Ebenezer and Elizabeth (Starr) Fowler, and died Sept. 5, 1800. Their children were as follows: Lucy, born July 29, 1760, died June 8, 1778; Beulah, born Sept. 6, 1762, died Sept. 12, 1847; Ann, born July 12, 1764, died Oct. 4, 1848, married Nathaniel Wilcox; Joseph, born July 26, 1766, married Sarah Parmelee; Edmund, a sketch of whom follows; William, born May 27, 1771, married Clarissa Gillet, and removed to Paris, N. Y.; Sarah, born April 7, 1773, died Jan. 12, 1857; and Daniel, born Sept. 23, 1776, died July 30, 1825, married Submit Rossiter.

(III) Edmund Weld, grandfather of William E., was born Dec. 11, 1768, in Guilford, where he passed his entire life, dying there Nov. 3, 1838, highly respected by all. He had considerable talent as a singer, and for many years, from the age of seventeen, led the choir in the church at Guilford. On Dec. 1, 1790, in Guilford, he married Charlotte Stone, who was born in 1770, a daughter of Benjamin Stone, and died Jan. 20, 1810. For his second wife Edmund Weld wedded, June 1, 1812, Mercey Nettleton, born Dec. 3, 1781, who died July 8, 1864. Children by first wife: George, sketch of whom follows; Charlotte, born Jan. 22, 1793, died May 28, 1886, married Robert Fowler; Lucy Ann, born Nov. 15, 1794, died Aug. 16, 1797; Mary Adcock, born Sept. 20, 1795; James William, born June 17, 1798, married Eleanor B. Coates; Richard, born June 30, 1800, died Aug. 8, 1852, married Sarah Walker; Henry, born July 9, 1802, married Elizabeth Ward; Harvey Stone, born July 29, 1804, died March 20, 1885, married Elizabeth Greenleaf; Lucy Ann, born Aug. 23, 1806, died in June, 1852, married John Coats; Mary, born March 23, 1809, died Oct. 14, 1828. Children by second wife: John, born Sept. 25, 1813, died June 6, 1887; Betsey, born May 8, 1815, married Charles R. Wheden; Edmund, born Aug. 5, 1817, died Dec. 8, 1881, married Betsey Isabell; Samuel, born Sept. 30, 1818, died in 1850, in California; Lydia Maria, born Dec. 23, 1819, married Jared Buell; Alfred Washington, born March 3, 1823, married Sarah Morgan; and Daniel, born April 12, 1825, died Nov. 8, 1859, married Melinda C. Connor.

(IV) George Weld, father of William E., was born June 8, 1791, in North Guilford, where he received a district school education, and learned the trade of carpenter and joiner. Later in life he removed with his family to Sag Harbor, L. I., there continuing his trade several years, then returning to Guilford, where he passed his later years, dying in March, 1876; his remains were interred in Guilford western cemetery. He was a member of the Episcopal Church, and of the choir, being a singer of no mean reputation. In politics he was a Democrat, though no office seeker. He was a temperate man, an industrious, loyal citizen, a kind husband and loving parent, and lived an industrious, upright life.

In Guilford, in 1813, George Weld married Mabel Fowler, who was born in that town May 9, 1791, a daughter of William and Olive (Cran) Fowler, and died Dec. 21, 1821. For his second wife he wedded Mabel Loper, born Sept. 5, 1788, who died Nov. 4, 1869. His children: George Leander, born March 12, 1814; William Edwin, a sketch of whom follows; Clarissa Olive, born June 5, 1818, died Dec. 1, 1886; and Frederick Monzo, born Feb. 1, 1820. William E. is the only survivor.

(V) William Edwin Weld, whose name introduces these lines, received in the vicinity of his place of birth a common-school education, which was of necessity somewhat limited, as at the early age of ten years he had to commence supporting himself. Until he was fifteen years old he worked on a farm for his board and clothes, and then removed with his father and rest of the family to Sag Harbor, where he learned the trade of carpenter and joiner. During this time he made a whaling voyage to the South Atlantic and return; but not caring for a seafaring life he continued at his trade in Sag Harbor till once more making his home in Guilford, his birthplace. There he commenced business as a carpenter and joiner, and for over fifty years was engaged in building and dealing in lumber, becoming one of Guilford's self-made successful men. For the past few years he has, for the benefit of his health, been living on and cultivating a small farm. He still, however, makes his home in Guilford, where he built and owns a fine residence, equipped with all modern improvements. A lifelong Democrat, Mr. Weld cast his first vote for Andrew Jackson; for several years was selectman of Guilford, also Burgess of the borough; in religious faith he is a member and vestryman of the Episcopal Church. Mr. Weld is noted far and near for his honest and honorable dealing in both public and private life, and is justly classified among Guilford's best citizens.

On Sept. 23, 1838, in the town of Guilford, William E. Weld was married to Myrta M. Holcomb, born Dec. 29, 1820, a daughter of Medad Holcomb, and children as follows came to them: (1) Jane Clarissa ("Jennie"), born Aug. 21, 1841, married Charles W. Shelton, of Windsor, Conn., and later became the wife of Henry Merriam, who died in 1897. One child was born to the first marriage, Lillian Jennie, who married Frederick T. Dudley, and has two children, Shelton Weld and Mildred F. (2) William Edwin, born Aug. 23, 1843, is superintendent of the Boston Buckboard Carriage Co., New Haven; he married Imogene Dorman; they have no children. (3) Julia Augusta, born Sept. 19, 1860, died Oct. 28, 1860.

THE HOLCOMB FAMILY, of which Mrs. Weld is a member, is one of the oldest in America. Thomas Holcomb, the founder of the New England branch, came from England with the early settlers, and located first in Dorchester, Mass., later in Windsor, Conn., where he died. Nathaniel Holcomb, grandfather of Mrs. Weld, was a native of Granville, Mass., and there married Jennie Adkins; they had two children: Medad, sketch of whom follows; and Geneva, who married Walter Stevens, and died in August, 1862.

Medad Holcomb, father of Mrs. Weld, was born July 27, 1781, in Granville, Mass., whence he came to North Guilford, and here on Dec. 31, 1800, he married Betsey Stevens, who was born in 1777 and died Dec. 9, 1803. For his second wife he married, Dec. 10, 1804, Betsey Benton, born Oct. 25, 1781, died March 12, 1815. For his third wife he married, Aug. 10, 1815, Myrta M. Fowler, born June 26, 1798, who died Aug. 3, 1821. For his fourth wife he married, Dec. 6, 1821, Nancy Parnel Dudley, born April 29, 1797, who died Sept. 26, 1845. His fifth wife was Harriet Leete. Children born to Medad Holcomb: Betsey, born May 9, 1802, married Asa Montgomery; Polly, born Nov. 29, 1803, married Larius Bartholomew; Elledini, born Sept. 18, 1805, married Thomas Evans; Frederick, born Jan. 31, 1807, married Mary Rogers, and died June 11, 1886; Louise, born Oct. 19, 1809, married Jesse Crane, and died June 3, 1843; Henry, born Oct. 18, 1811, died Feb. 25, 1842; Appollas, born in July, 1813, died July 22, 1813; Sophia, born Feb. 4, 1817, married William C. Dudley; William Ward, born Oct. 18, 1818, married Julia A. Wheadon; Myrta M., born Dec. 29, 1820, married William E. Weld; Lorenzo Dow, born Nov. 5, 1823, died Feb. 26, 1826; Mary Ann, born April 29, 1826, died Dec. 22, 1826; Medad, born Sept. 29, 1828, married Lavina Sherwood; Mary Barker, born Oct. 11, 1831, died Dec. 11, 1831; Helen, born Sept. 19, 1834, died March 13, 1836; Helen M., born July 18, 1838, married Samuel H. Cruttenberg; and Cecelia, born May 12, 1842, married William Cornell. There were no children by the fifth marriage.

DANIEL L. CHIPMAN, now living in quiet retirement in Waterbury, was born in that town Nov. 10, 1821. Samuel Chipman, father of our subject, was born July 16, 1780, in Wallingford, this county, where his father was engaged as a tailor. The latter reared a family of four children, viz.: Samuel; John, who was a farmer and harness-maker in Cornwall, Conn., and lived to the advanced age of ninety-one years; Joseph, who lived in Fairhaven; and Elizabeth, Mrs. Grannis.

Samuel Chipman was reared to manhood on a farm in Wallingford. On Dec. 27, 1802, he married Nancy Potter, who was born in Hamden, New Haven Co., Conn., September 14, 1784. To this union came eleven children, in the following order: Samuel D., born Dec. 29, 1803, became a farmer and died in Waterbury, April 29, 1881; Sherman B., born June 13, 1806, died Jan. 16, 1860; Lyman, born Nov. 9, 1808, was a hatter in Newtown, and died June 27, 1874; William, born Aug. 13, 1811, was a farmer of Cheshire, where he died; George E., born Feb. 9, 1813, was a cabinetmaker, and died in New York State in February, 1898; Joseph, born July 6, 1815, was first a tailor, and later became a farmer, and died in Waterbury, Sept. 25, 1884; Timothy T., born April 3, 1818, died in South America; Ransom, born Nov. 13, 1819, was a tailor and mechanic in Waterbury, and died Oct. 31, 1884; Daniel L. (the subject of this sketch); Elizabeth M., born April 2, 1824, married John Whitnev, and died in New Haven June 12, 1892; and Martha A., born Feb. 5, 1826, died March 4, 1831.

Daniel L. Chipman grew to maturity on a farm. In his earlier manhood, however, he for many years drove an omnibus through Waterbury, and on retiring from that calling, about twelve years ago, took up his home about half a mile from his birthplace, the place comprising about seventy acres just outside the city limits of Waterbury.

Daniel L. Chipman

On Oct. 1, 1876, Daniel L. Chipman wedded Laura A. Morehouse, who was born in Washington, Conn., and who died, after a pleasant companionship of nearly twenty years, June 24, 1895. On Oct. 12, 1896, Mr. Chipman chose for his second wife Sarah V. Worrall, who was born in Litchfield, this State, a daughter of John and Elizabeth (Chipman) Worrall, the former a native of England, who became farmer of Litchfield; the latter was a native of Cornwall, Conn., and a daughter of John Chipman, uncle of the subject of this sketch.

Daniel L. Chipman, like his father before him, has been a life-long Democrat. In religious belief he was reared a Methodist. He is now passing the remaining years of his life in the companionship of his estimable wife, surrounded by friends innumerable, enjoying the fruits of his early labors, and at peace with all the world.

OSBORNE. Through all, saving the first decade and a half, of the century just closed, the name introducing this sketch has been one of prominence in mercantile and industrial life in the town of Derby and of Ansonia, as well as in the social and religious life of those communities. Here have figured a number of the immediate descendants of Capt. Stephen Osborne, among them his son, the late John White Osborne, and in turn his son, Major Wilbur F. Osborne, the latter for years the president of the Osborne & Cheeseman Co., and at this time president and assistant treasurer of the Union Fabric Co., both of Ansonia, as well as being interested in various enterprises.

Capt. Stephen Osborne, of New Haven, with his wife and family, the wife formerly being Apama Gorham, a granddaughter of Capt. George Gorham, came to Derby to live in 1817. Both Capt. Osborne and Capt. Gorham were patriots and saw active service in the war of the Revolution. A Capt. Stephen Osborne is referred to in the records of Connecticut men in the Revolution as being of Wallingford, and was commissioned a lieutenant on July 26, 1777, promoted captain May 1, 1778; while Capt. George Gorham is given as being, in 1779, in the company commanded by Abner Robinson, and in Samuel McClellan's regiment. Capt. Gorham was one of the men who assisted in stretching the famous iron chain across the Hudson to obstruct the British from going up the river.

Both long before and after the Revolution Derby was the scene of much shipbuilding which was the greatest industry of the town. One Thomas Wheeler, of Stratford, who settled on Birmingham Point in 1657, was probably the first engaged there in such industry. After some six years he was succeeded by Alexander Bryan, a merchant, and the latter later by the Hawkenses, and from 1712 to 1720 it was a prominent trading point. Another busy shipyard was, in early days, at the Cove where were built vessels called Boston Coasters. Some distance below figured the Leavenworths, who built the old bridge in 1798. At what was styled the Red House were built by Capt. Edmund & Sons, Gideon and Edmund Leavenworth, many vessels, schooners and sloops. Gideon Leavenworth was another of the patriots of the Revolution. He was in command of a company of infantry in 1777, and was himself wounded in the battle of White Plains. Packets were built up the Naugatuck river earlier than 1797, opposite the "old Parsons place." Soon after that date Capt. George Gorham built and launched a schooner from near the present Naugatuck and Derby stations. Capt. Gorham built many vessels below the Point of Rocks now known as Hallock's old ship-yard. Sea-captains and sea-faring men, too, were numerous about Derby, some of whom sailed to all points of the world. One George Gorham was a sea captain.

Capt. Stephen Osborne, at his death, left an estate which in those days was considered quite valuable, but the trustee of the estate invested the money in the Derby Bank which failed, and the family were left without means. The son, John White Osborne, who was born June 26, 1810, in New Haven, came with the family to Derby in 1817, and early learned the shoemaker's trade, receiving for his services his board and $25 per year. On the completion of his trade he accepted a position with George W. Blakeman, then a grocer and dry goods merchant on the east side of the river. He remained with Mr. Blakeman for a number of years when at the latter's suggestion and with his assistance young Osborne, in 1843, opened a grocery store, on the west side of the river in Birmingham, and at a point where now stand the buildings of the Ousatonic Water Co. (corner Main and Water streets). In about 1845 he formed a partnership with George W. Cheeseman and they moved into the "stone store," built by Daniel Judson in 1836. These gentlemen transacted a large business, operating two stores (the other in Waterbury) until 1850. In 1858 the firm also engaged in the manufacture of hoop skirts, and in the following year removed the business of this industry to Ansonia, still retaining for a time the Birmingham store. The formation of the business firm in the middle forties, of Osborne & Cheeseman, was the beginning of a business connection, which for so many years was a great factor in the manufacturing interests of Ansonia and Shelton.

In 1866 the Osborne & Cheeseman Co. was organized as a joint stock corporation, with a capital of $120,000. Before its organization and under the original firm, in 1861, was built the main factory, on the site of the burned Ansonia Clock Works. Subsequently the building was enlarged, and the line of manufacture largely increased to include web goods, suspenders and wire woven tape for skirts. A shop for metallic goods was also run. On the organization of the company John W. Osborne was made president; Charles Durand, secretary, and George W. Cheeseman, treasurer. Mr. Osborne remained the executive head of the company until his retirement from active business in the early seventies. He had led an active, busy and successful business life.

In his early life, prior to merchandising, Mr. Osborne had engaged to some extent in school-teaching in Derby Neck, which point later for many years was the home of the family, and where the son, Major Wilbur F. Osborne, continues his residence. Mr. Osborne had no taste for public life, and held but one political office in his life time. He was once elected a grand juror but refused to qualify until on a Sunday during divine services at Church, a man more or less intoxicated took from his pocket a bottle of whiskey, and began pouring the contents over the congregation. Mr. Osborne qualified to prosecute this man. When quite a young man Mr. Osborne was confirmed in the Episcopal Church, but soon thereafter became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and ever afterward remained a consistent and active Christian. His life was an example to all men—one ever upright and honest, free from malice and always full of kindness for everyone. His life was a tower of strength and a blessing to many who, upon turning from sin, found the new life seemingly hard and the cross heavy to bear. His disposition was such that care rested upon him lightly, and from the time he became a member of the church to the day of his death he gathered strength and courage from all vicissitudes. He was one of the leaders of the church, ever high in its councils. He at one time led the choir and for many years directed the music, was almost continually steward and a member of the official body, and for a long period was superintendent of the Sunday-school. He often discoursed to the congregation and his talks were full of light. All through his long life in the church he was the comforter and adviser of all—the one sought and the one turned to in time of need. The effect of his life in the church was the same on the outside upon all with whom he came in contact. He was a man among men. He had his opinions in temporal as well as in spiritual affairs, and when they differed from the opinions of others it had not the sting of malice and spite. His opinions were always respected. He died with friends innumerable and without an enemy. Always full of energy and life he was active to the end, his more than four score years falling lightly upon him. His death occurred March 6, 1895.

Mr. Osborne was married three times, first to Susan H. Durand, of Derby; second to Mary Douglas, of New York; and third to Miss Eliza Hill, of Reading, Penn. His children, all born of the first marriage, were Wilbur F.; Fannie W., born in 1836, married Isaac D. Drew, and died April 11, 1884; Harriet J., born in 1844, died in 1860; and Helen V., born Jan. 15, 1848, married E. H. Krehbiel, and died May 10, 1894.

Mrs. Susan H. (Durand) Osborne, the mother of these children, born in 1816, and died in 1859, was the daughter of the late Samuel Durand, and a descendant in the fifth generation from Dr. John Durand, who was early at Stratford, Conn., marrying there Elizabeth, daughter of Richard Bryan, and granddaughter of Alexander Bryan. Dr. Durand settled in Derby about 1685. From this ancestor Mrs. Susan H. (Durand) Osborne's line of descent was through Joseph, Noah and Samuel Durand.

(II) Joseph Durand, son of Dr. John, born Dec. 20, 1709, married April 25, 1734, Ann Tomlinson. She died Feb. 14, 1778, and he passed away Aug. 6, 1792.

(III) Noah Durand, son of Joseph, born May 12, 1740, married Abigail, daughter of Caleb Tomlinson, and lived on Great Neck, and there died April 12, 1818. His widow died Nov. 2, 1831.

(IV) Samuel Durand, son of Noah, born July 13, 1783, married (first) Susan Hawkins, (second) her sister Sally Hawkins, and (third) Nancy Beers, of Trumbull, Conn., and (fourth) Nancy Brown, of New Bedford. Mr. Durand was a farmer on Bare Plains. He died in February, 1852. His children were: Charles, Sarah, Susan H. (Mrs. Osborne) and Samuel.

MAJOR WILBUR F. OSBORNE, son of John W., is a native of Derby, and has thus far in life made that town his home; his business life, however, since the formation of Ansonia, has been in the latter town. He has grown up in the business enterprises established by his father, and from boyhood taken an active and prominent part in planning and developing the business out of which since have come a number of branches, as well as having engaged in various other enterprises. A few years subsequent to his father's retirement from the presidency of the Osborne & Cheeseman Co. he became the executive head of the concern. In 1882, as an offshoot of the above named company, there was incorporated the S. O. & C. Co., which has since been engaged in manufacturing eyelets and eyeletting machinery, and also metal goods. Some years later, in 1887, the Union Fabric Company was incorporated, to cover steel and other wires for use in skirts, bustles, etc. Of this company, Major Osborne was made president, a position he still holds. He is also president of the Schneller Stay Works, of Ansonia, and treasurer of the Connecticut Clasp Co., of Bridgeport. The Major was one of the original incorporators of the S. O. & C. Co., of Ansonia, and of the Derby Silver Co., of Shelton, now a branch of the International Silver Co. He is one of the prominent manufacturers of the Naugatuck Valley, and is recognized as an enterprising and public-spirited citizen, both in Ansonia and in Derby. He is president of the Derby Neck Free Library.

Major Osborne served three years and seven months in the Civil war, having enlisted in April, 1861, from the Wesleyan University, first, in the three months service, and later in the first regiment that was sworn into the United States service for the entire Civil war. He received promotion to sergeant, second and first lieutenant, and captain of artillery; was artillery instructor of the 2d Connecticut Artillery; inspector general of defences at Washington, South of the Potomac; ordnance officer; acting quarter master, etc.

AUGUSTUS I. GOODRICH, who is now living in Waterbury, comes of an old and honored American family of English extraction.

Luther Goodrich, grandfather of our subject, born July 16, 1776, in East Haddam, Conn., was a sea captain. He was a member of Columbia Lodge, No. 26, F. & A. M., of East Haddam. He married Sarah Danforth (who died in 1861), and by her had a family of four children: Sarah and Miranda both died at the age of twenty-five years; George was the father of our subject; Hepsey P. married William Dorrance, lived in Andover, Conn., and died at the age of sixty-two years.

George Goodrich was born in East Haddam, Sept. 8, 1805, and died Dec. 29, 1879. He received his education in Rocky Hill, Conn. He learned the trade of cabinetmaker in Hartford, from there proceeding to Bristol, where he worked in a clock-case factory until 1878, at that time moving to Waterbury, where he passed the rest of his days. He married Charlotte L. Ives, who was born in Bristol, a daughter of Ira and Cynthia (Shaler) Ives; her father was a Captain in the Revolutionary war. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. George Goodrich, viz.: Miss Almira M., living in Waterbury; Augustus I., our subject; and George L. and Samuel R., mechanics, who reside in Bristol. The mother died in 1848. The father was a lifelong Whig and Republican, and in religious faith both he and his wife were Congregationalists.

Augustus I. Goodrich was born Sept. 16, 1833, in Bristol, and there attended the common school and academy. At the age of twenty-three, in the year 1856, he came to Waterbury, where he has resided ever since, having been continuously in the employ of the Waterbury Clock Co. until May, 1890, since when he has lived retired. For many years he was superintendent of the works, and during his long service of over forty years he proved himself honest, capable and industrious, leaving with a record second to none in the company's employ.

On Jan. 22, 1861, Mr. Goodrich married Helen I. Corbett, who was born in Rome, N. Y., daughter of Samuel and Rachel Corbett, the former a representative of an old Boston (Mass.) family, and the latter of an old Maine family. Two children have been born to this union: Frederic S. and Charles G., both very talented young men.

Frederic S. Goodrich, M. A., professor of Greek in Albion (Mich.) College, was born in Waterbury Sept. 9, 1865, and there received his early education, later attending Wesleyan Academy, Wilbraham, Mass., from which he graduated in the class of 1885, taking the commencement oratorical prize. For a year he was engaged in newspaper work, after which he continued his studies at Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn., and was graduated in the class of 1890. During his course he took prizes in Latin, Greek and English literature, and led the class in general scholarship. He is a member of the Phi Beta Kappa and Psi Upsilon fraternities. After graduation he spent a year abroad, studying in the University of Berlin, and in the American School of Classical Studies at Athens. He visited points of interest in Egypt, Palestine and Asia Minor, and on his return he taught Greek for a year in Wesleyan University, and in 1892 was appointed to the professorship of Greek in Albion College, where he has since remained. Prof. Goodrich is regarded as an authority in his chosen field, and is also well-known as a lecturer on various topics. In 1894, under his management, the students of the Greek department at Albion College gave a highly successful production of Sophocles' "Oedipus Tyrannus," and in 1900 "Iphigenia among the Taurians," both in the original Greek. Prof. Goodrich received the degree of M. A. from the University of Michigan in 1898. The Professor is an ordained minister of the M. E. Church, and is a member of the Detroit Conference. On Jan. 3, 1893, he married Mary M. Harrison, of Waterbury, an accomplished art student, and they have two children, Frederic H. and Helen R. Mr. Goodrich is a Freemason and Odd Fellow. In 1900 he was the nominee for governor of Michigan on the Prohibition ticket.

Charles G. Goodrich, Ph.B., was born Sept. 19, 1869, in Waterbury, received his early education in that city, and after attending the Waterbury high school went to Wesleyan Academy, Wilbraham, Mass., where he entered the College Preparatory and Music departments. Even thus early his merit was recognized by his appointment as organist of the Memorial M. E. Church, taking the place of the musical instructor of the Academy. He was graduated with honors in the class of 1889, of which class he was elected permanent president. In the fall of 1889 he entered Wesleyan University (Middletown, Conn.) and prepared himself for teaching modern languages, taking special honors in this department. He also won the Sney scholarship prize, given for general excellence of work. He was a member of Psi Upsilon fraternity, and was graduated in 1893 among the first in his class, being chosen to membership in Phi Beta Kappa in spite of the fact that much of his time had been devoted to the music of the First M. E. Church of Middletown, where he was organist and director of a large chorus choir. He was also organist of the University chapel. At the end of his course he was appointed assistant librarian of the University, and took a post-graduate course in his specialties. In the summer of 1894 he went to Germany and studied languages and music in Berlin. He returned to take charge of the Department of Modern Languages at Albion College (Albion, Mich.), during the year's leave of absence of the head of the department. At the end of this year he returned to Europe for further study at the celebrated University of Bonn, studying and traveling in France and Italy. On his return to America he was elected head of the Modern Language Department of Harry Hillman Academy, Wilkesbarre, Pa., a large college preparatory school with an enviable reputation for its high standard of scholarship. This position he held, as well as that of organist and choir leader of the First M. E. Church of the city, one of the most important musical appointments in the State, until Sept. 10, 1901, when he resigned to take the Professorship of Romance Languages at Marietta College, Marietta, Ohio, where he now resides. He is also a member of Harmony Lodge, No. 42, F. & A. M., of Waterbury, Conn. On Aug. 25, 1897, he was married to Annie Y. Shortle, B. A., of Provincetown, Mass., a graduate of Wesleyan Academy (Wilbraham, Mass.) and of Wellesley College (Wellesley, Mass.), class of 1897, where she not only completed with high honor the course in Liberal Arts, but also the course in the Art of Painting.

Mrs. Augustus I. Goodrich, a graduate of the State Normal School at Framingham, Mass., and later a student at Allen's English and Classical School, at West Newton, Mass., was in 1859 and 1860 a teacher in the public schools of Waterbury. She has always been closely identified with church work, and for several years has been president of the King's Daughters of Waterbury. It may be truly added here that it was mainly through her efforts and teachings that her sons took up study so assiduously, and have thereby reached the enviable literary positions they now hold.

Augustus I. Goodrich is a Republican in his political proclivities, and for a number of years he served in the common council; represented the First Ward of the city in the aldermanic board six years; was police commissioner ten years; and was one of the commissioners when the police station was created. In 1863 he joined the State militia, was elected lieutenant, later captain of Company A, 2d Regiment Conn. N. G., in which capacity he served seven years, when he was succeeded by Major F. A. Spencer. He was also elected lieutenant colonel, but declined the honor. For a number of years he was connected with the Center school district, was chairman of its committee in 1890, and re-elected to the office for two years in 1898. Socially he is affiliated with Harmony Lodge, No. 42, F. & A. M., at Waterbury, and is a past master and trustee. In religious faith he is a member of the M. E. Church. He is a man of high character, one whose well-spent life is worthy of emulation, is very popular, and wields considerable influence in his locality.

CHARLES JOSEPH PIERPONT (deceased) was a prominent and influential citizen of East Farms, Waterbury, and a worthy representative of an honored old family of New Haven county. Of French descent, he traced his ancestry back to Robert Ale Pierpont, or Robert of the Stone Bridge, who accompanied William the Conqueror to England. One of his descendants, who also bore the name of Robert, was created Earl of Kingstone in 1628. He had two brothers, one of whom was William, the father of James Pierpont, who was the first of the family to come to America, and who had two sons, John and Robert. The former located in Roxbury, Mass., and married Thankful Stowe, and among their children was James Pierpont, born Jan. 4, 1659, who was graduated at Harvard College in 1681, and on July 2, 1684, was ordained pastor of the Center Church of New Haven. On Oct. 27, 1691, James Pierpont married Abigail, daughter of Rev. John Davenport. She died Feb. 3, 1692, and on May 30, 1694, he was again married, his second union being with Sarah, granddaughter of Gov. Haynes. Her death occurred Oct. 27, 1696, and he married for his third wife, on July 6, 1698, Mary Hooker, granddaughter of Rev. Thomas Hooker, of Hartford.

Ezra Pierpont, grandfather of our subject, was the first of the family to locate in this section. He wedded Mary Blakeslee, a native of North Haven, and a daughter of Isaac Blakeslee. She died Sept. 28, 1827, and he departed this life Jan. 7, 1842. They had five children, whose names and dates of birth were as follows: Chloe, Aug. 15, 1783; Luther, Feb. 8, 1785; Seabury, March 13, 1787; Austin, May 19, 1791; and Lucy, July 26, 1793.

Austin Pierpont, our subject's father, was a land owner and farmer at East Farms, Waterbury, where he spent the greater part of his life, and is buried in the East Farms cemetery. He was killed by lightning. On Feb. 20, 1812, he married Sally Beecher, daughter of Enos Beecher, and to them came nine children: Enos Austin, born March 24, 1813, died Jan. 9, 1814; Enos Augustus was born Jan. 8, 1815; Ezra Alonzo was born Dec. 1, 1817; Sarah Minerva, born March 2, 1820, died Sept. 24, 1840; Nancy Jennette, born March 24, 1822, died Dec. 28, 1825; Charles Joseph, our subject, is next in order of birth; Emily Jennette, born June 15, 1830, married A. J. Beers; William Seabury was born June 23, 1833; Ellen Maria was born June 10, 1840.

Charles J. Pierpont was born at East Farms March 11, 1825, and was reared on the home farm, acquiring his education in the schools of Waterbury. On reaching manhood he engaged in farming on his own account, and also became a successful butcher and stock dealer. Upright and honorable in all things, he was widely and favorably known, and had the confidence and respect of all with whom he came in contact, either in business or in social life. He held membership in the Episcopal Church, and was identified with the Democratic party, but never sought political preferment. He died on his farm March 27, 1884, and was buried in the East Farms cemetery, a part of which land he had given to the town for burial purposes.

In the town of Waterbury Mr. Pierpont was married, April 20, 1846, to Miss Mary A. Warner, and to them were born six children, namely: (1) Charles J. and (2) Austin B. are both represented elsewhere. (3) Ellen C. is the wife of George W. Conner, of Westside Hill. (4) Wilson L. is a dairy farmer of East Farms. He is a Republican in politics, and a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He married Annie E. Merrill, a daughter of Nathan Merrill, and she died in 1898, the mother of eight children, George, Edith, Albert, Richard (deceased), Joseph, Charles, Nathan and Harold. On April 9, 1901, he married Mrs. Anna E. Hall. (5) Elmer M. is a grocer of Waterbury. (6) Mary A. is the wife of Charles S. Miller, of Waterbury.

Like her husband, Mrs. Pierpont is held in high regard by all who know her. Her father, Jared Warner, a farmer by occupation, was born Oct. 16, 1785, son of Mark Warner, a Revolutionary soldier. In August, 1803, he wedded Mary Bronson, who was born May 3, 1785, a daughter of Levi Bronson. They had four children: Amanda, born Nov. 19, 1804, married Wesley Bronson; Levinus Bronson was born Aug. 12, 1808; Olive Caroline, born Nov. 1, 1810, married James Converse; and Mary Ann, born Dec. 8, 1828, married Charles J. Pierpont, our subject.

GEORGE LINSLEY, a retired carpenter and cabinet maker, is spending his last days in Branford in the peace and quiet to which his long and useful life well entitles him. Mr. Linsley was born in that borough May 29, 1829, son of Elias and Mary (Bradley) Linsley. Elias Linsley was born Aug. 28, 1803, in North Branford, a son of Daniel and Polly P. (Jones) Linsley, and became a cabinet maker and undertaker. For sixty years he was in business in Branford, where he left a good competence and the legacy of a good name. There were three children in his family: George, Henry David, and J. Atwood.

Daniel Linsley died Dec. 30, 1813, at the age of forty-eight. His wife died in September, 1847, at the age of seventy-four. To them were born the following children: Betsy, who married Samuel Page; Benjamin D., who married Elvira Whitney; Abigail; Harvey J., who first married Laura Clark and later Mary Somers; Jeremy, who married Phebe Page, and (second) Sarah Beach; Sylvia; Elias; Polly Parnell; Charles; Hezekiah, who married Mariam Gillette, and after her death, wedded Maria Doolittle; and Daniel. Israel Linsley, Jr., the father of Daniel, married Hannah Winthrop. He was a son of Israel and Priscilla (Wheaton) Linsley, and grandson of Jonathan and Dorcas (Phipper or Phipenny) Linsley, and great grandson of John Linsley, who came from England and settled in Branford in 1646.

Mr. Linsley's maternal grandfather, Timothy Bradley, of Branford, married Irene Gordon, a daughter of Alexander Gordon, who was a sailor and came of a Scottish family. His great-grandparents were Timothy and Sarah (Goodsell) Bradley. He lived in Branford where Seth Thomas Bradley now has his home.

George Linsley was reared in Branford, where he obtained a common-school education. Early in life he learned the cabinet maker's trade, under his father's instruction, and followed same for nine years. Desiring to see more of the world he went to sea as a common sailor, and for a year was engaged in visiting American and West Indian ports. On his return he worked at the carpenter's trade, in New Haven, and presently began contracting and building. For forty years he was one of the most reliable and aggressive business men of Branford, having the construction of the principal buildings, churches, private houses and store buildings as well. Time has tried his work, and his honest construction and the sound material employed are demonstrated in the passing of the years. Our subject was one of the incorporators of the Branford Savings Bank. He is actively interested in everything affecting the welfare of the town, and for eighteen months had charge of the Blackstone Library.

Mr. Linsley was married April 30, 1855, to Miss Ellen F., a daughter of Henry N. and Almira (Tuttle) DeWolf, of New Britain, and a granddaughter of John and Desire (Noyes) DeWolf, and a great-granddaughter of that Paul Noyes who furnished $60,000 of leather equipments for the Revolutionary war, for which it is said he was never paid. The maternal grandfather of Mrs. Linsley was Manning Tuttle, of North Haven, who married Beda Barnes. Mr. and Mrs. Linsley have one daughter, Isadora A. Mr. Linsley belongs to Widows Sons Lodge, No. 66, F. & A. M., and to Harmony Lodge, No. 5, I. O. O. F. In politics he is a Republican.

JACOB HENRY GARRIGUS, one of the prosperous and respected farmers and worthy citizens of the town of Wolcott, is a native of the State of New Jersey, born March 25, 1838, in Morristown, Morris county. He comes of an old Pennsylvania and New Jersey branch of the family, which is of French Huguenot origin.

The first of the family in this country was David Garrigus, who came to America as an exile from France during the religious persecutions in that country. He settled in Philadelphia, Pa., and died leaving a large family, most of whom had adopted the Quaker faith. Jacob Garrigus, son of David, settled in Hanover township, Morris Co., N. J., where he became a land owner and farmer. He had a family of nine children, four of whom—

David, Isaac, Jacob and John—participated in the Revolutionary war, John being present with Washington at the surrender of Cornwallis.

John Garrigus, son of Jacob, above mentioned, was born in Hanover township, Morris Co., N. J., and followed farming there. He married Elizabeth Shipman, of the same locality, and had children: John, Isaac, Samuel, Mary, Ruth and Lydia.

Isaac Garrigus, son of John and father of Jacob H., was born in 1798, in Hanover township, Morris Co., N. J., and was there reared and educated. His occupation was that of a smelter and charcoal burner, and he became a well-to-do man, dying in comparatively good circumstances. He passed away in August, 1865, in his native township, a member of the Presbyterian Church. He was a Whig in politics. In 1822 Mr. Garrigus married Sarah Sheppard, daughter of John Sheppard, and they had a family of fourteen children, as follows: Mary Ann (deceased) married George Griswold; David, of Waterville, Conn., married Arminda L. Birch; Euphemia K. married John Mesler; Harriet died young; Phebe married John Totton; Isaac Newton (deceased) married Caroline M. Twiss; Lewis, of Waterbury, Conn., married (first) Lizzie Parsons, and (second) Eunice Welton; Cyrus (deceased) married Harriet M. Douglass; Jacob Henry is the subject of these lines; Elizabeth Sarah married Jacob Vanslike; Charlotte married James Johnson; Horace, of Waterville, Conn., married Maria Dailey; Ellen Janette married Homer H. Welton, of Waterville, Conn.; Aaron S. is a resident of Morristown, N. J. The mother of these died in 1883, at the home of her son, Jacob Henry; she was a member of the Presbyterian Church.

Jacob Henry Garrigus, whose name introduces these lines, received a liberal education in the schools of his native township, and those at Greenwich, R. I., also attending Providence Conference Seminary, with the intention of studying for the ministry. The breaking out of the Civil war, however, interrupted his plan, and, in September, 1861, he enlisted in Company E (Capt. Martin B. Smith), 8th Conn. V. I. On July 1, 1862, he was promoted to corporal, and later to sergeant. On Feb. 9, 1864, he veteranized, and served until December, 1865, when he was mustered out. He participated in several general engagements, besides minor battles, and skirmishes, and was also on detached service, recruiting and drafting. He was Military Post Master of Lynchburg, Va., for two months, also teacher in Freedman Schools at the same place for three months. Returning to the pursuits of peace, he settled in the town of Wolcott, where he has since resided, working at the joiner's trade, and also in agricultural pursuits. His home had previously been in Waterbury, and he has built several dwellings there.

On Dec. 24, 1865, Mr. Garrigus married Sophronia Elizabeth Upson, who was born in the town of Wolcott, a daughter of Lucian and Lois A. (Johnson) Upson, and children as follows have been born to them: (1) Ella A. died in infancy. (2) Walter H., salesman for the Waterbury Lumber Co., married Miss Flora J. Sears, of Waterbury. (3) Fanny Elizabeth married Edwin D. Manwaring. (4) William Leroy, who lives in Waterbury, married Fannie A. Hitchcock. (5) Harry L. married Bertha May Patterson. (6) Bessie B. married Arthur J. Pierpont. (7) Annie Belle and (8) Minnie Belle (twins) are students in the State Agricultural College. (9) Jessie Adele is attending high school in Waterbury. The mother of this interesting family is a lady of refinement and education, and prior to her marriage taught school several terms. Mr. Garrigus is a Republican in politics. He has served in various offices of honor and trust, in 1889 representing the town of Wolcott in the State Legislature; has been justice of the peace, health officer and registrar of voters. Socially he is a member of Wadhams Post, No. 49, G. A. R., and Mad River Grange, of which he was chaplain several terms. In religious faith he is identified with the M. E. Church of Waterbury.

The Upson family, of which Mrs. Garrigus is a worthy and highly esteemed member, was one of the early settled families of New Haven county, Conn. Thomas Upson, the first of the name in New England, located for a time in Hartford, thence removing to Farmington, becoming one of the early settlers there. In 1646 he married Elizabeth Fuller, and their children were: Thomas, who died at Saybrook; Stephen; Mary; Hannah; and Elizabeth, who died July 20, 1655. The father of these passed away July 19, 1655, and his widow married Edmund Scott. Of these children, Stephen, deceased in 1735, married Dec. 27, 1682, Mary, daughter of John Lee, of Farmington; she died Sept. 15, 1715, the mother of children as follows: Mary, born in 1683, married Richard Wilton; Stephen, born Sept. 30, 1686; Elizabeth, born Feb. 14, 1689, married Thomas Bronson; Thomas, a sketch of whom follows; Hannah, born March 16, 1695, married (first) Thomas Richards, and (second) John Bronson; Tabitha, born March 11, 1698, married John Scoville; John, born Dec. 13, 1702; and Thankful, born March 14, 1706, married James Blakeslee. The father of these removed to Waterbury, Dec. 20, 1679 (prior to his marriage), and it was there he reared his family. He served as surveyor, also on the school committee and as grand juror; was deputy to the General Court three times: May, 1710, October, 1712, and October, 1720, and was sergeant from 1715 to 1720; he had a seat among the veterans in the new meeting-house.

Thomas Upson, son of Stephen, was born March 1, 1692, in Waterbury, whence he moved, in 1732, to South Farmington, afterward to Southington (now a part of Wolcott), and there died Sept. 29, 1761, his wife passing away July 13, 1750. He married Rachel Judd, daughter of Thomas Judd, and children as follows came to them: Thomas, born Dec. 20, 1719; John and Mary (twins), Jan. 21, 1721, (of whom John died in 1741, and Mary married Josiah Newell, of Southington); Josiah, Jan. 28, 1726; Asa, Nov. 30, 1728; Timothy, Oct. 8, 1731; Amos, March 17, 1734; Samuel, March 8, 1737; and Freeman, July 24, 1739 (died, 1750).

Capt. Samuel Upson, born March 8, 1737, married Ruth Cowles April 5, 1759, and settled in what is now the town of Wolcott, where he was interested in the turnpike. He died Feb. 25, 1816, the father of the following named children: May, born Feb. —, 1760, married Joseph Minor; Archibald, born April 26, 1761, who died in 1782; Isaac, born Dec. 22, 1763; Obed, born Jan. 2, 1767; Harvey, born Nov. 11, 1769; Samuel and Ruth (twins), born Aug. 16, 1772 (Ruth married Joseph Byington); Jerusha, born June 27, 1775, who died in 1779; Manly, born March 12, 1777; and Betsey, born Aug. 10, 1779, who married Lyman Higgins.

Deacon Harvey Upson, born Nov. 11, 1769, married Nov. 28, 1796, Rachel Wheeler, who was born Aug. 25, 1775. He was a deacon of the church for twenty-five years, and was a good man, faithful and sincere, in all the relations of life. He held the rank of captain in the State militia. The children born to him and his wife Rachel were: Samuel Wheeler, born Oct. 8, 1798; Herry, Nov. 16, 1800; Marshall, Feb. 22, 1803; Lois Melissa, Aug. 27, 1805 (married Lucas Sutliff); Marcus, Aug. 20, 1807; Harvey Woodward, Nov. 22, 1810; and Lucian and Lucius (twins), Feb. 13, 1815.

Lucian Upson, the father of Mrs. Jacob H. Garrigus, was engaged in farming all his life, on the family homestead situated in the southern part of the town of Wolcott. He served fourteen months during the Civil war in Company E, 8th Conn. V. I., and was discharged on account of disability. He married Lois A. Johnson, who was born in Wolcott, a daughter of Levi and Ruth (Judd) Johnson, the former of whom was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, although but a lad of fifteen summers at the time he enlisted. Mr. Upson died in 1895, and his widow died in August, 1900, at the age of eighty-two years, at the home of Mr. Garrigus. She was the only real "Daughter of the Revolution" in the Naugatuck Valley, and was the recipient of many handsome presents at the hands of the D. A. R. Children born to Lucian and Lois A. Upson as follows: Leroy, Jan. 14, 1840; Sophronia E., Jan. 30, 1842 (married Jacob Henry Garrigus); and Luella, Nov. 13, 1853. The last named was married Oct. 29, 1874, to James A. Todd, now of LaGrange, Ill., and died in Kansas.

CHARLES A. THOMPSON, for many years a leading and representative agriculturist of Woodbridge, belongs to quite an old and highly respected family of New Haven county. His great-grandfather, Timothy Thompson, was probably a native of East Haven. On Aug. 1, 1750, he married Esther Perkins, who died April 23, 1803, and he departed this life Nov. 28, 1807. Their children were Sarah, Samuel, Desire, Esther, John, Hulda, Timothy and Abram. Of these, John Thompson, the grandfather of our subject, was born April 25, 1753, and became a successful farmer of East Haven, where he spent his entire life. He was married, in 1783, to Dorcas Andrus.

George Thompson, our subject's father, was born in East Haven, Feb. 15, 1786, and died Oct. 4, 1849. He was, for those early days, an extensive farmer of East Haven, where he passed his entire life. His political support was given the Whig party and he took quite an active and influential part in public affairs, serving as selectman, assessor and in various minor offices. He married Susan Bradley, a daughter of Leverett and Esther Bradley, both natives of East Haven. She was born Sept. 2, 1791, and died Dec. 12, 1862. Our subject is the youngest child, and the only one now living in a family of five children born of this union: Horace, born May 6, 1812, was a farmer and shoemaker, and died May 20, 1892; Grace Ann, born June 15, 1814, died June 22, 1873; Edward B., born Jan. 15, 1817, died Oct. 13, 1884; and Maria, born March 10, 1820, died Jan. 23, 1884.

Charles A. Thompson, whose name introduces this review, was born in East Haven, March 23, 1825, and was given good school privileges, attending the public schools and also the academy at Fair Haven. In Woodbridge he was united in marriage with Miss Grace A. Manville, a daughter of Col. Lyman and Hannah (Ball) Manville, the former a native of Middlebury, the latter of Woodbridge. She is one of a family of eight children, two sons and six daughters, all of whom are still living. The first members of the Manville family of whom we have record were born in France. Four brothers, John, Frank, Adarean and Simeon Manville, emigrated to America at an early day and located in Connecticut. Simeon, who was the grandfather of Mrs. Thompson, came in his advanced years to Westville, where he owned property, and where he died in 1825. He was a soldier in the Revolutionary war. Mr. and Mrs. Thompson have three children: (1) George M., born March 25, 1850, is a farmer of New Haven; he married Emma L. Morris, who died Sept. 6, 1886, and has three children, Edward C., Louis W. and Emma. (2) Neva Elwood and (3) Bertha H., twins, were born Oct. 18, 1861; the former is now the wife of A. H. Buckingham, and has four children, Grace M., Dwight M., Marion and Gladys. Bertha H. is the wife of Newton J. Peck, a prosperous young farmer of Woodbridge, and has two children, Ralph M., and James B.

In his early life Mr. Thompson engaged in farming in East Haven, and from there moved to Woodbridge, locating on the old farm where his wife was born and reared. His entire active life has been devoted to agricultural pursuits, and in his labors he has met with well merited success. However, he has recently sold his farm, and now makes his home at Morris Cove, New Haven. Mr. Thompson attends the Congregational Church, of which his wife is a member, and at one time was a member of the Sons of Temperance, but has never united with any secret order. In politics he was originally a Whig, and on the dissolution of that party became a staunch Republican. While a resident of East Haven he served as assessor and selectman, but has never cared for the honors and emoluments of public office, preferring to devote his entire time to his business interests.

ALMON EDWIN CHANDLER, an honored veteran of the Civil war, and a leading farmer of Prospect, was born in Canandaigua, N. Y., Oct. 15, 1830. His father, John W. Chandler, was a native of Connecticut, but after his marriage removed to Canandaigua, N. Y., where he engaged in farming until 1832, and then came to New Haven county, Conn., locating in the town of Cheshire, where he followed the same pursuit for some time. Later he came to Prospect and purchased a small farm, upon which he spent the remainder of his life. During the Civil war, although past the age of those subject to military service, he enlisted in Company E, 6th Conn. V. I., and participated in several battles. While in South Carolina, he was taken with small-pox and confined in a hospital there for some time, after which he returned to his home in Prospect. In politics he was first a Whig and later a Republican, but was never an office seeker. In Cheshire, he married Miss Laura S. Doolittle, a native of that town and a daughter of Obed Doolittle, a carpenter and joiner by trade, and to them were born six children: Moses, a farmer of Prospect; Sidney, who died in Yalesville; Almon Edwin, our subject; Marcus, deceased; Betsey, wife of Frank Matthews; and one who died in infancy. The parents both died in Prospect and were buried in the cemetery there.

The district schools of Cheshire afforded Almon E. Chandler his only opportunity for obtaining an education, and his knowledge of farm work was obtained on the home place. On leaving the parental roof at the age of twenty years, he went to Yalesville, where he worked in the spoon factory for one year, and during the following five years he was employed in a similar establishment in Prospect, after which he worked in a ferrule shop for five years. At the end of that period he went to Geneva, Ohio, where he worked at ferrule making for six months, and then returned to Prospect, locating on the farm which has since been his home, and to the cultivation and improvement of which he has since devoted his energies.

During the dark days of the Civil war, Mr. Chandler offered his services to his country, enlisting at Cheshire, Aug. 8, 1862, in Co. A, 20th Conn.

V. I., under Capt. Gilford and Col. Ross. While at Pleasant Valley, he was sent with others to get timber with which to build huts for camp, and he was severely injured in his spine, so that afterward he was unfit for duty. After months in the hospital, he returned home, but has ever since been an invalid.

Mr. Chandler has been twice married, his first wife being Miss Julia Ann Matthews, of Prospect, where she died and was buried. She left one child, William, now a farmer of Prospect. In 1856, at Newtown, Conn., Mr. Chandler married Martha Morse, a native of Prospect, a daughter of Lent Morse and granddaughter of Lent Morse, Sr. Mortimer, the only child born of this union, is now deceased. Mr. Chandler has always affiliated with the Republican party, and both he and his wife are consistent and faithful members of the Congregational Church, and are highly respected and esteemed by all who know them.

JOHN B. POPE has the distinction of having won the proud American title of a self-made man. Many of the leading enterprises and business interests of Oxford bear the impress of his individuality, and in all his undertakings he has been remarkably successful. His great determination and energy have enabled him to overcome all the difficulties and obstacles in his path, and to work his way steadily upward to prosperity. He is known among his fellow townsmen for his reliability in all trade transactions, and he justly merits their confidence and regard.

Mr. Pope was born in the town of Roxbury, Litchfield Co., Conn., July 13, 1842, and is a great-grandson of Thomas Pope, who came from England and settled near Stratford, Conn. His son, John Pope, married a Lovland. He was a farmer by occupation, and he served as a soldier in the war of 1812. John Pope died when his son, Nehemiah, our subject's father, was but three years old, and the latter afterward lived with an uncle.

Nehemiah Pope was born in the town of Oxford. At an early age he went to Danbury, Conn., where he worked at the tailor's trade until sixteen, and from there went to Orange, this State, where he was employed on the farm of Benjamin Clark for five years. He next worked on a farm in Washington, Conn., and while there he married Miss Eliza A. Parker, a native of that place. He continued his residence in Washington, engaged in farming, until 1863, when he removed to Michigan, locating near Kalamazoo, where he purchased a tract of wild land. At the end of a year and a half, however, he returned to Washington, having met with business reverses and suffering from ill health. There he worked on a farm by the month, to secure the money necessary to bring his wife and six children back to Connecticut. Soon after their return he came to Oxford, where he died in 1883, aged seventy-nine years, his wife in 1885, aged eighty-two. In their family were the following children: Elizabeth, wife of William T. Bassett, of Hartford; Frederick B., a wagon manufacturer of Birmingham; Julius J., deceased; Clara, who married Stephen Gunn, of Milford, Conn., and died in 1808; George S., a farmer of Middlebury, Conn.; Benjamin C., a carpenter of Oxford; and John B., our subject.

John B. Pope was brought to Oxford the year of his birth, and on the home farm passed his boyhood and youth, and was provided with a good common-school education. He remained with his parents until his marriage, although at the age of nineteen years he commenced work as a farm hand. On Aug. 7, 1865, he married Jane M. Nichols, and to them have been born eleven children, all living, namely: Libbie, now the wife of Arthur D. Hubbell; John H., a farmer in Woodbury, who married Edith Tucker, and has four children, Russell, Albert, Elton and Ethel; William B.; Albert; Jennie L., wife of Charles H. Wheeler, who has had three children, John D., Florence and one that died in infancy; Alice May, who married Benwell Wilmont, clerk in the National Bank at Naugatuck, and has one child, Dayton; Lewis; Sadie; Edith; Charlie; and Abbie.

After his marriage Mr. Pope located on a farm which he had previously purchased, and resided there for two years. He then bought the Sheldon Bristol Farm, which he sold two years later, and next operated a farm on shares for ten years. At the end of that period he went to Naugatuck, Conn., where he was extensively engaged in the dairy business for two years, and then purchased what is known as the Robert Wheeler farm, a tract of 175 acres in the town of Oxford, upon which he has since made his home. In 1893 he also purchased another farm of 125 acres in the same town, and in 1897 bought a farm of 150 acres in the towns of Watertown and Woodbury. A few years after locating at his present home Mr. Pope again embarked in the dairy business, which he has since carried on in connection with his other business. He has always been interested in buying and selling horses and cattle, and there are few men in that business better known than he. For the past thirty years he has also engaged in the lumber business, and for six years has operated a steam sawmill and engaged in manufacturing charcoal. He is one of the most active and progressive business men of the town, and generally carries forward to successful completion whatever he undertakes.

The Democratic party finds in Mr. Pope a staunch supporter of its principles, though he is not strictly partisan, giving his support to the man he considers best qualified to advance the interests of the town, county or State. He has been honored with public office, having served as a member of the State Legislature in 1881 and 1882; selectman of Oxford—second selectman in 1879, 1887 and 1888; and in 1884, and again in 1889, was elected first selectman, in which office he is still retained, having been re-elected in 1901. He has also been a member of the board of relief. Fraternally he holds membership in the A. O. U. W.

MICHAEL DWYER was one of Ansonia's leading business men, and the best known Irish-American resident of that city. He located there in the fall of 1853, and at the time of his death had been in active business there longer than any other man with one exception. From a village of a few frame houses he saw the place grow to a city of 13,000 inhabitants, and he could recall the time when a one-horse team supplied the families with coal. In the material development of the city his own enterprise and sagacity have been recognized factors, he having erected a number of houses for sale or rent, and as a member of the board of burgesses he did much toward shaping municipal policies for several years.

Mr. Dwyer was born in 1837 in the parish of Glenroe, County Limerick, Ireland, son of Patrick and Hanora (Lenihan) Dwyer. His father, who was a farmer by occupation, died in Ireland at an advanced age, and the mother died in August, 1877. This worthy couple had a large family of children, as follows, six surviving: Catherine, Mrs. David Lenihan; Mary, Mrs. Houlihan, who made her home with our subject since the death of her husband in 1880; Michael, our subject; John, a resident of New Haven, where he is engaged in business; Patrick, in the employ of J. B. Gardner's Sons; Thomas, who lived with our subject; and Hanora, widow of Edward Maum. All of these children came to America in 1853.

Michael Dwyer's education was begun in the National Schools of Ireland. After coming to this country he made his home in Ansonia, with the exception of one year, which he passed in Westport, working in a cotton mill. After one year's employment in the cotton mill, in the shop now occupied by the Phelps & Bartholomew Clock Co., he apprenticed himself to learn the brass molding trade in the Carter foundry, which is now the shop of F. L. Gavlord Co. Being ambitious and thrifty he saved his money, and at the end of thirteen years' hard work there, he purchased, in 1862, a lot at the corner of Main and Central streets, where he took up his residence and established the liquor business which he carried on up to the time of his death. He was a model of integrity in all his dealings. From 1862 he bought and sold real estate extensively, and at his demise he owned six houses on the "Square" (four of which he built), besides property in other parts of the city. He also owned a business block at the corner of Main and Railroad streets, with stores below and offices above, and was one of the largest individual tax payers of the city. He was a charter member of the Board of Trade, and one of its directors, and was re-elected at the annual meeting in December, 1900, for a term of three years.

In politics Mr. Dwyer was a Democrat, but he voted for the best man in local politics. He was honored repeatedly by his fellow citizens with election to office. In 1893, when Ansonia became a city, he was appointed a member of the board of assessors, in which he served until his death. For years he was one of the jurymen selected from the city, being first chosen in 1881. Under the old borough government he was for several years a member of the board of burgesses. He was much interested in educational matters, and was always present at the graduation exercises of the high school. In religious faith he was a Catholic, and his family is prominently identified with the Church in Ansonia. In his death, which occurred April 4, 1901, the city lost a man widely known and respected for his sterling qualities, and one to whom a needy man never went in vain. He was much beloved by people of all classes, being a man of good judgment, whose opinions always carried much weight.

In 1872 Mr. Dwyer married Miss Mary Splann, a native of Ireland, and daughter of Cornelius Splann. Of eleven children born to them, seven are living, as follows: Patrick J., M. D., is a physician in Waterbury; John C., M. D., is now house surgeon at the Maternity Hospital at Baltimore; Michael Francis attended school at Fordham, N. Y., South Orange, N. J., and later at New Haven, and is now in Brown University, Providence; Margaret and Elsie are attending the high school in Ansonia; Edward Thomas is in grammar school; and Josephine in the primary public school.

Michael Francis Dwyer, mentioned above, served during the Spanish-American war as a private in "Yale Battery" A. This battery was so called because of its being made up almost entirely of Yale graduates; a few outsiders were admitted at the last in order to recruit its full strength. This was a mounted light battery, armed with six 12-pounders; six horses to a gun. The following speaks for itself:

Michael F. Dwyer, private of Battery A, First Regiment of Connecticut Volunteers, was enrolled on the eighteenth day of May, 1898 (May 18, 1898) to serve two years (2 years) or during the war. Was discharged by reason of muster out of organization at New Haven, Connecticut, October 25, 1898.

BARLOW S. HONCE.

Capt. 1st Conn. Vol. Artillery, Commanding the Battery. Countersigned:

M. W. CROFTON,

1st Lieut., 1st Infy., Mustering Officer.

EARL SMITH was born in Oxford, New Haven county, Aug. 8, 1829, and is a son of Abraham Smith, who is supposed to have been born at the same place as his son, and died in the city of New York. Concerning Moses Smith, the grandfather of Earl, nothing definite is now known by the family.

Abraham Smith spent his boyhood and youth on his father's farm, and learned the tanning and shoe-making trades, which he carried on in conjunction with farming. He married Emily Candee, who was born in Oxford, and was a daughter of Moses Candee, a farmer. She died in June, 1833. To Mr. and Mrs. Smith were born four children: Burritt A., Charlotte M., Earl and Jerome C. Burritt A. was a graduate of Yale, and became a Congregational minister, holding pastorates in Massachusetts, Connecticut and Illinois; he died in Worcester, Mass. Charlotte M. married William Baldwin, of New Haven, where she died. Jerome C. became a physician, had a fine practice in the city of New York, and died in Germantown, Pa. Abraham Smith was a Whig, and on the dissolution of that party joined the ranks of the Republicans. In religion both Mr. Smith and his wife were members of the Congregational Church.

Earl Smith attended an academy in Massachusetts, and finished his schooling at the age of nineteen. He began life for himself as a worker in a factory, and held positions in Woodbury, Naugatuck and West Haven. In 1855 he came to Waterbury, and entered the employ of the Waterbury Buckle Co., and in 1865 was put in charge of the business; in 1895 he was elected president and is still acting in that capacity.

In 1850 Earl Smith married Ellen Scott, daughter of Jonathan Scott, and they became the parents of four children, Alice L., Archer J., Nellie G. and Mabel. Nellie and Mabel are deceased. Alice married George L. Swift, of Waterbury. Archer J. is secretary and treasurer of the American Mills Co., of which Mr. Smith is president, as he is of the Smith & Griggs Co., of Waterbury. Archer J. Smith married Miss Susan Maltby, a daughter of Douglass J. Maltby, of Waterbury. Earl Smith is a man of character and standing. In religion he is a member of the First Church.

A. BRENNAN. The career of Mr. Brennan is full of interest, and the story of his life is replete with instruction and encouragement for younger generations. He has seen the sun rise and set on the sixty-eighth anniversary of his birth, and while clear in mind and vigorous in body he awaits the close of life in the calm confidence which is born of an earnest religious faith and the memory of long years well spent.

Mr. Brennan is a son of William and Mary (Lackey) Brennan, and was born Dec. 15, 1833, in County Kildare, Ireland, of which his parents were also natives, and where his father was a peasant farmer. William Brennan was born Dec. 15, 1801. Our subject crossed the water in 1854, and his father came to Naugatuck, Conn., in 1864, working for two years as a foundryman, and dying there April 18, 1866. Eight years afterward, in 1874, his widow passed away. Andrew was one of a family of ten children, four of whom died in infancy, the others being Margaret, who married James McDermott, of Naugatuck; Julia, the wife of John Brennan, of the same town; William, a journeyman molder of recognized skill; Patrick, a foreman in the Malleable Iron Works, of Naugatuck; and Bartholomew, a valued member of the police force of Springfield, Ohio.

The first year after coming to America Andrew Brennan spent in Stanhope, N. J., working upon a railroad, and in 1855 he came to Hamden, Conn., where he entered upon an apprenticeship to the iron molder's trade in the works at that time known as the Hamden Foundry. On June 7, 1857, he began work as a journeyman in Union City, and for exactly twenty years continued in the employ of the same concern, quitting the establishment June 7, 1877. On Jan. 1, 1880, he organized the Union City Coal Co., with Peter Scadden, of Waterbury, and the City Lumber & Coal Co., of Waterbury. About six months afterward he bought out Mr. Scadden, and in 1888 he bought out the City Lumber & Coal Co. In 1888 he reorganized the company with the following officers: Andrew Brennan, president; Thomas W. Ahern, treasurer and secretary. In 1894 his son William was made treasurer and general manager, and held that position until his death, Aug. 16, 1900, when Andrew C. Brennan was made general manager and treasurer of the company. Mr. Brennan also deals largely in real estate, and owns much valuable property in Waterbury. In politics he is independent of parties. In religious faith he is a Catholic, and he and his family attend St. Frances Church of Naugatuck.

Mr. Brennan married, May 16, 1858, Elizabeth Martin, who was born in Kings County, Ireland. Mr. and Mrs. Brennan have been blessed with ten children: William (deceased), Ellen, Andrew C., Mary, Elizabeth (1), Elizabeth (2), Catherine, Margaret, Francis and Florence. Three of the daughters married residents of Naugatuck, Ellen being the wife of Thomas W. Ahern, and Mary the wife of Patrick Daly; Elizabeth (2) is the widow of Edward P. Noonan, a merchant, who died Dec. 7, 1901. Andrew C. is general manager and treasurer of the City Lumber & Coal Co. The four younger children live at home. Francis is the manager of a bottling works in Naugatuck.

CHARLES ELLSWORTH EVARTS. Prominently identified with the horticultural and agricultural interests of New Haven county is the firm of C. E. Evarts & Son, of which Charles E. Evarts is the senior partner. He is a man of standing in the community, and one of its most respected citizens.

Charles E. Evarts was born in Guilford, this county, Aug. 27, 1839, and his ancestors were among the oldest settlers of that historic town. Abraham Evarts, his grandfather, was a native of Guilford, where he became a large land owner and well-known farmer, in the Nut Plains District, and there he lived a busy and useful life, and reared a family which has reflected credit upon the name. Jason Evarts, his son, was born in the Nut Plains District, where he grew to manhood on a farm, and he also spent the greater part of his life in his native place, removing in advanced age to the town of Branford. He spent his last days, in Yalesville, at the home of our subject. His death occurred in 1888, and his remains lie in the old Branford cemetery. During early life he had been a pronounced Whig, later adopting Republican principles. He was a leading member of the Congregational Church. Jason Evarts married in Killingworth Rosette Hull, the daughter of Aaron Hull, one of the old settlers of Killingworth, and to this union were born: Charles E., subject of this sketch; Horatio; Joel; Sarah, who married Edwin Clark; Reuben, deceased; and Frances, who married Stephen Terhune. The beloved mother of this family died at her home in Branford.

Charles E. Evarts grew up in the village of Guilford, and attended the district school. While still a lad he removed to Killingworth and worked with his uncle, Ellsworth Hull, for eight years. He then returned to Guilford, and occupied the succeeding year upon the farm. His next employment was teaming, in the town of Madison, and from there he made a trip to Illinois and farmed for himself two years in Cook county. On his return East he took up his residence in Clinton, Conn., for a brief season, going from there to Meriden, where he found profitable employment in the sash and blind factory, and later with Stephen Parker, at coffee mill manufacturing.

When the Civil war broke out Mr. Evarts was one of the gallant men who immediately responded to the call for help, and enlisted in April, 1861, in Meriden, joining Company E. (Capt. Bixbee) 1st Regiment, and served through the three months' term of that enlistment, taking part in the battle of Bull Run and other engagements. In October, 1861, he testified to his patriotism by re-enlisting, joining the 1st Connecticut Light Battery, under Capt. Rockwell, and for two years served faithfully in the Department of the South. The third enlistment of this brave and loyal soldier was in the 1st Connecticut Light Battery, and he continued to serve to the close of the war, being mustered out at its termination at Richmond, Va. He returned home after four years and three months given to the service of his country.

One among the many defenders of his country, bearing the marks of war and exposure, Mr. Evarts returned to Connecticut and turned again to peaceful pursuits. Until 1866 no suitable opening presented itself, but in that year he removed to the town of Branford and started in the butcher business, which was a successful venture. He was thus occupied six years, and in 1872, desiring a larger field, he removed to New Haven, and there conducted the same business for two years more. For two years after leaving New Haven he was in Meriden, employed as carpenter and joiner. Thence going to Branford, he remained six months, and then went to Mt. Carmel, in the town of Hamden, as foreman of the annealing department of the carriage works of the Woodruff Co. This position he held two and one-half years, and remained in Mt. Carmel six years, the latter part of that period engaged at his trade of carpenter and joiner. Removing to Seymour, Conn., he worked there for a short time at his trade, but in 1887 he came to the town of Wallingford and located near Yalesville, determined to return to agricultural life. Here he purchased a valuable tract of land, consisting of 160 acres, known as the Watson farm, and immediately entered the business of market gardening and fruit growing, becoming so prosperous in this line that his name is already known all over the county and wherever horticultural or agricultural topics are discussed. In his son Wesley Mr. Evarts has a most efficient assistant, and he is now a partner in the firm. In 1891 this firm engaged in peach culture, and they now own seventeen acres in peach trees, which yield enormously, and in which Mr. Evarts sees a reward for his labor and scientific study of this branch of horticulture.

In 1863 Mr. Evarts was married in Guilford, to Miss Emma J. Resing, who died June 17, 1874, in New Haven, leaving four children: Sarah, who married Elmer E. Holmes; Nellie, of Massachusetts; Alice Gertrude; and Charles, of Meriden. The second marriage of Mr. Evarts was to Mary E. Rhodes, a native of Indiana, who passed out of life in 1895, a good and worthy woman. Her children number four, three of whom survive: Wesley, Ruby and Effie. The first named is a partner in the firm of C. E. Evarts & Son, proprietors of the Highland Farm, fruit growers and market gardeners, and is one of the enterprising and progressive young men of this community, possessing natural mechanical talent which he has displayed in the construction of several wagons, and bids fair to give him future prominence.

In politics Mr. Evarts is a Republican, but no office seeker. His business interests and his domestic life have engrossed his time, leaving little leisure for public life, and no doubt he feels that enough of his life has already been given to public service. As a man and as a citizen he enjoys the esteem of the community.

WALTER HAMLIN HOLMES, M. D., whose death at Waterbury, Nov. 27, 1868, removed one of the city's most useful professional men and ripe scholars, was born June 23, 1854, in Calais, Maine, son of Job Holmes, M. D., a physician of creditable standing in the eastern part of that state.

Dr. Holmes was graduated from Bowdoin College in 1875, ranking third in his class, and being rated as one of the most able men in college. He devoted a great part of his time to literature, and educated himself to such a degree that he was able to repeat long quotations from Greek and Latin authors, and from famous authors in other tongues. After leaving college he spent one year in Calais with Dr. C. E. Swan, who had been a partner of his father. Young Holmes was so well fitted for the study of medicine that he entered the second-year class of the Harvard Medical School, from which he was graduated in 1879. From 1878 to 1880 he was connected with the Boston City Hospital, for six months as "medical externe," and for one year as "surgical interne" and house surgeon. He was one of the leading men in his class at the Harvard Medical School, and was graduated with distinguished honors, securing coveted prizes and displaying ability far beyond his years. He came to Waterbury in March, 1880, and in November of the same year formed a partnership with Dr. Gideon L. Platt, whose daughter he subsequently married. Dr. Holmes at once assumed a high place in the community, at first having much to do with the practice of Dr. Platt, but gradually acquiring a large clientele of his own, and becoming one of the leading physicians of Waterbury.

The Doctor's interest in literature did not become absorbed in his professional work, as the following little anecdote will show: He had secured a valuable copy of a work by Lucian, a celebrated Greek satirist and humorist who flourished about 120 to 200 A. D. He was an ardent Greek and Latin scholar, reading the latter language as easily as English, and as his beloved Lucian was printed with alternate pages of Latin and Greek, he used to cover the Latin pages with a paper, in order that he would study it out for himself in the Greek rather than have recourse to the easier Latin. Once, when reading this Lucian, he came across a passage so ambiguous in form that he felt he was unable to translate it satisfactorily. He consulted a local scholar, who was obliged to admit his inability to help him, but referred him to a prominent Greek instructor at Yale. Dr. Holmes wrote to the latter, and received a reply stating that the passage referred to was rendered obscure by a typographical error, and at the same time giving the correct reading, which was identical with that of the Doctor's, before he had sought assistance. His elation at the explanation may be easily imagined. Later the same Yale instructor made inquiries concerning his correspondent to find whether he was a young man in search of an instructorship, and was very much astonished to find that he was a very busy physician, who found his recreation in the study of dead languages. Intellectually he was one of the ablest of men, and in addition to his phenomenal memory he possessed to a remarkable degree the ability to grasp instantly and to solve accurately difficult problems. To these qualities was added a wealth of imaginative power which would have enabled him, had he devoted himself to literature, to have created a name which would have been known wherever the English language is read.

Walter H. Holmes

On April 6, 1881, Dr. Holmes was married to Medora Caroline, only daughter of the late Dr. Gideon L. Platt, of Waterbury, who survives him. Dr. Holmes' health began to fail in 1892, and in 1894 he was compelled to give up his practice. He died Nov. 27, 1898, a sacrifice to his profession, his death resulting from blood poisoning by inoculation through a pricked finger during an operation on a patient. Dr. Holmes' charities were many and unobtrusive. He freely gave his services and very often substantial offerings to the poor, and many a Waterbury family can testify as to his goodness in this respect. It is related of him that he kept in his office a supply of just the things that poor people might need in time of illness. He knew in such cases that every penny counted, and he often loaned the necessities of the needy. Occasionally his faith in human nature was rudely shocked, and at such times his distress was acute. He was honest to a fault, and expected others to be. While in college he was a member of the D. K. E. Greek Letter Society. He was a member of the Waterbury Club, and of various medical societies. On philosophical and theological subjects he was an independent thinker, but throughout all intellectual vicissitudes remained faithful to the Unitarian faith—the faith of his childhood.

In the course of his remarks in the payment of the last sad rites to his friend and parishioner, Dr. Anderson said:

Dr. Holmes was a man worth knowing, a man whose friendship was well worth cultivating. To those who met him casually, or in the range of his practice as a physician, he may not have seemed so, but he was an exceptional man. His commanding stature represented a man towering above the average in regard to mental characteristics and moral qualities. A man who is large physically challenges the admiration of the best people, provided he is large in other ways, and all who knew Dr. Holmes recognized this quality of largeness in him. Here was a man of broad and rich nature, through whom the bounty of God and the world flowed easily for nourishment and comfort. He was especially interesting to us as a man of intellect! In these days the successful pursuit of a profession necessitates almost exclusive devotion to professional routine, and this involves a narrowing process—so that the average lawyer is simply a lawyer, the clergyman, simply a clergyman, and the physician, simply a physician. To be a thorough-going and busy practitioner and at the same time a broad and rounded and cultured man is by no means easy. It indicates early training on a broad basis; it indicates dominating tastes larger than the limits of a profession; it indicates fullness of manhood. It indicated all this in Dr. Holmes. There is nothing to suggest that he was not in love with the profession of medicine; but he seemed to view that profession in its relations to science as a whole, yes, and in its relations to scholarship as a whole. He certainly possessed a scientific cast of mind, but he was not in the least conscious of that conflict between science and letters of which some have had so much to say. If he had the mind of a scientist, he had the tastes of a scholar. And so, for a few bright years, we had before us (not very common in this busy community) the spectacle of a man who combined in himself the utilitarian and the scholarly qualities, and showed us that it is possible, even yet, to do one's daily work well and earn an honest living, and at the same time be loyal to the intellectual and artistic ideals of earlier days. In thinking of Dr. Holmes I find that the mental qualities merge into the spiritual, that his tastes were closely allied to virtues. In attempting an estimate of him, it would be more difficult than in most cases to confine one's self to any one department of his life. I shrink from processes of analysis on such occasions as this—even as I shrink from being analyzed myself—but I do wish to say a word concerning these deeper and more central qualities of our friend's nature. I wish to say that he seemed to me a very genuine and sincere person, that he was exceptionally free from affectation and pretence, that his honesty was not simply commercial, but spiritual. It is not always that a man impresses you with being precisely what he seems to be; but that was true of him. This was not, however, the result of any blunt frankness on his part, such as some men take pride in; it was the product, rather, of a certain transparency of nature, the entire absence of duplicity. The impression of sincerity was not secured by the sacrifice of geniality and sweetness; his kindliness, on the contrary, was a constant and pervasive quality.

I have seldom met with a layman more ready to talk upon religious themes than he was, and his outspoken sincerity did not allow a moment's doubt in regard to the position he occupied. He came to us representing a type of Christian belief which is not common in Connecticut, and when, in an early interview, he told me that he was a Unitarian, he evidently feared that he might grieve me. But he could not think of holding anything back, and we were at once on terms of mutual consideration and amity. He was proud of his faith, as all Unitarians are, and could not hide his contempt for "obscure dogmas," but his attitude was not by any means merely critical; it was receptive and friendly. His was a deeply religious nature, and whatever nourished his deeper life he welcomed, no matter from what source it came, or in what form it was offered him.

After speaking at length in regard to the Doctor's last illness, that tragedy of death in life, Dr. Anderson adds:

To those who were called to look on, whether day by day or at intervals, it must seem a mysterious thing that this noble man—this man of sweetness and charity—should have been led down, as he was, into a "valley of the shadow of death" more dreadful than Bunyan ever saw in vision, and held captive there so many years in fierce conflicts with spirits of evil; and it must seem all the more mysterious when we consider that his life-long training had been such as to leave no place in his normal mental processes for any thought of evil spirits, but rather to bring him face to face with divine benevolence. Let us think of him as swiftly emerging, on that tempestuous Sunday, from all the gloom and discord of these inexplicable years, into the calmness and peace and felicity of those elect souls who "after life's fitful fever" sleep well, and then awake with God.

At the close of his remarks Dr. Anderson repeated Edwin Arnold's beautiful poem, "After Death," a favorite of Dr. Holmes':

He who died at Azan sends
This to comfort faithful friends:

Faithful friends! It lies I know,
Pale and white as cold as snow,
And ye say, "Abdallah's dead!"
Weeping at my feet and head.
I can see your falling tears,
I can hear your cries and prayers
Yet I smile and whisper this:
"I am not that thing you kiss;
Cease your tears and let it lie;
It was mine; it is not I."

'Tis a tent which I am quitting,
 'Tis a garment no more fitting,
 'Tis a cage from which at last
 Like a hawk my soul has passed.
 Love the inmate, not the room;
 The wearer, not the garb; the plume
 Of the falcon, not the bars
 Which kept him from the splendid stars.

Loving friends! be wise and dry
 Straightway every weeping eye;
 What ye lift upon the bier
 Is not worth a wistful tear.
 'Tis an empty seashell, one
 Out of which the pearl is gone.
 The shell is broken, it lies there;
 The pearl, the all, the soul is here.
 'Tis an earthen jar whose lid
 Allah sealed, the while it hid
 That treasure of His treasury.
 A mind which loved him; let it lie!
 Let the shard be earth's once more,
 Since the gold shines in His store!

Farewell friends, yet not farewell,
 Where I am ye too shall dwell.
 I am gone before your face
 A heart-beat's time, a gray ant's pace.
 When ye come where I have stepped
 Ye will marvel why ye wept;
 Ye will know, by true love taught,
 That here is all, and there is naught.

Weep awhile, if ye are fain—
 Sunshine still must follow rain!
 Only, not at death, for death
 (Now I see) is that first breath
 Which our souls draw when we enter
 Life that is of all life center.

Know ye Allah's love is law,
 Viewed from Allah's throne above.
 Be ye firm of trust, and come
 Faithful onward to your home!

He who died at Azan gave
 This to those who made his grave.

LEVI ODELL CHITTENDEN traces his ancestry from William Chittenden, who came from England to New England in 1639, thence in the same year to Guilford, Conn. He was born in Kent, England, and married Joanna, daughter of Dr. Edmund Shaeffer, of Cranbrook, in Kent. A man of ability, he filled many important offices in the Colony.

Thomas Chittenden, son of William, was born in England, married Joanna Jordan, daughter of John Jordan, of Guilford, and died in 1683.

William Chittenden, son of Thomas, was married twice. He died in 1738.

William Chittenden, son of William, born in 1706, married (first) Rachel White, of Middletown, and (second), Sarah Stevens. He died in 1786.

Jared Chittenden, son of William, born in 1734, married (first) Deborah Stone, of Guilford, and (second) Elizabeth Ward, daughter of Samuel Dudley, of Guilford. He lived in North Guilford, and died there in 1824. His children were all born to his first marriage.

Deacon Levi Chittenden, son of Jared, born May 21, 1762, married Hannah Johnson, of Wallingford. They resided in North Guilford, where he died Nov. 11, 1835, at the age of seventy-three, his wife surviving ten years.

Jared Chauncey Chittenden, son of Deacon Levi, born Aug. 27, 1799, in 1825 married Rowena Barnes, of North Haven, born Nov. 27, 1806. They had six children. Mr. Chittenden resided in North Guilford, and died April 13, 1854, aged fifty-four. He engaged in cabinetmaking all his life, and was considered one of the most capable workmen in his locality. In politics he was a Whig. He was known as an honest and upright man, and although he died in the prime of life had exerted much influence for good in his neighborhood, and was sincerely lamented.

Levi Odell Chittenden, son of Jared Chauncey, was born Sept. 28, 1844, and was but nine years of age when left to face the world deprived of a father's protection. His school days ended when he was ten years old, for at that time he endeavored to provide for himself by working on a farm, and then obtained a situation as clerk in the store of E. M. Fuld, in North Haven, where he remained until he was seventeen. In July, 1862, he came to Guilford and enlisted in Company I, 14th Regiment, under Col. Morris and Capt. I. R. Bronson, and served in the 2d Army Corps until March, 1863, participating in many engagements during that time. The exposure and deprivations of army life brought on troubles which caused his discharge for disability, after a serious illness in hospital at Harper's Ferry and later at Frederick City, Md. Following his return from the war, where he had done his duty as a soldier bravely, Mr. Chittenden entered the employ of R. S. Chittenden, of East River, as clerk in his store, and remained until 1877. Coming back to Guilford he entered a shop, and remained in that position for the succeeding ten years. He then took up the trade of carpenter and joiner, in which he became skillful, and for several years he was considered one of the most reliable men in his line in the neighborhood. His work in this line was put aside when he entered the real estate office of William Sewarts. Later he accepted a position on the Consolidated Railroad, as brakeman on passenger trains on the Shore Line, and continued thus until 1890, when he accepted a position as engineer in the Spencer foundry, where for the past eleven years he has filled with efficiency this position of responsibility. His natural bent has been in this direction, and in such work ability like his is almost indispensable.

On Jan. 20, 1870, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Chittenden to Jeannette E. Hull, daughter of William A. and Mary (Parmelee) Hull, of Guilford. She died in 1888. On March 12, 1890, our subject contracted a second marriage, with Miss Elizabeth Burr, who was born in Haddam, a daughter of Edward and Elizabeth (Ladd) Burr, natives of Haddam, and both of old and prominent families of Middlesex county. No children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Chittenden. Their home is the abode of hospitality and sociability. Mrs. Chittenden is a lady of many accomplishments and high culture, and is highly esteemed in Guilford. Mr. Chittenden is a member of the G. A. R., and past commander of the post in Guilford, and has held all the offices in that organization. In politics he is a Republican. He is assessor of the town and a member of the board of relief, and has taken an important part in all public undertakings. Both he and his wife are members of the Congregational Church. Mr. Chittenden owns much valuable property here, and the finest bowling alley in Guilford belongs to him.

As a soldier our subject won the respect and esteem of his comrades, as an employe of his employers, and as a public official of his fellow citizens, and in every relation of life he has done well his part. Thrown upon his own resources at so tender an age, his success in life only emphasizes what honesty, persistent effort and courage will accomplish.

WILLIAM J. FRANCIS (deceased) was born Oct. 11, 1832, a son of William and Emily (Blakeslee) Francis, and attended the schools in Wallingford, his native town. Growing up on the old homestead, he remained at home until 1866, when he went to Meriden and entered the office of the Adams Express Co. At Meriden he was also employed by the Britannia Co., and he remained in that city until 1875, in which year he came back to North Farms, Wallingford, settling on the farm where his father was born, adjoining the family homestead on which he was reared. There he spent the remainder of his industrious and honorable life, making many substantial improvements on the place, and, investing over $9,000 in bringing the farm up to modern ideas, soon had one of the most attractive country homes in the town. A general farmer and dairyman, he was a successful manager and a good business man. Simple and unostentatious in his habits, he was devoted to his home and upright in his life. He was a member of the Grange, and much interested in everything that pertained to the progress of farming, and was an enterprising and thoughtful citizen. Mr. Francis died on his farm Dec. 4, 1895, and was buried in the Wallingford cemetery. He was a half brother of John Hall Francis.

LYMAN H. FRANCIS, son of William J., was born Feb. 1, 1865, on the same farm as his father. In due time he attended the local district school. In 1884 he was graduated from the Yale Business College, and began his life work by assisting his father on the farm. A little later he went on the road as a traveling salesman for the Reed Fertilizer Co., of New York, and after his father's death he took charge of the family homestead, which consists of 110 acres. He has devoted the land very largely to market gardening, making many improvements to fit the changed line of work. In August, 1898, a great loss befell him in the destruction by fire of six farm buildings and a large crop of hay. Since that time he has built a fine barn, adapted to his business.

Mr. Francis was married, in Glastonbury, Conn., April 11, 1894, to Miss Lucy A. Talcott, a daughter of George and Lucy Ann Talcott, who are both deceased. They have had two children, Walter Lyman and Mildred Lucy. Mr. Francis belongs to Compass Lodge, A. F. & A. M., and with his wife belongs to the Grange; he was instrumental in the organization of the Grange at Kensington. In religion Mrs. Francis is an Episcopalian, and he is not connected with any church, though a man of strong feeling and deep convictions as to the right and the true in daily living. A more complete history of the Francis family appears in connection with the sketch of John Francis, elsewhere.

GEORGE T. BUSHNELL (deceased). The family of Bushnell, whose name is well known throughout the State of Connecticut, is of English descent, and a majority of the members of the branch to which Mr. George T. Bushnell belonged have been agriculturists. Both his parents were born and both lived and died in Saybrook, where he himself was born March 4, 1815.

Taylor P. Bushnell, his father, was a farmer, as well as a tanner and shoemaker. He served with courage and gallantry during the War of 1812, and prior to the formation of the Republican party was a staunch Whig in politics. From 1856 until his death however, he acted with the party of Fremont and Lincoln. He married Fannie Bull, a daughter of John Bull, a prosperous and highly respected farmer of Saybrook, and at once settled upon a farm in the same town. Three children were born of this union—Frederick, Electa A., and George T. The first born son, Frederick, has reached the advanced age of eighty-eight years, and after a life of hard work spent in farming, has ceased active labor to pass the remainder of his years in well-earned, richly-merited rest. Electa A., the only daughter, married Asa H. Rose, a joiner of Saybrook, and died in 1897. Both Taylor P. Bushnell and his wife were devout and consistent members of the Presbyterian Church.

George T. Bushnell passed his youth very much as did other Connecticut farmers' sons in the first third of the nineteenth century. Work upon the farm alternated with attendance at the district school, and so the years passed until he reached the age of eighteen. He then learned the trade of a turner and wood carver, and in 1836—being then twenty-one years old—removed from Saybrook to Derby. That city was his home for sixty-four years, and during his long and useful life after reaching his majority, he carried on his business as a turner, and added thereto that of a dealer in real estate. He accumulated a handsome competence and retired from business, devoting himself to the loaning and investment of his capital. Though long passed the limit of three-score years and ten, which was allotted to man by the Psalmist "through reason of strength," he was hale and well preserved up to the time of his death, Sept. 14, 1900. Like his father, he was a Whig in early life and later a Republican. After 1838 he was actively and prominently identified with the growth and work of the Congregational Church in Derby. He held various offices in the First Church of that city, and was a deacon for more than a quarter of a century. In recognition of his long and faithful service in that capacity, no less than in acknowledgment of his self-sacrificing labor in and liberal contributions to the cause of Evangelical religion, he was made an honorary member of the Board of Deacons, a distinction all the more valuable because so rarely conferred. Deacon Bushnell attributed his long life and the fact that his mental faculties remained unimpaired, to his regular, abstemious mode of life. He always championed the cause of temperance in the highest and most comprehensive sense of that term, and he himself was a living illustration of the soundness of his plea. The closing years of his life were passed in that serene peace befitting an octogenarian who looked back upon the past without regret and forward to the future without fear.

In 1838 Deacon Bushnell was married to Mary, daughter of Truman Gilbert, of Derby. The wife of his youth remained by his side to the last, to comfort, to cheer and to sustain. Hand-in-hand they had descended the western slope of life's hill, with pleasant memories and unfaltering faith. One child blessed their union: George F., who is engaged in the real estate business in Bridgeport.

CHANCY W. JUDD, now retired, is almost a life-long resident of Waterbury, where he was born June 27, 1824, of good old Connecticut stock, and he is a highly respected citizen.

Stephen Judd, grandfather of our subject, was born in Wallingford, Conn., and died in Waterbury, in 1820. He served in the Revolutionary army, and was wounded in the knee. William R., his son and the father of our subject, was born in Waterbury, May 9, 1802, and died Dec. 30, 1875. He learned the trade of shoemaker, but never followed it, preferring that of stone mason, which very nearly was his life vocation. On Dec. 2, 1821, he married Anna Brown, who was born in Waterbury, Aug. 8, 1801, a daughter of Curtis Brown, a farmer of Waterbury. She died in New Haven, Conn., Feb. 24, 1878, the mother of two children: Chancy W. and Miss Henrietta, the latter of whom was born Dec. 12, 1832, in New York State, and is making her home with her brother in Waterbury.

The father was first a Whig, later a Republican, and in religious faith he and his wife were Baptists.

Chancy W. Judd, our subject, was two years old when his parents removed to Montgomery county, N. Y., and was twelve when he returned with them to Waterbury, and consequently received his education in both cities. At the age of fifteen he commenced work in the Scovill Rolling Mills, Waterbury, learning the trade of brass roller, and was employed there the greater part of the time for the long period of forty-seven years, or until 1885, since when he has lived retired. He has lived on Hill street for four or five years more than half a century, and has not married. In politics he is a Republican, and for four years he served his city on the police force. He and his sister attend the services of the Congregational Church.

CHARLES COUPLAND, whose death occurred at his home in Seymour April 25, 1901, was for twenty years one of the leading citizens of that town, identified with the Tingué Manufacturing Co., and for fifteen years its treasurer and the manager of the company's works at this point. He was one of the most ingenious and practical manufacturers in the Naugatuck Valley.

Mr. Coupland was born at Huddersfield, in Yorkshire, England, April 11, 1841, son of Robert and Mary Coupland, and was the second of a family of nine children. His father was a small woolen manufacturer, but thoroughly skilled in his occupation, and was considered an ingenious man. He soon needed the services of his son, and when Charles was but seven years of age he was placed at work in the factory, where he labored in the daytime, acquiring what education he received by attendance at night schools. But he learned in the twelve years that included his apprenticeship in his father's factory what proved of immense practical benefit to him, every detail and all the intricacies and fine points pertaining to the manufacture of woolen goods. Having obtained his mechanical knowledge he became, at the age of nineteen years, dissatisfied with the prospects in life, and in 1860 resolved to cast his lot in America. With others he emigrated to this country, and soon found work in the Windemere mills, at Rockville, Conn. After working a short time as a second man in the carding room he was given charge of the department, and from that time all his service was in supervisory positions. In 1865 he went to Philadelphia, Pa., where he was given charge of the carding and spinning of the Baltic Mills. He thence went to Union Village, Conn., where he owned and operated a custom woolen mill for several years. A year later he removed to Burrville, Conn., where he also engaged in business on his own account, in the manufacture of woolen flecks, using a machine invented by himself, which very successfully performed that operation, doing as much work as five of the machines previously used. In 1869 he sold out and went to Templeton, Mass., to take charge of the well-known Otter River blanket mills, and went from there to the woolen mills of Berry & Stanton, at Woodville, R. I., each move bringing an advance in position and salary, and increasing his knowledge of manufacturing.

In 1871 Mr. Coupland became the manager and part owner of the mill at Thomaston, Conn., operated by the Plymouth Woolen Co., where he remained until the mill was burned down, in the fall of 1873. The corporation now determined to build a worsted mill, and Mr. Coupland was urged to prepare himself to take charge of it. His experience had been confined to woolen goods, whose manufacture differed from worsted goods, and this necessitated new instruction, which was difficult to obtain, as every mill kept a close guard of its secret process. Determined to find an entrance into some mill, even if he would have to do ordinary labor, Mr. Coupland came to Seymour, where he applied for a place in the Kalmia Mills, at that time run for the manufacture of worsted various by Scheppers Brothers, of Philadelphia, with Emil Martines as superintendent. He was told the only place vacant was that of engineer, and if he was competent he could take that. He knew but little of the work of an engineer, but accepted the place at $3 per day, and by diligent attention to his work soon succeeded in giving good satisfaction. He remained nine months, and in that period learned all he wanted to know about worsted. In the meantime the death of Lucius P. Porter, of the Plymouth Co., had disarranged the plans of the corporation, which decided not to rebuild. Mr. Coupland now sought a new field of labor, and applied to A. T. Stewart for the position of general superintendent of his numerous woolen mills, receiving the appointment, at a very large salary, in the fall of 1874. He entered upon his new duty to the great surprise of his acquaintances at Seymour, who could not imagine how a man who had been so recently a workman in an engine room in their midst could possibly fill that place. When Mr. Coupland took charge of the Stewart interests but four of the thirteen woolen mills in four different States were running, but soon every mill was profitably operated, giving employment to over 10,000 people. In this service he remained six years.

In 1880, while still in the employ of A. T. Stewart, Mr. Coupland invented a new and exceedingly speedy way to weave mohair pile goods, which he determined to utilize in a factory of his own, with the aid of interested capital. At this time he was introduced to John H. Tingue, a wealthy dry-goods merchant of New York, who consented to embark with him in this new enterprise. Mr. Coupland agreeing to devise, construct and place in operation all the necessary machinery, Mr. Tingue to see that there was no lack of capital. Looking about for a suitable site for the factory, they came to Seymour and bought the Kalmia, or old Eagle Silk Mill, in 1880, and the work of building the machinery was begun by Mr. Coupland. From that time until his death he was the genius which inspired and successfully directed the Tingue Manufacturing Co. at Seymour. The corporation was formed in 1881, and the same year the work of manufacturing plush goods was begun. The process was a radical departure from all former methods, and not only was this the pioneer mill in America in this line of industry, but for five years the sole occupant of this especial field.

Of this mill and its operations the American Machinist said in 1885:

I had the pleasure, a few weeks ago, of looking through the plush manufactory at Seymour, Connecticut, through the courtesy of the president of the company, Mr. J. H. Tingue, and under the guidance of Mr. Coupland, the superintendent, whose inventive turn of mind, backed up by his indomitable perseverance and exceptional executive ability, has accomplished wonders in the last four years. Indeed, to pass through the different departments, as I did, and listen to the explanations of differences between the methods and machinery employed by the Tingue Company, and those employed by manufacturers of similar goods, both here and in foreign countries, with the advantages claimed both in quantity and quality of production, and be told that the machinery had been invented, designed and built by themselves, while to the question, "How long has it taken?" came the answer, "Four years," was to me a genuine surprise. To the enterprise, perseverance, inventive and mechanical ability which have left their imprint all through this truly model establishment I feel that I have no words in which to pay a fitting tribute. Through the successful establishment of this industry—the manufacture of mohair plush—is opened up a new and profitable industry in the raising of the Angora goat, which has already been found to be a sure source of profit in some parts of the Southern States, where sheep raising has proved a failure. The beautiful silky fleeces of these animals, with a fiber of six or seven to nine or ten inches long—and in extreme cases, I am told, it is found eighteen inches in length—are by the ingenious machinery of the Tingue Company carried from one stage of manufacture to another till two sheets of plush in one, joined by the pile of each, await the services of the ingenious splitting machine of Mr. Coupland, who, with the inspiration of American air for the past score of years, could not be satisfied with the old way in use abroad of weaving over wires, which, by withdrawing, cut the pile and separate the two sheets, but has invented a machine the office of which is to split in the most accurate manner, and in an entirely automatic way, any width or length of plush goods. Not only is the operation of splitting performed automatically, but the knives which do the work are automatically ground while working, and so kept sharp. Enough might be said of this place to fill a volume, but, wishing to be careful not to violate any confidence, I have simply to say I am truly grateful, while I feel—and I think every American citizen should—that many thanks are due to these pioneers in an industry which promises to become one of the greatest importance, not simply in a manufacturing sense, but to the landowner in a large section of the country.

Subsequently much other labor-saving machinery was added by Mr. Coupland, much of which he invented, and he had thirty patents awarded him for machinery to be used in the manufacture of plush goods. The mill and entire plant superintended by him was a model of neatness, order, and the adaptation of the best means to obtain the best results, showing that Mr. Coupland also had fine administrative ability as well as inventive talent, which gave him a place among the foremost mill men of the country.

Mr. Coupland was a public-spirited citizen and responded generously to appeals for contributions for the advancement of local enterprises. He especially gave liberally for the public library, and only a couple of weeks before his death, when the editor of the Record asked him what would be the charge for the use of the opera house two evenings, for an entertainment for the benefit of the public library, immediately replied, "Nothing if it is for the benefit of the library." He was especially interested in the proposed electric road to Ansonia, which he believed would be for the good of the public. He was the leader in the formation of the Tingue Manufacturing Co., which for twenty years has carried on the manufacture of plush goods here, one of the leading industries of the place. The political affiliations of Mr. Coupland were with the Democratic party, but in no sense was he a partisan. He was a prominent Freemason and belonged to the Order of Elks.

At a special meeting of the directors of the Tingue Manufacturing Co., held in Seymour on Saturday, April 27, 1901, the following minute concerning the death of Mr. Coupland was adopted and passed:

The directors of this company have learned with deep regret and sorrow of the death of their fellow director, Charles Coupland, which occurred at his home in Seymour on the 25th day of April, 1901.

Mr. Coupland has been connected with this company since its organization in 1881. From its beginning he has been one of its directors and the superintendent of its manufacturing business. Since 1885 he has been its treasurer and the general manager of its affairs in Seymour. He from the first, has given to its service his time and his talents unstintedly, and his experience and technical skill and ability in all that pertained to the business of manufacturing have been of great value to the corporation. In his death the corporation loses a valuable and faithful servant whom it can ill spare at this time; and we, his fellow directors, have lost a friend and trusted adviser whose genial presence at our meetings we shall greatly miss.

We tender to his family our warmest sympathy in their sorrow over this sudden and sad bereavement.

We direct that this minute shall be entered upon our records as a brief memorial of our sense of loss in the death of Mr. Coupland; and that a copy thereof be published in the newspapers and sent to his family.

On July 14, 1890, Mr. Coupland was married to Mrs. Ada M. Jewett, daughter of George and Eunice (West) Gates, of Norwich, Conn., and widow of Dr. Thomas B. Jewett, of Derby. By her first marriage Mrs. Coupland had one child, Thomas E. Mr. Coupland had one daughter, Isabelle M., now the wife of Dr. G. Wilmot, of New Haven, by a previous marriage. Mr. Coupland's greatest pleasure was in fine horses, of which he owned several.

DELOS HOTCHKISS (deceased), who during life was one of the most prominent agriculturists and highly respected citizens of Cheshire, was born on a farm in that town in 1802, and was descended from one of the oldest and best families of New Haven county.

Josephus Hotchkiss, his father, was a native of the town of Prospect, and when a young man came to Cheshire, where he engaged in farming throughout the remainder of his life. His remains were interred in Cheshire cemetery. He married Sarah Benham, and to them were born the following children: Benona, who died in Kentucky; Lois, wife of Alfred Blakeslee; Sarah, wife of Willis Larabee; Delos, our subject; Mary, wife of William Hotchkiss; and Emma, wife of Joseph Doolittle. All are now deceased.

During his boyhood Delos Hotchkiss attended the district schools and learned the trade of shoemaking, which he followed for many years. During the winter season he would travel through the South, making shoes, going with a number of others employed by a Mr. Hall, of Winsted. Subsequently he purchased a farm of 100 acres in Cheshire, near the Southington line, and devoted the remainder of his life to agricultural pursuits. He made many useful and valuable improvements upon his place, including the erection of a fine residence and good barn and other outbuildings. Upon his place was the largest apple tree in the state. It was very old, and during a storm a few years ago was blown down.

In September, 1827, Mr. Hotchkiss was married, in Cheshire, to Miss Philocia Moss, their wedding taking place at the residence of the bride's parents. She was born in Cheshire Dec. 24, 1807, a daughter of Thomas Doolittle and Ruth (Hale) Moss, and belongs to old and honored families of this county, including the Moss, Doolittle and Hale families. She is a very intelligent woman, and although the second oldest lady in Cheshire still possesses all her faculties, and is an interesting conversationalist. She is very charitable and benevolent, giving liberally of her means to the poor and needy; she has also contributed largely to the children's home in Mt. Carmel, to the high school in Cheshire, and to similar enterprises. She is a good Christian, a member of the Congregational Church, a kind neighbor and a loving wife and mother. Mary Philocia, the only child of our subject and his wife, makes her home with her mother in Cheshire, and is caring for her in her declining years.

Mr. Hotchkiss was an industrious, hard-working man, upright and honorable in his dealings, and temperate in his habits. The only society with which he was ever connected was a temperance organization. He was a God-fearing man, and an earnest and faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church in early life. Later he joined the Wesleyan Methodists, because of their Abolition sentiments. In his last years he was an Adventist. He was a staunch Abolitionist, much opposed to slavery, and supported first the Whig and later the Republican parties. He possessed all the requirements which go to the making of a good citizen, and in his death the community realized that it had lost one of its best and most useful members. He died upon his farm Oct. 16, 1890, honored and respected by all who knew him, and was laid to rest in the Cheshire cemetery.

WILLIAM BRYAN, for many years owner and manager of the "Montowese House," a popular summer resort at Indian Neck, was born in Branford July 16, 1826, a son of William and Irene (Bradley) Bryan.

Our subject's father was born in 1796, on board an English man-o'-war the "Diana," and was a son of James Bryan, who was an officer in the English navy, and was at the battle of Trafalgar; he was a lieutenant under Lord Beresford. For bravery in that engagement he was made a captain, and he was subsequently appointed governor of Santa Cruz, West Indies. William Bryan, Sr., at the age of twelve years came to Bath, Maine. Serving in the War of 1812, he took part in the battle of Lundy's Lane, and was under Perry when he won the remarkable victory on Lake Erie. At the close of the war he settled in New Haven, where he was later an officer on the first steamboat plying between that city and New York. He was pilot for a number of years, and in 1819 settled in Branford. From that point Mr. Bryan engaged in coastwise trading along the Atlantic shore. He married Irene Bradley, a daughter of Timothy and Irene (Gordon) Bradley, and a granddaughter of Timothy and Sarah (Goodsell) Bradley. Her mother's parents were Capt. Alexander and Irene Gordon. The children of William and Irene (Bradley) Bryan were: Nancy, who was twice married, first to John Morton, second to Malachi Linsley; James; William; Harriet, who married Charles Barker; Bradley; Alden P.; and William. William Bryan, Sr., died in 1887.

William Bryan, whose name introduces this article, was born in Branford, where he has always resided. In 1851 he went to California, where he was engaged in mining for two years. Returning to Connecticut he bought a vessel and engaged in the coast trade between New York and Branford from 1854 to 1860. In 1863 he became proprietor of the "Totoket House," in Branford, where he continued for three years. In 1866 Mr. Bryan put up the "Montowese House," at Indian Neck, one of the most pleasantly situated summer hotels on the Connecticut coast, and one of the best patronized along the coast. In the management of this he has been very successful, and has built up a name for himself as a landlord that does him credit.

Mr. Bryan was married in 1848 to Miss Lydia A., daughter of Timothy Wells Palmer, of North Branford, and they have three children, Scott M., Nancy E. and William A. William A. Bryan is the manager of the "Kenilworth Inn," at Biltmore, Asheville, N. C., and of his father's hotel, "The Montowese," at Indian Neck.

Mr. Bryan belongs to the Masonic Fraternity, being a charter member of Widows Sons Lodge, F. & A. M., at Branford. In religion he is a member of the Episcopal Church. In politics he is a Democrat, but holds strongly to the gold standard. With a wide experience in the world, he has made a multitude of friends, all over the country, who have pleasant memories of the hospitality he has so cordially extended to them.

DWIGHT L. SMITH, for over thirty years superintendent of the factory of the Waterbury Buckle Co., is one of the most respected residents of Waterbury, where he has been especially active in religious and benevolent enterprises.

Mr. Smith was born in Waterbury March 4, 1839, son of Lyman P. Smith, who was born in the town of Prospect, and died in 1846, at the age of thirty-five. When a young man Lyman P. Smith worked in Waterbury, and later in the cotton mill at Quassebaug Lake, in Middlebury. Marilla Sanford, his wife, was born in Wolcott, Conn., daughter of Truman and Anna (Curtis) Sanford, also of Wolcott, the former of whom was a cooper by trade. Mrs. Smith died in Waterbury, where she and her husband reared their family of three children: Dwight L., our subject; Rhoda A., who married Wallace E. Peck, and lives in Waterbury; and Sarah J., who married Franklin H. Wheeler, of Middlebury.

Dwight L. Smith was reared in Waterbury, where he attended the district school on East Main street. For three years subsequently he studied at Middlebury, and he finished his literary training at the academy at Waterbury Center, when he was sixteen years old. The first work he did for himself was in the factory of the Hotchkiss & Merriman Manufacturing Co., where he was engaged at making suspender buckles. Upon the formation of the Waterbury Buckle Co., in 1855, he entered the employ of the new firm, and has practically never left them. For more than thirty years he has been superintendent of the factory. During his connection with the Buckle Co. he has seen it grow from a small industry, giving employment to less than fifty hands, to one of the leading concerns in this line in the country, employing over five hundred people. He has taken out numerous patents, most of them in connection with his line of business, and his inventions have had an important part in the success which has been attained by the Buckle Co., under the wise and conservative management of Earl Smith, who has been for so many years general manager of the concern.

On Dec. 24, 1862, Mr. Smith married Miss Helen M. Latta, who was born in Thompsonville, Conn., daughter of James and Jane (Kenyon)

Latta; her father was from Scotland. To Mr. and Mrs. Smith have been born three children: Howard, Albert D. and Idella M., of whom Howard died when only two years old. Albert D. is secretary of the Springfield Knitting Co., at Springfield, Mass.; he married Minnie J. Baker, daughter of Augustus and Susan Baker. Idella M. is single.

Mr. Smith is a Republican politically. In church affairs he is a pronounced Baptist, and for many years has acted as superintendent of the Sunday-school and as a deacon of that church. Albert D. Smith is superintendent of a Sunday-school in Springfield. Dwight L. Smith is actively associated with the Y. M. C. A., and has been since its establishment in Waterbury; he was its president for three years. Mr. Smith organized a mission at Hopeville, and was superintendent of its Sunday-school for many years. Through his zeal and wisdom many country missions have been founded. He is vice-president of the Boys' Club of Waterbury.

SAMUEL ROOT, of Waterbury, although born in Susquehanna county, Pa., April 11, 1833, descends from one of the oldest of Connecticut's Puritan families, and traces his pedigree in the State to 1640, when John Root came from England and made Farmington his place of settlement. He married Frances Kilbourne, and died in 1684, while his wife survived until 1697. Their children were named as follows: John, Samuel, Thomas, Mary, Stephen, Susannah, Joseph and Caleb. Thomas Root, a brother of John, had come to America in 1637, and settled at Hartford; another Thomas Root settled in Salem, Mass., about the same time, but the relationship between them is not known.

Caleb Root, son of John, married Elizabeth Salomon for his first wife, and a Miss Gillette for his second, and died in 1712. His children were Mary, Caleb, Thomas, Elizabeth and Samuel.

Samuel Root, son of Caleb, married Elizabeth Prindle, and came to Waterbury, where he died in 1778. His children were named Mercy, Samuel, Enos, Joseph, Elijah and Solomon.

Enos Root, son of Samuel, was born in Waterbury March 26, 1753. He married Martha Roberts, lived in Waterbury, then in Bristol, but returned to Waterbury, where he died in August, 1820, and his wife on Oct. 24, 1824. Their children were Moses, Samuel, Levia, Chaucey, Elias and Enos P.

Enos P. Root, son of Enos, was born in Waterbury Nov. 30, 1792. In 1816 he married Maria Downs, a daughter of John Downs, of Waterbury, and they became the parents of seven children, viz.: Charlotte, Albert A., Anson A., Mary M., Samuel, Willard E. and Jane. Of this, the immediate family, Charlotte (now deceased) became the wife of Theron Beech, and for her second husband married Rev. Mr. Baldwin; Albert A. went to Pennsylvania, followed his trade of carpenter and joiner, and there passed the remainder of his life; Anson A. is a retired merchant of Woodbury; Mary M. is the deceased wife of Rev. W. P. Gibson, of the Congregational Church; Samuel is mentioned below; Willard E., a mechanic, died young; and Jane (deceased) was married to Rev. Richard Crittenden, a Congregational clergyman. Enos P. Root, the father of this family, who was a contractor and builder, passed many years in the Keystone State, closing his days in Springville, Susquehanna Co., Pa., dying Nov. 7, 1852. In politics he was first a Whig, and on the disintegration of that party became a Republican.

Samuel Root, whose pedigree has been given in the foregoing, lived in Springville, Pa., until sixteen years of age, and there received his education. He then came to Waterville, a suburb of Waterbury, and worked in a cutlery factory until 1853, when he went to California, via the Isthmus, with $600 in his pocket. After one year he returned with $1, and felt himself fortunate in securing work in a cutlery factory in Naugatuck, where he remained two years. He was next employed for three years by the Wheeler & Wilson Manufacturing Co., at Bridgeport; and then, after six months in a woolen factory in Norfolk, Conn., he went to work on his own account, selling cutlery and plated ware on the road for eight years. He then purchased a cutlery shop on the outskirts of Middlebury, and manufactured cutlery, including pocket ware, for twenty-one years, but has now practically retired, employing his time in looking after his real-estate interests.

Mr. Root has been twice married. On Dec. 2, 1863, he wedded H. Vienna Fenn, a daughter of Harris and Jane E. Fenn. One son blessed this union, Linford E., born Nov. 22, 1868, who is now a lawyer of considerable prominence, and the present clerk of the district court. The wife and mother passed away Nov. 7, 1887. On Jan. 8, 1889, Mr. Root married Mrs. Mary Root, widow of Frank Root, a son of Anson A. Root, brother of our subject. By her first marriage Mrs. Root is the mother of one son, Clifford Anson, born Jan. 19, 1884, and now a student in the Military Academy at Peekskill, N. Y. By his second marriage Samuel Root has become the father of three children, viz.: Herbert S., born Oct. 17, 1889; Barbara S., born Sept. 19, 1890; and James H., born April 1, 1893, all of whom are in school.

Mrs. Mary Root is a daughter of James and Caroline (Capewell) Stone, the former a native of Woodbury, Conn., and the latter of New York City. Sheldon Stone, father of James, was a carpenter, and of English extraction, and George Capewell, father of Mrs. Caroline Stone, was one of three brothers—Mark, George and Joseph—who came from Birmingham, England.

In politics Samuel Root is a Republican, and has served one year as a member of the common council, and for some time on the board of compensation. Fraternally he is a Freemason, affiliating with Harmony Lodge, No. 44, Waterbury, and he is also a member of the Waterbury Club. Mrs. Root is a member of the Episcopal Church, which Mr. Root also attends. No family in Waterbury is more highly esteemed for personal merits.

JOSEPH E. AND ELI T. DUDLEY, of Guilford, are lineal descendants of (V) Nathaniel Dudley, a farmer of Clapboard Hill District, Guilford, who was the fourth son of (IV) Caleb Dudley ((III) Caleb, (II) Joseph, (I) William) and Hannah (Stone), as set forth in the genealogy of the Dudley family, given elsewhere.

(V) Nathaniel Dudley was born Oct. 3, 1745, and died Feb. 21, 1826. He married, March 12, 1777, Mary Hart, born Aug. 17, 1751, and died Feb. 6, 1841, aged eighty-nine, the daughter of Thomas Hart (Rev. John, Thomas, Stephen) and Concurrency Bartlett (Ebenezer, Daniel, George). He lived with his father in a house built by his grandfather, Caleb Dudley, probably about 1700. He had four children: (1) Nathaniel, born Nov. 15, 1777, died Sept. 7, 1795, unmarried. (2) Lois, born July 11, 1779, died Sept. 9, 1860, unmarried. (3) John, a sketch of whom follows. (4) Eunice, born Feb. 26, 1784, married May 25, 1807, George Bushnell, of Saybrook, and died Dec. 15, 1825.

(VI) John Dudley, a farmer of Clapboard Hill District, son of Nathaniel and Mary (Hart) Dudley, lived in the house with his father. He was born Jan. 25, 1782, married Jan. 24, 1805, Sarah Lee, born Dec. 30, 1780, died Dec. 27, 1849, daughter of Elon and Deborah (Johnson) Lee. They had five children: (1) Hooker, born Oct. 1, 1806, died Aug. 21, 1879; on Oct. 16, 1831, he married Mary Evarts, who was born May 22, 1806, daughter of Nathaniel Evarts and Julia (Parmelee), of Nutplains District, and died Feb. 20, 1895. (2) Elon, born May 1, 1808, died April 8, 1883, at Angelica, New York; married Dec. 21, 1831, Fanny S. Latham, born June 1, 1812. (3) John (father of Joseph E. and Eli T.), sketch of whom appears later. (4) Horace, born March 16, 1812, died June 12, 1885; married April 30, 1837, Hannah Amanda Dudley, born April 10, 1816, died Oct. 4, 1899, daughter of Timothy Dudley and Hannah (Bartlett). (5) Ruth, born June 4, 1814, died May 5, 1895; married Nov. 28, 1838, John Norton, born Sept. 19, 1802, died Oct. 17, 1839, son of Eber Norton and Mabel (Evarts). They had one son, Deacon John William, born Oct. 19, 1839.

AMOS DUDLEY, born Nov. 3, 1747, was the youngest son of Caleb and Hannah (Stone) Dudley. He was a farmer, and lived at Clapboard Hill in a house which stood just east of the home of Joseph E. Dudley. He married Feb. 27, 1771, Mary Evarts, daughter of Eleazer Evarts (Samuel, Judah, John) and Hannah (Scranton). She died Aug. 23, 1797. They had six children. He married (second) July 15, 1799, Deborah (Johnson), widow of Elon Lee. They had one child.

Children of Amos and Mary (Evarts) Dudley:

(1) Amos, sketch of whom follows. (2) Timothy, sketch of whom follows. (3) Mary, born Oct. 16, 1778, died Oct. 1, 1840, unmarried. (4) William, born Sept. 17, 1780, died July 16, 1845; married Feb. 8, 1808, Deborah Lee, daughter of Elon Lee and Deborah (Johnson). (5) Russell, born Oct. 24, 1787, died in 1854; he went to Richmond, Va.; married Jan. 18, 1813, Mary Baldwin. (6) Daniel, born in 1792, died Dec. 31, 1846, unmarried. By his second wife, Deborah, Amos Dudley had one child, (7) Betsey, born in December, 1800, who married Jan. 1, 1821, William Chittenden, born May 5, 1797, died Aug. 1, 1880, son of Amos Chittenden and Jerusha (Graves). They had five children—Betsey Eliza, born March 2, 1822, married Sidney A. Dowd. Amos, born Aug. 4, 1824, married Harriet Case. Mary, born July 9, 1827, married David D. Carter. Lydia, born Jan. 30, 1831, died Dec. 7, 1854, unmarried. Catherine, born Aug. 1, 1835, married Joseph L. Scranton.

(VI) Amos Dudley, born Dec. 31, 1771, son of Amos and Mary (Evarts) Dudley, married (first) April 18, 1798, Anna Shelley, who died July 16, 1801, aged thirty-one. They had two children: (1) Henry, sketch of whom follows. (2) Jonathan, born Nov. 8, 1800, died Jan. 27, 1860; married Feb. 13, 1823, Eliza Holmes, who died Feb. 18, 1856.

(VII) Henry Dudley, born March 9, 1799, died Nov. 12, 1862. He was the eldest son of Amos Dudley (Amos, Caleb, Caleb, Joseph, William) and his first wife, Anna (Shelley). He built and lived in the house east of Charles A. Dudley's, now the home of Joseph Grosvenour. He married May 14, 1823, Vesta Bradley, who died Jan. 18, 1882. They had four children: (1) Anna M., born April 15, 1824, married George Shelley, who was killed by lightning Sept. 20, 1856. (2) Deborah, born Sept. 1, 1831, died April 7, 1840. (3) Henry Bradley, born March 9, 1834, married June 20, 1864, Clarissa Evarts. (4) Louisa Deborah, born June 6, 1843, died Nov. 22, 1879; she married April 9, 1862, Edmund J. Field, born Jan. 9, 1840, who fell at Antietam, Sept. 18, 1862.

(VI) Timothy Dudley, born Dec. 16, 1775, died Aug. 27, 1819. He married April 24, 1809, Hannah Bartlett, daughter of Joseph Bartlett (Joseph, Abraham, George) and Sarah (Cruttenden). They had four children: (1) Justin, born April 2, 1810, died April 3, 1888, unmarried. (2) Mary Ann, born Feb. 7, 1813, died April 1, 1900, unmarried. (3) Hannah Amanda, born April 10, 1816, died Oct. 4, 1890; married April 30, 1837, Horace Dudley (John, Nathaniel). (4) Sarah, born April 17, 1819, married Dec. 9, 1840, John Dudley (John, Nathaniel).

(VII) John Dudley, son of (VI) John and Sarah (Lee) Dudley, born Dec. 20, 1809, received a liberal education, and was a prosperous agriculturist following general farming all his life on the homestead. In politics he was first a Whig, later a Republican, and served in several local offices, such as selectman, assessor, etc. In religious faith he was a member of the Congregational Church of Guilford. He died July 1, 1893, and was interred in Alderbrook cemetery, Guilford.

On Dec. 9, 1840, in Guilford, John Dudley married Sarah Dudley, born April 17, 1819, daughter of Timothy Dudley and Hannah (Bartlett). Mrs. Dudley is yet living, at the advanced age of eighty-two years, and is much respected and beloved for her many Christian virtues. She is the mother of children as follows: Eunice Amelia, born June 6, 1842, who died Oct. 20, 1842; Joseph Edward and Eli Timothy, sketches of whom follow; Fanny Amelia, born Nov. 26, 1848, living at home; Lewis Richard, born Nov. 19, 1854, who married Aug. 24, 1880, Nora Serviss, and lives in West Salem, La-Crosse Co., Wisconsin.

(VIII) JOSEPH E. DUDLEY was born Dec. 30, 1843, at Dudleytown, Guilford, received a liberal district-school education, and since his father's death has been operating the homestead. In politics he is a Republican, and in religious faith a Congregationalist. He is unmarried, filially caring for his mother in her old age.

(VIII) ELI TIMOTHY DUDLEY, born on the old homestead April 17, 1846, received a good common school education, and took up the occupation of his forefathers. At the age of twenty-three years he commenced farming on the L. Dudley place, at Guilford, near the homestead, where he made many improvements, remaining there twenty-five years. In 1864 he removed to the George Dudley place, on Clapboard Hill, and has since been engaged in farming there. He still owns the property at Guilford. Like all the Dudley family he is a pronounced Republican. In religious connection he is a member of the First Congregational Church.

On May 5, 1866, in Guilford, Eli T. Dudley married Caroline M. Wilcox, who was born Feb. 27, 1847, daughter of Alfred Nelson and Caroline A. (Munger) Wilcox, the former of whom was a carpenter and builder by occupation; during the Civil war he served as sergeant of Company G, 14th Conn. V. I. A brief record of the two children of Eli T. and Caroline M. (Wilcox) Dudley is as follows: (1) William Alfred, born Sept. 13, 1874, is farming near his father's homestead. He married Louva Redfield, of Madison, and has one child, Carrie Redfield. (2) Amy Louisa, born Jan. 23, 1878, resides at home. The entire Dudley family rank among the most prominent and progressive of New Haven county, and well merit the esteem and respect of the community.

JOHN R. PLATT, a prominent and successful agriculturist of Prospect, is a veteran of the Civil war, and bears an honorable record for brave service in the cause of freedom and union. In the paths of peace he has also won an enviable reputation because of the sterling qualities which go to the making of a good citizen.

Mr. Platt was born, March 13, 1824, in the town where he still lives, and belongs to one of the best-known and oldest families of New Haven county. Richard Platt, the first of the name to come to the New World, was born in Hertfordshire, England, and was a son of Joseph Platt, who spent his entire life in that country. On his emigration to America, in 1639, Richard Platt located in Milford, Conn., where he spent the remainder of his life, dying there in 1684. His son, Josiah Platt, was born and baptized in Milford, Nov. 15, 1645, and on reaching manhood engaged in farming there until his death, which occurred Jan. 1, 1724. On Dec. 2, 1669, in Milford, he married Sarah Canfield, who lived and died in that town. Their son, Joseph Platt, was baptized June 15, 1693, and passed his entire life in Milford. He was married, Jan. 16, 1720, to Mehitable Fenn, who also died in Milford. Their son, Joseph, was born in Milford Nov. 3, 1724, and died there Aug. 30, 1806. By occupation he was a farmer. He married Hannah Buckingham, a relative of Governor Buckingham. Benjamin Platt, son of Joseph, Jr., and grandfather of our subject, was born in 1756, and married Abigail Green. He served as a soldier in the Revolutionary war under Capt. Charles Smith, in Gen. Waterbury's brigade, and participated in the battle of Danbury. He was made lame for life during his service.

Benjamin Platt, Jr., the father of our subject, was born in 1782, and when a young man came to Prospect, where he continued to make his home throughout life, spending his last years with his children. He died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Mary Ann Clark, of East Hampton, Mass., and was buried in Prospect cemetery. He was a successful man, an earnest member of the Congregational Church, and quite prominent and influential. For three terms he represented his town in the State Legislature, also served as selectman and assessor, and filled other local offices. On Jan. 22, 1800, he married Miss Nancy Bristol, a daughter of Nathan and Anna (Lambert) Bristol. She died in 1862, and was also laid to rest in Prospect cemetery. To them were born twelve children, namely: Mark, deceased; Mary Ann, wife of Jason Clark, of East Hampton, Mass.; Benjamin, deceased; Nancy, deceased wife of Hugh Kilso; Henry, who died in infancy; Adelia, wife of Luther Morse; Henry, Harris and William, all deceased; Jane; John R., our subject; and Augusta, wife of Henry Stephens.

Reared upon the home farm, John R. Platt acquired his education in the district schools of that locality, and on leaving the parental roof, at the age of seventeen, he worked in a clock shop at Plymouth for a short time, after which he took up the carpenter's trade and followed it until after the Civil war broke out. Prompted by a spirit of patriotism, he enlisted in August, 1862, for three years, in Company A, 20th Conn. V. I., under Col. Ross and Capt.

Timothy Gilford. His command was assigned to the 12th Army Corps. He participated in the battle of Gettysburg, and was with Sherman on his celebrated march to the sea and all through the Atlanta campaign, taking part in various battles. For meritorious service on field of battle he was promoted to the rank of lieutenant, and when the war ended and his services were no longer needed he was honorably discharged. He was in the grand review at Washington, D. C., and was mustered out in New Haven. Returning to Prospect, he purchased the Hughes farm of eighty-seven acres, upon which he has made many substantial improvements, and where he has since successfully engaged in general farming and fruit growing.

In 1852 Mr. Platt was united in marriage with Miss Augusta Carrington, of Baltimore, Md., a daughter of Nehemiah Carrington, a West India merchant, and to them were born two children: Arthur, who died at the age of three and a half years; and Charles, who died at the age of eight years. The wife and mother died in Prospect, and was laid to rest in the cemetery there. On March 29, 1893, Mr. Platt married Elizabeth Hotchkiss, a native of Prospect, a daughter of Harry and Sarah (Hoppin) Hotchkiss, and a granddaughter of Gideon Hotchkiss. Mr. and Mrs. Platt are members of the Congregational Church, and are highly esteemed by all who know them. He is a prominent member of Prospect Grange, and politically has always affiliated with the Republican party. In 1884 he represented the town in the State Legislature, was selectman a number of years, and also filled the office of assessor, and of constable forty years. His official duties were always discharged in a most commendable and satisfactory manner.

JONAH C. PLATT. An honorable ambition, sustained by practical ability and unyielding energy, is a passport to success and the biographies of our leading citizens furnish many interesting illustrations of the rule. It is a pleasure to present to our readers such a forceful example as is conveyed in the following sketch of one of the well-known residents of Ansonia.

Mr. Platt was born Nov. 30, 1832, in Milford, this county, and comes of good New England stock. Fiske Platt, our subject's grandfather, was a native of Milford, Conn., and the greater portion of his life was spent there, engaged in farming. Through his grandmother, whose maiden name was Sarah Newton, our subject is descended from the Newton family.

Newton Platt, our subject's father, was born and reared in Milford, and engaged in farming there. His death occurred at his homestead at the age of seventy years. He was prominent in local affairs, holding various offices, and he and his wife were active members of the first Congregational Church. His wife, Anna Clark, who died at the age of sixty-four, was born in Milford, the daughter of Abraham Clark, a well-known agriculturist, and her mother, Mehitable Peck, was also a native of Milford. Newton and Anna Platt had the following children: Sarah, Mrs. Clark, a widow residing in Orange, this county; Henry N. a resident of Milford; Adelia C., who married John C. Merwin, of Orange (both deceased); Charlotte Ann, who married David N. Clark, of Milford, and died Oct. 10, 1866 (he afterward married her sister Leonora); Jonah C., our subject; George F.; Abram C.; and Leonora, Mrs. Clark.

At the age of sixteen Jonah C. Platt left home to learn the carpenters' trade at Ansonia, and on completing his apprenticeship he followed the trade as a journeyman for about four years. Later he was employed for some time as foreman in the same shop in which he had learned the business, but he then became interested in raising garden seeds, continuing about eight years. The next three years were spent as foreman for his old employer, and for four years he was engaged in mercantile business in a store near his present home, but he then formed a partnership with Frederick Lines in the carpenters' trade, under the firm name of F. A. Lines & Co. They carried on a large business for a number of years, keeping several workmen employed, and they built many of the important buildings in Ansonia and vicinity. Mr. Platt finally sold his interest but did not retire from business entirely, his extensive real estate holdings requiring his attention. He and his wife formerly owned a large tract of land which was sold in building lots, and they still own six houses and a store, all in one block. In the development of other business interests of the city Mr. Platt has taken an active part and he has been a director in the Ansonia Savings Bank since its incorporation, and is now vice-president; he was one of the incorporators of that institution. At the present time he is the only incorporator who is still on the board of directors. Mr. Platt is also a member of George Washington Lodge, No. 82, F. & A. M. at Ansonia. Politically he is a Republican, and his fellow townsmen have called him to numerous official positions. In 1884-5 he was in the Legislature, and he has served ten years, 1889-1898 on the board of selectmen. For two years he was first selectman, and from 1894 to the present time he has served as assessor of Ansonia, under four mayors. In 1884 and 1885 he was tax collector of the town, then a portion of the town of Derby, and in 1886, 1887 and 1888 he was again appointed to that office.

In 1856 Mr. Platt married Miss Ellen L. Hodge, who was born in the house adjoining their present residence. She was one of three children of Benjamin Hodge, and is now the only survivor of the family. Her father was a highly respected citizen of the town and was engaged for many years in raising garden seeds. Mr. and Mrs. Platt have had five children, of whom three are living: (1) Annie married Edward T. Vance, a druggist of Ansonia, and has two children, Clyde (who has attended Worcester Academy, and is now a student of Yale College) and Helen. (2) Frederick Newton died when two years old. (3) Alfred C., a druggist, who died at the age of twenty-four, married Miss Frances P. Lambert, and had one daughter, Allie C. (4) Ellen C. married Rev. William H. I. Houghton, an Episcopalian clergyman, now deceased. They had two children, Edna P. and William H. (5) Franklin B. is secretary of the Ansonia Electrical Co. He married Miss Carrie Nettleton, and has one son, Franklin Newton. Mrs. Platt is a communicant of the Episcopal Church, and one of the active workers in the vicinity.

SERENO BARTHOLOMEW, one of the prominent citizens of Wallingford and an active and useful member of the Congregational Church, is the subject of this biography. Mr. Bartholomew was born in the old family homestead on Oct. 27, 1818, a son of Samuel and Sylvia (Howd) Bartholomew. Samuel Bartholomew had but a primitive education and followed agricultural pursuits all his days. Owning a farm of fifty acres, he continued to improve it, and he was noted for his industry and energy, and as an example of temperate Christian living was worthy of emulation.

Deacon Sereno Bartholomew attended school in East Farms and North Durham, worked on his father's farm, and also assisted on other farms, until he was eighteen years old, at which time he took charge of the homestead, where he has remained, with the exception of two years, which were spent in the factory of Hall & Elton, learning the trade of silver plating. Mr. Bartholomew was one of the first in this section to experiment successfully in tobacco raising, but now he devotes a small part of his 200 acres to the growing of fine peaches.

Perhaps Mr. Bartholomew is better known within the Congregational Church than in any other place in the community, as, for thirty-one years, he has held the office of deacon in that body, with dignity and efficiency. At the age of twenty-two, when in the strength of young manhood, he joined the church to which he has been devoted during a long and useful life.

On Sept. 27, 1847, in Middlebury, Conn., Sereno Bartholomew was united in marriage with Sarah A. Benham, who died in 1886. The children born of this union were: Catherine, born in 1848, died in 1865; and Franklyn M., born in 1855, married Harriet E. Tibbals (who was born in Durham, daughter of David and Nancy (Strong) Tibbals), and died in 1897. Franklyn M. Bartholomew grew up on the farm, was educated at a district school until, at the age of seventeen, he spent two school years at a private school. He was well known throughout Connecticut as being prominent in Grange circles, and he was instrumental in procuring the Grange storehouse located at the Air Line depot; and in 1886 he was chosen purchasing agent for the Wallingford Grange, holding the office until he resigned in 1892. The winter of 1892 he spent in the employ of a well-known Boston house, introducing feeds of various kinds, after which he traveled for Mr. Lucien Sanderson, of New Haven, Conn., manufacturer of chemicals and fertilizers, and in 1895 he was appointed by the Governor of Connecticut treasurer of the State Board of Agriculture, which office he held at the time of his death. The death of the son left his aged father to the care of his daughter-in-law, who now ministers to him.

Deacon Sereno Bartholomew can look back over many years of a well-spent life. He has always been interested in public affairs, and his political affiliations are with the Republican party. His high character has won for him the esteem and respect of the entire community.

WILLIAM S. BISHOP, a worthy citizen and representative well-to-do farmer of the town of Madison, comes of a family which has for generations been respected as contributing many useful and substantial citizens to this section. John Bishop, the first of the name of whom we have record, had a son John, who married Susan Goldham.

John Bishop, son of John and Susan (Goldham), born in 1655 in Guilford, Conn., died there Nov. 25, 1731. He was a life-long farmer, and a man of influence in the community. On July 3, 1689, he married Elizabeth Hitchcock, who died March 14, 1712, and on Nov. 18, 1713, he married Mary Johnson, by whom he had thirteen children.

John Bishop, eldest son of John, by the first marriage, was born Aug. 12, 1692, in Guilford, where he grew to manhood. He removed to East Guilford, where he passed the remainder of his life, dying there Jan. 28, 1752. On July 1, 1719, he married Abigail Spinning, born May 7, 1699, died Feb. 22, 1751, and they became the parents of five children: Prudence, born July 28, 1722, died Aug. 2, 1740; Elizabeth, born Dec. 20, 1725, died Sept. 19, 1754; Rachel, born Feb. 23, 1727, died Dec. 1, 1750; John is mentioned below; Abigail, born Oct. 8, 1731, married Dr. Nathaniel Welden.

John Bishop, born April 10, 1729, in East Guilford (now the town of Madison), died there April 3, 1807, and was buried in Madison cemetery. He was well known and highly respected in the community, and was a devout member of the Congregational Church. On Nov. 1, 1753, he married Hannah Hodgkins, born Feb. 16, 1733, died June 9, 1820, and they had a family of five children: Prudence, born Aug. 4, 1754, died Feb. 25, 1834, married Samuel Foster; John, born Sept. 3, 1756, died Sept. 24, 1848, married Irene Bartlett; Lois born in July, 1759, died April 12, 1836, married Molly Ludd; Rachel, born 1761, married William Bailey; William is mentioned below.

William Bishop, born in 1703 in Madison, died

Levens Bartholomew

June 28, 1848, and was laid to rest in the East cemetery in that town. He was a large land owner, and engaged successfully in general farming; was a Whig in politics, and held various local offices; was liberal in religious matters, and an active member of the Ecclesiastical Society. He married Lucy Kelsey, who was born in 1778 in Killingworth, Conn., and died Aug. 31, 1806, and two children came to this union: William Hull, born in 1801, who married Chloe Lee, and died Aug. 20, 1841; and Levi, father of our subject, who is mentioned below. Mr. Bishop married for his second wife Mabel Murray, a native of Guilford, born in 1776, who passed away Dec. 30, 1868, and to this marriage were also born two children: John M., born in 1821, who married Cynthia Hull, and died March 6, 1881; and Lucy Ann, who married Frederick Field, and died Oct. 25, 1881. All this family are buried in the East cemetery in Madison.

Levi Bishop was born in 1802 in the town of Madison, and died there Nov. 25, 1887, his remains being laid to rest in the East cemetery. In his younger days he followed the water, becoming master of a vessel, and also for some time engaged in the produce business, but he finally settled down to the calling of his forefathers, and met with substantial success in his agricultural pursuits. His adaptability to any line of business or circumstances stood him in good stead, and in every capacity, whether public or private, he displayed marked intelligence and ability, as well as integrity and a high sense of duty. Having early received a good practical education, he broadened his views and his knowledge by continued reading, and was well informed on subjects of general interest. He was quite active in public life in his locality. Originally a Whig in political sentiment, he became a Republican on the organization of that party and was quite active in its councils. In religion he was liberal, striving always to live up to the Golden Rule in his relations with his fellow men, and his temperate habits and industrious life won him universal respect.

On Feb. 14, 1828, Mr. Bishop married Miss Polly M. Coe, who was born Oct. 23, 1802, daughter of Thomas and Submit (Griswold) Coe, and four children blessed this union: William S., whose name introduces this sketch; Harriet E., born in 1836; Catherine E., born in October, 1845, died Jan. 27, 1849; and Lucy, wife of John Spencer. Mrs. Bishop died Dec. 6, 1888, at the home of her son, and was laid to rest in the East cemetery.

William S. Bishop was born Dec. 25, 1829, in the town of Madison, grew to manhood on the farm, and acquired his education in the district schools. All his life has been devoted to agricultural pursuits, for he remained on the home place, caring for his parents in their old age. His tract of seventy acres is well improved and valuable, and in addition to general farming he follows stock-raising and cattle dealing to some extent, by energetic industry winning success in his chosen calling. He is widely and favorably known in his town as an honest, upright citizen, and, like his father, he endeavors to make his daily life, in his intercourse with all, the exemplification of his religious views. A Republican in politics, he is no office seeker, and his influence is given rather to the support of good men than to party.

On Nov. 9, 1851, Mr. Bishop married Miss Rosetta M. Cook, who was born in 1830, daughter of Henry Cook, of Madison, and by her had three children: (1) William L., born July 26, 1859, died in infancy. (2) Catherine A., born Sept. 5, 1861, married James H. Bradley, and they had one child, Cora May; for her second husband she married Almon Johnson, and they have two children, Olive M. and Wealthy R. (3) Lucy Rosetta, born Aug. 14, 1866, was married July 12, 1884, to James McCann, and they have four children, Josephine, LeRoy, William and Raymond. On March 26, 1896, Mr. Bishop wedded for his second wife Mrs. Henrietta (Thomas) Van Wart, widow of Frank Van Wart, of an old Revolutionary family.

JOHN BEATTIE. This in his lifetime well-known quarryman and contractor, late of Leete Island, Guilford, was born in Edinburgh, Scotland, June 18, 1820. John Beattie, his father, was a freeman of that city, and a direct descendant of that noted Beattie family of Eskdale Moor, in Dumfriesshire, Scotland, whose ancestry has been traced back more than six centuries, and whose valor and exploits in peace and war have been celebrated in the story and song of that country by Sir Walter Scott and others. On the paternal side his grandmother was Nancy Armstrong, a descendant of the Johnson family, of Dumfriesshire, also prominent in the affairs of Scotland. The mother of John Beattie was Ann Richardson, a daughter of John and Catherine (Tate) Richardson, both of families belonging to Haddington, Scotland.

In 1830, when John Beattie was ten years old, his parents came to America and settled in Nova Scotia, Canada, where the father carried on his trade of stonemason and contractor. He was contractor in the construction of the masonry work on a canal from Halifax to Pictou. In that locality, on a small farm, the paternal home in this country was established, and there the son was sent to school for a short time; but, his robust nature rebelling against the restraint imposed by sedentary life, he preferred to labor in the fields of his father's farm. In Nova Scotia he attended with profit a few terms the school of an excellent man, Rev. Mr. Morrison, and to these brief periods his school days were limited.

After a few years' residence in Halifax, Nova Scotia, and when John would no longer attend school, his father proposed to indenture him to learn the trade of a shoemaker, and had selected a master for him, whereupon the independent lad gave so emphatic a demonstration against the step that the plan was summarily abandoned. This opposition was probably the act in life which led him into the vocation in which he for so many years was most successfully engaged. Being now thirteen years old, strong and healthy, with a love for outdoor occupation, his father was persuaded to allow him to learn the trade of stonecutting, which work John took up with great spirit. In the course of a few years the failure of the canal company induced the Beatties to make their home at Newport, R. I., whence the father and John went to New York to work at their trade. A year later they proceeded to Boston, and not long after to Newport, where the father died when John was sixteen years of age. The care of the family, consisting of his mother and four children, the next eldest being ten years of age, now devolved upon John, who, deeply feeling the responsibility placed upon him, entered upon his life work with an earnestness of application that was bound to bring success. In his trade he became very skillful, and was a rapid and thorough workman. During the next four years he was employed at Fort Adams, R. I., having, when he was eighteen years old, his first contract to do work for the United States Government. At the age of twenty years he was appointed foreman mason of the bridge builders on a section of the Boston & Troy railroad, and there for the following two years he had his first experience in overseeing large numbers of men. In 1846 he returned to Fort Adams, where he was appointed master stonecutter by Gen. W. S. Rosecrans, and superintended the preparation of the material used in that fortification until work was suspended by order of Jefferson Davis, at that time Secretary of War. Again, for a year, Mr. Beattie was with the Boston & Troy Railroad Co., in his old capacity. He then went to California as a gold miner, and for two years and two months had the experience of an argonaut without realizing any of the rewards sometimes associated therewith. Returning to the East, poor in purse and with impaired health, his next work was building the stone towers for the suspension bridge across the Kentucky river at Pleasant Valley. His health continuing poor, however, he and his brother William next opened a stonecutter's yard at Newport, in which he worked a year with beneficial results to his health.

In 1855 Mr. Beattie was engaged in building the towers for the great bridge across the Ohio, between Cincinnati and Covington, after which he had an interest in the construction of Section One, of the Brooklyn Water Works, at Jamaica, N. Y. That work being completed, at a loss to him, he spent some time building bridges on the Wabash railroad in Indiana, after which he returned to Jamaica, N. Y., and contracted for the construction of another section of the water works. This job he personally superintended, and to such great advantages that he and his partner cleared $20,000 in eighteen months. After this he executed many contracts for mason work, in bridges, on railroads, warehouse docks and lighthouses; built bridges on the Worcester & Nashua railroad, on the Old Colony line, and on the Warren & Fall River railroad; constructed the piers for the bridge at Warehouse Point (using sand bags for coffer dams for the first time in bridge construction in this country) and for the Old Colony dock at Newport, all large public works.

In 1865 Mr. Beattie purchased the Harrison quarry, at Fall River, but after operating it one year left it in charge of his brother William and son John, and opened another quarry at Niantic, Conn. In a few years he disposed of that interest, and in February, 1869, he came to Guilford, where he bought sixteen acres of land at Hoadley's Point, upon which were very fine ledges of excellent granite. During the following season he built several houses upon this tract, doing at the same time the mason work for the Newport & Wickford railroad. On Aug. 22, 1870, he removed permanently to Leete Island, where he continued to make his home until his death, Nov. 18, 1899. Here he developed the large quarry interests until the industry became one of the largest of the kind in the state. His granite lands and real-estate holdings at Leete Island increased to more than 400 acres, and employment was given to from 125 to 600 men, their operations being conducted in a systematic manner, aided by modern appliances. The products were readily transported to many localities by the Shore Line railroad, running through his lands, and by a fleet of vessels owned by him and laden at his docks at Hoadley's Point. The granite of these quarries is of several qualities; blue, pink and white—which are here cut, carved and polished into any desired forms; and a coarse-grained gray, having a carrying capacity of 18,000 pounds to the square inch, which is much used for building purposes. A large quantity was thus supplied for the construction of the roadway of the New York & Harlem railroad, from the river to the Grand Central depot, in New York City. Much of the stone in the Brooklyn suspension bridge in New York was furnished from these quarries.

Mr. Beattie had a thorough, practical knowledge of every department of work carried on by him, and, being possessed of great industry, pluck and executive ability, he prospered in his affairs and earned the distinction of being one of the foremost business men in the eastern part of the country. Of a strong physique, and liberally endowed with many of the distinguished characteristics of the Scottish race, he was a typical son of the "land of the mountain and the flood."

John Beattie was three times married, first, in 1839, to Ann Kelly, a native of Longford, Ireland, who died in 1859, at Newport, R. I. By her he had six children, viz.: Ann, born in 1840, deceased; John, Jr., a sketch of whom follows; Catherine, wife of Robert Evans (both deceased); Francis, a sketch of whom follows; George, deceased in 1887; and Isabella, wife of George Sanborn, of Leete Island. For his second wife our subject married Mary Harrington, of Fall River, Mass., and three children, yet living, were born of this union: Emma, David H. and Charles, David H. being spoken of more fully elsewhere. For his third wife Mr. Beattie wedded, in 1870, Mary Gay, of Guilford, and three children were born of this union: Elizabeth, who died in 1878; and Peter and Thomas, residing at Hoadley's Point, Leete Island.

JOHN BEATTIE, JR., was born Aug. 29, 1841, at Newport, R. I., and there received a liberal public-school education. At the age of sixteen he became an apprentice to the stonecutter's trade under his father and uncle (William Beattie), and completed his apprenticeship in 1860. In the year 1865 he became foreman of the firm. In the following year he was received into partnership, the firm name being changed to John and William Beattie & Co., and until 1867 he managed the business of the concern. He then bought out the interest of his father, the style of the firm becoming William & John (Jr.) Beattie, which continued until 1869, in which year the partnership was dissolved, the interests being equally divided between William and John, Jr. The latter then conducted his portion of the business until the financial depression of 1873 caused him to abandon it (not being able to realize on his assets) and move to his farm in Westport, with the honorable resolution of paying his creditors "one hundred cents on the dollar" as soon as he was able. At farming he engaged until 1887, during which time he succeeded in accomplishing his desire with his creditors, paying them in full, and also took up the study of electricity. He is the inventor of what is known as "Beattie's battery zinc," which is now in general use, and used entirely on the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad; he also manufactured "X ray" machines, and invented other electrical devices. In 1890 he was appointed by his father to manage his business for him—both personal property and real-estate—which position of trust he filled with characteristic fidelity and precision, making his home in Fall River until the death of his father, since when, as one of the executors, he has been managing the estate.

In politics Mr. Beattie is a staunch Republican, and has held various offices of honor and trust; in 1870, while a resident of Fall River, Mass., he filled the position of alderman; in 1892 he was elected president of the board of aldermen, and served three years, during which incumbency he had the honor of being the originator and introducer of the Police Commission Bill, and he is known as the "father" of that popular ordinance. Socially he is a Knight Templar, being a member of Godfrey de Bouillon Commandery, Fall River; is also affiliated with the I. O. O. F., at Fall River, and one of the first members of the K. of P. in that city.

In 1864, at Somerset, Mass., John Beattie, Jr., married Ellen N. Powers, a native of Bedford county, Va., and a daughter of Thomas and Delia Powers. To this union have come three children: John, a gold and silver plater at Fall River, Mass., who married Lucinda Courtney; Grace, wife of John D. Monroe, of Fall River; and Ernest J., mechanical engineer, married to Elizabeth Tripp.

FRANCIS BEATTIE ("Frank"), superintendent of the Beattie Quarry Co., Leete Island, was born June 26, 1845, in Newport, R. I., and there received his education. At the age of sixteen he commenced to learn the trade of machinist in Providence, R. I., where after three years he enlisted, in 1863, becoming a member of Company E, 2d R. I. V. I. He served until the end of the war, receiving an honorable discharge in 1865. Mr. Beattie took part in several engagements, serving under Gen. Sheridan at Winchester, Cedar Creek, Hatcher's Run and Five Forks, and at the battle of Sailor's Creek, on Lee's retreat from Petersburg, he was wounded by a minie ball. He was present at Lee's surrender at Appomattox Court House, Va., and from there went on the pursuit after Johnston, making a march of 110 miles in forty-four hours on short rations.

In Niantic Mr. Beattie learned the trade of a stonecutter and mason. In 1870 he came to Leete Island, Guilford, and for thirty years was superintendent of his father's business there, giving the trust reposed in him the best of care and attention.

In Providence, R. I., in 1868, Francis Beattie was united in marriage with Merriam Caroline McCall, born at Fall River, Mass., daughter of John and Jane McCall, and seven children have graced their union: Annie C., who was educated at the Notre Dame Convent, Waterbury, and is now the wife of Thomas T. Noel, telegraph operator, Leete Island; Carrie Isabelle, educated in the Guilford high school, who was assistant postmaster at Leete Island; Rosie Frances, Mary Elizabeth and John Richard, all of whom were educated in the Guilford high school; and Frank Kelley and Roy Hamilton.

Mr. Beattie is a member of Paramelee Post, No. 42, G. A. R., Guilford, in which he has held all the offices, including that of commander; is affiliated with the F. & A. M., St. Alban's Lodge, Guilford; also with Hallock Chapter, and the Order of the Eastern Star, of which latter his wife and daughter Carrie are also members. In politics he is a Republican, and under Harrison's administration served as postmaster at Leete Island. His wife and daughters are members of the Episcopal Church.

GEORGE ISAAC WILLIAMS, a prosperous and successful fruit farmer, dairyman and general farmer of Wallingford, was born in the Pond Hill District of that town Oct. 12, 1838. He is a grandson of Herman Williams, who was a brother of Willoughby Williams, grandfather of Street Williams, of Wallingford. The family history and important data of the Williams ancestry are given in the biography of that gentleman, elsewhere.

Herman Williams was a farmer and land owner of Pond Hill, where he died; he was buried in Center Street cemetery. He married a Miss Hoadley, and their children were Samuel, Hoadley, William, Elizabeth, Edwin, Isaac, Mary (who married a Mr. Maltby, of Northford), Caroline (who married Harry Fowler, of Guilford), Julia (who married John Bassett, of North Haven), and Elijah. All are now deceased.

William Williams, the father of George Isaac, was born on the farm where he grew to manhood. Farming was his business all his life, and he was a stock dealer as well, his judgment as to the fine points of cattle being regarded as that of an expert. A fine tract of land in Pond Hill passed into his possession, and there he settled, devoting his life to its improvement, and prospering in an active and honorable career. The land where the Wallingford race track is now laid out belonged to him at one time. Mr. Williams died in the home of his son William H., and was buried in the Main Street cemetery. He was a Whig, and later a Republican, and in religion an Episcopalian. He married Abigail Preston, a native of Wallingford, and a daughter of Almon Preston. She died in Northford in 1897, and was buried in the Main Street cemetery. To this union were born the following children: Cornelia Anna, who married Henderson Ives, of North Branford; George Isaac; and William H.

George Isaac Williams was a student in the Pond Hill District school, and grew to manhood on the family homestead. Soon after his marriage he bought the "Munson Farm," which then consisted of 153 acres. It has been enlarged by subsequent purchases until it now comprises 400 acres, in a high state of cultivation, showing the touch of a practical farmer at every point. Mr. Williams carries on both general and stock farming, and operates quite a large dairy; there is also a feed and saw mill on his farm. He is a man awake to every turn, and anxious to keep abreast with the times.

Mr. Williams was married at Northford, to Miss Evelyn Munson, whose father, Julius Munson, was crushed to death by a stampede of cattle. To this marriage came three children: Arthur M., a dairy farmer, who married Emma Harrison; George and Fannie, both at home. Mr. Williams is a Republican, and belongs to the Wallingford Grange and the Agricultural Society. He is a member of the Episcopal Church, which he has served as a vestryman. A good all-round business man, an honorable and upright citizen, he has many friends, and is regarded as one of the leading farmers in Wallingford.

THOMAS A. NELSON, one of the wealthy citizens of New Haven county, who died Jan. 16, 1901, was a native of Scotland, born June 1, 1834, at Perth, on the banks of the Tay.

James Nelson, his father, was a linen manufacturer in Scotland, later carrying on the business more extensively in Belfast, Ireland, where he passed the rest of his days, dying in 1810. He and his wife Susan had a family of eight children—three sons and five daughters—named respectively: Margaret J., Thomas A., Mary A., George, William, Letitia, Ellen E., and Jennie. Of these, George, who was a soldier in the United States regular army before the Civil war, is now living retired in Chicago, Ill.; William is in the real estate business in the same city; the daughters also survive.

Thomas A. Nelson, the subject of proper of these lines, was seven years old when he moved to the North of Ireland with his parents, and there received his earlier education. At the age of fifteen years (1849) he came to the United States, locating at Georgetown, Fairfield Co., Conn., where he attended school for some time; thence removed, in 1851, to Birmingham, where he commenced to learn the trade of tool-making, though he did not follow it. From Birmingham he proceeded to Charlotteville, Schoharie Co., N. Y., and there prepared for college, but did not enter any college. Returning to Birmingham, he engaged with the Downs & Bassett Mfg. Co., manufacturers of corsets and importers of kid gloves, and continued with that firm for a period of over a quarter of a century, from 1859 to 1884, after which he did not engage in any active business.

In 1865 Thomas A. Nelson married Clara M., youngest daughter of Abram Hubbell, of Ansonia. Mr. Hubbell was born in Fairfield county, Conn., and followed farming as well as carpentry; came to Ansonia in 1855, and associated himself with Anson G. Phelps in the Ansonia Land & Water Co., of which he was general manager up to his death in 1884. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Thomas A. Nelson: Clara H., Susan L. and William A., the last named being secretary and treasurer of the Derby Paper Mill, with which he has been connected some ten years, and of which his father was president three years.

In politics our subject was a staunch Republican, though not active in the workings of the party. Socially he was a member of the F. & A. M., King Hiram Lodge, No. 12, of Derby; was president of the Y. M. C. A. for years; and with his family attended the services of the Congregational Church. They have a beautiful home in Ansonia, called "Forestdale," the residence being one of the most elegant in this section, surrounded as it is with spacious grounds, lawns and winding paths.

SHERMAN B. CHIPMAN, in his lifetime a well-known merchant of Waterbury, was born on the west side of what is now known as the city, June 13, 1806, a son of Samuel Chipman, and a descendant of one of the oldest of New England families. The emigrant ancestor, John Chipman, came from England in 1630, and settled in Massachusetts, where he married a Miss Howland, who was a granddaughter of Gov. Carver.

Samuel Chipman, father of Sherman B., married

S. B. Chipman

Nancy Potter, to which union were born eleven children, as follows: Samuel D., Sherman B., Lyman, William, George E., Joseph, Timothy T., Ransom, Daniel L. (whose biography is given in full on another page), Elizabeth N. and Martha.

Sherman B. Chipman remained on the home farm at Waterbury until old enough to be apprenticed to the cooper's trade, at which he served his full time, and then followed that trade as a journeyman for a number of years. He first married Amy Todd, of Wolcott, Conn., who died leaving no children. For his second wife Mr. Chipman, in 1833, wedded Mary A. Granniss, who was born in Meriden, Conn., Sept. 6, 1816, but who was reared in South Glastonbury. The marriage took place in New Haven, when the fair young bride was but seventeen years of age. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Chipman settled in Waterbury, where he conducted a successful grocery business until his death, which occurred Jan. 16, 1860. Their only child, Harriet E., was born April 28, 1838, and died Feb. 16, 1840.

In politics Mr. Chipman was a Democrat, but was not a man to fritter away his time and energies in party affairs. He preferred to devote his attention to his business, and to the comfort of his home, and at his death he left his wife in well-to-do circumstances. She continues to reside in Waterbury, where she holds a high social position, honored and esteemed by all who know her.

Enos Granniss, father of Mrs. Mary A. Chipman, was born in New Haven county, near the city of that name, a son of Lieut. Enos Granniss, a soldier of the Revolutionary war, whose three children were named Enos, Horace and Palmer. The eldest of these Enos, married Elizabeth Chipman, who was a sister of Samuel Chipman, the father of Sherman B. Chipman. To Enos Granniss and his wife were born six children, in the following order: Enos, who was a clothier in Meriden, in Middletown and later in Wethersfield, but who died in Waterbury; Elizabeth, who was married to David Scranton, of Glastonbury, and died in New Haven; Anna C., deceased wife of Edward Kilbourn; William E., who was an engineer for the New Haven Machine Co., in New Haven, but is now deceased; Mary A., the present Mrs. Chipman; and Eunice M., deceased, wife of Rev. Joseph T. Benton.

SMITH A. ABBOTT comes of ancestors who were for many years engaged in mechanical manufacture of various sorts, and he himself has not been without experience in the same general line. At present he is a prosperous hardware merchant in the city of Derby, where he deservedly enjoys the confidence and respect of his fellow citizens. He was born in Middlebury, this county, Aug. 6, 1831, the sixth child of Daniel and Sally (Sherman) Abbott. His mother was a daughter of Elijah Sherman, of Woodbury, who belonged to the same branch of the Sherman family as did Gen. William Tecumseh Sherman.

Daniel Abbott, who was also born in Middlebury, cultivated a farm, and in addition to agricultural pursuits manufactured pumps and pipes, as well as edge-tools and hammers. In later life he also engaged in the manufacture of paper at Southbury and Southford. His brain was as tireless as his energy, and he achieved a fair success through pertinacity and courage which would not admit the possibility of failure. He was a Whig in politics, and died in the communion of the Methodist Church. He was the father of a family of eight children, only two of whom were daughters. Margaret S., the elder, was twice married, first to E. T. Abbott (he was not a member of the same branch of the family as herself); after his death she married S. Smith, who is also deceased. Nancy M., the younger daughter and fifth child, became the wife of Charles Warner, of Shelton. The sons of Daniel Abbott were Daniel S., Samuel P., Elijah E., Smith A., Charles K. and John B. Of these Daniel, Samuel and Charles are deceased, the latter having met death through accident when ten years old. Daniel was the successful proprietor of an iron foundry and machine shop at Gananoque, Canada. Elijah and John, who were associated with him in business, still reside there. Samuel P. was an expert rubber manufacturer, and as such was called to England, where he took charge of an extensive plant. Subsequently he went to Scotland, where he died, meeting with an accident in the shop where he was employed.

Smith A. Abbott was a boy of six years when his parents took up their residence in Southford. His school days over, he assisted his father for a time, and then entered the employ of the Wheeler & Wilson Manufacturing Co., before that concern removed its works to Bridgeport. He next formed a partnership with Louis Downs, under the firm name of Downs & Abbott, and engaged in the manufacture of buttons and buckles. After a few years this co-partnership was dissolved, and Mr. Abbott, going to Beacon Falls, secured work as a machinist. Returning to Southford, he filled the same position in his father's employ, and about two years after the latter's death took charge of his business, including the management of the paper-mill, which was then turning out straw paper. In 1866 he disposed of the plant and removed to Derby, in which city he has since resided. To employ his own words, he "took life easy" for a time, but in 1870 bought the hardware and tinware business of Gould Curtis, forming a co-partnership with David Curtis, the brother of Gould. Their relation as partners extended over a period of seventeen years, when Mr. Curtis disposed of his interest in the business and Mr. Abbott admitted his son, Frank D., as a partner, the style of the firm being changed to Abbott & Co.

Mr. Abbott was married in 1853 to Julia B. Downs, who died April 21, 1884. Four children were born to them—Mary C., Frank D., Fannie L.

and Jessie M. The son, as has been said, is his father's partner; he married Lilly Ogden, of Ansonia, Sept. 16, 1884. Mary, the eldest daughter, now deceased, married Alfred Anderson, of Derby. Fannie married George S. Curtis, of the same city, and is deceased. Jessie M. became Mrs. Burton Woodbridge, of the same place. After the death of his first wife Mr. Abbott married Miss Sarah L. Downs, her first cousin; to this union were born no children. He is a Republican in politics, and both himself and his family are members of the Methodist Church.

CHARLES FROST (deceased) was a leading citizen of Mill Plain, Waterbury, and a worthy representative of an old Connecticut family.

Samuel Frost, the first of the name in America, was born in England about 1704, and on coming to this country located in the town of Wallingford, New Haven Co., Conn. He served as a soldier in the French and Indian war. He lived to the advanced age of ninety-six years, dying at the home of his son David, on Wolcott Mountain, Nov. 14, 1800. He was an active member of the Episcopal Church, and at his funeral four ministers of different denominations—Congregational, Baptist, Methodist and Episcopal—participated in the services. On March 21, 1733, in Wallingford, he married Naomi Fenn, who was born May 10, 1714, a daughter of Edward and Mary (Thorp) Fenn. They had three children: Moses, born Jan. 6, 1734; Naomi, born March 31, 1735, wife of David Coggswell; and David, born Sept. 15, 1743.

David Frost, son of Samuel, was a farmer and land owner on Wolcott Mountain, where he spent his entire life. In religious faith he was a Baptist. He was married Nov. 5, 1762, to Mary Beach, who was born in Wallingford Dec. 20, 1740, a daughter of Joseph and Experience Beach. Mr. Frost died Dec. 15, 1812, his wife on Feb. 5, 1819. In their family were the following children: Jesse, born Oct. 18, 1763, is mentioned below; Enoch, born Jan. 8, 1765, married Anna Culver; David, born March 1, 1767, married Mary Ann Hitchcock; Naomi was born July 1, 1770; Mary, born March 24, 1775, died Sept. 14, 1778; Mary (2), born March 11, 1780, married Ezekiel Smith; Elizabeth married Nathan Barnes.

Jesse Frost, son of David, was drafted at the age of sixteen years for service in the Revolutionary war, and was in the service two years and nine months, being under the immediate command of Gen. Washington for nine months as one of the teamsters carrying the baggage of the general and his staff. After the war he was converted, and became an active and prominent member of the Baptist Church of Waterbury. Feeling himself called upon to preach, he studied for the ministry, and was ordained in 1815. He served as joint pastor of the Baptist Church at Waterbury with Rev. Samuel Porter for many years, and died at that place Oct.

12, 1827. For a time he preached in Southington, Conn., but he never located there. He was married in 1783 to Abigail Culver, daughter of Lieut. Stephen Culver. She died March 7, 1842. They had ten children, namely: James was born March 21, 1784; Esther, born Aug. 29, 1786, married John Smith; Leva, born April 14, 1789, married Benjamin Farrell; Alpheus, born Oct. 3, 1791, was the father of our subject; Jesse Beecher was born March 3, 1794; Electa, born Nov. 16, 1796, died Oct. 16, 1803; Van Julius was born March 3, 1798; Sylvester, born Nov. 19, 1801, died in September, 1803; Electa, born Jan. 9, 1805, married Edmond Tompkins; Abigail, born March 9, 1808, married John Mitchell.

Alpheus Frost, father of our subject, was a farmer and land owner at Mill Plain, and was one of the highly respected and esteemed citizens of that locality. On June 17, 1816, he married Jerusha Williams, daughter of Timothy Williams, and to them were born seven children, whose names and dates of birth were as follows: Mark Augustus, April 16, 1818; Lydia Maria (wife of Hiram Williams), Feb. 1, 1820; Melissa (wife of T. H. Patton), Jan. 6, 1822; Electa Ann, Feb. 28, 1824; Charles, June 16, 1826; George, June 10, 1829; and Styles, Nov. 7, 1831. The father died in 1834, and was buried in the East Farms cemetery. Four years later his widow married Martin Cook, of Southington, Connecticut.

Charles Frost, our subject, attended the district schools near his boyhood home. He was only eight or nine years of age when his father died, and he started out to make his own way in the world at that early age, working as a farm hand. Subsequently he learned the machinist's trade, which he followed for a number of years, and later engaged in the novelty business as a member of the firm of Frost & Gaylord until their property was destroyed by fire, after which he settled down to farming at Mill Plain, where he spent the remainder of his life engaged in general farming and the dairy business.

On July 13, 1851, Mr. Frost was united in marriage with Miss Mary Ulissa Sperry, a native of Cheshire, and a daughter of Luther and Mary Verona (Holt) Sperry. Her paternal grandparents were Benjamin and Merah (Hall) Sperry, of Cheshire, and her maternal grandparents were Philemon and Abby (Barnes) Holt. To Mr. and Mrs. Frost were born three children, one of whom died in infancy, and the youngest, Ella A., at the age of twelve years. The only survivor is Mary U. They had an adopted daughter, Helen L., now the wife of Warren B. Hitchcock.

Mr. Frost died in Mill Plain May 9, 1897, and was laid to rest in Pine Grove cemetery, Waterbury. He was an earnest member of the Episcopal Church, and highly respected and esteemed by all who knew him. Politically he was identified with the Republican party. Fraternally he was a prominent member of Mad River Grange, of which he was treasurer for ten years, and of which his widow is also a member. Mrs. Frost is a most estimable lady.

HENRY HOBART FOWLER, a prominent retired farmer of Branford, is a native of that town, born Sept. 24, 1826, and is descended from a very old New England family.

(I) William Fowler, a native of Birmingham, England, lived in New Haven and Milford, from which latter town he moved to Guilford, and died there Jan. 25, 1660. He and his wife Sarah had four children, William, Sarah, Ambrose and John.

(II) Deacon John Fowler, son of William, married Mary Hubbard, born in 1635. He died Sept. 14, 1676, she on April 13, 1713. Their children were: Abigail, May, Abraham, John, Mehitabel and Elizabeth.

(III) Abraham Fowler, son of Deacon John, was born Aug. 29, 1652, and married Aug. 29, 1677, Elizabeth Bartlett, born in March, 1653. He died Sept. 30, 1719, she on Oct. 4, 1742. Their children: Abigail, Mary, Abraham, Ebenezer, Daniel, Josiah, Caleb and Elizabeth.

(IV) Ebenezer Fowler, son of Abraham, was born in Guilford in 1684, and followed farming, being a large land owner in North Guilford. On May 1, 1718, he married Elizabeth Starr, who was born in Guilford, Nov. 26, 1695. He died Nov. 28, 1768, she on March 26, 1765. Their children: Ebenezer, Nathaniel, Hulda, Caleb, Caleb (2), Elizabeth, Lucy and William.

(V) Ebenezer Fowler, son of Ebenezer, was born in January, 1719, in Guilford, and died Feb. 9, 1800. He was a minute man in the Revolution, and in response to the alarm call went to Boston. On Oct. 19, 1743, he married Desire Bristol, who was born Feb. 6, 1719, and died Oct. 13, 1800. Their children were: Beulah, Ebenezer, William, Nathan, Thomas, Ruth, Caleb, Isaac, James and Oliver.

(VI) Ebenezer Fowler, son of Ebenezer, and grandfather of Henry Hobart, was born in North Guilford April 17, 1747, and followed farming. He was a lieutenant in the Revolutionary war, and enjoyed a pension. On Nov. 18, 1778, he married (first) Lois Rossiter, born July 13, 1759, who died June 17, 1791. They had children as follows: Benjamin R., Fanny (Mrs. Benton), Ruth (Mrs. Erasmus Dudley), James H. and Ebenezer. On Feb. 18, 1795, he married (second) Mercy Adkins, born in 1764, who died in 1825. She bore him two sons, Ammi and Isaac. Ebenezer Fowler died Jan. 1, 1833.

(VII) Benjamin Rossiter Fowler, son of Ebenezer and Lois (Rossiter) Fowler, and father of Henry Hobart Fowler, was born in North Guilford Sept. 14, 1779. In early manhood he was for six years (1812-1818) keeper of the County House and Jail, New Haven, which was located where the city hall now stands. In 1818 he removed to Branford, where he engaged in agricultural pursuits during the rest of his days, dying Dec. 23, 1839. He transacted much public business, holding the office of justice of the peace, and various minor positions, and served as pension agent, securing pensions for Revolutionary soldiers. At one time he was deputy sheriff. His political allegiance was given to the Federalist party. Benjamin R. Fowler was twice married, first time, Nov. 28, 1805, to Rachel Fowler, daughter of Stephen and Temperance (Stevens) Fowler. To this union were born two children that grew to maturity, George R. and Randolph. Mr. Fowler married (second) June 6, 1816, Peggy daughter of Mason and Hannah (Harrison) Hobart, of Branford, and two children, James H. and Henry H., came of this marriage. The mother of these was born Dec. 12, 1781, and died March 24, 1881.

(VIII) James H. Fowler, retired carriage maker, was born in Branford, Conn., May 3, 1820 and attended the common schools and academy of the place. At the age of sixteen he commenced an apprenticeship at the carriage making business in New Haven, serving five years, and then for ten years conducted a wagon shop of his own in Branford. Later, also for ten years, he ran a sloop between Branford and Long Island, since when he has been living retired. He has been twice married, first time, in 1842, to Sophia, daughter of William and Esther Church, of Middletown, Conn., and four children were born to them: Louisa (Mrs. N. Newell), William H., Herbert and Charles. He married (second) Emily, daughter of George W. and Marie (Cook) Johnson, of Wallingford, Conn. His children are all now deceased except William H., who lives in Denver Colo. William H. married Ellen Smith, and has five children: Mary S., Clara, William H., Jr., Fred and Charles. James H. Fowler and his wife are members of the Baptist Church. In politics he is a Republican.

(VIII) Henry H. Fowler, the subject proper of this memoir, received a liberal education at the common schools of Branford. He made farming his life work up to 1895, when he retired from that occupation. An active Republican politically, he has held various municipal offices, all of which he has filled, or is filling, with his well-known ability and judgment. He has in his possession a family heirloom in the shape of a writing desk or escritoire, which is said to have been made some time in the fourteenth century, and which has been handed down from generation to generation.

Mason Hobart, maternal grandfather of our subject, was born Nov. 1, 1752, at Stonington, Conn., a son of Abijah (of New London) and Mary (Bartholomew) Hobart, the former of whom was born in Stonington, Conn., in 1703, and died in 1791; the latter, who was born in Branford, died at the age of eighty-eight years. Mason Hobart, a Revolutionary pensioner, was a merchant, shipbuilder and owner of vessels, and possessed a large tract of land in Branford. He served in the Revolution, and received a pension for his services. On Nov. 28, 1776, he married Hannah Harrison, who was born in 1757, a daughter of Isaac and Rebecca Harrison, of Branford. Mason Hobart died March 27, 1841, and his wife passed away in 1794.

ALFRED HUGHES. New Haven county has been the home and scene of labor of many men who have not only led lives that should serve as an example to those who come after them, but who have also been of important service to their town and county through various avenues of usefulness. Among them may be named Alfred Hughes, who passed away Oct. 18, 1899, after a life of industry, and rich in those rare possessions which only a high character can give.

Mr. Hughes was born Nov. 14, 1822, in what is now the town of New Haven, but at that time formed a part of East Haven. The Hughes family of East Haven is descended from Henry Freeman Hughes, whose posterity have been substantial men and women and useful citizens in this and other communities in which their lots have been cast. He had a brother, Bodwell Hughes, who, however, has no descendants in East Haven; his only son died in 1815. Our subject was in the fourth generation from Henry Freeman Hughes, who was born in 1723 in Wales, and was impressed as a seaman in the English navy. On account of his dislike for the service he deserted his ship, and about 1748 appeared in East Haven, Conn., under the name of Henry Freeman; he was reported to have come from Newburyport. His name was Henry Hughes, but to avoid detection and capture he assumed that of Freeman in remembrance of his escape, and Freeman has ever since been a common name in the family. On July 19, 1749, Mr. Hughes married Lydia Tuttle, who was born in 1722, daughter of Noah and Rachel (Hoadley) Tuttle, and a member of one of the oldest and most influential families in Connecticut. Mr. Tuttle was a large land owner in East Haven, and Mr. Hughes by his marriage came into possession of considerable property. He was industrious and prosperous, but finally was overcome with misfortune. He was a farmer and ferryman, and though his house was not a tavern he always afforded entertainment for those who desired accommodations. He also kept staple groceries and provisions on hand for his own use and for those who did not want to go to New Haven for them. He was a strict Episcopalian, very firm and settled in his belief. At that time, just preceding and during the Revolution, when the ground which separated Puritan and Churchman was contested inch by inch, it took courage and decision to be a Churchman. His wife was a Puritan, but she united with his church, and their children were all brought up in that faith. Mr. Hughes died in 1791, and Mrs. Hughes in 1794.

(II) Daniel Hughes, son of Henry Freeman, the settler, was born June 17, 1759, in East Haven, and married (first) Lucy Grammis, born in 1761, in New Haven. She died June 25, 1791, and on Dec. 25, 1795, he married (second) Sarah Atwater, who was born April 26, 1756, in Cheshire, Conn., and died Jan. 14, 1817. On April 5, 1818, he married (third), in East Haven, Rachel Shailor, born in Bristol, Conn., in 1773, who died March 20, 1844. Daniel Hughes received a practical education in the common schools, and took up farming, in which he met with marked success; occasionally he engaged in other lines of business. He was a remarkable man in many respects, and a type of the primitive New Englander. Throughout life he continued to reside in the neighborhood of his birth. He possessed good common sense and was a strong practical reasoner, and clung to his belief with firmness. He was an acute observer and a man of quick perception. Simple in his tastes and habits, he was very active in both body and mind, and until his death kept up the habit of rising between three and four o'clock in the morning and retiring at sunset. He never would ride and never would have a horse on his farm, believing in walking. He never used spectacles, and read without them with perfect ease. Mr. Hughes was dignified in his personal appearance. Always kind, generous and hospitable, his home was open to all, and those who came were welcome. Blessed with abundance, he cheerfully gave to the deserving who had less than he, and he was widely known and beloved. In politics he was a Whig, but had not much taste for party affairs. He early united with the Episcopal Church, and was strongly attached to its teachings, being a very prominent member to the day of his death, Nov. 8, 1842.

(III) Aaron Atwater Hughes, son of Daniel, born Jan. 20, 1707, in East Haven, was a lifelong resident of that town, where he died July 14, 1833. On Jan. 20, 1822, he married Lydia Caroline Tuttle, who was born Oct. 25, 1798, and died May 30, 1892. She was a daughter of Josiah Tuttle, and granddaughter of Joseph Tuttle, who was a volunteer minute-man in the Revolutionary war, and did coast patrol duty at old Black Rock Fort, now Fort Hale. He and his son Josiah, who joined the Revolutionary army at the age of sixteen, were both taken prisoners by the English at that place, July 5, 1779. The British officers took possession of his house, which they destroyed with considerable other property. Aaron A. Hughes inherited the prominent family traits of character to a marked degree, having been warm hearted and open handed, genial, kind and hospitable to all. He was gifted with a high order of ability. Mrs. Hughes was a woman educated in advance of her time, and her mental store was constantly enriched by continual reading, with keen perception, clear and strong reasoning. Hers were those sterling qualities of mind and heart which enabled her to guide her children in all the essentials of usefulness and integrity, a duty which devolved upon her by her early widowhood. She always kept abreast of the times, in all current events, and retained her faculties in a remarkable degree to the last. Her birthday Scriptural proverb was truly fulfilled: "Strength and honor are her clothing. She shall rejoice in time to come." Alfred Hughes, our subject, was the older in a family of two children, the other being Sarah Eva.

Miss Sarah E. Hughes was educated in the schools of New Haven and the Academy at Westfield, Mass., and in 1853 commenced teaching in a school which she attended. Later she taught in private boarding schools for a few years, and then became connected with the public schools of New Haven, being principal's assistant at the Wooster school two years, and principal of the Dixwell avenue school for nineteen consecutive years, making twenty-one years of continued service in New Haven. Miss Hughes was a very popular and thorough educator, and met with most excellent success. She is now living with our subject's widow on the old home farm. One writer speaks thus of her life and work: "Miss Hughes has not only maintained herself by a successful prosecution of a business to which she has devoted her energies, but has surrounded herself with the comforts of a home which it is her delight also to make, in her generous and hospitable way, the home of those whom she loves and respects. Her childhood was characterized by the early development of a bright and inquiring intellect which instinctively thirsted for knowledge. This literary turn of mind, together with an ardent love of study, ultimately led her to resolve to qualify herself for the honorable position of a teacher. With this view, after spending several years in the best schools in New Haven, she entered the academy at Westfield, Mass., under the charge of William C. Goldwaite, where she spent two years in the study of the higher branches of education. Upon her graduation from this institution, she commenced her career as a teacher in the same, and remained as pupil and teacher three years and a half. At the expiration of this period a flattering offer was extended to her to become a teacher in a boarding school in Louisa Court House, Va., which after mature consideration she concluded to accept. This position she continued to fill, with the entire acceptance of her employers, from September, 1854, until July, 1857, when, upon the failure of her health, she was compelled to resign and return to her friends in Connecticut. Here, in consequence of ill health, she remained until 1860, when an offer was made her of another position in a boarding school in Saratoga, N. Y., where she remained for one year, when, finding that the climate did not agree with her, she was obliged to relinquish the engagement and return to her home. After an interval of rest, she next accepted the position of principal's assistant in the Wooster public school in New Haven, which she retained for the period of two years. Her next field of labor was the Dixwell school—another of the public schools of New Haven—which she entered in 1864. After the rational and energetic discharge of the duties of the subordinate positions in this institution she was ultimately promoted to become the principal, which position she held, to her credit, as well as to the entire satisfaction of the board of education, until 1883.

"In 1851 the attention of Miss Hughes was drawn to the subject of religion, and at a subsequent period, in the rite of confirmation, she made a profession of her faith in Christ, and was admitted to the Holy Communion in St. James Church, Fair Haven, of which parish she has continued to be a faithful and exemplary member ever since. In manners and address Miss Hughes is courteous and agreeable; and as a teacher she has been eminently successful."

At the age of seventeen years Alfred Hughes began life for himself, taking charge of the farm where his widow now resides—the homestead of his father, located about a half mile east of Tomlinson's bridge. To its cultivation and improvement he devoted his time and energies throughout life, and was numbered among the best and most successful agriculturists of the community, at the time of his death owning quite a large and valuable estate. He was a man of decided preferences and strong prejudices, but full of forbearance and considerate charity for those who held opposite views. Although tenacious of his opinions and firm in his purposes, he was a "man of strict integrity, sound judgment and good business capacity. He was a man of tender sympathies, which were easily aroused, and led him to the performance of kindly acts to neighbors, friends and strangers. Plain and unpretending in his habits and address, he commended himself to all as the friend of the unfortunate and helpless, but was the enemy of idleness and vagrancy. A faithful advocate and liberal patron of all practical improvements for the moral and intellectual benefit of the community, he enjoyed in a high degree the confidence of his neighbors and townsmen, among whom his sound judgment and faithful execution of all projects which commended themselves to his favor is proverbial. An industrious, honest and substantial man, as a son, brother, husband and father, he was faithful, considerate, affectionate, indulgent and tender."

Alfred Hughes was married in New Haven, Nov. 4, 1861, to Miss Mary Ann Rowe, who was born in East Haven, Dec. 20, 1839, a daughter of Robert and Abbie Rowe; her father was a native of Falmouth, England; her mother was born in Norwich, Conn., a descendant of a Story who was one of the very early settlers of Massachusetts, and soon after moved to Norwich, Conn. To Mr. and Mrs. Hughes were born three children, namely: Caroline Tuttle graduated from the New Haven high school and the State Normal, and for a number of years taught in the New Haven public schools; she is at present teaching in a young ladies' seminary at Springfield, Mass. Normand Atwater married Clara L. Pierce, and has one child, Marion. Alfred Burdette is a graduate of Yale College, class of 1895, and Yale Law School, 1897, and is a practicing lawyer of New Haven.

Socially Mr. Hughes was a member of Harmony Lodge, I. O. O. F., of New Haven, for forty-three years. He always took an active and commendable interest in public affairs; served as selectman of East Haven in 1857 and other years; and in various other offices. After his section of the town was set aside and added to New Haven he was elected selectman of the latter, in 1888. He was public-spirited and enterprising, and was also very charitable, the poor and the needy always finding in him a friend. During the winter he would load his wagon with vegetables and produce of all kinds, which he would distribute among the poor of his vicinity. Throughout his career of continued and far-reaching usefulness his duties were performed with the greatest care, and during a long life his personal honor and integrity were without blemish.

SHELTON TRUMAN HITCHCOCK. The Hitchcock family of which the gentleman, whose name here appears, is an honored member, is an old settled one in New Milford.

In the spring of 1635, when twenty-five years old, Mathias Hitchcock came from England to Boston on the bark "Susan and Ellen," and from there removed to Watertown, Conn., where in July, 1636, he secured twenty-three acres of land in the Great dividends, which he afterward sold to D. Patrick. In 1639 his name appears on the records of New Haven as one of the signers of the fundamental agreement made on the fourth day of the fourth month (then called June), 1639. According to "Hitchcock Genealogy" he had a brother, Edward, who also was one of the five purchasers of "South End Neck" (now East Haven), where they dwelt after 1651. He (Mathias) died in the New Haven Colony Nov. 14, 1660, his widow in 1676. Their children were: Eliakim married March 4, 1666, Sarah Merrick, daughter of Thomas Merrick; Nathaniel married Jan. 18, 1670, Elizabeth Morse, a daughter of John; John; a sketch of whom follows; Elizabeth, born June 4, 1651, in New Haven, married January, 1672, Anthony Howel, of Branford, Conn. (for her second husband she wedded John Nash).

John Hitchcock, son of Mathias, was born in the New Haven Colony, there grew to manhood, and removed thence to what is now Wallingford, Conn., where he was one of the original proprietors, and owned a large tract of land. He died there July 6, 1716. He was twice married, first on Jan. 18, 1670, to Abigail Merriman, who was born April 18, 1654, a daughter of Capt. Nathaniel Merriman; for his second wife he married April 18, 1677, a daughter of Samuel Cook. John Hitchcock's children were as follows: A daughter, born Oct. 1, 1672, died young; Abigail, born April 10, 1694, married Jacob Johnson; Mary, born Dec. 10, 1676, married Benjamin Beach; Nathaniel, born April 18, 1679, married Sarah Jennings; Margery, born Sept. 9, 1681, married Joseph Munson; Elizabeth, born April 18, 1684, supposed to have married Daniel Lines; John, born Oct. 18, 1685, married Marlow Munson; Mathias, born May 26, 1688, married Thankful Andrews; Hannah, Jan. 9, 1690, is supposed to have married John Lines; Damaris, born July 11, 1693, married Sylvanus Clark; Benjamin, a sketch of whom follows.

Capt. Benjamin Hitchcock, son of John, was born March 24, 1696, in Wallingford. When in manhood he moved to what is now Cheshire, Conn., and there owned land and farmed; he also owned land in the parish of Southington. He died in Cheshire, Feb. 12, 1767. By his wife, Elizabeth Ives, who was born Sept. 6, 1700, and died Aug. 8, 1762, a daughter of Joseph and Esther Ives, he had children as follows: Bela, born Oct. 27, 1719, married Sarah Atwater; Hannah, born Sept. 12, 1721, married May 26, 1740, Elnathan Andrews; Benjamin, a sketch of whom follows; Elizabeth, born Feb. 23, 1726; Abigail, born May 10, 1728, married Dec. 9, 1747, Daniel Bradley, of New Haven; Samuel, born April, 1730; Nathaniel, born June 30, 1732, died March 12, 1734; Enos, baptized April, 1734; Joseph, born July 12, 1737, died Nov. 1, 1760; Nathaniel, born Sept. 20, 1739, married May 4, 1763, Lydia Dutton, and died May 30, 1770; David, born June 29, 1742, married Hannah Doolittle; Damaris, born Sept. 3, 1745, died Nov. 25, 1756.

Benjamin Hitchcock, son of Capt. Benjamin, was born in the town of Wallingford Feb. 23, 1724, passed the most of his life in Cheshire, and died there Oct. 4, 1792. He married Feb. 27, 1745, Rhoda Cook, born Oct. 22, 1724, in Cheshire, and died May 16, 1808. Their children: Thaddeus, born Dec. 13, 1745, died Aug. 8, 1752; Hannah, born March 9, 1748, married a Mr. Ward; Benjamin, sketch of whom follows; Rhoda, born Nov. 24, 1752, married April 5, 1755, Obed Doolittle; Lucy, born March 24, 1755; Damaris, born Dec. 5, 1756; Thaddeus, born March 10, 1760, married Abigail Arnold.

Benjamin Hitchcock, a son of Benjamin above, was born Nov. 24, 1752, in Cheshire, then a part of Wallingford, whence he removed to Waterbury, where he became a land owner and farmer, a highly respected and prominent citizen. He died there in 1809. By his wife, Ennice (Hotchkiss), who was born Jan. 8, 1755, and died in 1799, a daughter of Daniel Hotchkiss, he had children as follows: Anna, born April 19, 1775; Saly, born in 1778, married J. G. Tyrrell; Reuben married Leda Plant, daughter of James Plant; Jared married Dec. 1, 1808, Lillie Bunnell; Manly, born Dec. 23, 1783; Samuel, born March 3, 1787, married Amelia Osborn; George, born June 27, 1780, lived in Watertown, N. Y.; Benjamin Truman, a sketch of whom follows; and Eunice, born Feb. 19, 1793, married Heman Tyrrell.

Benjamin Truman Hitchcock, son of Benjamin above, and the father of the subject proper of this sketch, was born Aug. 9, 1791, at Waterbury, Conn. He was a farmer and land owner at East Farms, town of Waterbury, died there, and was buried in East Farms cemetery; a member of the Congregational Church, he was a devout Christian, a good and worthy man, in politics he was an old-line Whig.

On Feb. 22, 1815, Benjamin T. Hitchcock married Julia Frisbie, who was born in Waterbury, a daughter of Daniel Frisbie, sketch of whom appears elsewhere, and the names and dates of the birth of their children are as follows: Eliza Finette, July 18, 1816, married J. C. Beach, and is still living; Edward M.; Shelton Truman, sketch of whom follows; Juliette, born July 4, 1828, died in 1831; Elmore William, May 13, 1833; and George Benjamin, a sketch of whom follows.

Sheldon Truman Hitchcock, son of Benjamin Truman, and the subject of this memoir, was born Dec. 13, 1822, at the homestead in town of Waterbury, and received his education in part at the district schools, and in part at a private school. Until he was thirty-three years old he worked for his father, and then bought the Maple Lake farm, on the old turnpike near Judge Hill, town of Wolcott, known first as the Lewis farms; it is a tract of 400 acres, and the house was formerly a hotel owned by Reuben Lewis. Here Mr. Hitchcock has lived for forty-five years, during which time he has made vast improvements and has added 300 acres to the original place, so that the farm lies in the towns of Cheshire and Wolcott. Besides general farming, including dairying and stock raising, he deals largely in wood, and he is noted for honesty and integrity in all his transactions.

On Oct. 26, 1855, Shelton T. Hitchcock was married to Cornelia C. Andrews, who was born in the town of Wolcott, Aug. 22, 1833, a daughter of Chester and Olive L. (Bassett) Andrews, and granddaughter of Luther and Martha (Thomas) Andrews. She is a lady of refinement, a good mother, wife and helpmeet in every sense of the word. Children were born to this honored couple as follows: Jennie J., born March 25, 1857, married William R. Steele, of Waterbury; Nettie C., born Aug. 22, 1860, married George J. Alexander; Eva, born Sept. 1, 1862, died Sept. 8, 1862; and Elbert, born Nov. 7, 1867, died Jan. 1, 1888. The last named was a young man of excellent repute, highly educated and clever, and his taking away so early in life was a sad bereavement to his parents and friends. Mrs. Martha (Thomas) Andrews, grandmother of Mrs. Hitchcock, was a sister of Seth Thomas, the noted clock manufacturer of Thomaston, Conn., while the wife of Seth Thomas was Laura Andrews, a sister of Luther Andrews, and daughter of William Andrews, a captain in the Revolutionary army. Albert A. Andrews, brother of Mrs. Hitchcock, served three years in the Civil war, and now lives in Brooklyn, New York.

In politics Mr. Hitchcock is a staunch Democrat, and has filled several positions of honor and trust in the gift of his party, but at all times represented the people, regardless of politics. He was elected to the State Legislature six terms, namely: 1859, 1871, 1872, 1874, 1878 and 1879, and sat in the old house at Hartford the last time, and at the first session in the new house, also the last session in the old New Haven house. For twelve years he served as a member of the board of selectmen for the town of Wolcott, during several of which years he was its chairman; was a member of the board of relief; has served as assessor; and was elected grand juror and justice of the peace, but declined these offices. He is very domestic in his life and habits, and temperate in all things. In business matters he is conceded to be the most successful farmer in Wolcott, and by hard work, judicious management and sound judgment he has earned a comfortable competence.

George Benjamin Hitchcock, brother of Shelton T., was born Sept. 16, 1838, on the home farm, in the town of Waterbury, and all his life has engaged in agricultural pursuits on the Meriden road. He married Helen Alexander, daughter of John Alexander, and sister to George J. Alexander, of Waterbury, and three children have come to their union: Irving, born in 1869, died in 1881; Warren B., born in 1872, was married in 1892 to Helen S. Frost, adopted daughter of Mrs. Charles Frost; and Fannie, born in 1882, is living at home. Mrs. Hitchcock is a member of the Congregational Church at Waterbury.

HENRY B. GRISWOLD, retired, who during his active years was one of the best known business men of Guilford, was born in that town Nov. 25, 1824, son of Joel and Polly (Bartlett) Griswold.

Mr. Griswold commenced his studies in the home district, and completed his studies with two terms in a select school. As he was the eldest son, he had to help his father in the work, and remained at home until he reached his majority, when he married and removed to Clinton, where he was a farmer for some years. Returning to Guilford he became employed on a tract of land near the old homestead, on which he made extensive improvements and also took up the lumbering business. At first he cut and furnished ties and timber for the New York, New Haven & Hartford Shore Line. He cut and shipped timber for the construction of the largest sailing vessel built in America, and in all furnished timber for more than thirty ships. Later he branched out more extensively, organizing the Griswold Lumber Co., with headquarters at Chicago, of which he was president and his son H. W. secretary and treasurer. The company did a business of more than $100,000 a year, furnishing more than ten million feet of white oak timber for the Michigan Central railroad; considerable for the Grand Trunk railroad; and also supplying the World's Fair with a large quantity of timber. They thoroughly investigated the lumber resources of the West, from Winnipeg to Texas, and had altogether twenty-five mills in different parts of the country, their mill products going to all parts of the world. Our subject furnished piles for a number of docks in New York, and timber for many of the elevators of that city. During the time he was in business he dealt with many railroad men in the United States and Canada, and has met many of the leading men of the country. He refused an offer of the Canadian Pacific railroad to look after their lumber interests, at a salary of $3,000 a year. He spent one winter and part of several summers in the Adirondacks, in the interest of Thomas C. Durant, the builder of the Union Pacific railroad, locating an old survey for a railroad from Saratoga to Sacket's Harbor, on Lake Ontario, stocking his mills, and looking over timber lands, of which he had six hundred thousand acres. During the Civil war Mr. Griswold furnished the government with timber for war vessels then building, as well as for docks. Mr. Griswold is a reader of character, and a keen judge of men and events. He worked hard at whatever he had in hand, and commanded the respect of his fellow men in every walk of life.

Mr. Griswold married, Nov. 25, 1845, Miss Polly E. Wilcox, who was born Oct. 21, 1825, daughter of Selah Wilcox, of Clinton. She died Aug. 19, 1866, and was buried in the Alderhood cemetery. To this union came two children: (1) Emelyn, born Sept. 26, 1847, is the widow of James A. Dudley, who died in 1897, and was buried in Alderhood cemetery. They had five children—Lillian E., born Oct. 21, 1871; Harry C., born July 31, 1878, now a student at Harvard; Ernest Griswold, born in August, 1880, now at Leland Stanford University; Alice Griswold, born June 22, 1883; and Laura Eliot, born Feb. 14, 1886. (2) Henry Wilcox, born Feb. 21, 1850, received a good business education, and was engaged in the lumber business with his father as partner. He is now the general manager of three cold storage warehouses—located respectively in Jersey City, Springfield, Mass., and Albany—of the Eastern States Refrigerating Co., whose home office is in New York City. He is a thorough business man and has been very successful. He married Mettie M. Morrison, who had more than a local reputation in music and art, and to this union came one child, Ruth, who is now in the Guilford high school. Mrs. Henry Wilcox Griswold died April 18, 1896, in Chicago.

Henry B. Griswold married for his second wife, Oct. 17, 1867, Eugenia Maria Scranton, who was born in New Haven, daughter of Hamilton W.

and Ann Maria (Rowe) Scranton. Abraham Scranton, her grandfather, was one of the best-known citizens of Madison, Conn. To this union came one child, Herbert H., who was born Jan. 2, 1876, and died May 6, 1882.

Mr. Griswold is a Republican, with strong independent proclivities. He was selectman for two terms, and has been justice of the peace and grand juror of the United States Court. In religion he has allied himself with the First Congregational Church. He is a good, whole-souled man, and is well liked in his community.

RANSOM BENJAMIN HALL (deceased) was through life one of the best known and most highly respected citizens of Wolcott, New Haven county, where he was born July 12, 1852. His father, Heman Wilsey Hall, was a native of the same town, born in 1824, a son of Deacon Orrin Hall, and a brother of Mrs. Harriet J. Gladding, who still occupies the old homestead, and in whose sketch more extended mention is made of the family. The mother of our subject, who bore the maiden name of Betsey Ann Sperry, was descended from one of the oldest families of the State, being a daughter of Joseph and Abigail Sperry, of Wolcott.

Ransom B. Hall acquired his literary education in the district schools of Wolcott, and upon the home farm gained an excellent knowledge of agricultural pursuits. He lived with his grandparents until reaching manhood, his parents having died when he was young. On starting out in life for himself he chose the occupation to which he had been reared, and in his labors met with most excellent success, becoming one of the largest land owners and most extensive farmers of his section of the town. He was also interested in stock raising.

In 1874, in Woodtick, town of Wolcott, Mr. Hall was married to Miss Anna E. Root, a native of that town, a daughter of Timothy and Mary (Goodwin) Root, and a granddaughter of Mark Root and Virgil C. Goodwin. She is a lady of education and refinement, and successfully engaged in teaching in the district schools for several years. Since her husband's death she has moved to Mill Plain, in the town of Waterbury, where she has erected an elegant residence. She is an active member of Mad River Grange, of which she is now secretary. In religious belief she is an Episcopalian. Her children are Nettie J., George R., Daisy M. and Robert R., all at home. The older son is now engaged as a traveling salesman for the Cycle Supply Co., of Hartford.

Mr. Hall died on his farm in Wolcott Oct. 3, 1889, and was laid to rest in Woodtick cemetery. He was a Republican in politics, and always took quite an active and prominent part in public affairs, being specially interested in educational matters. He was serving as tax collector of his town at the time of his death. Religiously he was a leading member of the Congregational Church, and always took a deep interest in its work. In his home he was an indulgent father, a kind and devoted husband, and his genuine worth and manly virtues were widely recognized. He never acted except from honest motives, and in all his varied relations, in business affairs and social life, he maintained a character and standing that impressed all with his sincere and manly purpose to do by others as he would have others do by him.

EDWIN JESSE CLINTON, a member of the carriage wood-work firm of E. J. Clinton & Son, Clintonville, Conn., was born in the town of Wallingford, Sept. 4, 1836, and belongs to a family long located in this part of the world.

The Clintons are said to be of Scotch descent, and are supposed to have come to Massachusetts to Connecticut in the latter part of the seventeenth century. Laurence Clinton, the first of the name in New Haven, settled in what is now North Haven in 1702. He became a member of Center Church, New Haven, in 1704, and was one of six men who united in forming an Episcopal Society in North Haven in 1723. By occupation he was a mason. Records show that he was born in 1679 and died 1757-8, and that he was married about the year 1700 to Mary — (probably Brockett), and became the father of seven daughters, viz.: Elizabeth, who married James Bishop Jan. 20, 1725-6; Abigail; Mary, who married Isaac Griggs, Oct. 21, 1725; Lydia; Sarah; Anne; and Phebe. He married (second) Elizabeth Barnes (?), and had sons, Laurence and John.

(II) John Clinton, second son of Laurence, was born April 9, 1740, and on June 7, 1764, married Ann Thorpe. A daughter, Anna, was born April 9, 1766. This family all died in the fall of 1777, probably of smallpox—Anna, the daughter, on Sept. 29; Ann, the mother, on Oct. 10, and John soon after in North Haven.

(III) Laurence Clinton, eldest son of Laurence, was born Jan. 1, 1737, and died Sept. 9, 1804. He was appointed captain of the Ninth Company, or Train Band, Connecticut Militia, in 1781, and he served in the Revolutionary war. He bought the "Clinton Homestead" in the town of Wallingford in 1776. It has been the home of three generations of the Clintons, and is now the residence of Elizur Z. Clinton. Capt. Laurence Clinton was a wealthy farmer and extensive land holder. His wife, to whom he was married Nov. 15, 1759, was Elizabeth Todd, born Sept. 29, 1736, died April 30, 1803. She was a daughter of Gershom Todd and Hannah (Mansfield) Todd, granddaughter of Michael Todd, great-granddaughter of Christopher Todd, one of the first New Haven Colonists. Their children were Esther, Jesse, David (born Aug. 27, 1765, died April 21, 1783), Eunetia and Hannah. He married (second) widow Lucretia De Witt, who afterward married Nathaniel Johnson, and died in 1844.

(III) Esther Clinton, oldest child of Capt. Laurence Clinton, was born Aug. 5, 1760, and married Solomon Jacobs, who was born July 1, 1759, and died Nov. 7, 1799. The children born of this were as follows: David, born Jan. 6, 1781; Clinton, Aug. 13, 1782; Solomon, Sept. 9, 1787; Hannah, April 6, 1789, and died Dec. 30, 1794; Linus, Sept. 1, 1791; Anson, Sept. 27, 1793; Silas, March 22, 1796; and Esther, May 2, 1800.

(III) Eunetia Clinton, born Dec. 13, 1768, fourth child of Capt. Laurence Clinton, married Thomas Beach and removed to Vermont. She had three children—twin daughters, and a son, Laurence.

(III) Hannah Clinton, fifth child of Capt. Laurence Clinton, was born in 1772, and died Jan. 15, 1861. She married Joel Pierpont, and became the mother of two children: Louis, who married Rosette Jacobs, and had no children; and Lewey, born April 5, 1795, and died March 10, 1887, aged ninety-two. Lewey Pierpont married John Todd, who was born Feb. 4, 1791, a son of Gideon, and grandson of Christopher Todd. Gideon Todd was the father of Caleb Todd, from whom was descended the wife of Abraham Lincoln. John Todd died April 9, 1861, the father of three children: George Clinton Todd, born Dec. 1, 1816, died Oct. 31, 1825; Laurence Pierpont Todd, born July 7, 1822, married (first) Marie Antoinette Baldwin (born in 1836), and (second) Mary Wiley (no children by either marriage); and George Henry Todd, born Jan. 24, 1828, married May 11, 1858, Lydia C. Chapman, who was born Oct. 4, 1842, and they reside on the Gideon Todd homestead in North Haven, the ancestral home of Mrs. Lincoln.

(III) Jesse Eton Clinton, second child of Capt. Laurence Clinton, and the only son who lived to mature years, was born Aug. 9, 1762, and died Dec. 12, 1836. He married Patience Todd (born June 9, 1768, died Aug. 23, 1845), a daughter of Enos and Sarah (Blakeslee) Todd, and granddaughter of Gershom and Hannah (Mansfield) Todd. When a young man, Jesse Clinton taught school, and was afterward a successful farmer. He was the first of the family to live in the town of Wallingford. This couple had ten children, namely: Eunetia, David, Lyman, Sally, Hannah, Elizabeth, Bemon, Cynthia, Aurelia and Jesse.

(IV) Eunetia Clinton, eldest child of Jesse Eton Clinton, was born June 25, 1788, and married Eli Sackett, by whom she had two children, Eunetia, who died Sept. 24, 1882; and Milo. Eunetia (Clinton) Sackett died Nov. 21, 1824.

(IV) David Clinton, second child of Jesse Eton Clinton, was born June 20, 1790, and died Dec. 30, 1879. He married Lucy L. Smith, daughter of Jude Smith, and she died Aug. 20, 1883, aged eighty-eight years. They had six children: Salina, Lyman, Lavinia L., Eunetia O., Celia C. and Delia M. David Clinton founded the Clintonville Agricultural works prior to 1830. It was for a long time the most successful business concern in North Haven, and he was at one time considered the wealthiest man in the town. Corn shellers, horse rakes, and other agricultural machines were coming into use, and on these he made many improvements. Clinton's implements became renowned, and were found wherever farming was carried on. In 1850 he associated with him, his son, Lyman, under the firm name of D. Clinton & Son, and thus the business was carried on successfully until 1875.

(V) Salina Clinton, daughter of David Clinton, married Benjamin Johnson, and had four children, as follows: (1) Henrietta, who was twice married. By her first husband, John Bartholomew, she had a son, John. On Sept. 21, 1869, she married Henry Plumley, and by this union became the mother of three children—William, who married and has two children; Lucy, who married Charles Barber, and has one child; and Benjamin, who died at the age of seventeen. (2) Julia married Elias Potter, and resides in Massachusetts. Her children are, Dolly, Nellie, William, Florence, Charles and Ernest. (3) Lucy died unmarried. (4) William went West.

(V) Lyman Clinton, second child of David Clinton, was born March 21, 1817, and died Jan. 30, 1888. He was married Nov. 24, 1841, to Lavinia Blakeslee, who was born May 7, 1822, and died May 10, 1892. Their children are: Margaret Lavinia, Julia Josephine, David Laurence, Lyman Frederick, Anson Blakeslee and Delia Eunetia. Lyman Clinton engaged in the manufacture of agricultural implements with his father.

(VI) Margaret Lavinia Clinton, daughter of Lyman Clinton, was born March 10, 1843, and on Oct. 25, 1866, married George Spencer Vibbert, who was born May 10, 1843, a son of Nelson and Lucy A. (Hosmer) Vibbert. He is engaged in the card printing business. The children born of this union are: (1) Edith, born Feb. 8, 1868, married Nov. 17, 1896, William Smith, son of Alonzo and Sarah (Neal) Smith, and has one child, Winford Spencer, born Aug. 13, 1898. (2) Freddie, born May 1, 1870, died young. (3) Grace Lavinia, born June 28, 1872, married Sept. 13, 1893, Clarence B. Sherwood, son of Charles Sherwood, and has two children, Roland and Stirling. (4) Stephen Spencer, born Sept. 2, 1876, married Nov. 18, 1897, Louise Smith, born April 28, 1874, daughter of Hubbard and Emily (Barker) Smith, of Guilford, and has two children, Esther Emily, born in June, 1899; and a son born in June, 1901.

(VI) Julia Josephine Clinton, daughter of Lyman Clinton, was born June 14, 1844, and married Oct. 10, 1867, Edward S. Miner, son of Darius Miner, of Torrington, Conn. They had children as follows: Stiles, who died young; Nellie, who married John Bader; a daughter deceased; Anson; and Stiles (2).

(VI) David Laurence Clinton, son of Lyman Clinton, was born June 11, 1849, and married Sept. 14, 1869, to Fannie M. Vibbert, born July 8, 1850, daughter of Nelson and Lucy A. (Hosmer) Vibbert. This union was blessed with a daughter, Gertrude, born Jan. 5, 1879, who married May 16, 1900, Edwin B. Stevens, born April 30, 1870 (a son of Hiram and Marietta (Richards) Stevens, formerly of Danbury (Conn.), and they have a daughter, Helen Clinton, born April 16, 1901. Mr. Clinton is serving a second term as postmaster of Clintonville, and he has also served as deputy sheriff.

(VI) Lyman Frederick Clinton, son of Lyman, was born Aug. 18, 1854, and married March 31, 1876, to Ida A. Marks, born April 6, 1854, daughter of George B. and Julia A. (Eaton) Marks. Three children have been born of this marriage: (1) Blanche L., born Oct. 23, 1876, married May 16, 1900, William W. Stevens, born July 8, 1867, son of Hiram and Marietta (Richards) Stevens. (V) Elizur Zerah Clinton, son of Jesse Clinton, Jr., was born Sept. 18, 1847, and married Nov. 10, 1869, Julia A. Bishop (daughter of Erus and Charlotte (Thorpe) Bishop) born May 1, 1850, died April 10, 1873. On Dec. 3, 1873, Elizur Z. Clinton married for his second wife, Ella J. Palmer, who was born June 25, 1849, a daughter of Timothy and Sybill (Barnes) Palmer. The children born of this union are as follows: Robert J., born Feb. 6, 1875, married April 21, 1898, Hilda Matilda Olsen, and has two children, Charlotte Ella and Ruth; Bessie, born March 28, 1878; Lovell E., born June 5, 1883; Dora P., born March 17, 1889; Jennie F., born April 16, 1891. Mr. Clinton resides with his family on the old Clinton homestead, and is successfully engaged in farming.

(V) Edwin Jesse Clinton, son of Jesse Clinton, Jr., and fifth in the family in the order of birth, was born Sept. 4, 1836, and married April 11, 1859, to Cornelia Tuttle, who was born Aug. 14, 1842, a daughter of Amos and Harriet (Bassett) Tuttle, and died March 24, 1885. Two children were born of this union: Andrew D., born Sept. 7, 1862, married May 21, 1885, Lucy A. Bishop, born July 10, 1861, a daughter of Erus and Charlotte (Thorpe) Bishop and has a son Charles, born March 15, 1901; and Ida L., born Aug. 30, 1871, married Heinrich Vollhardt, born in Frankfurt, Germany, July 21, 1870, and has had five children—Frieda A. (born Sept. 9, 1895), Philip H. (born Aug. 24, 1896), Edwin Clinton (born Dec. 13, 1897), Cornelia (born Dec. 31, 1899, died in February, 1901), and Alfred (born July 24, 1901). For his second wife, Edwin Jesse Clinton married Jan. 20, 1886, Eliza J. Arthur, who was born in Kingston, Jamaica, W. I., Dec. 18, 1853, a daughter of Joseph Arthur (a native of Cornwall, England) and his wife Elizabeth (Haling) Arthur (daughter of William and Abigail (Hall) Haling), of Chatham, Conn. One child, Joseph Arthur, born June 12, 1888, has blessed this union.

Edwin Jesse Clinton was reared on the old Clinton homestead, and received his education in the district schools. For four years after leaving the school room, he was employed in the Clintonville Agricultural Works, and then became foreman for J. F. Barnes, of North Haven. During these eight years he had carefully studied business methods, and had thoroughly acquired that practical training for the business world, that cannot be obtained by years of study in the class room. He then entered the business world for himself, building a mill and factory near the home in Clintonville, and here for thirty-five years he has been engaged in the manufacture of carriage wood work. For a part of this time he had as his partner, his brother Isaac B., and lately his son, Andrew D., has been associated with him. He built a fine dwelling house and has made many improvements upon his home place, making it one of the ideal homes in this vicinity. Mr. Clinton has a fine reputation as an honorable business man, and counts his friends as an army in the village and surrounding country. For many years he has kept a diary, and his notes of passing events are sometimes very valuable for reference. Socially Mr. Clinton belongs to the O. U. A. M., and both he and his wife are members of the Grange. Mrs. Clinton is a lady of cultured literary tastes, and has made a specialty of the study of genealogy, spending much time in its investigation.

CALEB T. MERWIN, for many years a prominent agriculturist of the town of Milford, was a representative of one of the oldest and best known families of that locality. The first of the name to settle in this section was Miles Merwin, and the line of descent is traced as follows: Miles (2), Miles (3), Miles (4), and Anson, our subject's father, all natives of Milford.

Miles Merwin (4) married Miss Abigail Beach, of Milford, and settled on the present homestead in the southern part of the town on Long Island Sound. They had eight children: Mary, who married Rev. Mr. Atwater, of Branford; Anna, who married Richard Hepburn, of Milford; Daniel, a farmer in the town of Orange; Samuel, a clergyman, who preached many years in New Haven, Conn., and later in Wilton, Conn., where he died; Anson, our subject's father; Nathan, a farmer in Oxford, Conn., and later a hotel-keeper in Milford, where he died some years ago; Benedict, who was a farmer in Milford; and Miles (5), formerly a butcher in Milford.

Anson Merwin, the father of our subject, was born in Milford March 24, 1787, and followed farming at the old homestead throughout his life. He died July 7, 1867. His wife, Calena (Tomlinson) who died March 4, 1866, was a native of Milford, and a daughter of Caleb Tomlinson, a seafaring man. Of their five children the eldest, Anson W., engaged in the carriage business in Louisville, Ky., where he died April 20, 1854; Caleb T. is mentioned more fully below; Samuel M. was a coal dealer in Louisville and died in 1808; Louisa is the widow of Andrew Lincoln, of Massachusetts, who engaged in the furniture business in Louisville, but afterward became a farmer in Hancock county, Ill. (his remains are buried in Milford): Mary E. died Dec. 14, 1877, unmarried.

Caleb T. Merwin was born Jan. 11, 1823, at Pond Point, and grew to manhood upon the farm, receiving his education in a district school. He taught school for about eight seasons in Milford and Orange townships, afterward giving his whole attention to agricultural pursuits, making a specialty of raising garden seeds. His farm contained about 125 acres, and is situated on a high elevation overlooking Long Island Sound.

On April 20, 1852, Mr. Merwin married Miss Maria A. Wheeler, daughter of Ezra Wheeler, a well-known farmer in Bridgeport. Seven children blessed this union: Mary L., who died Sept. 3, 1856, at the age of three years; Ida M., who died July 12, 1889; Mary C.; Jane W.; Walter L.; Laura H.; and Sherman T. In 1839 Mr. Merwin united with the First Congregational Church of Milford, and for many years was one of the leading members, holding most of the offices, including that of deacon for fifteen years. The family are also identified with that church. In politics Mr. Merwin was first a Whig and later a Republican, and in 1860 and 1861 he represented his town in the State Legislature. He passed away Dec. 23, 1899.

HARRY WOODING (deceased), a representative farmer and highly esteemed citizen of Cheshire, was born in Woodbridge, Nov. 12, 1829, and was a great-grandson of John Wooding, a native of New Haven, who, about 1750, removed from North Haven to Woodbridge, and was the first of the family to locate in the latter town.

Elijah Wooding, son of John, was born in Woodbridge. He was twice married, his first wife being Thirza Hotchkiss, of Cheshire, by whom he had two sons, Levi and Stephen. For his second wife he married Emma Bradley, and to them were born four children, namely: Eunice, Olive, Thirza and Uriah.

Stephen Wooding, son of Elijah, and father of our subject, was born, reared and educated in Woodbridge, now Bethany, and throughout his active business life engaged in farming in that section of the county. He married Miss Deborah Bradley, also a native of Woodbridge, who died in Bethany in 1832, and he died in Woodbridge, in 1859. They had four children: Henry, who was born in 1818; Milo, who went to California; Mrs. Eliza Tuttle, who died in Naugatuck, Conn.; and Harry.

Reared in Bethany, Harry Wooding obtained his education in the common schools of that town, and later learned the machinist's trade, at which he worked in different places in Connecticut and Massachusetts. Coming to Cheshire in 1857, he purchased a farm, and in connection with its operation continued to work at his trade for some years.

Mr. Wooding was married in Cheshire, in 1865, to Miss Irene J. Watson, a native of Torrington, Conn., and a daughter of George and Jane (Belden) Watson. He father died in Roseville, Ill., and her mother, a daughter of Jeremiah and Love (Dean) Belden, of Canaan (now Falls Village), Conn., died in Norfolk, Conn. To our subject and wife were born two children: Ida, widow of Benjamin Chatfield has two children, Gladys W., and Lorin, and lives in New Haven; and Waldo, a machinist residing in Cheshire. Religiously, Mr. Wooding was a member of the Episcopal Church, of which his wife is also a communicant. Politically he was a staunch supporter of the Democratic party. In all the relations of life he was found true to every trust reposed in him, and he commanded the respect and confidence of those with whom he came in contact. Brave and patient under the sufferings of his last illness, he was ever considerate of those about him, and when the end came, Nov. 9, 1900, a dearly beloved father and husband entered into rest, leaving behind him a vacant chair to be filled only in that last Grand Reunion.

ALFRED BARNETT. Among the worthy men whose histories add interest to this volume, none stand higher in public esteem than this well-known resident of Ansonia, who is passing in retirement the evening of a long and useful life. He was born Aug. 22, 1823, in Birmingham, England, a son of Joseph and Catherine (Withington) Barnett. Joseph Barnett, who was born in London, England, became a shoemaker by trade and for many years conducted a store in London, amassing a handsome competence. He then retired and spent the remainder of his life in Birmingham, where he died at the advanced age of eighty years. Catherine (Withington) Barnett was born in Shiffnal, Shropshire, England, and lived to be eighty years old. Joseph Barnett and his wife had a family of four children, two of whom are still living: David, a resident of Kansas; and Alfred, our subject. Both parents were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and were highly esteemed in the community.

Alfred Barnett passed the earlier years of his life in Birmingham, England, and at the age of fourteen began to learn the trade of fine wire drawing, which required an apprenticeship of seven years. He continued in this business as a journeyman, and at the age of twenty-five removed to New York, where however he remained only a short time. In 1849 he went to Greenwich, Conn., but soon afterward removed to Birmingham, now Derby, and entered the employ of Wallace & Sons, where he remained until 1851. During that year he visited England, and on returning he resumed his work for Wallace & Sons in their new mill in Ansonia. In 1861 a desire to try the life of a farmer tempted him to Wisconsin, where he remained four years, but he then returned to his former position with Wallace & Sons. Two years later, in 1867, he was given the position of superintendent, or contractor, for the fine wire department, being the overseer of a number of men. He continued in this work for many years, and only left it in 1887 to go into complete retirement from business. His present dwelling house was built in 1874. During his long residence in the city it has grown from a farming community of only a few houses, to a city of 13,000 inhabitants.

In 1851 Mr. Barnett married his first wife, Mary A. Robinson, of Birmingham, England, daughter of John Robinson, who died in 1865, in the West. His second wife, Mary Selby, was born in Ireland, a daughter of William Selby, a farmer, and died at the age of sixty years. Both were members of the Episcopal Church of which Mr. Barnett is a regular attendant. By his first marriage he had three children: Mary married Henry Miner (deceased) and had two children—Hattie (who married and has one child) and Edward; John; Alfred T. (deceased) married and had two children—Mabel and Ethel. There were two children by the second marriage, viz.: Maria, who married M. P. Fillingham, a draughtsman, and has one child, Alfred Barnett; Melvina, who married P. K. Leng, a merchant in New York, and has had two children, Alfred Steeles and Mary. Mr. Barnett is a Republican in politics, has been a Burgess of the borough for three years, and has served a number of times on the jury.

SMITH S. CLARK (deceased) passed his last years in the enjoyment of a rest which he truly earned and richly deserved by reason of his industrious efforts of former years. Accomplishment and progress ever imply labor, energy and diligence, and it was those qualities that enabled our subject to rise from the ranks of the many and to stand among the successful few.

A native of New Haven county, Mr. Clark was born in the town of Milford (now Orange) Feb. 14, 1822, a son of Celah and Hannah Stone (Smith) Clark, whose sketch is given in connection with that of Horatio N. Clark, elsewhere. During his childhood our subject removed with his parents to Prospect, where he obtained his education in the district schools. He remained under the parental roof until he reached manhood, and then learned the painter's trade, which he continued to follow to some extent for a number of years, in Cheshire and in other places. Later in life he turned his attention to farming in Prospect, near the old homestead, where at the time of his death he owned a valuable farm of 200 acres, upon which he had made many improvements. He carried on general farming and stock raising, also engaging in the wood business, and during the spring and fall continued to work at his trade. He was noted for his industrious and thrifty habits, and prospered in his undertakings, becoming one of the substantial citizens of the community.

In Prospect, Mr. Clark married Miss Abigail Williams, a native of Cheshire, and a daughter of Albert Williams. She died leaving no children, and was buried in Prospect cemetery. In 1859 he was again married, his second union being with Miss Sarah E. Thomas, a native of Woodbridge, daughter of Noyes H. and Emma (Baldwin) Thomas, and granddaughter of Abner Baldwin. To this union were born two children: Welleford Selden, a painter of Straitsville, Conn., who married Alta Dickerman, and has four children, Percy, Florence, Leon and Hazel; and Adelbert Smith, who operates the home farm.

Mr. Clark was a member of the Congregational Church, to which his widow belongs. He ever took an active and prominent part in church work, was a member of the society committee for a quarter of a century, and was also clerk and treasurer of the church. All the family have been well-known and highly respected throughout the community in which they live. Politically Mr. Clark was identified with the Republican party, served as tax collector, and was selectman of his town for twelve years. He was always enterprising in promoting agricultural interests, and was a member of the Grange, as are his widow and son, Adelbert. Mr. Clark's upright and honorable life won for him the confidence and respect of all with whom he came in contact, and he well deserved the high regard in which he was uniformly held.

JOHN VAIL, a well-known and highly-esteemed citizen of Waterbury, residing on Washington avenue, was born in Riverhead, Long Island, Aug. 4, 1832, son of Capt. Jasper Vail, also a native of Long Island, and owner and master of a coasting vessel engaged in local trade. The father was a Whig in politics, and was liberal in his religious views. He married Sophrona Edwards, and they continued to make their home throughout life on Long Island. Their children were Halsie, now deceased; Griffin; Charles, who was a resident of New London, Conn., was engaged in the coasting trade, and was drowned during the seventies, his vessel having capsized; Peter; Francis; John; George; David; Andrew; Fanny; and Mehitabel.

Our subject obtained his education in the district schools of Long Island. At the age of eight years he commenced working for his board and clothes, and was thus employed until he was sixteen years of age. He then accepted a position as cabin boy on a coasting vessel, continuing thus for two years, and on leaving the water, in 1850, came to Connecticut. After spending two years in Bristol and adjoining towns, he took up his residence in Waterbury, where he has since made his home. He was successfully engaged in house painting until 1888, and also carried on farming to some extent, having for half a century owned and operated a farm on Town Plot, Washington avenue. Since his retirement from the painting business he has devoted much of his time to dairying, and in that undertaking has met with good success.

In 1855 Mr. Vail was united in marriage with Miss Mary Adams, who was born in Watertown, Litchfield Co., Conn., a daughter of Seymour Adams. They have become the parents of four children, namely: Ella Rossette, now the wife of Charles Dikeman, of Torrington, Conn.; Jessie Rosalyn, wife of Dwight Robinson; Charles, who married Susie Wilson; and George, who married Miss Ada Hunter.

Mr. Vail was a member of the school committee of Town Plot during seven of its most progressive years. He was one of the first in Waterbury to join the Republican party, voted for Fremont in 1856, and has since been one of its stalwart supporters, but has never been a politician in the sense of office seeking. He has always been found true to every trust reposed in him, and receives and merits the confidence and respect of his fellow citizens.

ISAAC BASSETT CLINTON, one of the best-known citizens and successful general farmers and dairymen of the town of Wallingford, was born July 2, 1834, on the old homestead, near where he now resides.

Jesse Clinton, the grandfather of our subject, was a large land owner near Clintonville, where he spent his life, and added to his income very considerably by cattle raising. His son, Jesse, the father of our subject, was born on the old homestead, and was the youngest of the family. His early days were spent in school, and he became interested in farming, which he continued all his life. During his management of the farm, consisting of 150 acres, he made many improvements, and became well known as a raiser of fine stock. He married, in North Haven, Rosanna Bassett, a daughter of Isaac Bassett, and six children were born of this union: Merritt, George, John, Isaac, Edwin and Elizur. Mr. Clinton's connection with the Congregational Church of North Haven began in his youth, and he lived an honest and upright life.

During his early youth our subject was a pupil in the district school, and later attended the North Haven Academy. He remained at home until he was eighteen, at which time he entered the factory at Clintonville, and later, with his brother, formed the partnership of Clinton Bros. in the manufacturing of carriage woodwork, prosecuting this successfully for twenty-five years, at which time Mr. Clinton's health failed and he gave it up. A life on the farm seemed to promise a return to good health, and he then went into the dairy and fruit growing business on a tract of sixty acres of the original homestead farm. That his hopes were realized his present excellent health attests, the only medicine he needed being fresh air, sunshine and contact with Nature. Mr. Clinton has proved that the Biblical assertion that man shall eat his bread in the sweat of his face is sometimes the greatest of blessings.

On May 12, 1858, Mr. Clinton was married, in Wallingford, to Grace Ann Allen, who was born in that town. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Clinton: Evelyn B., born May 7, 1859, is a dairyman and peach grower; he was married Feb. 14, 1888, to Florence A. Redfield, who was born July 10, 1863, and they have one child, Leroy W., born Nov. 25, 1889. Friend is a manufacturer of witch hazel at Higganum, Conn.; he married Helen G. Clark, of that place. Elbert married Clara G. Sanford, of Hamden, where they reside. Both Mr. Clinton and wife are members of the North Haven Grange, where their social qualities are much appreciated; they are connected with the North Haven Episcopal Church.

Mrs. Clinton is descended from an old and prominent family. Roger Allen came to New England in 1638. The parents of Mrs. Clinton were Hiram and Nancy (Button) Allen, the former born in 1806, and the latter in 1805; she died in 1885. Children as follows came to Mr. and Mrs. Allen: Franklin, born in 1832; Frances Augusta, born in 1836; Hiram; Grace Ann, born July 18, 1839; and Elenora Melvina, born in 1842. The maternal grandfather of Mrs. Clinton, Newberry Button, was a native of North Haven; he was a fifer during the Revolutionary war, and was at Fort Griswold. Later he became a seafaring man. He married a daughter of James Pierpont, of North Haven.

WILLIAM H. PERKINS, an enterprising and progressive gentleman farmer of Bucks Hill, has spent his entire life in Waterbury, where he was born Nov. 3, 1848. He is a worthy descendant of an old and highly respected New York family.

William Perkins, his father, was born in Butter-nuts, now Gilbertsville, Otsego Co., N. Y., a son of Benonia Perkins. When nine months old he was brought by his parents to Bethany, New Haven Co., Conn., where his father engaged in farming and died. William Perkins was educated in the schools of Bethany, and was fifteen years of age on coming to Waterbury, which town was then in its infancy. Here and in Prospect he learned the carpenter's and joiner's trade, and in time became the best-known contractor and builder in the Naugatuck Valley. When he was twenty-one years of age he formed a partnership with Archibald and Elisha Rice. He erected several of the public buildings in Waterbury, including the "Scovill House," the First Congregational church, and the Scovill factory. His work was done with great dispatch, and he put up nine houses in ten days in Waterbury. For several years he also engaged in the manufacture of sash and blinds at his factory at City Mills. He was a large land owner, having property at Lake Wood, now known as Perkins avenue, and also at Waterville. He was quite prominent in politics, and was a recognized leader of the Democratic party in Waterbury, taking a deep interest in all public matters. He served thirteen years as selectman, to which office he was nominated and elected by both the Democratic and Republican parties, and in the discharge of his duties gave eminent satisfaction to all concerned. He was first selectman five years. He was public spirited and progressive, and gave his support to all measures calculated to advance the educational, moral or material welfare of his town and county. He was a man of independent thought, and had the courage of his convictions, doing ever what he deemed best for the general good. Mr. Perkins died at his home on North Main street, Waterbury, in 1875, and was laid to rest in Riverside cemetery. He attended the Episcopal Church, and was a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. For his first wife Mr. Perkins married Mary Tuttle, who was born on North Main street, a daughter of John and Elizabeth (Judd) Tuttle, and his second wife was Almira Jerome, of Waterbury; she is buried in Riverside cemetery. He had four children: (1) Elizabeth, who was educated at the Waterbury Academy and Miss Draper's boarding-school, is now the widow of John H. Smith, a son of Hon. Nathan Smith, a Congressman from New Haven, and makes her home in Waterbury. She is a member of the Daughters of the American Revolution. She had two children—Mary Elizabeth, who died in infancy; and William Easton, a merchant of Waterbury. (2) William H. is our subject. The other two children died in infancy.

During his boyhood and youth William H. Perkins was given excellent educational advantages, attending the public and select schools of Waterbury; the Episcopal Academy at Cheshire; and the New Haven Military Institute, under Gen. Russell. In early life he learned the carpenter's trade with D. H. Meloy, a well-known architect and builder of Waterbury, with much success, and followed that occupation for several years. In 1887 he removed to what is now known as Perkins avenue, on Bucks Hill, and turned his attention to the operation of the Holt farm, upon which he has made extensive improvements, including the erection of a fine residence, beautifully located, and supplied with all modern conveniences. He has built an artificial lake which is well stocked with fine fish, and on which he has a pleasure boat. He keeps about twenty head of cattle, to supply the family wants. Fancy dogs and game chickens are bred here with much success, and Mr. Perkins' Great Dane "Gover" is one of the best dogs in New England. At the present time Mr. Perkins is erecting, regardless of expense, extensive chicken barns, completely furnished with numerous incubators and all the latest appliances, with the intention of supplying Waterbury with chickens. This business is managed by his son Harry, who has familiarized himself with the culture of chickens, and the enterprise is expected to prove a big success.

As a hunter and fisherman Mr. Perkins has few equals in Connecticut. All his life he has been a sportsman, and in his younger days was a noted athlete. He was one of the originators of the Monitor Base Ball Club, which was organized in the Gothic Hall building, Waterbury, and of which he was catcher. Later he held the same position in the Waterbury Base Ball Club, and it was largely due to his remarkable ability that each club held the State championship during his association therewith. His active participation in the great National game is a thing of the past, but his interest in it is undiminished, and he is held as an authority on the game by many of the noted players of to-day.

Mr. Perkins was married, in Waterbury, to Miss Ella L. Grilley, a native of that town, and a daughter of Albert Grilley. They have three children: Alice M., now the wife of William R. Johnson, of Wolcott; Harry W.; and Mary E., who is attending a boarding-school in Lyme, Connecticut.

Religiously Mr. Perkins is a member of St. John's Episcopal Church of Waterbury; fraternally he belongs to Mad River Grange. He casts his ballot for the men and measures of the Democratic party, but has never cared for the honor or emoluments of political office, preferring to devote his entire time and attention to his business interests. He is a thorough and systematic farmer, and carries forward to successful completion whatever he undertakes. He is widely and favorably known, and stands deservedly high in the esteem of his fellow citizens.

HENRY WARD CHITTENDEN (deceased) was a worthy member of an honored old Connecticut family, one of the best in the State.

William Chittenden, the first of the name in Connecticut, was a native of England, and was one of a company of seventy-five—gathered chiefly from the Counties of Kent, Surrey and Sussex, in the South of England—who determined to leave the mother country and seek a new home in the wilderness of the Western World. This company sailed from England for America about May 20, 1639, in a ship of 350 tons burden, and arrived in New Haven July 10, after a passage of seven weeks. William Chittenden came from the parish of Cranbrook, in Kent, some thirty-five miles southeast of London. He was prominent among the original settlers of Guilford, and as a man of ability and influence held many important offices in the Plantation during his active life. He was one of the six persons selected to purchase the land in Guilford from the native owners, and was also one of four—Robert Kitchell, William Chittenden, John Bishop and William Leete—who received, according to the record, full power and authority to act, order and dispatch all matters respecting the public weal and civil government of the Plantation "until a church is gathered among us." It is supposed that he was a soldier in the English army, and served in the Netherlands in the Thirty Years war, as he was the principal military man of the Plantation, and bore the title of lieutenant. He was a magistrate of the Plantation, and deputy to the General Court until his death, in February, 1660, at the age of sixty-seven years. William Chittenden was married in England to Joanna Sheaffe, daughter of Dr. Edmund and Joanna Sheaffe, of Cranbrook, Kent. Her sister Dorothy was the wife of Rev. Henry Whitfield, who was the first minister of the Guilford Colony, and one of its leading men. Ten children were born to William and Joanna Chittenden, viz.: Thomas, who married Joanna Jordan; Elizabeth, who married Thomas Wright; Nathaniel; John, mentioned below; Mary, who married John Leete; Hannah, born Nov. 15, 1649, who died in 1650; Joseph and Hannah (twins), born April 14, 1652, the former of whom died June 22, 1652, the latter Sept. 13, 1674; Deborah, born Dec. 12, 1653, who died Sept. 16, 1674; and Joanna. The mother of these remarried, her second husband being Abraham Cruttenden, of Guilford, who had also been previously married. She died in Guilford Aug. 16, 1668. Her mother, widow of Dr. Edmund Sheaffe, came with the family from England, and died in Guilford Aug. 1, 1659.

Sergt. John Chittenden, son of William, was married Dec. 12, 1665, to Hannah Fletcher, of Milford. He died in Guilford in April, 1716, aged seventy-three years. Children: John, born Oct. 17, 1666, married Sarah Clay; Elizabeth, born Jan. 26, 1670, married Thomas Cruttenden; Joseph is referred to below; Gideon, born Sept. 23, 1678, died in 1679; Abel, born May 14, 1681, married Deborah Scranton; Lydia, born March 30, 1684, married William Hall.

Joseph Chittenden, born March 26, 1672, in Guilford, spent his entire life there, and died Sept. 11, 1727. On Aug. 26, 1692, he married Mary Kimberly, born in April, 1671, daughter of Nathaniel and Mary Kimberly, of New Haven. She died Jan. 14, 1742. Children: Deborah, born Jan. 28, 1693, married John Spinning; Patience, born Jan. 19, 1696, married John Hubbard; Gideon, sketch of whom follows; Daniel, born March 15, 1700, married Abigail Downes; Joseph, born Jan. 25, 1702, married Patience Stone; Thankful, born Jan. 27, 1704, married Timothy Bartlett.

Gideon Chittenden, son of Joseph, born Feb. 3, 1698, in Guilford, passed the greater part of his life in his native town, and in 1762 removed to New Milford, Conn., where he and his wife both ended their days. On March 21, 1721, he married Abigail Bishop, born April 19, 1701, daughter of Samuel and Abigail (Wetmore) Bishop, of Guilford, and they had children: Abraham, sketch of whom follows; Millicent, born April 5, 1725, married John Hopson; Abigail, born March 17, 1727, married Samuel Stone; Prudence, born Oct. 14, 1729, married Nathaniel Johnson; Giles, born Dec. 8, 1731, married Temperance Bishop; Miles, born June 15, 1734, died Dec. 15, 1755; Ruth, born May 15, 1737, married Ebenezer Evarts; Stephen, born May 9, 1739, married Lucy Bardsley; Catherine, born May 9, 1747, married Ebenezer Gaylord.

Abraham Chittenden, born Feb. 16, 1723, passed his entire life in Guilford, engaged in agricultural pursuits, and died there July 19, 1810. On March 15, 1749, he married Mercy Burgis, who was born Sept. 26, 1719, daughter of Thomas and Mercy (Wright) Burgis, and died Feb. 24, 1801. Children; Abraham, sketch of whom follows; Eliab, born March 26, 1754, died Aug. 29, 1756; Mercy, born April 17, 1756, married Nathaniel Parmelee; Sarah, born May 13, 1760, died Aug. 30, 1769.

Abraham Chittenden, born Aug. 10, 1751, lived to the ripe age of over ninety-six years, passing away March 4, 1848, and his remains rest in Guilford cemetery. He became deacon of the First Church in Guilford in 1799. On Nov. 17, 1774, he married Diana Ward, born Sept. 24, 1752, daughter of Gen. Andrew and Diana (Hubbard) Ward, of Guilford. She died April 24, 1784, and on May 25, 1785, he married Lydia Baldwin, daughter of Israel Baldwin, of North Branford, and widow of Simcon Rose. She passed away Oct. 17, 1819. By his first marriage Abraham Chittenden had three children: Sarah, born Oct. 13, 1775, married Dr. Jared Redfield; Betsey, born July 23, 1777, married Benjamin Baldwin; Abraham L., born Nov. 17, 1781, married Deborah Fowler. By the second marriage there were four: Diana, born April 13, 1786, married David Parmelee; John Baldwin, born Jan. 16, 1790, married Eliza Robinson; Henry Ward, sketch of whom follows; Lydia, twin of Henry W., married Samuel Robinson.

Henry Ward Chittenden, whose name introduces this sketch, was born Dec. 7, 1794. He received a good practical education, and in his younger years engaged in mercantile business in Guilford, later in life taking up farming, in which connection he also managed the Griffing farm, known as the "Stone House farm." His entire life was spent in Guilford, where he died Oct. 30, 1867, and his remains rest in Guilford cemetery. Being a man of social, genial temperament, and of unblemished integrity, Mr. Chittenden was a well-known and highly respected citizen, and quite popular. In political faith he was a Whig, and later a Republican, and he held various local offices, including that of town clerk. He held membership in the First Congregational Church, and was a good Christian man. On May 17, 1820, Mr. Chittenden was married, in Guilford, to Charlotte Griffing, born Jan. 28, 1800, daughter of Joel and Sarah (Fairchild) Griffing; she died May 5, 1822, and was buried in Guilford cemetery. On March 10, 1824, Mr. Chittenden married, for his second wife, in Guilford, Mary Griffing, born in Guilford Feb. 6, 1801, daughter of Hon. Nathaniel and Sarah (Brown) Griffing, and a cousin of his first wife; she died March 21, 1876, and is buried in Guilford cemetery. Mrs. Chittenden was a lady of means; and gave liberally to the poor and to the church, and was quite active in every good cause. She was a member of the First Church, to which she gave an excellent organ and a fund for the salary of the organist. To Henry W. and Mary (Griffing) Chittenden came one child, Sarah Brown, born June 18, 1835, who was married Sept. 14, 1859, to Edward H. Owen, of Stockbridge, Mass. He died May 28, 1864, and on March 20, 1867, she married Henry D. Cone, a paper manufacturer in Housatonic, Mass., who died Nov. 16, 1896. Mr. Chittenden adopted the daughter of his sister, Mrs. Parmelee, Lydia D., who is a lady of culture and refinement. She makes her home in Guilford, where she is well known and highly respected.

THE PARMELEE FAMILY, of which Miss Lydia D. Chittenden, the adopted daughter of Henry W. Chittenden, is a descendant, is one of the oldest families in Guilford. The first of that name in New Haven Colony was John Parmelee, who came from England and was one of the first settlers of New Haven, where he spent the balance of his life, dying there in November, 1659. He is buried there. He married Elizabeth Bradley, a widow, and three children were born to them: John, sketch of whom follows; Hannah, who married John Johnson; and Mary, who married Denis Carpenter, and died March 16, 1668.

John Parmelee spent his life in the New Haven Colony, and died in January, 1689. His first wife, Rebecca, died Sept. 29, 1651, and in 1652 he married Ann Plane, a widow, who died March 30, 1658. In 1659 he again married, his third wife being named Hannah. Children: Nathaniel, born in 1645, married Sarah French; John, born Nov. 25, 1659, married Mary Mason, and died Jan. 3, 1749; Isaac, sketch of whom follows; Hannah, born Nov. 5, 1667, married T. Hill; Stephen, born Dec. 6, 1669, married Elizabeth Baldwin, and died Jan. 3, 1749; Job, born July 31, 1673, married Betsey Edwards, and died Nov. 16, 1765; Caleb married Abigail Johnson; Priscilla, born May 8, 1678, died Dec. 10, 1692; Joel, born in 1679, married Abigail Andrews, and died in July, 1748.

Isaac Parmelee, born Nov. 21, 1665, made his home in Guilford, where he died Jan. 3, 1749. On Dec. 30, 1689, he married Elizabeth Hillard, born June 18, 1666, died June 3, 1746, and they had children: Ebenezer, born Nov. 22, 1690, died Sept. 27, 1777, married Ann Cruttenden; Abraham, born May 28, 1692, died Sept. 20, 1752, married Mary Bishop; Joseph, sketch of whom follows; Elizabeth, born Jan. 30, 1697, died March 14, 1780, married Nathaniel Baldwin; Sarah, born Aug. 11, 1699, died May 4, 1730, married Michael Hill; Isaac, born May 20, 1702, died July 13, 1752, married Elizabeth Evarts; Andrew, born June 20, 1704, died Aug. 1, 1795; Rachel, born Nov. 18, 1707, died

Nov. 9, 1793, married Samuel Evarts; Josiah, born in December, 1709, died Aug. 10, 1739, married Sarah Evarts.

Joseph Parmelee, born in Guilford Sept. 14, 1694, died April 21, 1751. On Sept. 19, 1716, he married Abigail Kimberly, born July 22, 1696, died Nov. 28, 1763. Children: Abigail, born Jan. 31, 1719, died Feb. 8, 1780, married Caleb Bishop; Joseph, sketch of whom follows; William, born in 1724, died March 13, 1799; Elizabeth, born Nov. 21, 1728, married Ebenezer Chittenden; Beulah, born Aug. 30, 1732, died Sept. 16, 1818, married Nathaniel Elliot; Samuel, born July 27, 1737, died June 2, 1807, married Sarah Bishop.

Joseph Parmelee, born Aug. 3, 1721, in Guilford, died July 3, 1804. On Nov. 30, 1742, he married Obedience Spencer, born Sept. 6, 1725, died June 9, 1750. On April 12, 1752, he married Abigail Cruttenden, born Aug. 20, 1727, died June 23, 1788. On Oct. 12, 1788, he married Mary Denning, died Oct. 2, 1795. Children: Obedience, born Aug. 13, 1743, married Jesse Evarts; Catherine, born Aug. 23, 1744; Luther, born Jan. 25, 1750, died Aug. 7, 1750; Joseph, born March 19, 1755, died Feb. 19, 1785; David, sketch of whom follows.

David Parmelee, born Sept. 6, 1759, died Aug. 26, 1814. On Oct. 17, 1781, he married Asentha Kirkham, who died Nov. 2, 1782, and on Oct. 2, 1783, he married Parnel Handy, who survived him, dying March 21, 1839; she married for her second husband Seth Cruttenden. Children: David, sketch of whom follows; Benjamin, born March 11, 1786, died in 1805; Parnel, born July 1, 1788, died in 816, married Sylvester Camp; Jonathan Handy, born July 1, 1790, died at sea in 1806; Clarissa, born Sept. 19, 1795, died Jan. 25, 1875, married George Hart.

David Parmelee, father of Miss Lydia D. Chittenden, born in Guilford Oct. 3, 1784, died Aug. 6, 1870. By occupation he was a blacksmith, and he spent all his life in his native town, where he was highly respected. Originally a Whig in politics, he eventually joined the Democratic party, and he held several local offices. He was a soldier in the war of 1812. On March 2, 1807, Mr. Parmelee married Arta Leete, who was born Aug. 27, 1787, daughter of Amos Leete, and died Oct. 19, 1816. On Dec. 13, 1818, he married Diana Chittenden, who was born April 13, 1786, daughter of Abraham and Lydia (Baldwin) Chittenden, and died Feb. 7, 1826. On April 11, 1827, Mr. Parmelee married for his third wife Clarissa B. Parmelee, born Feb. 15, 1795, died Nov. 8, 1831. There were three children by the first marriage: Benjamin, born Aug. 19, 1808, was drowned; Samuel, born Aug. 22, 1810, died May 15, 1877, married Catherine Rooke; David Kirkland, born Sept. 4, 1812, is still living in Guilford. Two children came to the second union: Henry Baldwin, born in June, 1821, died Oct. 3, 1822; Lydia Diana, born Oct. 3, 1824, is the adopted daughter of Henry Ward Chittenden. One child was born to the third union, Clarissa E., born in 1836, who married Horace Redford, of Meriden.

AUGUSTUS STREET, deceased. There is particular satisfaction in reverting to the life history of this honored gentleman, from the fact that he attained a position of distinction in his native town of East Haven, where he retained his residence until his death.

Mr. Street was born in East Haven May 30, 1819, on the place now occupied by the widow of his brother Dwight, and was a representative of one of the most distinguished and prominent families of New Haven county. He traced his ancestry back to Rev. Nicholas Street, of Bridgewater, England, who was born Jan. 29, 1603, and was educated at Oxford College, where he received the degree of B. A. He came to America some time between 1630 and 1638, and first located in Taunton, Mass., but later removed to New Haven and was assistant to Rev. John Davenport, pastor of the Center Church of that place, and one of the founders of the New Haven Colony.

Rev. Samuel Street, son of Nicholas, was one of the seven who graduated at Harvard College in 1664. He was afterward ordained pastor of the Congregational Church at Wallingford, in 1674, being its first pastor, and remained in charge there for forty-five years. He died at the ripe old age of eighty-two.

Lieut. Samuel Street, son of Rev. Samuel, was born July 27, 1667.

Rev. Nicholas Street, son of Lieut. Samuel, and grandfather of our subject, was born in Wallingford, New Haven county, Feb. 21, 1730, and died in October, 1806. He was graduated from Yale College in 1751, and in 1755 was ordained pastor of the East Haven Congregational Church, over which he presided for the long period of fifty-one years, honored and beloved by all who knew him. He was twice married, his first wife being Desire Thompson, his second Hannah Austin, who died at the age of sixty-one.

Elnathan Street, our subject's father, was born in East Haven Feb. 16, 1774, and died Nov. 13, 1849. He was a farmer by occupation, and a worthy member of the community, highly respected by all for his many sterling qualities and unassuming manner. He was a devout member of the Congregational Church, and a staunch Whig in politics. On Nov. 2, 1802, Mr. Street married Clarissa Morris, who was born July 6, 1783, and died March 2, 1861. Ten children were born to this union: Jane Caroline, Harriet, Lucy M., Mary A., Nicholas, Benjamin, Augustus, Thaddeus, Cornelia and Elnathan Dwight. Benjamin was a soldier in the 15th Conn. V. I. during the Civil war.

The subject of this sketch spent the first fourteen years of his life in his native town, and then went to New Haven, where he clerked in the dry-goods store of James D. Salter for two years. He then entered the employ of Stephen A. Street, in a similar capacity, and in 1835 accompanied this gentleman on his removal to New Orleans, La., clerking in his store there until the employer's death, in 1838. Returning North to New York, Mr. Street engaged in the dry-goods business until 1851, and then moved to Mount Carmel, Conn., where he was manager of the store of James Ives until 1855. He next went to New Haven, and was bookkeeper for Beecher & Winship until 1862, after which he engaged in mercantile business for himself at that place for two years.

On Sept. 11, 1850, Mr. Street was united in marriage with Miss Maria S. Elwell, of Brooklyn, N. Y., who was born Feb. 1, 1826, and died Dec. 31, 1898. They had five children, viz.: Augustus and Alexander, twins, died in infancy; Frank died at the age of ten months; Lucy Elwell died when two years of age; the only survivor being Lottie E. The last named is a graduate of the private school conducted by Miss Abbott, daughter of John S. C. Abbott, the historian, and has been a successful school teacher. She is now a member of the board of education and school visitor, having served in that position for several years past. Prior to her father's decease she was appointed assistant town clerk. Miss Street is a lady of considerable literary ability, and is the authoress of the book entitled "A Knot of Blue," and published by the Pilgrim Press, of Boston.

Shortly after his marriage Mr. Street returned to East Haven, where he ever afterward made his home, though he was engaged in business elsewhere. His political support was given to the men and measures of the Republican party. He served as town treasurer of East Haven for several years, and was town clerk from 1893 until his death, April 30, 1901, being elected without serious opposition from any party; the last time his name was on both party tickets. He was one of the oldest and most influential members of the East Haven Congregational Church, and was treasurer of that society. Mr. Street was ever found true to the trusts reposed in him by his fellow citizens, and merited and received their esteem and respect.

JOHN THOMAS SLINEY, one of the most prominent contractors on stone work, track work, teaming and trucking in Branford, where he has extensive livery stables, is a son of David and Elizabeth (Dickson) Sliney, natives of Ireland.

David Sliney and his wife came to this country about 1850, and located in Branford, where the father engaged in farming. After a time he entered the employ of the M. I. F. Company, and later in his life became a farmer, dying Nov. 11, 1897, at the age of seventy-one years. During the Civil war he served in the Union army as a member of Company G, 27th Conn. V. I., under Capt. Ely, and was taken prisoner at the battle of Gettysburg. After a brief incarceration in southern prison pens he was exchanged, and honorably discharged from the hospital at New Haven. Of the children born to David Sliney and wife, we have the following record: Catherine, who married Hugh McEnerney; Bessie, who married M. F. Kelly; Margaret, who is Mrs. M. F. O'Brien; David; John T.; Lucy, who married Thomas Gibbons; William R.; and Ella.

John Thomas Sliney was reared in Branford, where he was educated in the public schools, and at the age of seventeen went into the milk business, in which he was engaged for the next eleven years. Mr. Sliney began his present business in 1892, and the next year entered into a partnership with M. P. Rice, which continued two years. Since that time he has conducted his business without a partner, and is doing a large work, not only in Branford, but in New Haven and adjacent territory.

On Jan. 25, 1893, Mr. Sliney was married to Hannah Agnes, a daughter of Lawrence and Mary (Murphy) Buckley. To this union were born five children: Mary, Elizabeth, John, Lawrence and Leo. Mr. Sliney and his family are members of the St. Mary's Catholic Church, at Branford. In his politics he is a Democrat, and for two years he served as a member of the board of education, and for two terms as a selectman of the town.

JOHN HOOKER DUDLEY. The Dudley family, of which the subject of this sketch is a worthy member, originated in England, and became one of the earliest families in Connecticut.

(1) William Dudley, one of the original settlers of Guilford, and signer of the Plantation Covenant, was born at Richmond, County of Surrey, England. He was a member of Rev. Henry Whitfield's Church and parish at Ockley, in Surrey, where he married Aug. 24, 1636, Miss Jane Lutman. They came with Mr. Whitfield's company to America in 1639, and their eldest child, William, was born at sea during their voyage. On their arrival at Guilford they established their home on the east side of what is now Fair street, where Dr. R. B. West now lives. William Dudley's home-lot contained three and one-quarter acres and he had also considerable outlying land. He was a farmer, as appears by his will and inventory. He died March 16, 1683-84, and his wife on May 1, 1674. They had five children: (1) Deacon William, born at sea, June 8, 1639, died May, 1701, married Nov. 4, 1661, Mary Stow. He removed in 1670 to Saybrook, Conn. (2) Joseph, sketch of whom follows. (3) Ruth, born April 20, 1645, married June 20, 1664, John Whittlesey, of Saybrook. (4) Deborah, born Sept. 20, 1647, died October, 1681; married (first) June, 1671, Ebenezer Thompson, who died May, 1674. They had two children: Jabez, born Oct. 16, 1672; and John, born November, 1674. She married (second) Thomas Scranton, who died February, 1711; they had two children—Samuel, married Elizabeth Bishop; and

John T. Slirey

Hannah, married Joseph Evarts. (5) Another child, whose name is not known.

(II) Joseph Dudley, second son of William Dudley and Jane (Lutman), was born at Guilford April 24, 1643, and died there June 3, 1712. He married Oct. 6, 1670, Ann Robinson, daughter of Thomas Robinson and wife, Mary. He was a cooper by trade, also a farmer. He owned part of a sawmill which he bequeathed to his son Caleb. He lived, probably, on the homestead of his father on Fair street. His father mentions him in his will as follows: "I give and bequeathe to my son Joseph Dudley, all my housings and lands and rights of lands in Guilford, etc." In 1691 he was chosen by the town "for the making of coffins on all occasions of death." At the time of his death the inventory of land, distributed to his six sons as designated by his will, amounted to £751: 10s: 6d. Movables—£166: 15s: 6d. Joseph Dudley had nine children: (1) Joseph, born June 11, 1671, died Feb. 22, 1726; married July 27, 1704, Abigail Hubbard. (2) Benjamin (twin of Joseph), died Feb. 23, 1720; married Jan. 5, 1703, Tabitha Avered. (3) Caleb, sketch of whom follows. (4) Joshua, born Dec. 17, 1674, died Jan. 29, 1750; married Oct. 20, 1712, Sarah Perry, of Stratford. (5) Miles, born Dec. 17, 1676, died Aug. 10, 1753; married Jan. 23, 1706, Rachel Strong, daughter of Thomas Strong, of Northampton, Mass. She died Jan. 4, 1769, aged ninety-three. (6) William, born Oct. 18, 1684, died Feb. 28, 1761; married (first) Ruth Strong (who died Sept. 18, 1743), daughter of Thomas of Lyme; married (second) Rebecca Fisk, daughter of Joseph Elliott. (7) Anna, born 1687, died April 27, 1687. (8) Mary married Joseph Wright, of Colchester, Conn. (9) Mercy married Josiah Bartlett, of Northampton, Massachusetts.

(III) Caleb Dudley, the third son of Joseph Dudley and Ann (Robinson), was born in Guilford in June, 1673, and died March 20, 1730. He married June 23, 1700, Elizabeth Buck, of Wethersfield, born June 4, 1676 (died April 14, 1738), daughter of Emanuel Buck and Mary (Kirby), and granddaughter of John Kirby, one of the first settlers of Middletown, Conn. Caleb Dudley was a farmer, and the first one of the Dudley name who made his home on "Clapboard Hill," the neighborhood afterward called "Dudleytown." His father, in his will, gave him the portion of his real estate lying in that vicinity. Caleb Dudley built his house on what is now (1900) the home-lot of Joseph E. Dudley (the old house stood a little west of Joseph E. Dudley's present home). It was afterward successively the home of his son Caleb; his grandson Nathaniel; great-grandson John; and the birthplace of his great-grandchildren: Hooker, Elon, John, Horace, Dudley and Ruth (Dudley) Norton, the mother of Deacon J. W. Norton. The value of his estate, as inventoried after his death, was £2,108. Caleb Dudley had eight children: (1) Thomas, born April 23, 1701, died May 22, 1776; married June 11, 1733, Abigail Seward, of Durham. (2) Caleb, sketch of whom follows. (3) Ruth, born Dec. 28, 1704, died April 13, 1730; married March 9, 1732, Samuel Evarts (Daniel, Daniel, John). (4) Daniel, born April 3, 1707. He removed to Bethlehem, Conn., married Jan. 20, 1732, Joanna Rose, of Branford. (5) Josiah, born Aug. 30, 1709, died Oct. 20, 1755; married, 1738, Silence Dows. He lived at East Guilford. (6) Samuel, born Dec. 4, 1711, died Nov. 10, 1789; married May 3, 1738, Jane Talman, daughter of Dr. Ebenezer Talman and Ann (Morrison). Samuel Dudley had but one son, Samuel, born Nov. 27, 1747, died Dec. 17, 1819; married Hannah Evarts (Jonathan, Jonathan, James, James, John). Their only son, Deacon Asher Dudley, born April 2, 1770, died Oct. 27, 1862, was the father of Maria Dudley, born April 30, 1802, who married Oct. 13, 1819, Jonathan Parmelee. Samuel Dudley lived in (and probably built) the old house now occupied by his great-great-great-grandson, Charles E. Parmelee, west of the residence of Herbert E. Parmelee, in Clapboard Hill District. (7) Noah, born Aug. 15, 1716, removed to Roxbury, Conn.; married May 28, 1752, Submit Talman, daughter of Dr. Ebenezer (Dr. Peter, Peter) Talman. (8) David, born Nov. 27, 1718, died Feb. 17, 1807; married Mary Talman, daughter of Dr. Ebenezer Talman (Dr. Peter, Peter). They had one son who died young, and five daughters, one of whom, Anna, born April 13, 1752, married Timothy Field. They were the parents of Rev. David Dudley Field, D. D., born May 20, 1781.

(IV) Caleb Dudley, son of Caleb Dudley and Elizabeth (Buck), was born in Clapboard Hill district, Guilford, Nov. 20, 1702, and died Oct. 10, 1793. He married May 31, 1739, Hannah Stone, daughter of Nathaniel Stone and Hannah (Graves). He was a farmer, and lived upon the homestead of his father. Caleb Dudley had five children, all sons, the eldest of whom died in infancy. The four remaining sons settled near their parents at Clapboard Hill. (1) Caleb, born Feb. 24, 1740, died March, 1740. (2) Caleb, born July 24, 1741, died Sept. 14, 1802; married (first) Nov. 28, 1764, Hannah Evarts, daughter of Eleazer Evarts (Samuel, Judah, John). She died Sept. 6, 1765, aged twenty-one, leaving one child, Caleb (born Aug. 28, 1765, died June 30, 1815). He married (second) Jan. 18, 1769, Anna Munger, daughter of Ebenezer, by whom he had five children: Hannah, born Oct. 31, 1769, married Jan. 13, 1790, John Griswold, and died Feb. 17, 1828; Ruth, born July 19, 1777, married Peter Talman, and died June 30, 1849; Anna, born May 11, 1773, married Amos Bartlett, and died Aug. 20, 1866 (their daughter Ruth, born April 15, 1802, married Capt. George Bartlett); Abel, born Sept. 3, 1781, married Betsey Minor, and died March 11, 1821; Huldah, born Oct. 29, 1784, married Timothy Terry, of Woodbury, Conn. (3) Abraham was next in the family. (4) Nathaniel, born Oct. 3, 1745, died Feb. 21, 1826; married

March 12, 1777, Mary Hart, daughter of Thomas Hart and Concurrence (Bartlett). (5) Amos, born Nov. 3, 1747, married (first) Feb. 7, 1771, Mary Evarts, daughter of Eleazer Evarts (Samuel, Judah, John). She died Aug. 23, 1797, aged forty-seven; he married (second) July 15, 1799, Deborah (Johnson), widow of Elon Lee.

(V) Nathaniel Dudley, born Oct. 3, 1745, in Guilford, passed all his life there, dying Feb. 21, 1826. In Guilford, March 12, 1777, he married Mary Hart, born Aug. 17, 1751 (died Feb. 6, 1841), daughter of Thomas and Concurrence (Bartlett) Hart. Four children came to this union, viz.: (1) Nathaniel, born Nov. 15, 1777, died Sept. 7, 1795; (2) Lois, born July 15, 1779, died Sept. 7, 1863; (3) John, sketch of whom follows; (4) Eunice, born Feb. 20, 1784, married May 23, 1806, George Bushnell, of Saybrook, Connecticut.

(VI) John Dudley, son of (V) Nathaniel, and the grandfather of the subject of this sketch, was born Jan. 25, 1782, on the old homestead in Guilford, and died Jan. 19, 1816, his remains being interred in East cemetery. He was a member of the Congregational Church. He was a lifelong farmer and landowner. On Jan. 24, 1805, he married Sarah Lee, born Dec. 30, 1780, and died Dec. 27, 1849. Their children: (1) Hooker, sketch of whom follows; (2) Elon, born May 1, 1808, died April 8, 1883; (3) John, born Dec. 30, 1809, married Sarah Dudley; (4) Horace, born March 16, 1812, and died June 12, 1885, married Amanda Dudley; (5) Ruth, born June 4, 1814, married John Norton.

(VII) Hooker Dudley, son of (VI) John, and the father of the subject of this sketch, was born Oct. 1, 1806, was educated in the Clapboard Hill District school, and remained upon the old homestead until removing in 1831 to the farm now owned by his son John H. There during the rest of his days he engaged in farming and stock raising, dying Aug. 21, 1879, and his remains were interred in East cemetery. In religious faith he was a member of the Episcopal Church, and in politics he was a Democrat, but never aspired to political preferments. On Oct. 16, 1831, Hooker Dudley was married to Mary Evarts, born May 22, 1806, daughter of (V) Nathaniel Evarts, and died Feb. 20, 1895 (see Genealogy of the Evarts Family further on). Three children came of this union: (1) Elizabeth Mary, born July 10, 1833, died single April 26, 1874. (2) Andrew Jackson, born Aug. 15, 1835, living at No. 1157 North Chapel street, New Haven; and (3) John Hooker, a sketch of whom follows.

(VIII) John Hooker Dudley, son of (VII) Hooker, was born on the old family homestead April 5, 1837, and received a liberal education in the Clapboard Hill district school. Like his forefathers, he has made agricultural pursuits his life work, and since his father's death has operated the homestead of seventy-five acres of land. In politics he is independent, and in religious connection he is a member of the Episcopal Church. A well-read man, he takes much interest in the current events of the day, while, at the same time, he is something of an archaeologist and mineralogist, having in his possession an interesting collection of Indian relics, mineral ore and other curiosities. Mr. Dudley has not enlisted in the noble army of Benedicts.

EVARTS FAMILY. (I) John Evarts came from England and settled first at Concord, Mass., where he was made a freeman in March, 1638; was afterward at Windsor, Conn. He came to Guilford in 1651, and purchased John Mephram's allotment on July 29, 1651. His home-lot was situated next south of Henry Dude's, on the west side of what is now State street, near where the dwelling-house of Mrs. James Monroe now stands. The name of his first wife, the mother of his children, does not appear on "Guilford Records." He married (second) May 22, 1663, Elizabeth, widow of John Parmelee, Sr. (who died 1659). Before her marriage to John Parmelee she was widow Elizabeth Bradley, of New Haven. John Evarts died May 9, 1669. He had five children: Elizabeth, who married Peter Abbel; James, who was married to Lydia Goodrich, daughter of Richard and Dinah Goodrich, and died in 1684; Daniel, who married (first) Mary (surname unknown), and (second) Rebecca Dowd, daughter of Henry and Elizabeth Doudi (or Dowd), and died Dec. 5, 1692; John, born Feb. 29, 1640, who married Mary French, daughter of Thomas French; and Judah, a sketch of whom follows.

(II) Judah Evarts, the youngest son of (I) John Evarts, was born Oct. 27, 1642, and died in Guilford in 1696. He married Aug. 3, 1670, Mary Hayden, born in Windsor, Conn., June 6, 1648, daughter of William Hayden, of Windsor, who afterward removed to Killingworth. They had four children: (1) Mary, born Jan. 28, 1675, died October, 1678. (2) Samuel, born Oct. 4, 1678, died Jan. 24, 1740; married (first) March 1, 1711, Elizabeth Benton, who died June 30, 1734; she was a daughter of Andrew and Elizabeth (Rolf) Benton. He married (second) Dec. 28, 1736, Mary Stone, daughter of Joseph Stone and Mary (Scranton). (3) Mary, born May 16, 1682, died May 2, 1688. (4) Eleazer, born June 16, 1688, died young.

(III) Samuel Evarts, the eldest son of (II) Judah Evarts and Mary (Hayden), was born in Guilford, Conn., Oct. 4, 1678, and died there Jan. 24, 1740. He married (first) March 1, 1711, Elizabeth Benton, daughter of Andrew Benton and Elizabeth (Rolf). She died June 30, 1734. They had three children: (1) Elizabeth, born Dec. 25, 1711, died Dec. 16, 1734, unmarried. (2) Mary, born July 16, 1713, died Jan. 8, 1736, unmarried. (3) Eleazer, born June 26, 1716, died Dec. 28, 1804, married Jan. 29, 1740, Hannah Scranton (died Sept. 6, 1765), daughter of Samuel Scranton and Elizabeth (Bishop). Samuel Evarts married (second) Dec. 28, 1736, Mary Stone, daughter of Joseph Stone and Mary (Scranton). They had one child, (4) Samuel, sketch of whom follows.

(IV) Samuel Evarts, the only child of Samuel Evarts and his second wife, Mary (Stone), of Guilford, was born Nov. 27, 1737, and died Dec. 1, 1812. He lived in Nutplains District in the house now occupied by Alvan Eldredge, whose wife is his great-granddaughter. He married April 19, 1761, Sarah Nettleton, of Killingworth, and they had eight children: (1) Sarah, born May 8, 1762. (2) Samuel, born Feb. 20, 1764. (3) Josiah, born in 1767. (4) Nathaniel, sketch of whom follows. (5) Mary, born in 1771, died Dec. 16, 1829; married Oct. 31, 1790, Ambrose Benton, who died March 1, 1847. (6) Nathan, born in 1773. (6) Anna, born Oct. 7, 1814, died April 22, 1867 (removed to Kansas); married April 18, 1842, George Dibble, died April 12, 1867. (7) John Samuel, sketch of whom appears farther on.

(VI) Joel Evarts, a farmer of Nutplains district, Guilford, and the oldest son of (V) Nathaniel Evarts and Julia (Parmelee), was born June 25, 1804, and died Nov. 23, 1882. He lived in the house now owned by Asahel White. He married Oct. 22, 1834, Clarissa Dudley, born Dec. 23, 1804, died Dec. 10, 1873, daughter of Deacon Abraham Dudley and Mary (Bassett). They had two children: (1) Eliza Jane, born April 5, 1840, married April 5, 1865, Samuel Milton Bullard. (2) Emily Clarissa, born Sept. 8, 1845, married Nov. 16, 1864, Sylvester Russell Snow.

(VI) Lewis Evarts, a farmer of Nutplains district, Guilford, was the second son of (V) Nathaniel Evarts and Julia (Parmelee). He was born Aug. 15, 1811, and died Nov. 29, 1892. He lived in the house of his grandfather, Samuel Evarts, now the home of his son-in-law, Alvan Eldredge. He married May 11, 1840, Mary Minerva Parker, born April 18, 1824, died March 15, 1887, and they had eight children: (1) Catherine Mary, born Sept. 17, 1841, died March 2, 1890; married (first) Nov. 1, 1865, Charles Samuel Bartlett, born Nov. 11, 1832, died Dec. 22, 1872, son of Capt. George and Ruth Bartlett; married (second) Nov. 3, 1876, Edgar Lee Fowler, born Jan. 8, 1830, died Sept. 3, 1893. (2) Julia Amelia, born Feb. 12, 1844, married Nov. 27, 1873, Alvan Eldredge, born Jan. 19, 1848. (3) Samuel Lewis, born March 16, 1846, died March 16, 1849. (4) George Albert, born March 8, 1848, died April 3, 1848. (5) Samuel Lewis, born April 7, 1851, married Dec. 14, 1880, Lizzie Woodworth, of Middletown; they had one child, Clarence Gardiner, born Nov. 4, 1889. (6) Georgiana Parker, born Feb. 12, 1853, married Nov. 1, 1884, Henry W. Banks, of Southport, Conn. (7) Alice Maria, born Feb. 5, 1856, died Oct. 3, 1874. (8) Frank Albert, born Sept. 24, 1858 (of New Haven), married June 4, 1886, Anna Wood.

(VI) John Samuel Evarts, a farmer of Nutplains district, Guilford, is the youngest son of Nathaniel Evarts and Julia (Parmelee). He was born June 18, 1817, and married (first) April 26, 1847, Hannah McComb, born 1818, died Jan. 24, 1848, leaving a son, John E., born Jan. 19, 1848, who died May 26, 1848. He married (second) Nov. 17, 1853, Harriet Hotchkiss, born June 9, 1815, died July 4, 1889, daughter of Launcelot Hotchkiss and Lucretia (Cook), of Branford. They had two children: (1) Lucy Maria, born Sept. 3, 1854, married Sept. 29, 1885, Walter W. Wilcox, born Dec. 16, 1851, son of Almon O. Wilcox and Ruth (Kennedy). (2) Harriet Lucretia, born Feb. 24, 1859.

LEMUEL J. CURTIS. In the death, on Jan. 10, 1888, of Lemuel J. Curtis, there passed away not only one of the wealthiest men of Meriden, but one of her noblest citizens, a good man, a philanthropist.

Mr. Curtis was born Jan. 15, 1814, in Meriden, son of Elisha Curtis, and was a descendant of John Curtis, who came from England and was one among the first settlers at Stratford, Conn., in 1639. Thomas Curtis, a son of John, was one of the original settlers in Wallingford, Conn., in 1670.

Lemuel J. Curtis when sixteen years of age began to earn his own living by learning the britannia business from Ira Yale, of Wallingford, and he was so successful that he finally bought Mr. Yale out. Before he was twenty-five he went west with the late Isaac C. Lewis, intending to go into business there, but gave up the idea and returned to Meriden, beginning the making of britannia ware. He was associated at various times with Edwin Curtis, W. W. Lyman and others. He was one of the heavy stockholders of the Meriden Britannia Co., and always took a particular interest in that concern. He was president of the Miller Brothers' Co., and either a director or stockholder in about every incorporated concern in Meriden. He amassed a fortune of probably a million dollars, acquired by untiring industry, careful investments and economical though not parsimonious living.

Mr. Curtis was senior warden of St. Andrew's Episcopal Church of Meriden and one of its stanchest supporters. He was the founder of the Curtis Home for Aged and Indigent Women, and that most worthy establishment will stand as a fitting monument to Mr. Curtis' strong Christian character. He was deeply interested in the Home, personally looking after many details of the management. Besides the building, which cost $50,000, he endowed the institution with about $750,000, and this gift of three-quarters of a million showed the sincerity of his desire to do something for the benefit of Meriden and the honor of the church to which he was so devoted. He was thoroughly reliable as a man and citizen in every way, and his acts of charity were none the less because not heralded. He was a true friend and an upright man in all respects, and his death was a great loss to the city, which he helped materially to build up.

On Dec. 24, 1835, Mr. Curtis was married to Bedotha P. Button, and to them were born two children.

Mr. Curtis' pastor, the Rev. A. T. Randall, thus wrote of his life: "In the midst of a sore affliction, which weighs heavily upon me in a personal as well as an official capacity, I have been asked by the editor of the Journal to write a few words concerning Mr. Lemuel J. Curtis, who last evening was so suddenly called to his rest in Paradise. As a citizen of unimpeachable integrity and uprightness he stood in the highest rank. Few men in all the relations of life were so alive to the dictates of conscience. Advantage, policy, gain and affection were unhesitatingly set aside at the bidding of conscience, and no sacrifice was deemed too great when demanded by this guiding power of his life. He has thus been a model of integrity to all with whom he has been thrown in contact, and especially to those with whom he had business relations. A man who had known Mr. Curtis intimately for nearly forty years once said in my hearing, 'Whatever Lemuel J. Curtis attempts to accomplish, his first thought is to do right.'

"Such a characteristic cannot in these days be too highly eulogized. But it is especially my duty and pleasure to speak well of Mr. Curtis as a religious man. For forty-five years he has been a faithful and regular communicant at St. Andrew's Church, and for more than half this long period he has been honored with the office of warden of the parish. It was only during the last year of his life, when he felt his infirmities growing upon him, that inclement weather could keep him from his accustomed seat in the House of God. He was always alive to every need of the church he so loved. Whenever he realized that the need was pressing, when there was a special offering at the church for religious or charitable purposes, and he through necessity was absent, it was his invariable custom to forward his offering to the writer within the next twenty-four hours. Such a habit is only formed under the conviction that a stated portion of a man's wealth must be given back to God, and this conviction was the source of a generosity too modest and unassuming to be fully appreciated.

"Besides founding the only charitable institution of which Meriden can boast, Mr. Curtis was not unmindful of the smaller charities, and on his last Christmas eve he left many a substantial gift at the doors of those who were in affliction and distress.

"He was an exceptional example of that character which is animated by the spirit of a pure and undefiled religion before God and the Father, and whose habit it is to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and keep himself unspotted from the world."

JAMES WARD BEECHER PORTER, now living retired, is looked upon as one of the most worthy citizens of Waterbury, of which city he is a native, having been born there June 12, 1853.

James Porter, father of our subject, was born in Waterbury March 26, 1818, a son of Elias Porter, also of Waterbury nativity. James Porter has been a lifelong resident of the city, where for years he was a "caster" in several of the brass rolling mills, but he is now living retired. He married Sophia Beecher, who also is yet living, and five children were born to them: Emily is the wife of James Elliott, of Elmira, N. Y.; Sarah lives in Waterbury; our subject comes next in the order of birth; Fannie and Mary (twins) are unmarried.

James Ward Beecher Porter received his education at the common schools and high school of Waterbury, and at the age of fifteen years entered the hook and eye shops in order to learn the brass-molding trade. With the then proprietors he worked about one and one-half years, or until the shops were purchased by Barnard, Son & Co., and he continued with the new firm several months. He then went to the Scovill Manufacturing Co., and was in their employ from 1871 to 1898, a period of twenty-seven years, for a long time having the entire contract of the casting department. He is now living retired, having by honest labor and perseverance amassed a comfortable competence.

On Jan. 18, 1876, Mr. Porter married Elizabeth Collins, who was born in Cambridge, Mass., daughter of John Collins, also of Massachusetts birth, and six children have been born to them, as follows: John B., Oct. 28, 1876; Fannie E., July 9, 1878; Nellie F., March 25, 1880; James W., June 16, 1881; Bessie S., Aug. 11, 1882 (died in infancy); Harry C., March 13, 1885. The family attend the services of Trinity Episcopal church. Mr. Porter is a Republican in politics. He is very prominent in fraternal circles as a member of several secret societies, and his Masonic record is as follows: Entered Apprentice, April 21, A. D. 1892, A. L. 5892; passed to the degree of Fellow Craft, April 28, A. D. 1892, A. L. 5892; raised to the Sublime Degree of a Master Mason, June 2, A. D. 1892, A. L. 5892; installed Worshipful Master, Dec. 6, 1894; Harmony Lodge, No. 42, F. & A. M., Waterbury, Conn.

J W B Porter

Received the Degree of Mark Master, Sept. 28, 1892; Past Master, Oct. 12, 1892; M. E. Master, Nov. 9, 1892; Royal Arch Mason, Nov. 23, 1892; Eureka Chapter, No. 22, R. A. M., Waterbury. Admitted to the Rewards and Honors of a Royal Master, Jan. 19, 1893; Select Master, Jan. 19, 1893; Super E. Master, March 15, 1893; Waterbury Council, No. 21, R. & S. M., Waterbury. Was constituted and created a member of The Illustrious Order of the Red Cross, Sept. 5, A. D. 1894; constituted, created and dubbed a Knight Templar, Oct. 3, A. D. 1894; and finally constituted a Knight of Malta, Nov. 7, A. D. 1894; installed Eminent Commander, Feb. 1, 1899; Clark Commandery, No. 7, K. T., Waterbury. Constituted Noble of the Mystic Shrine in Pyramid Temple of Bridgeport, Nov. 26, 1894. Received the degrees of the Lodge of Perfection, from the 4th-14th inclusive, in E. G. Storer Lodge of Perfection, Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite, January, 1895, New Haven, Conn.; received the degrees 15th and 16th, in Elm City Council, Princes of Jerusalem, Feb. 14, 1895, New Haven; received the degrees, 17th and 18th, in New Haven Chapter, Rose Croix, Feb. 14, 1895, New Haven; dimitted from the above Scottish Rite bodies to become a charter member of The Doric Lodge of Perfection; the Ionic Council, Princes of Jerusalem (Past M. E. Sov. P. Gr. Master); and Corinthian Chapter, Rose Croix, all in Waterbury. Received the degrees, 19th-32d, inclusive, April 26, 1895, in Lafayette Consistory, S. P. R. S., of Bridgeport, Conn. Mr. Porter is also a member of Nosahogan Lodge, No. 21, I. O. O. F.; Speedwell Lodge, No. 10, K. of P.; Tunxis Tribe, No. 10, I. O. R. M.; and of the Connecticut Society of the Sons of the American Revolution, which latter he joined Feb. 8, 1897.

ROBERT ROBSON WOOD, who passed from earth Aug. 20, 1890, was for many years a resident of Ansonia, and by his excellent qualities of character won in a high degree the esteem and respect of his fellow citizens. His life, which extended beyond the allotted limit of man's years, was free from ambitious strivings for public notice, yet in its quiet usefulness it made an impression upon the community which will remain as an inspiration toward right doing among all who knew him.

Mr. Wood was born April 4, 1816, in Littleboro, Lancashire, England, son of James and Isabella Wood. James Wood was for some years superintendent of a cloth factory at Littleboro, and came to America in 1828, to take a similar position in a mill at Amesbury, Mass., where he died in 1832. His wife died July 7, 1822. This worthy couple had three sons and one daughter; the last named, Mrs. Joshua Miriam, of Ashburnham, Mass., was the last surviving member of the family, and died in March, 1883. Of the sons, Linus, who died in 1863 in New Bedford, Mass., was a prominent Mason, holding the rank of Sir Knight. Pliny, formerly a Methodist minister of Cambridge, Mass., and at one time chaplain of the State Senate, died in 1876 in Munich, having been sent to the Vienna Exposition by his State.

As a boy our subject became thoroughly familiar with all branches of the cloth manufacturer's art, and before leaving England was engaged as a flannel finisher for the Amesbury Mills. On May 12, 1828, he arrived in this country, landing in Boston, and although a mere boy he proved so competent in his work that he was appointed in 1832 to act as superintendent of the mills during the remainder of the year of his father's decease. Later he was employed in Andover, Lowell and Taunton, and on April 1, 1839, he removed to Derby, Conn., having been engaged by Plumb & Beach, cloth manufacturers, whose mill was located opposite the old Somers building, in Main street, Birmingham. The written contract, which was for the term of two years, is now in the possession of the family. For seventeen years he remained in that locality, and at one time he was connected with the wire drawing business conducted by the Howe Pin Co., at Birmingham. In 1848 he went to Ansonia with D. W. Plumb, and in 1855 he became superintendent of the mills of Wallace & Sons, then newly organized. During the thirty-three years which he spent with them he had the satisfaction of seeing constant growth and development in the business, in which his advice and masterly management were of recognized value. It was during the memorable blizzard week of March, 1888, that he first found his health impaired, and from that time he took no active part in business affairs. An attack of the grip in the following winter left him very feeble, and a brief illness in August terminated his life. After a last visit to the mill he remained at home, realizing that the end was near, and some of his brethren of the I. O. O. F. were, at his request, constantly at his bedside during his last days.

In politics Mr. Wood was a Republican, and although he never sought public office his keen interest in local affairs was shown in many ways. To all progressive movements he gave liberally, according to his judgment, and for many years he attended the Episcopal Church at Ansonia. Public affairs had not for him an absorbing interest, however, coming second to the cares of his business and the welfare of the workingmen under his control, over 600 in number during the last years of his stay. His manner was kind, and his cheery "Good morning, young man," was like a ray of sunshine. In 1877, in his sixty-first year, he and his wife went to Europe, visiting all the cities of note, and making a pleasant stay at his birthplace, where among other old acquaintances he found the man who had taken his father's old position in the mills half a century before.

On June 20, 1847, Mr. Wood was married in Birmingham to Miss Elizabeth Wallace, a native of Manchester, England, and a daughter of the late Thomas Wallace. She passed away Feb. 19, 1900, at the age of seventy-seven, while residing with her son, Thomas J. Wood, in the home built by our subject. Of two other sons, John W. died in Ansonia in 1898, aged forty-three years; and W. R. died a number of years ago.

Mr. Wood's funeral was largely attended, his great popularity bringing crowds of people to watch the solemn procession through Main street, from his residence on North Cliff street. Wallace & Sons had ordered their mills closed for the entire day in memory of his long and faithful services. The workmen, many of whom had known him for a score of years, assembled at the Episcopal Church to pay their last tribute of respect to one who had always been their friend and benefactor, and there was many a moist eye among them as the hearse bore the remains to their last resting-place. Naugatuck Lodge, No. 53, I. O. O. F., marched in a body in the procession, accompanied by the grand officers of the State and ten members of the Veteran Odd Fellows Association, of which Mr. Wood was vice-president; among the floral tributes was a cross four feet in height given by the Veterans Association. The pall-bearers were chosen from Naugatuck Lodge and Ousatic Lodge, of Birmingham. Rev. Mr. Woodcock, rector of the Episcopal Church, read prayers at the house and the funeral services at the church, and the procession then went to Birmingham, where the remains were interred. At the grave the ritual of the I. O. O. F. was read by John Naukervis, N. G. of Naugatuck Lodge, assisted by G. E. Church, Chaplain, and Grand Master F. S. Hunt made a short address in which he eulogized the deceased, telling of his work in the society and his standing as a citizen. In this connection it is appropriate to review Mr. Wood's long service in the I. O. O. F., as he was one of the oldest and most prominent members of the Order in this State. For nearly half a century he had been an earnest worker in the society, and was looked up to as the pillar around which they grew, and at the yearly meeting of the Veterans' Association he was always present. At the time of his residence in Derby he was the oldest Odd Fellow there, and he was instrumental in founding Ousatic Lodge, No. 6, of Birmingham, of which he remained a member until the organization of Naugatuck lodge, of Ansonia, in 1849. In 1841 there were five lodges in Connecticut, and Mr. Wood, in order to re-organize the local lodge, became a member of Quinipiac Lodge, New Haven. The curiosity caused by the local establishment was so great that the trunk containing the paraphernalia had to be hidden in the cellar over night. Mr. Wood successively passed all the chairs, and became past noble grand. He was a conservative Odd Fellow, and proved a capable and efficient officer, discharging the duties devolving upon him with care and skill, and ruling with a tact that avoided all signs of unjust discrimination.

THOMAS J. WOOD, the only surviving son of our subject, was born June 8, 1848, in Ansonia, soon after the place was given its name. His education was secured in the common schools of the city and at Cheshire Academy, and at the age of sixteen he entered Wallace & Sons mills, and gained a practical knowledge of the business under his father's direction. He was promoted at the latter's death to the position of superintendent, which he has since held—although the firm of Wallace & Sons has been superseded by the Coe Brass Mfg. Co.—making about thirty-five years of continuous service with the establishment. He is a staunch Republican and is prominent in municipal affairs, having been a member of the board of burgesses and alderman from the First ward during the first two years of city government. During his term he served as chairman of the Police committee and the committee on Claims, and his work was characterized by ability and rare fidelity. He has also been active in military affairs, serving five years as a member of Company H, 2d C. N. G., in which he was promoted first to the post of orderly sergeant and then to that of second lieutenant, with which rank he was discharged. He is a charter member of the local Board of Trade, and of the Eagle Hook and Ladder Company of Ansonia, of which he was foreman and treasurer for some years. Mr. Wood attends the Episcopal Church, and socially is identified with various organizations, including the F. & A. M., George Washington Lodge, No. 83; the Ansonia Club, of which he is a charter member; and the I. O. O. F., Naugatuck Lodge.

In March, 1869, Mr. Wood was married to Miss Marie C. Clemens, daughter of A. B. and Catherine (Girard) Clemens, the former a prominent retired citizen of Ansonia, and a well-known expert in machinery, for many years the superintendent of the Farrell Foundry. Mrs. Wood is a member of the D. A. R., being of Revolutionary descent through her mother, who was a Girard. The only son of this union, Robert A. Wood, learned the brass business with his father, and is now foreman of several departments with the Manhattan Brass Co., of New York, where he resides. He married Miss Eva M. Perkins, of Ansonia, and they have two children: Robert Thomas, born Nov. 14, 1899; and Ethel May, born May 10, 1901.

GIDEON LUCIAN PLATT, M. D., late of Waterbury, where for fifty-three years he was actively engaged in the practice of medicine, was one of the city's useful and prominent citizens. He descended from an ancestry among the oldest and most prominent of Connecticut.

Richard Platt, the progenitor of many of the Platts of New England, came to this country in 1638, landing at New Haven. He was enrolled among the first settlers of Milford, Nov. 20, 1639, having four in family. In August, 1880, at the interesting and noteworthy commemoration of the settlement of Milford two hundred and fifty years before, the name of Richard Platt was mentioned with honor, and among the coping stones of the beautiful memorial bridge erected over the Wapawaug to perpetuate the memory of the early settlers was one placed with this inscription:

DEACON

RICHARD PLATT.
ORIT 1684.
MARY HIS WIFE.

Dr. Platt was a descendant in the sixth generation from Richard Platt, of Milford, the line of his descent being through Lieut. Joseph Platt and three consecutive Gideon Platts, our subject being fifth in the line bearing the name of Gideon.

Gideon Platt (2), son of Gideon Platt, married March 17, 1783, Hannah Clark, daughter of Joseph Clark, all of Milford, Conn., and their children were Gideon, Joseph and Meritt.

Gideon Platt (3), son of Gideon (2), and the father of the subject of this sketch, was born Dec. 19, 1784, and married Nov. 8, 1807, Lydia Sperry, daughter of Capt. Jacob Sperry. They became residents of Middlebury, Conn. Mr. Platt was a deacon, as was his father before him, in the Congregational Church of Milford, where they were highly respected and esteemed citizens.

Dr. Gideon Lucian Platt, son of Gideon (3), was born July 20, 1813, in the (what is now) town of Middlebury, Conn., and in addition to attending the schools of the town he was a pupil in the celebrated classical school of Simeon Hart, of Farmington, Conn. He was prepared for the medical profession under the direction of Dr. Henry Bronson, of Waterbury, and under Dr. William Tully, then of New Haven, and a professor in the Yale Medical School, where young Platt pursued a regular course of study and received the degree of M. D. in 1838. He immediately established himself in professional work at Waterbury, where he continued same with success and rare usefulness for over fifty years. Soon after settling in Waterbury he became associated in the practice with his former preceptor, Dr. Bronson, which partnership continued until Dr. Bronson's removal to New Haven, in 1842. In 1849 Dr. Platt bought what is known as the Apothecaries' Hall property, of Benedict & Coe, and along with Dr. Fish opened a drug store which since 1852 has borne the name of Apothecaries' Hall. At one time Dr. Platt was associated with Dr. Philo G. Rockwell. In 1880 he took into partnership with him the late Walter Hamlin Holmes, who afterward became his son-in-law, a partnership which lasted until the death of Dr. Platt. Dr. Platt accumulated considerable real estate in Waterbury that later became very valuable. He was president of the New Haven County Medical Society in 1880 and the following year president of the State Medical Society. He was an active member of the First Congregational Church of Waterbury, and became one of the incorporators of the Second Church there.

On Dec. 18, 1844, Dr. Platt was married to Caroline Tudor, a lineal descendant in the seventh generation from Elder William Brewster, of the Plymouth Colony, also of Owen Tudor, of Windsor, Conn., and of Rev. Samuel and son, Dr. Elihu Tudor, the eminent surgeon, who was one of the founders of the Connecticut Medical Society. To this marriage were born four children: (1) Dr. Lucian Tudor, born in 1846, received the degree of M. D. from the University of Pennsylvania in 1869. On Sept. 15, 1871, he married Rebecca Hurlbut, of Winsted, Conn., and has one daughter, Medora H. (2) Medora Caroline is the widow of Dr. Walter H. Holmes. (3) Dr. Walter Brewster, born Dec. 20, 1853, was graduated from Harvard Medical College, and received the degree of F. R. C. S. at the Royal College of Surgeons, London, England. On Dec. 20, 1880, he married Mary Perine, daughter of E. Glynn Perine, of Baltimore, Md., and has three sons, Washington, Lucian and David. (4) Charles Easton died at the age of thirty-seven. The mother of these died August 10, 1896. Dr. Gideon L. Platt died Nov. 11, 1889, and a writer in the Waterbury American, who knew him well, said:

Dr. Platt early in his professional life attained a high reputation both as a physician and surgeon, but it was in the practice of his profession in that very close and peculiar relation of a family physician, and which especially exists in a country practice, that the strong points of his character were most clearly seen and his highest usefulness developed. In the modern style of city medical practice, where each organ has its special expert, in which it is the organ rather than the man of which the case and condition are considered, that peculiar relation of the family physician, whose constant watchfulness continued from birth to death, and included usually not only the relation of physician but that of confidant, adviser and sympathetic counselor and friend, is almost unknown. It may be that modern scientific pathology has rendered unnecessary that intimate knowledge of heredity, predisposition and environment on which the success of the old-line physician was based, but whatever it may do for the physical man, it can never be to the spiritual, to the moral, to the intellectual nature—in short to the man himself—what the close and intimate relation of the family physician made him. This was pre-eminently the style of Dr. Platt's practice. He knew his patients, their lives, circumstances and surroundings, their parentage and history, their constitutional predispositions and hereditary tendencies, all these consciously or unconsciously went to make up his diagnosis of a case and to indicate to his mind the treatment it demanded. His patience was unwearied. Calm and equable by temperament, he was still more so by long training and culture, and by a noble self-command that never deserted him. He brought into the sick room an invigorating presence, a sense of rest, peace and comfort. One of his patients says of him, "I felt, as a child, when sick, that as soon as I saw Dr. Platt I should be better. I can feel now his cool hand, with a touch that always seemed to bring relief."

In figure he was tall, erect, striking and dignified, but in measure so kindly sympathetic that he won his way at once to the confidence of his patients. He was not satisfied with the diagnosis of the case and a prescription of remedies, but he took into account all the merits of nursing and the limitations of the situation, and, with much ingenuity and no chemical skill, he would improvise means from surrounding material, and buy comfort and convenience out of circumstances that were often unfavorable. While he kept up well with the progress of the profession, he still retained a knowledge and liking for many of those domestic remedies which were dear to the hearts of past generations. His knowledge of Medical Botany was much beyond what is considered necessary for the modern practitioner. To relieve, and so far as possible, to prevent human suffering, was his brief summing up of the physician's calling, and he justly regarded it as a public one, requiring all a man's devotion, and in which success brought its own abundant reward in the consciousness of well doing. His moral standard was a very high one, but he was broad in his sympathies and not severe in his judgment of others. His religious faith was well formed, calm and serene, and shone forth as a ruling power of his life. His work afforded a clear and steady definition of the character and purpose of a line of men like himself of Puritan life and lineage. It may be said, without the slightest disparagement to present or future practitioners of the art of healing, that this honored and beloved physician was the last example of the departing line that Waterbury will know, for the time that made such a man and such a life possible has gone forever. Probably since the death of Rev. Dr. Clark no man in this community has passed away whose loss will be keenly felt as a personal grief in so many hearts and homes as that of Dr. Platt.

JUDD. For upward of two hundred and sixty years the Judds have been known to New England—i. e., since the arrival at Cambridge, Mass., in 1634, of Thomas Judd, the emigrant ancestor of the New Britain and Wallingford branch of the family, of which it is the purpose of this article to treat. For two hundred or more years the posterity of Deacon Anthony Judd have figured in the history of New Britain, where through the first half of the last century John Judd, and his sons and his grandsons, in turn, have been prominent in mechanical and manufacturing lines; and the son Morton, and his sons, through the latter half of the century, in New Haven and Wallingford, respectively. Notable among the Judds thus engaged at these several points have been John, the blacksmith; his sons, Morton and Oliver S., and Morton's sons, Hubert L., Albert D. and Edward M. Of these, Hubert L. Judd was for one and a half decades president of the extensive manufacturing plant of H. L. Judd & Co., at Wallingford, where until his death, on Dec. 11, 1899, he was one of the prominent citizens and leading business men. President Judd was a descendant in the sixth generation from Deacon Anthony Judd, who was descended from Thomas Judd, the emigrant ancestor, of Farmington, Conn. Anthony Judd married Susannah Woodford, and became the first deacon in the Great Swamp Church. The line of descent of President Judd is through John, John (2), John (3) and Morton Judd.

(I) John Judd, son of Deacon Anthony, born in 1718, married Mary Burnham, daughter of Rev. William Burnham, first pastor of the Great Swamp Church. Mr. Judd was one of the first settlers of the central part of the town of New Britain, having his home and farm on the north side of West Main street. He was a lieutenant in the local militia, and also held some civil offices. He was a member of the Ecclesiastical Society in Farmington in 1752, and was there mentioned by Dr. Smiley as from the church in Kensington. His death occurred Oct. 16, 1781.

(II) John Judd (2), son of John, born in 1746, married, in 1769, Lydia Mather, and resided on West Main street, in New Britain, west of his father. He died Jan. 6, 1796.

(IV) John Judd (3), son of John (2), was born May 8, 1772, and married in 1792 Ursula Stanley. He resided on West Main street, New Britain, on the site where his son Morton later built. Mr. Judd was a blacksmith by occupation, having learned the trade with his uncle, James North. His shop was opposite his house, and on the site where his sons afterward engaged in the manufacturing business. Mr. Judd died July 18, 1822. His children were: Nancy, born Sept. 17, 1793, married in 1813 Austin Woodford, and died in Vermont; Aurora was born March 20, 1795; John B., born March 25, 1796, married in 1822 Betsey Hart; Polly, born Sept. 14, 1797, married in 1816 Pliny Slater; Marilla, born May 7, 1799, married in 1820 Rollin Dickinson, and (second) in 1852 Gilman Hinsdale; Minerva, born in 1801, died in infancy; Marinda, born in 1802, died young; Harry, born Nov. 2, 1804, married in 1828 Julia A. Lewis; Anna, born Nov. 4, 1807, married in 1826 Lawrence Richards, and (second) in 1840 Gilman Hinsdale; Morton, born Nov. 5, 1808, married in 1828 Lucina Dunham, and (second) in 1855 Julia A. Blinn; Lydia was born Feb. 9, 1810; Oliver S., born Nov. 30, 1816, married in 1838 Emily A. Lewis, and (second) in 1860 Eveline Atkins.

(V) Deacon Morton Judd, son of John (3), and the father of the late President Hubert L. Judd, of Wallingford, was born Nov. 5, 1808, in New Britain, where he attended the neighborhood school until his thirteenth year. His boyhood was accompanied with no special advantages. It was a time when the originators of the industrial prosperity of New Britain were struggling to lay the foundation of its greatness, and young Judd felt the influence of the life about him, and at thirteen years of age went into a brass foundry to learn the trade of casting brass. Later, after working for a time in Southington, and in the shops of Seth J. North and Ira Stanley, in New Britain, he engaged in business for himself on West Main street, adjoining his father's shop on the east. In about 1833 he went into partnership with his brother Oliver S. Judd, the style of the firm being M. & O. S. Judd. They soon afterward established their business at another point in the town, and the product of their shops was plated harness hames. In 1846 this part of their business was sold to Henry North, and they commenced the manufacture of other goods. By 1847 Morton Judd had succeeded in gaining a firm foothold in the manufacturing world. He invented a sash fastener (the first ever made in America), patented Sept. 4, 1847, which, together with window springs, etc., the brothers manufactured extensively.

HUBERT L. JUDD

In 1853 Albert D. Judd became a partner under the firm name of M. Judd & Co. They continued to do business until 1863, when Albert D. Judd purchased the establishment from his father and uncle, Oliver S. However, he conducted the same but a few weeks, when he resold it to his uncle, Oliver S. Judd, of late years the manufacturer of builders' and saddlers' hardware in the old original factory on West Main street, New Britain.

In 1864 Morton Judd's sons, Hubert L., Albert D. and Edward M., entered into partnership in New Haven for the manufacture of upholstery hardware. Two years later Morton Judd moved to New Haven and entered into partnership with his son Albert D., for the manufacture of builders' hardware, and out of this investment grew the Judd Manufacturing Co. Albert D. Judd became president, and the business of the company was greatly enlarged. It was continued in New Haven until 1877, and then removed to Wallingford, where the company erected a large plant on the west side of the railroad, and began the manufacture, on a large scale, of stationers' and druggists' hardware. The principal stockholders were Morton Judd and his sons, Albert D., Hubert L. and Edward M., Hubert L. acting as the company's agent for the sale of their goods in New York. In 1886 H. L. Judd & Co., who had been engaged in the manufacture of upholsterers' hardware in Brooklyn, bought out the business and plant of the Judd Manufacturing Co. in Wallingford. In 1887 they moved a part of their Brooklyn plant to the Wallingford factories, and the remainder in 1897. In 1890 a large building was added to the Wallingford factories for the making of brass bedsteads and a line of artistic brass goods. In 1892 another building was added to meet the demand for a general enlargement of their business, and especially the manufacture of iron bedsteads. In 1896 a still larger building was erected to accommodate the rest of the Brooklyn plant, which was now moved to Wallingford. At this time the company ordinarily employs about five hundred and fifty hands. They have a store in New York and offices in Boston, Philadelphia and Chicago. The capital stock is $350,000, and there is considerable surplus. The company have also in Chattanooga, Tenn., a large factory, built in 1890, for the manufacture of wooden curtain poles and trimmings. The principal products of the concern are fancy art goods, upholsterers', stationers', and druggists' hardware, brass and iron bedsteads, and built wire goods.

For many years before his demise, Morton Judd's business connections were ornamental and without labor, rather than active. His name and association gave character to the enterprises, rather than demanded of him personal attention. He lived at ease in the town, on its main street, and in the course of years his children gathered about him and built magnificent residences, highly ornamental to the town. Among the many enterprises fostered in their infancy by Mr. Judd was the Dime Savings Bank, of which he was one of the original incorporators, and of which he served as vice-president until his resignation on account of advancing years.

Mr. Judd lived to the eve of his ninety-third birthday, passing away Nov. 4, 1901, and retained to a remarkable degree a good physique and the full possession of all his faculties. He was erect in stature, his eye bright and manner animated, and full of sunshine for those about him. His visits among his children and neighbors spread the light of a happy, humorous nature wherever he went. He was a Christian gentleman, who hesitated not to declare his reverence for things sacred and his faith in God. In New Britain and in the Center Congregational Church, which enrolls so much of his family history, he was known as "Deacon," and so in general called "Deacon Morton Judd." He was most highly esteemed and greatly appreciated in the communities in which he lived during his long life. His charitable efforts relieved the poor in many a struggle, and the unfortunate have risen again by reason of this "Good Samaritan's" hand. He bore a willing part in the social activities for good ends, which contribute in every live community to the general welfare, and by example and precept he was a distinct builder of social and religious worth in society. Mr. Judd was one of the very few who remembered Gen. Lafayette when he visited Hartford in 1823, and was always a hearty admirer of the noble Frenchman, to whom we owe so much. When Deacon Morton Judd was but fourteen years of age he planted the large elm tree that stands in front of his late home in New Britain, and now bears a plate giving his name and the date of planting. In politics Mr. Judd was rather retiring, yet under pressure he held some of the highest town offices, serving two terms in the General Assembly of the State of Connecticut.

On Jan. 26, 1828, Mr. Judd was married to Miss Lucina Dunham, of Southington, Conn., daughter of Samuel Dunham. She was a Christian that might serve as the impersonation of Solomon's description of the good wife and mother, who looked well to the training of her children until her death, March 21, 1853. In 1855 Mr. Judd married (second) Miss Julia A. Blinn, daughter of Horace Blinn, of Wethersfield, Conn. She died Nov. 19, 1887. To the first marriage were born four children, namely: Hubert L., Albert D., Edward M. and Martha L. To the second marriage was born one daughter, Mary Burnham, who now makes her home in Wallingford. So fully did the second Mrs. Judd succeed to the mother's place in the family that her step-children learned to regard her with filial love and strong affection.

HUBERT LLEWELLYN JUDD, eldest son of Deacon Morton Judd, was born April 1, 1829. In the midst of his busy life he found time to look after the interests and the comfort of those he loved. Of kindly nature, he was wont to relieve the unfortunate, and with the true charity that works in silence and in the night. Many stories are told of his good deeds, but his dearest friends and confidants cannot recall a single instance when his charity "vaunted itself." He was a liberal supporter of the First Congregational Church, and faithfully and consistently followed the tenets of that faith. In politics he was a Republican, but his active life did not allow him time for office seeking, even had he so desired. A deep thinker and a student of human nature, he associated with himself in business only such men as he could rely upon for ability and integrity, and those who proved eminently worthy were rapidly promoted. The beautiful home he built on South Main street is one of the most delightful residences of the town, and will stand a monument to his good taste and judgment.

On Aug. 14, 1851, Hubert Llewellyn Judd was united in marriage with Miss Julia Ellis, daughter of William Ellis, of New Britain. She died Oct. 10, 1885. Their children, seven in number, were as follows: (1) Julia Ellis, deceased in infancy; (2) Morton, Jr., deceased in infancy; (3) Florence B., who died at the age of forty years; (4) Edward Henry, deceased in infancy; (5) Emma Julia; (6) Morton Ellis, born March 10, 1864, in New Britain, who married, Dec. 23, 1885, Lenna Gertrude Clark, of Brownville, N. Y., daughter of George Alexander Clark, and has one child—Morton Hubert, born Oct. 14, 1886; and (7) Hubert Dexter, deceased in infancy. The father of these children, beloved and respected by old and young, entered into his last rest Dec. 11, 1899.

ALBERT DUNHAM JUDD, second son of Deacon Morton Judd, was born Dec. 4, 1830, in New Britain, Conn. He took advantage of such opportunities for an education as were offered him, and after some attendance at the common schools was for some time a student in the Easthampton (Mass.) school. It was not an age of luxury and ease—such a life does not make men strong enough to found such enterprises, such nations, as the sons of New England have given to America. On leaving the school room Albert D. Judd went at once to work, assisting his father and uncle, M. & O. S. Judd, on harness hames. He remained with them until the firm sold out to Henry North, when he turned his attention to the manufacture of the sash fastener invented by his father. At the end of four or five years he was admitted into partnership, and twelve years later purchased the business, retaining it, however, but a few weeks, when he resold it to his uncle, Oliver S. Judd. Idleness was not attractive to him, and in 1864 Albert D. Judd removed to New Haven, purchasing the buildings of Beech Burwell, a contractor and builder, and the firm of M. & A. D. Judd, manufacturers of upholstery hardware, was launched. Two years later E. M. Judd & Co. consolidated with the Turner &

Clark Manufacturing Co., and the Seymour Manufacturing Co., both of Torrington. The factory was removed to the western part of town, and the manufacture of builders' hardware was added. In 1870 the firm became the Judd Manufacturing Co., and all of the Judds held interests in it. They continued to run the factory in New Haven until 1877, when it was removed to Wallingford. Albert D. Judd became president of the company and so continued until 1888, when he sold his interest to H. L. Judd & Co. He is still a large stockholder in the company, which on the death of its president, H. L. Judd, in 1899, was sold to his New York partner, and at present he (Albert D.) is the only stockholder bearing the name of Judd. He was one of the original incorporators of the Wallingford National Bank, and has since served as director. He is also a director in the Dime Savings Bank, and one of the appraisers of the Savings Bank, and he also served a short time as vice-president of the First National Bank, but was obliged to resign on account of ill health. In all the large enterprises of the community Albert D. Judd has left his impress—in nearly all he has taken an active part, but it has left him little time for himself. In his political affiliations he has been a strong Republican, and has served on the board of burgesses and held other offices, giving to the affairs of the people the same care and consideration ever given to his private affairs, and throughout his entire life, public and private, he has kept his honored name free from blemish. Mr. Judd has also been a faithful worker in the religious world. He is a member of the First Congregational Church of Wallingford, of which he has served as deacon since his residence there. He held the same office in the Center Congregational Church in New Britain, and while in New Haven he was instrumental in the building of the Dwight Place Congregational Church, being one of a committee of three who selected the site, and was also one of the building committee during the construction of the church edifice. Later he became a member of the Society's committee, and of the church committee, and also served the church as deacon.

On April 25, 1855, Albert D. Judd wedded Miss Lucelia Wells, who was born Oct. 27, 1828, a daughter of Horace and Pamela (Sedgwick) Wells, the former a native of New Britain and the latter of West Hartford. Mrs. Judd died Aug. 5, 1900. They had the following named children: (1) Katherine Wells, at home. (2) George Morton has, since 1885, been connected with H. L. Judd & Co. He married Miss Nellie Martin, daughter of Henry Martin, and they have three children—Alice, Katherine and Philip Sedgwick. (3) Alice May died at the age of two years. (4) Albert Lemuel, bookkeeper for H. L. Judd & Co., married Ethel Gardiner, of Green Bay, Wis., and their children were Gardiner Wells, who died aged three years, and Howard Stanley. Albert L. Judd has been a deacon in the Congregational Church since 1898.

EDWARD MORTON JUDD, third son of Deacon Morton Judd, was born Nov. 11, 1837, in New Britain, Conn., and has proved himself a worthy member of the honorable family to which he belongs. He attended the schools of New Britain and spent three years in the high school there. At the age of eighteen he, too, entered the manufacturing world. In 1856 he began the manufacture of the first metal curtain fixtures (of which he was also the patentee), and in 1861 removed to New Haven, the firm becoming E. M. Judd & Co. Upon his location in New Haven he added a general line of upholstery hardware. Later the firm was consolidated with the Turner & Clark Manufacturing Co. and the Seymour Manufacturing Co., of Torrington, and Edward M. Judd became the general manager of the Torrington plants. The firm was known as the Turner, Seymour & Judd Co. In 1870 he sold out his interest in the company and assisted in the formation of the Judd Manufacturing Co. at New Haven. The new company engaged in the manufacture of general hardware, as well as upholstery hardware. Under his management these various companies prospered beyond all expectations, and in 1874 Mr. Judd went to Brooklyn, and, while still retaining his interest in the Judd Manufacturing Co., started the firm of H. L. Judd & Co. After three years he located in Wallingford, where the Judd interests have since been centered. For thirty years Mr. Judd was actively engaged in the large manufacturing interests of the family, and in 1887 he retired to pass the latter half of his life in the rest and enjoyment his early labors would warrant. He is the inventor of a number of curtain fixtures, and his last venture was a stamp cancelling machine, which he considers his best work. This machine, which completely destroys the stamp, has been patented in this country, and it is the intention of the patentee to have his rights protected in foreign countries as well. During his busy life Mr. Judd did not fail to find time to attend to his civic duties. In politics he is a stanch Republican, and cast his first vote for Abraham Lincoln. While he is not an office-seeker, he has not sought to evade the responsibilities of citizenship. He has served on the board of burgesses and on the school committee, while in 1897 he was elected judge of the borough court, and is now serving his second term. In every way that he can he has worked for the welfare of his town and State, and gives his aid, financial and moral, to the support of any enterprise that will in any way benefit the community. He was one of the original incorporators of the First National Bank. In his religious faith he is a Congregationalist, and a member of the First Church, in which he has served as superintendent of the Sunday-school, and as chairman of the Society's committee. Of generous disposition, he gives largely to charity, but carries on the custom of his family in that he does his good deeds quietly.

On March 27, 1860, occurred the marriage of Edward Morton Judd and Jane A. Peck, daughter of Joel and Charlotte (Scoville) Peck, and to this union have come children as follows: William Theodore, born March 1, 1866, died Feb. 24, 1867. Jennie Susan, born March 8, 1872, married on Oct. 1, 1895, Charles G. Phelps, of Wallingford, secretary to Orville H. Platt, senator from Connecticut, and clerk to the committee on Cuban Affairs. Edward Peck, born Aug. 3, 1877, is at home; for three years he was a student in Yale Law School.

MARTHA LOUISE JUDD, born July 9, 1847, was married Oct. 14, 1880, to Henry Hall Martin, of Wallingford, who died Feb. 26, 1896. Their children were Louise Ariel and Oliver Wadsworth.

MARY BURNHAM JUDD, born April 8, 1857, is unmarried, and kept house for her father.

WILLIAM CHANDLER POTTER was one of the brave defenders of the Union during the dark days of the Rebellion, and is now an honored and highly respected citizen of Cheshire, New Haven county, where he has made his home since 1891.

Mr. Potter was born in New Haven Sept. 25, 1820, and traces his ancestry to John Potter, the first of the name to cross the Atlantic, a native of England, who came to this county about 1640, and located in Hamden. The father of our subject, who also bore the name of John Potter, was born in Hamden in 1805, and was reared in that town. By trade he was a chairmaker. He married Clarissa Parkiss, who was born in Branford, New Haven county, a daughter of Chandler Parkiss, and both died in Burlington, this State, in 1894. Of their ten children, only two are still living: William C., our subject; and Austin, of Waterbury.

William Chandler Potter acquired his literary education in the schools of Hamden, and there grew to manhood. When the Civil war broke out he enlisted, at Hartford, Conn., in 1861, in Company E, 10th Conn. V. I., for three years. With the Army of the Potomac he participated in the battles of Roanoke Island, Newbern, Tarboro, Little Washington and Goldsboro, N. C., and he also took part in the celebrated march to the sea. He was mustered out of the United States service at Alexandria, Va., and honorably discharged at Hartford, Conn., in 1865. On the maternal side he is of Revolutionary stock, his great-grandfather having been a soldier in the war for independence.

In 1855, at Burlington, Conn., Mr. Potter married Miss Emily Baldwin, a native of Watertown, and a daughter of Joel Baldwin. Four children have been born to them, namely: Frederick, who is now in the West; Melissa, who died in her eightieth year; Louis, who was killed by the cars; and Clara, Mrs. Arthur Smith, a resident of Birmingham, Connecticut.

Since coming to Cheshire, in 1891, Mr. Potter has been engaged in market gardening. He is a staunch supporter of the Republican party, and an earnest advocate of temperance. Socially he is a member of Grand Army Post No. 8, at Meriden, and religiously adheres to the faith of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which his wife is a member. Both are well known and highly respected for their sterling worth and many excellencies of character.

ALFRED F. WINCHELL, M. D., one of the leading physicians and substantial men of New Haven, which city has been his field of labor for thirty-five years, is a representative of one of the first families to settle in Connecticut.

Born June 21, 1831, in Egremont, Berkshire Co., Mass., son of Ezra and Lucinda (Newman) Winchell, our subject is a descendant in the eighth generation from Robert Winchell, the first American ancestor of this branch of the Winchell family. From the genealogy of the family prepared in 1860, by Alexander Winchell, LL. D., a professor in the University of Michigan, it is learned that the name is probably of early Saxon or Jutish origin, and was known in the time of Hengist and Horsa, in 440.

Robert Winchell, born probably in Wales, was at Dorchester, Mass., in 1634, and at Windsor, Conn., as early as 1637, appearing to have emigrated from one of the lower Saxon shires in the south of England. The line of Dr. Winchell's descent from Robert is through Jonathan, Benjamin, Azariah, Azariah (2), and Ezra.

Jonathan Winchell, son of Robert, was born probably in Dorchester, Mass., prior to 1635. On May 16, 1666, he married Abigail Brusan, daughter of Richard Brusan, sometimes written Brownson. She was born about 1644, and died in Suffield March 27, 1710.

Benjamin Winchell, son of Jonathan, was born at Windsor, Conn., June 28, 1674, and married Sarah Winchell July 18, 1700, in Suffield.

Azariah Winchell, son of Benjamin, and the great-grandfather of our subject, was born in Suffield, Conn., April 5, 1710.

Azariah Winchell (2), son of Azariah, was born in Suffield.

Ezra Winchell, father of our subject, son of Azariah (2), was born in Hillsdale, Columbia Co., N. Y., Sept. 8, 1800, and married Lucinda Newman, who was born in Egremont, June 3, 1804.

The subject of this sketch was reared in his native town, and was prepared for college at the academy in Great Barrington, Mass., entering Wesleyan College, at Middletown, in 1853. He was graduated with honors in the class of 1857, receiving from that institution three years later the degree of A. M. Following his graduation he was for three years principal of the Owosso (Mich.) Union Seminary, where his work was very successful and satisfactory, so much so that those in charge were loath to give him up and urged his remaining, but desiring to enter another profession, he severed his connection with this institution and for a period studied law under the direction of a prominent attorney of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., the well-known jurist, Judge John P. H. Tallman. His tastes, however, were in still another direction, so returning to Great Barrington, Mass., he there began the study of medicine under Dr. Clarkson T. Collins, a man of distinction in the profession and of extended acquaintance. As time passed the young pupil, through the kindness of Dr. Collins, became acquainted with the noted physicians Alfred C. Post and Valentine Mott, of New York City, an acquaintance that was greatly appreciated and proved beneficial for the encouragement and inspiration it gave.

After attending a course of lectures at the College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York City, from which institution he was graduated in 1865, Dr. Winchell in that city had the benefit of most valuable clinical observations in the various hospitals, including Bellevue, the New York Hospital and others, and after finishing his course there he located for practice in New Haven, where his professional life has been spent. His career there, both professional and as a citizen, has been one of success and usefulness. Through unselfish devotion to his useful calling he has reached a position of prominence in the profession, ranking among the most able physicians in the State. His preference in his earlier career was for surgery, and in that line he has performed a number of difficult and delicate operations, yet he has devoted himself to the general practice of medicine. His reputation as a superior obstetrician is well known. A natural student, the Doctor has advanced in his profession along with the progress made in the science of medicine, and has kept pace with the general great progress and advancement during the years of his practice.

Dr. Winchell is a member of the State Medical Society, which he has served as fellow; of the New Haven County Medical Society; and of the New Haven City Medical Society, of which for years he served as president. Also, he is connected by membership with the American Medical and American Public Health Associations; the American Academy of Political and Social Science; and the Masonic fraternity.

Dr. Winchell has long been interested in the subject of sanitation. Immediately following the Civil war he made a series of visits through different sections of the South, and his attention was especially directed to this subject by observations. Following with investigations and study of the subject, he was well fitted for the office he subsequently filled so efficiently and satisfactorily for many years—that of member of the board of health, of New Haven, having been appointed such in 1879 and repeatedly thereafter for fourteen years. For a succession of terms he was president of the board, during which time much progress was made in improving the sanitary condition of the city.

Dr. Winchell has been deeply interested in Christian and philanthropic work, and is actively concerned in the progress of New Haven. In his practice he has been exceedingly charitable to the poor and unfortunate, and he has the esteem and the confidence both of his colleagues and of the public. The city is largely indebted to his energy, foresight and pecuniary outlay for the erection of the Hyperion Theatre, pronounced by artists and public speakers to be almost unequalled for its acoustic properties and general appointments.

On February 9, 1860, Dr. Winchell was married to Helen E., daughter of Capt. Charles E. Hinman, of Southbury. She died in February, 1893, and in October, 1895, he married Mary, daughter of Elizur Mitchell, of South Britain, Conn. She died in 1874, leaving one daughter, Mary Helen, who is now the wife of Dr. William A. Brooks, of Boston, Mass., a prominent young physician and surgeon, who has performed some remarkable operations, and is well known throughout the State. On Oct. 14, 1876, Dr. Winchell was married to his present wife, formerly Catherine Worthington Shepard, daughter of Rev. Samuel N. Shepard, who for thirty years was pastor of the Congregational Church in Madison, Conn., and granddaughter of Rev. Samuel Shepard, D. D., who for fifty years was a preacher in Lenox, Mass., and a niece of the distinguished John Todd, D. D.

TERRELL. The Terrells of New Haven county, with the earlier families to which they are allied by marriage, were among the earliest settlers of this locality.

Roger Terrell, from whom most of the names of Terrell, Terrel, Tyrrel, etc., of New Haven county are descended, was among the first settlers of Milford, Conn. His name appears among the first two lists of inhabitants of the town living there in the spring of 1640. Most of the pioneer settlers of Milford came from the counties of Essex, Hereford and York, England, and rendezvoused in New Haven in 1638 and 1639. Roger Terrell married a daughter of Thomas Nefford, and his death occurred in 1682. From this Roger Terrell, the emigrant settler, Wales Terrell, of Ansonia, is a descendant in the eighth generation, his line being through ———, Samuel, Phineas, Phineas (2), Eliakim and Truman. One branch of the Tyrrell family spells the name Tyrrell.

(III) Samuel Terrell, probably a grandson of Roger Terrell, lived in Milford, and by his will, made in 1751, left his estate, which was distributed in that same year, to his widow Mary and children Samuel, Abraham, Jesse, Phineas, Mary (Tibbals) and Rebecca (Mrs. Jacob Baldwin).

(IV) Phineas Terrell, son of Samuel, born about

1725, died Oct. 13, 1791, when aged sixty six years. His wife, Phebe, survived him, married Andrew Baldwin, and died Jan. 15, 1803, when aged seventy-six. In his will the children of Phineas named were: Phineas, Eliakim, John, Anne, Phebe and Susanna.

(V) Phineas Terrell (2), son of Phineas, married and had a number of children, among them Eli and Sarah, the latter marrying Russel Chatfield. A number of the children of Phineas are buried in the Sperry burying-ground, in Bethany, Connecticut.

(VI) Capt. Eliakim Terrell, son of Phineas (2), born about Feb. 10, 1760, married Elizabeth, also born Feb. 10, 1760, daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth (Tomlinson) Twitchell, and the children who survived the father were Philo, Josiah, Truman, Elizabeth, Nehemiah, Anne, Eliakim, Phineas, Solomon, Isaac, Andrew and Julia. All settled in Connecticut. Capt. Terrell was a soldier in the Revolution, and was known by that title. He served as selectman of Woodbridge in 1800, and died March 15, 1807, when aged forty-seven years.

(VII) Truman Terrell, son of Capt. Eliakim, baptized in the town of Derby (probably in that part now Oxford) Feb. 20, 1784, married Hannah Lines, daughter of Eber Lines, of Bethany. Eber Lines married Hannah, daughter of Lieut. Dan Welton, of Waterbury, she being a lineal descendant of Elder William Brewster, of the "Mayflower." Truman Terrell died May 20, 1852, aged sixty-eight years. His widow married Ansel Peck, and died Nov. 19, 1866, aged seventy-six years. The children of Truman and his wife were: Louisa, Almira, Grace, Lauren, Elizabeth, Smith, Wales, Calvin and Henry; the two last named died young. Two of the children are now living, Almira and Wales.

(VIII) Wales Terrell at the age of seventeen (1843) was apprenticed to one Burr Nash, of New Haven, to learn the blacksmith's trade, and in the year 1849 located at Derby, where in co-partnership with Silas Baldwin, and later with Herbert Serry, he pursued the business, in a general line, of blacksmithing and carriage building. On Oct. 25, 1851, he married Julia Irene Barbour, daughter of Luke Barbour, of Simsbury, Conn. Five children were born to this union: May Elizabeth (who died in infancy), Arthur Wales, Florence Elizabeth, Lucius Barbour and Alton Truman.

On Aug. 6, 1862, Wales Terrell enlisted in Company B, 20th Conn. V. I., and on the 8th of the same month was mustered into the United States service as private and promoted to corporal. The 20th was a three years' regiment, recruited under the call of June, 1862, of the President for 300,000 men, and went out under Col. Ross, Lieut. William B. Wooster and Major Buckingham. They soon formed a part of the 12th Corps, Army of the Potomac, and were under Gen. Hooker and later under Gen. Meade. The regiment participated in the battles of Chancellorsville and Gettysburg, the 12th Corps in the latter engagement occupying the extreme right of the Federal line at Culp's Hill, Gen. Williams in command. The Corps held Ewell's Corps at bay for seven hours, finally driving them back with heavy loss. In the fall of 1863 the 12th Corps joined the Army of the Cumberland, at Chattanooga, and that winter was mainly in Tennessee. A year later, in the fall of 1864, the 11th and 12th Corps were formed into the 20th Corps, and in it the 20th Regiment remained until the close of the war, forming a part of Gen. Sherman's army. It is not the intention to give in detail the history of the regiment, but only to mention some features in general and refer to others especially. The 20th distinguished itself at the battle of Peach Tree Creek, and was at the siege of Atlanta. It later moved through Atlanta, Ga., to Savannah and South Carolina, and to and from there to North Carolina, finally participating in the grand review at Washington, and was mustered out of the service June 13, 1865, at Fort Lincoln, on the Bladensburg road. The engagements in which the 20th participated were: Chancellorsville, Va., May 3, 1863; Gettysburg, Pa., July 3, 1863; Tracy City, Tenn., May 9, 1864; Peach Tree Creek, Ga., July 20, 1864; siege of Atlanta, Ga., July 21 to Aug. 7, 1864; Silver Run, N. C., March 15, 1865; Bentonville, N. C., March 19, 1865; and Raleigh, N. C., April 13, 1865. Young Terrell bore an honorable part from start to finish with his company, and returned home at the close of the war with an honorable record. On May 4, 1864, he was promoted to sergeant, and was mustered out with his company and regiment June 13, 1865. Since his return from the service he has made his home in the town of Derby, and more recently in Ansonia, where he has had an honorable business career and been a useful citizen.

On returning to civil life Mr. Terrell entered into co-partnership with Darius Wilcox, engaging in the carriage hardware and file business for several years, under the firm name of Terrell & Wilcox, and later as Wales Terrell. Later he was associated with E. Frank Sperry, under the name of Terrell & Sperry, they continuing some years together, when Mr. Terrell withdrew and engaged with his son, Lucius B. Terrell, in the insurance and real-estate business, under the firm name of Wales Terrell & Son, handling all kinds of insurance and real-estate transactions.

(IX) Alton T. Terrell, secretary and general manager of the Ansonia O. & C. Co., of Ansonia, was born in Ansonia Oct. 3, 1872. He was educated in the common and high schools of his native town, and when a boy entered the office of the Osborne & Cheesman Co., which concern was in 1891 succeeded by the Ansonia O. & C. Co. He rose to the position of order clerk, which he held for some years, and was then promoted to purchasing agent, which position he held up to the time of Mr. Schneller's (the head of the institution) death, when he was promoted to his present position. They manufacture suspender webbing, and employ some three hundred hands. The building is 50 feet wide, 250 feet long, and three stories high. [For a further account of this business, from its origin, see sketch of Mrs. Schneller, elsewhere.] Under the management of Mr. Terrell the business has steadily increased, and they send goods all over the United States and Europe. They have recently had completed a magnificent office, planned by Mr. Terrell, which is 40 feet square, two stories high, and is beautifully finished in quarter-sawed oak and brown ash, and furnished with oak furniture. It is one of the finest office buildings in the Naugatuck Valley.

Although a young man, Mr. Terrell has seen many changes during the years that he has been with the company, and with two exceptions is the oldest in point of service now here. The number of men has been increased from two hundred to three hundred and fifty, and the output of the goods has more than doubled; much of the machinery has been changed to the latest improved in their line. Throughout the building many improvements have been made for the benefit of the help, all of whom hold Mr. Terrell in high esteem, and since he has taken his present position no dissatisfaction has been expressed by the employes, each and all of whom are at liberty to personally lay before him any grievance which they may have, with the positive assurance that they will be listened to and treated wisely. By the introduction of the latest improved machinery this concern can at present manufacture goods which place them in successful competition with any other concern in the business.

Mr. Terrell married, Nov. 30, 1898, Lillian Whitlock, a daughter of Senator Sturges Whitlock, of Shelton, a prominent manufacturer of the celebrated Whitlock printing presses. Sturges Whitlock is one of the most prominent men in this section of the State and is widely known. His wife was Mary O. Singer, a daughter of Isaac Singer, the inventor of the Singer sewing machine.

Alton Terrell is a member of the Board of Trade of Ansonia, director of the A. O. & C. Co., and member of the Ansonia Club.

EDWIN DOOLITTLE, one of the prominent, well-known citizens of Branford, is a native of Connecticut, born Dec. 3, 1838, in Wallingford, New Haven county.

The founder of the Doolittle family in the New England States came from England, and is said to have been the first settler north of Watenbrook, in what is now the town of Wallingford. Jonathan Doolittle, grandfather of Edwin, was born in Wallingford, was a farmer by occupation, and served in the war of the Revolution. He had four sons: Enos, the father of our subject; John, who cast his lot with the Mormons, and became an apostle and elder in that church; Roswell, a farmer of Wallingford; and Johnson, who was a farmer and grain dealer. One daughter, Betsy, married Samuel Morse, and after her death he married her sister Delight.

Enos Doolittle was born Feb. 2, 1796, in Wallingford, where he was a lifelong agriculturist, and died March 30, 1869. He married Charritta Davis, and by her had five children, viz.: (1) Andrew, born Nov. 8, 1826, married Lucy Hall, and had two sons, Charles D. and Frederick. Andrew was a contractor in Simpson, Hall, Miller & Co.'s factory. He was accidentally shot while out hunting, Nov. 8, 1854. (2) Albert, born Nov. 10, 1827, married Mary Bassett. He died Aug. 22, 1877, leaving no children. (3) Julius, born July 3, 1830, never married, and died Dec. 18, 1886. (4) Clarissa, born Nov. 11, 1835, died Sept. 9, 1842. (5) Edwin is our subject. The father of this family was a Democrat politically.

Edwin Doolittle received his education in the common schools of Wallingford, and began his business life in the old "Farmers Exchange Variety Store," New Haven. There he remained some six years, and in 1862 he commenced in the butcher business at Wallingford, which he continued three years, after which for seven years he was engaged in farming in Wallingford. For one year thereafter he was located at Windsor Locks, Hartford county, engaged in the manufacture of manilla paper, and in the fall of 1874 he came to Branford, where for eighteen years he conducted the popular summer resort known as the "Weybossett House." Selling out in 1893, he managed the hotel for another until May, 1894, since when he has been living retired. Mr. Doolittle is independent in politics, and at present is serving in Branford as chairman of the Citizens party.

On Oct. 10, 1865, Mr. Doolittle was married to Miss Matilda I. Todd, daughter of Thelus and Antoinette (Harrison) Todd, of Northford, New Haven county. The father was born Sept. 19, 1802, and died Aug. 29, 1875. The mother, born May 9, 1809, died March 9, 1848. They were married June 1, 1828, and had seven children, Apollos E., Milo A., Venelia H., Matilda I. (Mrs. Doolittle), Miranda J., Delia A. and Bertha S. By his second wife, Correlia Auger, Mr. Todd had one daughter, Maria A. Mr. Todd was a butcher, drover and farmer by occupation. He took an active part in the affairs of his day, and served two terms in the State Legislature, having been elected on the Democratic ticket.

Mr. and Mrs. Doolittle had two children: Antoinette Todd, born May 9, 1867, died March 2, 1868; the other died in infancy. They are members of the Episcopal Church.

JAMES PEMBERTON, a highly esteemed resident of Ansonia, is now living in retirement at his pleasant home, at No. 286 Wakelee avenue, but his interest in all that concerns the welfare of the community remains as keen as during his years of active work in the business world.

Mr. Pemberton was born Nov. 18, 1828, in Birmingham, England, son of Maj. William Pemberton and his wife, Mary Hall, both natives of Birmingham, and both born in 1800. Maj. Pemberton came to America in 1820, with his family, and after two years' residence at Bloomfield, N. J., located in Waterbury, Conn., entering the employ of the Scovill Manufacturing Co. While there he introduced a process for plating with gold and silver, which he had learned and worked at before leaving England, and this proved very successful, giving him an important place in the firm. They made a specialty of plate for photographing, and gold plate for officers' buttons for the army and navy. In 1852 Mr. Pemberton went to Newark, N. J., and engaged in business for himself, and his death occurred there in 1880. He was a man of strong character, an expert in his line of work, and was active in politics as an old-line Whig. At one time he served as major on the staff of Gen. Collins, of Newark, and his saddle and other articles of equipment are now preserved as a relic by a brother of our subject. In religious faith he was an Episcopalian, and he gave $500 toward the new stone edifice, erected in 1846, in Waterbury. His estimable wife died in 1886, and of their eight children only three are living: Amelia is deceased; James is mentioned more fully below; William is deceased; Thomas was killed while serving with the 14th Kansas Volunteer Cavalry; Alfred is deceased; Samuel H., who served in the Army of the Potomac throughout the Civil war, married Miss Jennie A. Root, of Waterbury, and resides in Newark, N. J., where he held office as city clerk for a number of years; Catherine is deceased; and Frederick, now a resident of Newark, N. J., served in both army and navy during the Civil war.

James Pemberton spent much of his boyhood at Waterbury, and was educated in the common schools of that town and at Cheshire Academy. He learned his father's business in the shops of the Scovill Manufacturing Co., and later was employed by Holmes, Booth & Hayden, to establish it for them. For a number of years he had charge of the department, and for a time he was with a clock company of Chicago, but in 1866 he located in Ansonia, taking a position with the O. & C. Co., as caster. Soon afterward he entered the employ of the A. B. C. Co., as caster in the Brass mills, and this work he continued until his retirement from business in 1881. As he owns a number of houses in the town, his real-estate interests require much of his time and attention. Politically he is a Republican, and he was a member of the first common council of Ansonia. In religious work he was for years an active worker in the Episcopal Church, of which he was a member, and for a number of years he served either as warden or vestryman, and for some time was superintendent of the Sunday-school. For more than forty years he has been an active Freemason, and is now a member of George Washington Lodge, and Mt. Vernon Chapter, No. 35, R. A. M., in Ansonia, and of Waterbury Council, No. 21, at Waterbury.

In 1850 Mr. Pemberton married Miss Mary J. Riggs, daughter of Garry Riggs, a tanner in Oxford, and a prominent citizen of that town. She was born in 1831, and died in 1895, and of her four sons, three are living: James R., a machinist by trade, married Jessie E. Beers, and is settled on a farm in Orange; William M., a clerk in a clothing store in New Haven, has been married twice, and has had six children: Bessie M., Lillie S., Elsie A., Alie M., William M. and Ernest L.; Edward L., the youngest, was employed for a number of years in the office of the Farrell Foundry Co., but is now in Boston, as agent for V. W. Mason, Jr., of New York.

ELI H. WAKELEE, a venerable and highly esteemed resident of Ansonia, is the oldest man now living who was born in that vicinity, and his reminiscences cover a most interesting period of the history of the section. Within his memory the city of Ansonia has been founded and developed, and when he was a boy the site of Derby, formerly Birmingham, gave no sign of its present commercial importance.

Mr. Wakelee was born July 11, 1820, in West Ansonia, and comes of good pioneer stock. His grandfather, Eli Wakelee, was born in Ansonia, and became a farmer and shoemaker by occupation. He died at the age of fifty. He married Mary Smith, who was born in Derby, and who attained the advanced age of eighty-four. They had seven sons and one daughter, all now deceased.

Watrous C. Wakelee, our subject's father, was born in West Ansonia, and learned the shoemaker's trade, but his attention was devoted chiefly to farming at the homestead in West Ansonia, now No. 220 Wakelee avenue. He was a successful farmer, owning about 200 acres of land, and as a citizen he was held in high esteem for his sound judgment and his public spirit. Politically he was a Democrat, and he served as assessor and collector, and was a candidate for other offices at various times. In religious faith he was an Episcopalian. He died in 1878, at the age of seventy-eight, and his wife, Caroline (Hawkins), a native of Ansonia, died aged eighty-two. The Hawkins family were early settlers in this county, and Lewis Hawkins, father of Mrs. Wakelee, was a well-known farmer. Our subject is one of a family of four sons, of whom two are still living, his brother Charles (aged sixty-three) being now in the West. Albert died in Ansonia, Jan. 14, 1901. David, the youngest, died in the West Sept. 20, 1880.

Until he reached the age of seventeen our subject remained at the homestead, the common schools affording him an education, and he then learned the mason's trade with Isaac P. Davis, of Seymour. He followed that trade twenty-five years, doing a profitable contract business, and then built the store now occupied by E. A. Curtiss, corner of Wakelee avenue and Jackson street. For ten years he was engaged in mercantile business there, but since selling out, in 1895, he has been looking after his real-estate interests exclusively. He bought fifty acres of the old homestead, from which he has sold a number of building lots, and he has also put up a number of houses, some of which he still owns and rents. Mr. Wakelee attends the Episcopal Church, of which his wife is a member. In politics he is a staunch Democrat, having been identified with the party since he was twenty-one years old. For more than twenty-five years he served as assessor, and held that office while Derby was still a part of the town; he served as chairman of the board of assessors longer than any other man now living in Ansonia. He also served a term as collector and one year as selectman; and for a number of years was a member of the town committee and the local board of relief.

On Jan. 12, 1853, Mr. Wakelee married Miss Amanda Chatfield, a native of Bethany. They have had one son, Frank W., a carpenter and joiner in Ansonia, who married Miss Fannie Platt and has had two children, Cora A. and Harry W., the latter of whom died when five years old. Mrs. Wakelee is a member of a well-known family, her grandfather, Phineas Terrell, having been one of the first settlers in Bethany, where he engaged in farming. Her father, Russell Chatfield, a native of Oxford, was a farmer and mason in that town, and lived to the age of ninety-one years. He married Sarah Terrell, who died at the age of eighty-four, in the same house in which she was born and married. Russell and Sarah Chatfield had five daughters, of whom three are living: Mrs. Mary M. Beecher; Mrs. Ruth M. Warner, who still resides in Ansonia with a daughter; and Mrs. Wakelee. Of the others, Mrs. Sarah A. Beecher died aged thirty-two, and Mrs. Pamela J. Todd died aged thirty. The family is much esteemed socially and has been identified with the Episcopal Church for generations.

GEORGE LEANDER WELD ranked among the substantial and most highly respected citizens of the town of Guilford, where the greater part of his useful and active life was passed. He was a native of the town, born March 12, 1814, son of George and Mabel (Fowler) Weld, and was the eldest brother of the late Capt. Frederick A. and William E. Weld, of Guilford.

Our subject received his education in the common schools, attending first in the North Guilford District, and later at Sag Harbor, L. I., whither he removed with his parents. Early in life he was engaged in farm work, later learning the trade of shoemaker, which he followed for some time, and he also engaged in carpentering and building. He finally took up his home at East River, New Haven county, settling on the old Bartlett homestead, where he passed the remainder of his days, engaging in ship carpentering in addition to agricultural pursuits. By energetic industry and good management he became quite well-to-do, and he gained the respect of his neighbors and friends by a life of integrity. In religious connection he was a member of the Episcopal Church of Guilford, and active in its work, serving as warden and vestryman in the church. His political support was given to the Democratic party. He never sought office, preferring to give his attention to his private affairs, but he took an intelligent interest in the welfare of his locality, and was well read.

On Sept. 16, 1849, Mr. Weld was married, in Guilford, to Miss Sarah Judson Bartlett, who was born Feb. 20, 1828, daughter of Joseph Bartlett, and survives him, still making her home in East River. She is an intelligent woman, well preserved, and enjoys the highest esteem of the community in which her life has been passed. Three children blessed this union: Mary Bartlett, born Oct. 27, 1855, died Nov. 9, 1865; George M. and Joseph, twins, were born Jan. 3, 1863, and the latter died Oct. 12, 1865. Mr. Weld was a kind-hearted husband and loving father, and his death, on Oct. 22, 1891, at East River, was deeply mourned. His remains rest in the East cemetery, in Guilford.

George M. Weld was born Jan. 3, 1863, received his education in the local district schools, and is employed in a shop in the town of Madison. He married Miss Lottie M. Rogers, and they have had four children: Ruth M., Mabel R., George Leon and Elsie Bartlett, all living.

THE BARTLETT FAMILY, from which Mrs. Weld is descended, is one of the oldest in Guilford, and Joseph Bartlett, the first of the name here, was a native of England. He was one of the first settlers of Guilford, where he passed the remainder of his life, dying Aug. 3, 1669. He was a deacon in the church. On Sept. 14, 1650, he married Mary Cruttenden, daughter of Abraham Cruttenden, and she survived him but a few weeks, dying Sept. 11, 1669. Children: Elizabeth, born in March, 1653, died Oct. 4, 1742, married Abraham Fowler; Mary, born Feb. 1, 1655, died Nov. 5, 1724, married Nathaniel Stone; John, born Nov. 9, 1656, died Aug. 16, 1669; Hannah, born Nov. 6, 1658, married Stephen Bishop; Deborah, born in 1660, died Dec. 4, 1692, married John Spinning; Daniel, born Dec. 14, 1665, died Nov. 14, 1747, married Sarah Meggs; Abraham, sketch of whom follows.

Abraham Bartlett, born Feb. 19, 1667, in Guilford, died Feb. 20, 1731. On June 11, 1693, he married Mary Warner, born in April, 1664, who died May 25, 1738, and they had children: Mary, born May 18, 1694, died June 9, 1755; Abraham, born March 4, 1698, died Jan. 13, 1764; Joseph, sketch of whom follows; Timothy, born March 15, 1702, died Dec. 1, 1773, married Susanna Cruttenden; Ebenezer, born Nov. 6, 1704, died Oct. 19, 1777.

Capt. Joseph Bartlett, born in Guilford Oct. 24, 1699, died Aug. 29, 1760. On June 9, 1726, he married Mindwell Cruttenden, born in 1706, died Sept. 24, 1769. Children: Joseph, sketch of whom follows; Mindwell, born May 17, 1730, died Nov. 3, 1808, married Samuel Chittenden; Abraham, born Jan. 12, 1734, married Submit Everts; Ruth, born in October, 1735, died Dec. 21, 1831, married Miles Griswold; Samuel, born Feb. 10, 1742, married Abigail Ingraham.

Joseph Bartlett, born Sept. 8, 1727, died July 23, 1812, in Guilford. On Dec. 30, 1756, he married Sarah Cruttenden, born Feb. 2, 1735, died June 13, 1818. Children: Joseph, born Nov. 8, 1757, died Aug. 23, 1787; Sarah, born Oct. 21, 1762, died Feb. 5, 1773; Amos, born June 23, 1764, died July 12, 1836, married Anna Dudley; Noah, sketch of whom follows; Hannah, born Sept. 4, 1778, died March 14, 1858, married Timothy Dudley.

Noah Bartlett, born Aug. 27, 1766, died Jan. 17, 1837. On June 23, 1799, he married Sally Judson, born Nov. 27, 1775, died Jan. 25, 1867. Children: Joseph, sketch of whom follows; Sally, born Nov. 20, 1799, died July 21, 1866, married Horace Munger; Polly, born Nov. 20, 1801, died Nov. 14, 1876, married Joel Griswold, of Guilford.

Joseph Bartlett, father of Mrs. Weld, born July 24, 1797, was one of the leading business men of Guilford in his day, keeping store at East River, and also conducting a hotel at that place, where he spent his life. He owned vessels, in which he shipped his produce to New York and other markets, and was also a large land owner and dealer in stock. In the management of his various interests he became widely known, and his reputation was untarnished by any doubts as to his uprightness and integrity. During his busy career he accumulated a comfortable competence, and he was regarded as one of the substantial men of his locality. Mr. Bartlett passed away Jan. 5, 1864, at East River, and his remains rest in the East cemetery. He attended the Congregational Church, and in politics was first a Whig, later a Republican.

On March 15, 1827, Mr. Bartlett married Mary Ann Cruttenden, who was born May 21, 1798, daughter of Bela Cruttenden, and died Aug. 15, 1876. One child blessed their union, Sarah Judson, who is now the widow of George L. Weld.

HON. SAMUEL H. CHITTENDEN, at present serving in the Connecticut State Senate from the Sixth District, is a native of New Haven county, born Nov. 18, 1845, on the old Chittenden homestead at East River, in the town of Madison. He is a descendant of (1) William Chittenden, one of the original settlers of Guilford, who came to the town in 1639, and was prominent in public affairs, serving as magistrate of the Plantation and deputy to the General Court until his death.

(11) Sergt. John Chittenden, fourth child of William, was born in 1643, and died in Guilford in April, 1716. On Dec. 12, 1665, he married Hannah Fletcher, daughter of John Fletcher, and they had six children: John, born Oct. 19, 1666; Elizabeth, Jan. 20, 1670 (she married Thomas Cruttenden); Joseph, March 20, 1672 (married Mary Kimberly); Gideon, Sept. 23, 1678, died 1679; Abel, May 14, 1681 (married Deborah Scranton); Lydia, March 30, 1684 (married William Hall).

(III) John Chittenden, son of Sergt. John, born Oct. 19, 1666, died in February, 1710. On March 13, 1701, he married Sarah Clay, who was born March 5, 1674, and died April 5, 1717. Her parents, Joseph and Mary (Lord) Clay, were of Guilford and Saybrook, Conn., respectively. Two children were born of this union: John, June 8, 1702 (married Bathsheba Cruttenden); and Samuel, Aug. 16, 1704.

(IV) Samuel Chittenden, son of John, born Aug. 16, 1704, married Nov. 7, 1726, Susanna Bishop, who was born Jan. 12, 1704, daughter of Samuel and Abigail (Wetmore) Bishop, and died Nov. 8, 1747. On Sept. 8, 1748, he married Mrs. Phyllis (Burgis) Johnson, widow of Nathaniel Johnson, and daughter of Thomas and Mercy (Wright) Burgis. She was born March 1, 1716, and died Oct. 12, 1760, and on Jan. 13, 1762, Mr. Chittenden married Hulda Fowler, who was born March 6, 1723, daughter of Ebenezer and Elizabeth (Starr) Fowler, and died Nov. 17, 1820, at the ripe age of nearly ninety-eight years. The children of Samuel Chittenden were: Samuel, born Nov. 2, 1727 (married Mindwell Bartlett); Nathaniel, Aug. 1, 1730 (died 1730); Nathaniel (2), June 2, 1732; Susannah, June 2, 1832 (married John Crampton); Noah, July 31, 1734 (married Elizabeth Crampton); Sarah, July 9, 1739 (married Miles Griswold); Benjamin, mentioned below.

(V) Benjamin Chittenden, son of Samuel, born Nov. 23, 1749, spent his life in Guilford, and died Sept. 1, 1820. On Jan. 16, 1777, he married Mabel Dudley, who was born Nov. 22, 1751, daughter of Thomas and Abigail (Seward) Dudley, and died Feb. 11, 1795. They had two children: Samuel, born Nov. 12, 1777; and Joel, born Nov. 13, 1785, who married Sally Carter. For his second wife Benjamin Chittenden married, Feb. 10, 1796, Lucy Fowler, who died June 9, 1835, aged seventy-three years.

(VI) Samuel Chittenden, son of Benjamin, born Nov. 12, 1777, was a farmer and land owner, and spent his life in the town of Madison, dying Feb. 23, 1846. On March 31, 1803, he married Lauranda Collins, born Dec. 22, 1774, daughter of Joel and Bethya (Hall) Collins, the former of Guilford, the latter of Wallingford, Conn. This wife died July 3, 1805, and in 1808 he married Amanda Kelsey, who was a daughter of Preston and Clarissa (Graves) Kelsey, of East Guilford, and passed away Oct. 22, 1811, at the early age of twenty-four years. In April, 1813, Mr. Chittenden wedded Sally Warner, who was born July 14, 1790, daughter of Chapman Warner, of Hadlyme, Conn., and died Feb. 9, 1864. He was the father of seven children: Lauranda C., born May 19, 1809, married Timothy H. Lee; Samuel Conklin, born Sept. 22, 1811, is mentioned below; Henry A., born May 31, 1814, died Dec. 25, 1834; Hosmer Ely, born Feb. 10, 1816, was lost at sea Oct. 6, 1844, on the brig "Ocean;" Chapman W., born Dec. 27, 1818, died Dec. 28, 1880; William F. was born Aug. 1, 1825; and John Newton, born Dec. 25, 1827, married Elizabeth Cruttenden.

(VII) Samuel Conklin Chittenden, father of the gentleman whose name introduces this sketch, was born Sept. 22, 1811, on the homestead, and was for many years extensively engaged in the lumber business at East River, embarking in that industry before the building of the New Haven & New London railroad, of which he was one of the original projectors and stockholders. During the early years his lumber was brought in sailing vessels from Maine and Albany. He also engaged in the manufacture of sash and blinds, in which line he was quite successful, and he was ever regarded as one of the prosperous, substantial citizens of his town, continuing to reside on the old family homestead at East River, where his widow still makes her home. On Feb. 8, 1843, Mr. Chittenden married Miss Amanda A. Munger, born Nov. 27, 1813, daughter of George and Parnel (Kelsey) Munger, and children were born to this union as follows: Samuel H., Nov. 18, 1845; Clarissa, March 1, 1848 (died March 3, 1848); George Benjamin, Dec. 25, 1849. The last named was married Dec. 25, 1876, to Miss Ella Spencer Delano, who was born in 1857 in Washington, D. C., and they have had three children: Myra D., born Feb. 2, 1879; Horace W., born Aug. 25, 1880; and Marjorie L. Samuel C. Chittenden passed away Dec. 3, 1886, at his home in East River. Originally a Whig in politics, he finally united with the Republican party, but he was never an office seeker. In religious connection he was a Congregationalist, and his widow is also a member of that church, being a devout Christian. She is a lady of culture and intelligence, and enjoys the unbounded esteem of all who know her.

Samuel H. Chittenden was reared in the town of his birth, and after acquiring his rudimentary education in the public schools fitted for college at Guilford Institute and Lee's Academy, Madison. In 1867 he graduated from the Sheffield Scientific School of Yale, and a few years later took an additional course, receiving the second degree of C. E. In February, 1868, under the patronage of Cornelius S. Bushnell, then a director of the Union Pacific railroad, he was given an opportunity to commence work at his profession, becoming a civil engineer on that road. At that time the end of their track was only a few miles west of Cheyenne. Mr. Chittenden, joining the field party of Maj. Lawrence, traveled from the end of the track with freight wagons through the Indian country, the party having an escort of United States cavalry, and commenced work on location through the Bitter Creek section, later moving west to Echo Canon and the location over the Wahsatch Summit. During 1868 and 1869 the road was built and running to a connection with the Central Pacific road west of Salt Lake City, and some unprecedentedly rapid work was done, especially in grading and track laying. Mr. Chittenden continued with the road, doing general engineer work, until 1876, after which, for about a year, he was engaged on the Quinnipiac bridge, at Fair Haven, Conn. His next work was in Alabama, on the Mussel Shoals improvement of the Tennessee river and Coosa river, in Georgia, as assistant engineer under Maj. W. R. Ring, of the United States Engineers. Between 1880 and 1890 he was engaged with his brother, George B. Chittenden, in mining in Arizona and New Mexico, and in general engineering and contracting in Washington, D. C., and among other undertakings we may mention the enlarged dam across the Potomac river, at Great Falls, to increase the water supply of the city, which he built.

In 1890 Mr. Chittenden retired from his profession, and he has since lived in comparative retirement at his old home in New Haven county, where he has taken an active part in local interests. The year of his return he was elected clerk of the town of Madison, in which office he has ever since served, and he is also judge of probate, discharging the duties of both offices with a satisfaction which has fully warranted the confidence placed in him by his fellow citizens. In 1898 he was further honored by election to the State Senate, on the Republican ticket, and he has since served in that responsible incumbency with becoming dignity, displaying a high sense of duty in the performance of the duties connected therewith. He has been the efficient chairman of the committees on Humane Institutions and New Counties and County Seats, and has won the universal respect of his colleagues by his integrity and uprightness. Mr. Chittenden's call to public service from the time of his return to his native place is sufficient evidence of the affectionate esteem in which he is held by his fellow citizens, and he is a worthy representative of one of the oldest families in the State, one whose members have ever been loyal to the best interests of the Commonwealth. Senator Chittenden is unmarried. He has been a member of the American Society of Civil Engineers since 1876.

EDWARD A. THOMSON, justice of the peace and postmaster at Brooksville, has for several years been prominently identified with the business and agricultural interests of Cheshire, as well as the political affairs of that town. In connection with the operation of his farm he is engaged in merchandising, and in all his undertakings has met with a fair degree of success.

Mr. Thomson was born in Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 22, 1836, a son of Henry Williams and Lydia Witter (Button) Thomson. The father was also a native of Massachusetts, born Dec. 4, 1805, and was a tanner by trade. He also taught music. He died in Stockbridge Nov. 15, 1840, and his wife subsequently came to New Haven, Conn., where she died May 6, 1873. In their family were six children: Henry W., who was a merchant, died in New Haven; he was a deacon in the United Church on the Green. Sarah Eliza became the wife of Robert Bird, of Atlanta, Ga. David W., a member of the firm of Thomson & Co., safe manufacturers, died in New Haven. Jeannie died in the same city. Edward A. is our subject. Giles G. was a partner with his brother David in the safe manufacturing company of New Haven; he went to the war as a member of the New Haven Grays.

At the age of six years Edward Augustus Thomson accompanied his mother on her removal to New Haven, where he attended the public schools for a time. From the age of eight until he was seventeen he lived in the town of Morris, Litchfield county. He began his business career as a clerk with the firm of Thomson Brothers, grocers and dealers in flour, in State street, New Haven, and in 1873 opened a feed store in Grand avenue, where he continued in business alone until 1880. In 1884 he removed to Cheshire, and on disposing of his store in New Haven purchased a part of the Charles Brooks farm, which he now cultivates. He is an enterprising and progressive business man, of known reliability, and the success that has come to him has been worthily achieved.

On Feb. 22, 1869, in New Haven, Mr. Thomson married Miss Elizabeth Lawton, a native of that city, and a daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth (Goodwin) Lawton. Her father, who was also born in New Haven, was editor of the New Haven Morning News, and he also owned a brass foundry in State street, and an iron foundry in Grand avenue, manufacturing ear wheels. He died in New Haven and his wife is still living. By this union Mr. Thomson had four children, namely: Elizabeth, wife of John Seymour Dolph, a resident of North Guilford; Jane B., wife of Cornell Green, of South Willington, Conn.; Edward A., deceased; and George W., a resident of Hamden, New Haven county. For his second wife Mr. Thomson married Miss Mary Eliza Allen, also a native of New Haven, by whom he has one son, Edward Allen. Mrs. Thomson's parents were Ebenezer and Martha (Bunnell) Allen, the former born in Vermont March 17, 1805, the latter in New Haven March 1, 1806. They were married in Fair Haven, this county, April 19, 1826, and made their home in New Haven, where the mother died June 5, 1887, the father June 5, 1893, in Pierpont street. By occupation he was a joiner and ship carpenter. He was one of the oldest and best known Freemasons in the State, being a charter member of Pulaski Chapter and Crawford Council, and generalissimo of New Haven Commandery, K. T. To him and his wife were born eleven children, namely: Henry, born Feb. 11, 1827, was in the United States navy, and died Jan. 1, 1869; Lavina died in infancy; Sherman, born Sept. 8, 1830, died Sept. 13, 1830; Sarah, born May 1, 1832, died May 7, 1832; Noah L., born Aug. 14, 1833, was also in the navy, and now resides in New Haven; Oliver B., born Jan. 8, 1837, enlisted at New Haven in the 9th Conn. V. I. during the Civil war, remained in the service until its close, and died Sept. 24, 1887; Ebenezer G., born Feb. 27, 1840, was a lieutenant of Company K, 10th Conn. V. I., during the Civil war, and died March 18, 1865, from disease contracted in the service; Martha, born Aug. 31, 1843, is now Mrs. Starkweather, of Mansfield, Conn.; George B., born Jan. 1, 1847, lives in Boston; Ellen J., born Nov. 21, 1849, makes her home in New Haven; and Mary E., born Aug. 5, 1853, is the wife of Mr. Thomson.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Thomson are members of the Episcopal Church of New Haven. They are quite prominent socially in the town where they now reside. As a Republican he has always taken an active interest in political affairs, and is now serving his second term as a justice of the peace, and his sixth year as postmaster at Brooksvale. He is thoroughly impartial in meting out justice, and has proved a most trustworthy and capable official.

JAMES AVERY DAVIS. The Davis family of Hamden, New Haven county, at the head of which was the late Edward Davis, whose two sons, William E. and James A., constitute the extensive brick manufacturing firm of W. E. Davis & Co., of New Haven, is a branch of the old Davis family, of Willington, Connecticut.

From Avery Davis, a prosperous farmer of Stafford, a native of the town of Willington, Tolland county, and a son of Avery Davis, came the members of that family in Stafford, Hamden and New Haven. Avery Davis married Hannah Tyler, a daughter of Deacon Samuel Lyon, of the same town, and their children were: Charles, Eliza, Mary, Edward, William, Samuel (sketch of whom appears elsewhere) and John. Avery Davis passed his life in agricultural pursuits in Stafford, and there died at the age of seventy-eight years. His youngest son, John, was born in 1826, and married Amelia, daughter of Joseph Allen, of Ellington. He settled in Rockville, where he became a large holder of real estate, over which that city later spread, making him wealthy. Davis avenue there was named for him. The old Davis homestead at Stafford finally fell into his hands, and he long occupied it, engaged in farming. He died in January, 1899, in Rockville, where he lived the most of his life.

Edward Davis, son of Avery, and the father of William E., James A. and Burton A., was born in 1818 in Stafford, and in 1837 established himself on a farm in Hamden, coming to that town with his brother, Samuel. By his upright life and exemplary habits he won the profound respect of the community. He was selectman of the town and assessor, and also filled other positions of trust and responsibility. In 1841 he was married to Betsy M. Augur, daughter of James and Almyra (Ford) Augur, and a member of an old New England family. She was born in Whitneyville, and spent her life in that part of Hamden. She early identified herself with the Whitneyville Congregational Church, and always took a deep interest in its welfare, and lived a busy, useful life, but one which always seemed serene and peaceful. In her later years she became, indeed, "a mother in Israel." She was a constant reader and deep thinker, the subject of temperance and missions being of special interest to her. Thoroughly good and lovable, she left to her children a legacy of precious memories. Her death occurred Aug. 16, 1889, and she was buried in the Whitneyville cemetery by the side of her husband. Children as follows were born to their union: (1) James A., born June 6, 1844, in the town of Hamden, is mentioned farther on. (2) Betsy Maria, born April 12, 1846, is the wife of George W. Ives, of Hamden, by whom she had two children, Alfred and Lucy, the latter deceased. (3) William E., born in 1848, married Sophia Tamblingson, and has three children, William Edward, Jr., Jessie and Harold M. (4) Carrie M., born in 1860, died at the age of sixteen years; she was attending the New Haven high school at the time of her decease. (5) Burton A., born Sept. 15, 1862, married Martha E. Augur, and has one daughter, Marjorie, and one son, Minett. (6) Myra L., born in 1865, married William T. Burton, of Hamden, and died Feb. 1, 1901. She was the mother of John Edward, Ralph William and Donald Hepburn.

After his marriage Edward Davis located on the farm where his son, Burton A., now lives. Although he began life a poor boy, with only a common-school education, he prospered in his undertakings, as he was industrious, enterprising and energetic, and he became a large land owner and extensive farmer. In fact, he was one of the successful men of Hamden in his day. During the latter years of his life he devoted his attention to the dairy business. He was a man of good common sense and sound judgment. When he began life his capital consisted only of energy and business tact, which latter trait was apparent from his youth. He was a disciplinarian, and his management of his affairs, public or private, was such as to secure the best results, for though stern in some respects, he could be indulgent, and was a good judge of human nature. Mr. Davis was well known and his acquaintance included many of the prominent men in the business and financial circles of New Haven. He reared an excellent family, to whom he left not only a comfortable competence, but a name which can be pointed to with pride. His tastes were domestic, and his heart always in his home and family, and he never sought or cared for political preferment, taking an interest in politics solely as a public-spirited citizen. He contributed liberally to the support of the Whitneyville Congregational Church, of which he was a leading member.

James A. Davis was reared on the farm, and spent his boyhood and early youth after the fashion of the times, helping in the farm work during the season, and attending school during the winter. His schooling was terminated by a course of study in the private school kept by Prof. Edwin Robbins, in State street, New Haven. In 1872 he became a resident of New Haven, and engaged in contract work for private parties as well as for the improvement of the city. After a very few years, in company with his brother, William E., and William J. Atwater, he established the New Haven Concrete Co., and for some years pressed the business vigorously. In 1882 the two brothers established the business of the present firm of William E. Davis & Co., beginning the manufacture of brick in the town of Hamden, with an office in Orange street, New Haven. Since that time these gentlemen, through their energy, industry and ability, have secured an extensive patronage throughout this part of the State. They have a large and modern plant, where they make building, face and moulded brick.

For ten years, beginning with 1877, James A. Davis leased and operated the Whitney avenue horse car line. When he took charge he found that it had, in four years of operation, run behind $7,200, but under his management it was soon put upon a paying basis and soon yielded handsome returns. For a period in the eighties he was a member of the firm of C. B. & J. A. Davis, of Holyoke, which had a general contracting business. He is also one of the proprietors of the large horse boarding and sales stables, in Holyoke, Mass., of which C. B. Davis is the manager, and the active member of the firm.

Mr. Davis in his political views is a loyal Republican, but in local matters he selects the best men. He has never sought office. He is a member of the Union League Club, of New Haven. Mr. Davis has many of the characteristics of his honored father, with whom he was very closely associated. He is a plain-going, out-spoken man, easily understood, detesting deception of any kind. He attends closely to business, yet has enjoyed many pleasure trips to the South and elsewhere with his wife, and has not lived a life of self denial. In disposition jovial and self-reliant, he is one of the best known men in and around New Haven.

Mr. Davis was married, Jan. 6, 1875, to Sarah Emma Parks, of Bridgeport, Conn., and four children were born to them: James E. (who died in infancy), Emma, Helen and Howard. Mrs. Davis died Nov. 26, 1896, and Mr. Davis was married, Dec. 29, 1898, to Mrs. Lizzie G. (Dickerman) Dutton, a native of Hamden, and daughter of Albert and Jeanette (Andrews) Dickerman, coming from one of the oldest and most numerous families of Hamden. Mr. Davis has a most comfortable home in Orange street, New Haven. In religion he is a Congregationalist, holding membership in the Whitneyville Church.

CHARLES H. BRONSON is a native of Waterbury, born Oct. 5, 1835, a son of Julius G. and Julia (Newton) Bronson.

Ebenezer Bronson, the great-grandfather of our subject, located in Waterbury, in pioneer times, and became the owner of a large tract of land in what is now the city itself. He was a life-long farmer. Amasa Bronson, the grandfather of Charles H., was born in Waterbury in 1705, and died in 1866 at the age of 101 years, never having had a sick day. At the time of his death he was the oldest man in the State. He was a wealthy farmer and owned a large amount of real estate in Waterbury, comprising practically all of the western portion of the town. During the Revolutionary war he enlisted in the army, but peace was declared before he had an opportunity for active service. He and his wife, Sarah (Frost) Bronson, who lived to the age of ninety-four years, were members of the Episcopal Church, and very regular attendants. They had a family of seven children, all now deceased.

Julius G. Bronson was born and reared in Waterbury, and engaged in farming upon a part of the old homestead. In public affairs he was also prominent, holding various offices, and he died at the comparatively early age of fifty-seven. He was a selectman of the town at one time, and was a lieutenant in the State Militia. For many years he was a leading member of St. John's Church. His wife, Julia Newton, was born in Waterbury, and died in 1841, aged thirty-five. She was one of five children of Nathan Newton, who died at forty-three, and his wife, who died at ninety-two years of age. Charles H. Bronson is one of a family of four children, the others being as follows: Henry and Durand both died young; Samuel M. lives in Hartford, and mention of him will be found elsewhere.

Charles H. Bronson received his education in country schools near Waterbury, and when fifteen years old went to Woodbury, Conn., where he entered the employ of the American Shear Co., with whom he remained some six years; then returned to Waterbury, and worked for the Wheeler & Wilson Co., one year, after which he was engaged as follows: For two years, along with his brother Samuel M., he operated a gristmill at Oakville, Conn.; next was with the Adams Express Co. (Waterbury) three years; then three years with J. S. Castle, manufacturer of soda water, etc.; after this he was in the employ of the Holmes Booth & Haydens Mfg. Co., sixteen years; then was proprietor of a meat market about eighteen months; after which, along with his son Frank M., he was engaged in the feed business seven years. In 1893 Mr. Bronson became connected with the Waterbury Hospital as superintendent of the grounds, which position he now holds.

On June 4, 1857, Mr. Bronson married Helen M. Oviette, of New Milford, who died March 25, 1858, aged twenty-one years, the mother of one child that died in infancy. On Oct. 12, 1859, Mr. Bronson wedded Mary E. Roberts, who was born in Wakefield, N. H., a daughter of Simon and Esther (Nason) Roberts, also natives of New Hampshire. Mrs. Bronson was eleven years old when she came to Connecticut. To our subject and his wife were born six children, as follows: Ellen, Frank M., Carrie, George, Arthur and May. Of these, Ellen died in infancy, George when aged three years; Frank M. and Arthur are mechanics in Waterbury; Carrie is the wife of Reuben T. Brewer, of Waterbury; May is the wife of Benjamin M. Beebe, engaged in the drug business in Bridgeport, Conn. In religious faith the Bronsons have always been Baptists. Fraternally Mr. Bronson is a member of the F. & A. M.; in politics he is a Republican.

JUDGE JOHN B. QUILLINAN, late one of Ansonia's leading citizens, was born Dec. 25, 1831, in County Tipperary, Ireland, where his family has resided for generations. They were people of culture, and our subject's grandfather, John Quillinan, was educated in Spain before settling down to life as a farmer at the old home, where he died at the age of sixty-six. Our subject's grandmother, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Dwyer, was born in the same locality and died at the advanced age of ninety-four, leaving a large family of children.

John Quillinan (2), our subject's father, was born at the old home in Ireland and was educated in France. His death occurred at his native place at the age of thirty-six. He married Miss Johanna Buckley, a native of Ireland, and one of the four children of James Buckley, a well known merchant. She lived to the age of seventy-six and of their four children one is still living: Elizabeth, who married James Reilly. The family have always been connected with the Catholic Church.

The Judge's education was begun in private schools in Ireland with the intention, it is said, of preparing him for the priesthood. When sixteen years old he ran away and came to America, locating in Connecticut in November, 1847. For some time he worked on a farm in Oxford, and in August, 1849, he came to Ansonia to work in a brick yard. At the end of the season he returned to Oxford, and for several years he followed farming and brickmaking, alternately, according to the demand for labor. In the fall of 1851 he went to New Orleans, and during the following winter he set type in the office of the Point Coupee Echo, published in Point Coupee Parish, La. After his return to Connecticut in May, 1852, he resumed the work of farming and brickmaking, but his strong desire for better education led him to enter, in October, 1854, the New York Conference Seminary, at Charlotteville, Schoharie county, N. Y., a celebrated school which was well patronized by the people of Connecticut. There he had as classmates many of the noted men of today, governors, senators, and judges, but he maintained a high standing among them. At the end of a year he was obliged to return to the farm to replenish his funds, and in April, 1856, he entered Fairfield Seminary, in Herkimer county, N. Y., where he remained three years, supporting himself by working in the hay fields during the summer vacations and teaching in winter. In April, 1860, he went to Hamden, Conn., to engage in brickmaking, and in the spring of 1864 he returned to Ansonia, where he rebuilt an old and disused brick yard in Beaver street. In October of that year he went to Demerara, British Guiana, to construct a brick yard for other parties, but he returned in the following spring to his interests in Ansonia and Derby, which afterward occupied his attention. On retiring from brickmaking in 1867 he engaged in dairy farming and in the wood business, and about 1870 he built the first ice house on the site now occupied by the Ansonia Ice Co. He saw the growth of the town from a population of 1,300 to 13,000, being one of the oldest residents and when he built his residence on Beaver street near the present ice house there was but one house near. In the work of the organization and development of the town he took an active and influential part. From 1867 he was almost continuously in office, and he served thirteen years as clerk of the 4th school district, known as the North End, seven years as Burgess of the borough, three years as warden, four years as collector of taxes, and at different times has been a grand juror. In 1868 he was elected one of the assessors of the town of Derby, Sturges Whitlock and the late Watrous Wakelee being the others. In 1876 he was elected judge of probate for the district of Derby for the term of two years, and in 1887 he was elected first selectman and town agent for the old town of Derby. He had a legal turn of mind and studied law, although he never applied for admission at the Bar, and for a great many years he held the office of justice of the peace, having at one time tried most of the cases arising in Ansonia, both civil and criminal. In the settlement of estates, and work of a similar nature, he also won a high reputation. He took keen interest in educational affairs, and was chairman of the committee that built the present high school building, one of the finest in the State. The Judge was a Democrat until 1882, when he found that he could no longer act with a party advocating a tariff that he considered practically free trade. In 1884 he stumped the State for James G. Blaine speaking thirty-one times during the campaign, and he was ever after a firm supporter of the principles of the Republican party.

In 1858 the Judge married Miss Betsy Leek, a native of Hamden, where her ancestors were pioneer settlers. Her father, Michael Leek, who lived to the age of ninety, was a farmer by occupation and spent his life in New Haven county with the exception of four years' residence in Michigan. Her mother, whose maiden name was Amanda Sperry, was born in Bethany, and lived to the age of sixty-four. Mrs. Quillinan was one of a family of three children, but she is now the only survivor. Three children were born to her marriage with our subject, but all died in infancy. Socially the Judge was highly esteemed, and he was for many years an active member of the Episcopal Church of which his widow is also a communicant. His death occurred Sept. 13, 1900.

HENRY COTE, of Mixville, is an important factor in the business circles of his locality, and his popularity in Cheshire is well deserved, as in him are embraced the characteristics of an unbending integrity, unabated industry and energy that never flags. He is engaged in the manufacture of light hardware, and is at the head of one of the leading industries of the town.

Mr. Cote was born in St. Hyacinthe, Canada, in 1833, a son of John and Cecelia (Vincent) Cote, also natives of that country. The father, who was a joiner by trade, was accidentally killed in his native land Nov. 20, 1880. Of their eleven children only five are now living. At the age of four years Henry Cote was taken to Vermont, where he made his home until coming to Cheshire, at the age of sixteen years, arriving here in September, 1849. The same year Mr. Cote entered the employ of John W. Mix, for whom he worked until 1876, when he became a member of the firm of J. W. Mix & Co. The building which formerly occupied the site of our subject's present factory, was erected by Mr. Mix in 1849, and the following year the John Mix Manufacturing Co. was organized. In 1876 the name was changed to the J. W. Mix & Co. Edge Tool Co., the members of the firm being J. W. Mix, William Bailey and Henry Cote, our subject, who carried on business until 1884, when the machinery was sold to the Peck, Stow & Wilcox Co., and moved to Southington, Conn. Mr. Cote continued to own the building, and in 1891 he re-opened the shop and resumed business, but finally, in 1893 leased the property to A. T. Bishop, of Southington. The old building was burned Nov. 16, 1893, and the following year he erected the one he now occupies, a good frame structure, 22x60 feet in dimensions. The plant is equipped with good new machinery, and employment is given to from five to seven men, manufacturing all kinds of light hardware, ferrules, bicycle attachments, knife sharpeners, etc. During his residence here Mr. Cote has steadily prospered, and besides his business property, he owns a good farm of forty acres in Cheshire, devoting a part of his time to agriculture.

On Jan. 3, 1853, Mr. Cote married Miss Maria

S. Talmadge, a daughter of James and Sylvia (Russell) Talmadge, who were born in Cheshire, of English and Irish ancestry. The father died there in 1855, the mother in 1897. The other children of their family were Hannah, who married Reuben Benham, and died in Birmingham, Conn., in 1881; and Justus and Jesse, twins, both of whom died in 1853, the former Aug. 16, and the latter July 17. Mr. and Mrs. Cote have had four children, three of whom are still living: Eddie, who is married and resides in Waterbury, Conn.; Emma, Mrs. Culver, who makes her home in New Haven; and Frederick, married and living in Pittsburg, Penn., where he is superintendent of some department in the employ of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. For some time he was secretary of the Y. M. C. A. work in New Haven; later at different places in North Carolina; and was then secretary at Bellefonte, Pa., from which place he went to Pittsburg, to enter upon his present duties.

SILAS NOEL EDMONDS, now living a retired life in Wallingford, was during his active years one of the best known men in the employ of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, and faithfully served the company for forty years as station agent in Wallingford. Belonging to old Southern stock, he possesses the genial and hospitable spirit to be expected from such notable ancestry. Mr. Edmonds was born in the town of Westmoreland, Westmoreland Co., Va., Feb. 23, 1828. The Edmonds family is of English origin, and in the mother country its various members were prominent people, and held important positions under the Crown.

Amos Edmonds, the first of the name in America, was a native of Manchester, England, where he was high sheriff under the king. Coming to America, he located in Westmoreland county, Va., and became a large landed proprietor and an extensive slave owner.

Vincent Edmonds, the grandfather of Silas N., was a planter of extensive means, and was overseer of the plantation of Gen. Washington, their land adjoining. Vincent Edmonds fought in the Revolution in the regiment which was under command of Gen. Langdon, and was an officer in the army. When peace returned he resumed his tranquil life on the Westmoreland plantation, where he lived and died. In politics he was a Federalist, and in religion a Baptist. Twice married, he was the father of five children: Meredith, New Year, Julia, Frances and John, all of whom died in Virginia.

Meredith Edmonds, father of Silas N., was born on the Edmonds plantation in Westmoreland county, and was reared and educated on the paternal homestead. For a number of years he followed the sea, and, locating at Alexandria, Va., was captain and part owner of a vessel which was engaged in the West Indies trade. A slave owner by inheritance, he never sold or bought slaves, and gave them all their freedom when of age. Taking a deep interest in the cause of education, he was himself one of the finest mathematicians in the State of Virginia. He died in 1843, in Alexandria, where he was buried. He held Democratic convictions, but had no aspirations for political honors or emoluments of official station. Meredith Edmonds married in Westmoreland county Mary Cauthern, a native of that county, and to their union were born eight children: (1) Roberta married Charles B. Miller, and is now living in Palo Alto, Cal.; (2) Frances (now deceased) married Capt. John Kendrick, who preceded her to the grave; (3) Jane A. married John H. Parr, and both died in Baltimore; (4) Silas Noel is mentioned below; (5) Albert died in Ohio; (6) Henry died in Baltimore; (7) James is in the United States navy, and was in the late Spanish war; (8) Milton died in the Civil war while serving under Gen. McClellan. Mrs. Edmonds died in Washington in December, 1845. She was a member of the Baptist Church, and a woman of the most estimable character.

Silas Noel Edmonds attended the city schools of Alexandria, and was only fifteen years old when his father died. The following year he removed to Baltimore, where he served an apprenticeship at the carpenter's trade with Charles Webb, a contract builder of that city, remaining with him until he came of age. Young Edmonds had nothing with which to face the world except his trade. In 1849 he came to Wallingford, and worked at his trade for five years, building in that time several of the more pretentious homes of the town. In 1855 he went to Georgetown, S. C., and built one of the largest and stateliest homes in that part of the State. In 1856 he came back to Wallingford, and was appointed station agent of the Hartford & New Haven Railroad, and at the same time was made agent of the Adams Express Co. For over forty years he filled these positions of trust and responsibility with satisfaction to the company and the public, as well as with credit to himself. During these years he witnessed the growth of a small railroad to the great corporation now known as the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad. In the beginning only one man was employed about the depot, now there are fifteen. Mr. Edmonds superintended the construction of his own depot, freight house and other buildings, and during forty years took only one vacation. He was retired by the company at his own request, in consideration of his long and devoted services.

Mr. Edmonds was married in 1852 to Miss Seraphina Reynolds, who was born in Wallingford, daughter of Judge John D. and Lydia (Scarrett) Reynolds. Her father was a judge of probate in the towns of Wallingford, Branford and Cheshire, and was the son of Hezekiah Reynolds, well known to the last generation.

Mr. Edmonds belongs to the Blue lodge, holding membership in Compass Lodge, F. & A. M. He attends the Episcopal Church, in which he has served as vestryman. He is one of the oldest Democrats of Wallingford, and has served on the school board for five years. He was a member of the building committee when the high school was erected, and did valuable service in that connection. For two years he was a member of the court of burgesses.

LOREN RUSSELL CARTER, prominent in real estate business, fire insurance, loans, etc., Waterbury, is a native of Connecticut, born Oct. 16, 1854, in Warren, Litchfield county.

Russell Carter, his father, was of the same nativity, born in 1792, a son of Buel Carter, who was born in 1766 in Warren, Conn., a son of Samuel (born in Hebron, Conn.), a son of Thomas Sr. (born in 1684, in Woburn, Mass.), a son of Thomas (born in England.) Of these, Samuel (great-grandfather of Loren R.) and his two brothers, Thomas and Joseph, all served in the Revolutionary war. This same Samuel Carter married on May 4, 1759, Martha Buel, of Litchfield, Conn., and settled on a farm in Warren, where they reared a family of eleven children; he represented Warren in the State Legislature in 1788 and 1797.

Buel Carter, grandfather of Loren R., was reared on the home farm in Warren, Conn., and died there in 1856. He married Eunice Peck, and by her had three children: (1) Martha (now deceased) married Burton Gilbert, a merchant, who accumulated considerable means. (2) Loraine married George Starr, a son of Rev. Peter Starr, who for fifty years was a minister of the Congregational Church in Warren; George Starr was a farmer and died in Warren. (3) Russell was the youngest.

Russell Carter, father of our subject, was a farmer in Warren, Conn., thence moving to Waterbury in 1856, where he died in 1870. He was twice married, first to Rebecca Stone, by whom he had two children, Buel and Harriet, of whom Buel died in May, 1900, in Warren, on the old homestead—the dwelling having been built about one hundred years ago; and Harriet (now deceased) married Charles V. Molthrop. Russell Carter married (second) Laura Hills, a daughter of John Hills (who was born in Glastonbury, Conn., and was a farmer by occupation) and his wife, Esther Hale (also of Glastonbury, and a collateral relative of Nathan Hale, of Revolutionary fame). Three children were born to this union, viz.: Rebecca, who died at the age of sixteen years; Loren R., our subject; Eleanor, who died when five years old. The mother is still living, now aged seventy-seven years, and makes her home in Waterbury, with her son, Loren R. Russell Carter was in politics a Democrat, and he represented the town of Warren in the State Legislature several times; was also a selectman—in fact held most of the town offices, being prominently identified with the place.

Loren R. Carter, the subject proper of this memoir, was about eighteen months old when his parents came to Waterbury, and here he attended the public schools, Wesleyan Academy and Eastman Business College. Laying aside his books, he was with F. L. Allen, hardware merchant, Waterbury, for some time, and then commenced building houses in the western part of the city, in 1892 taking up the business of real-estate, fire insurance, loans, etc. He is owner of considerable improved real estate in the town and city of Waterbury.

On Sept. 20, 1879, Lo en R. Carter married Irene E. Hendrick, of Waterbury, a daughter of Joseph Hendrick, a native of New York city, whose father was born in England. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Carter: L. Russell, who is attending Yale College, Academic department; Earl Buel and Ethel L. In religious faith our subject and his wife are Baptists; in politics he is a Republican; and socially, he is affiliated with Townsend Lodge, No. 89, I. O. O. F.

GEORGE W. DIVINE (deceased). In every community there dwell men who rise by their own inherent ability to a recognized position as leaders in the social, intellectual and political life of the people. In the town of Seymour, the estimable business man whose name appears above, for many years took an active part in public affairs, wielding a wide influence for the general welfare, shaping and directing opinion by his clear insight into events and by his unflinching devotion to those causes which he believed essential to the public weal.

Mr. Divine was born in Newburgh, Orange Co., N. Y., Feb. 5, 1822, a son of Henry and Phoebe (Tilton) Divine, and grandson of Samuel Divine, who reared a large family and passed the declining years of his life in Sullivan county, N. Y. Henry Divine, the father of our subject, was born in Newburgh, N. Y., and acquired the blacksmith trade which he followed until his death at the age of thirty-eight years. His wife, Phoebe Tilton, was an aunt of Theodore Tilton, and was born in Sullivan county, N. Y., a daughter of Joseph Tilton, who served through the Revolutionary war on the staff of Gen. Washington. Like her husband, she died in middle life, at the age of thirty-nine years. They were members of the Baptist Church. To Henry and Phoebe Divine were born seven children, two of whom, Mrs. G. Leavenworth, of Seymour, and Mrs. Phoebe Blake, of North Haven, are yet living.

George W. Divine was reared at Newburgh. At the age of eighteen years he enlisted in the 2nd United States Infantry, and served five years, participating in the Seminole war. He followed brick making at North Haven, Conn., for a time, then engaged in the manufacture of bits at Hamden and later at Humphreysville, now Seymour. About 1853 he removed to Millville, Rensselaer Co., N. Y., where he lived four years. During that time he was actively engaged in politics, and was elected justice of the peace. Returning to Seymour he continued bit making, and also the manufacture of edge tools until his death, April 18, 1887, at the age of sixty-five years. He was a skilled mechanic and was especially expert in operating the trip hammer, with which he manufactured bits. Mr. Divine possessed a judicial turn of mind, and for twelve years served as justice of the peace. He also transacted a large amount of legal business. He was a thoroughly informed man and was active in public affairs. He was elected in 1879 a member of the State Legislature, serving with credit to himself and to the complete satisfaction of his constituents. Among the local offices which he filled were selectman and grand juror. He was an eloquent speaker, convincing in argument, and conducted at one time in Westville a series of debates, which lasted fourteen weeks. In religious faith he was a zealous member of the Disciple Church. For six years he was captain of the Humphreysville Grays, and during the Civil war he raised two companies; one under Capt. William Wyant, became a part of the 5th regiment, and the other under Capt. W. Smith, a part of the 20th regiment. He also drilled many companies, preparatory to their active service in the field.

On Nov. 28, 1847, Mr. Divine married Miss Martha G. Bassett, a native of Humphreysville, now Seymour, daughter of Abel and Martha (Peck) Bassett and granddaughter of Abraham Bassett, who was a soldier in the Revolutionary war. Abel Bassett was a carpenter and millwright by trade, and spent his entire life at Seymour. He was a soldier in the war of 1812. To himself and wife were born nine children, of whom two are living, Julia A. (Clark), and the widow of our subject, who is the youngest of the family. Abel and Martha Peck were members of the Episcopal Church. He died March 23, 1864, aged seventy-seven years, and his wife Sept. 6, 1850, aged fifty-seven years. To our subject and his wife were born two children. Julia A. married Willard G. Mitchell, who was a soldier in the Civil war, a member of Company A, 52d Mass. V. L., and who died Aug. 22, 1876. His widow now makes her home with her mother.

George A. Divine, the other child of George W. and Martha Divine, was born Sept. 6, 1850, in Seymour, where he was reared and educated, and where he spent most of his years. He is a skillful musician and in that profession he has traveled quite extensively. He was with P. T. Barnum one summer, and has played with Washburn and a number of other noted persons. He is a leader of the band and is a skillful player of the cornet, bass viol and the violin. He transposes music rapidly, and is a member of the Concordia Singing Society, and has played with the Second Regiment Band. In politics George A. Divine is a Republican, and in October, 1898, he was elected selectman, acting as first selectman; he is now serving his third term, having been re-elected in October, 1900, and again in 1901.

He is a member of Morning Star Lodge, F. & A. M., at Seymour, and a charter member of the Nonawank Lodge, Red Men. He is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, of which he is treasurer, and is a member of the Citizens Hook & Ladder Co. He married, Jan. 13, 1873, Jennie E. Short, who was born in Derby, daughter of Ephraim Short, a blacksmith of that town.

Both Mrs. Martha Divine and her daughter, Mrs. Mitchell, have been active and prominent members of the Eastern Star for twenty-seven years. They are also members of the Amaranth Society, and of the Bassett Family Association. They are members of the Disciple Church, and among the leading social families of Seymour.

Jason Bassett, a brother of Mrs. Divine, was a builder and architect of rare ability. He erected the Episcopal churches at Hartford, Naugatuck and Huntington before he was twenty-one years old. He followed his profession at New York and later at Rochester, where he made the specifications for the handsome court house in that city. He removed to Buffalo, and had there designed and constructed some of its more elegant structures when his useful and brilliant career was cut short in 1850, at the age of forty-four years. Another brother, David Bassett, settled at Racine, Wis., where he bought land, cleared it, erected the first water wheel there, and became one of its most prominent citizens. He died in California in 1853.

JUDGE GEORGE DEFOREST BISSELL, who is now living a retired life in Naugatuck, was born in Torrington, this State, April 24, 1828, and is a representative of a good old Colonial family. His grandfather, Elisha Bissell, was born in Springfield, Mass., in 1743, and died in 1808 in Torrington. He married Roxy Bissell, and located at Windsor Hill, Conn., where they reared a family of five children, namely: Seth, born in 1782, lived in Windsor, and died in 1798; Elisha, born in 1787, died in 1811; Roxy, born in 1788, married Richard Bristol, a farmer of Harwinton, Conn., and died in 1846; George, the father of our subject, was next in order of birth; and Sila, born in 1793, married Erastus Hodges, of Torrington, and (second) Rufus Pickett, of Morris, and died in 1869.

George Bissell, our subject's father, was born in Windsor Hill, in 1790, and there grew to manhood. He married Sarah Woodruff, of Torrington. Her father, John Woodruff, was a native of Oxford, and was a farmer by occupation; he served as a soldier in the Revolutionary war, and saw Major Andre executed. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Bissell located in Torrington, where the father was first engaged in farming and later in tanning, so continuing until his death, April 19, 1835. His wife, who long survived him, passed away Sept. 4, 1804. They had but two children, the older being Sarah A., who was born July 7, 1824, and died unmarried, Sept. 8, 1898. In politics the father was a Whig, and in religious belief both he and his wife were Congregationalists.

George DeForest Bissell was seven years of age when, with his mother, he removed to Litchfield, Conn., where he was reared and educated. In early life he engaged in farming and school teaching, and then went to Rock Island, Ill., where he clerked in a commission house for three years. Returning to Litchfield, Conn., in 1859, he was engaged in clerking there until 1863, when he went to New Haven and was employed as clerk in the "Tremont House" for three years. At the end of that time he entered the office of the probate judge at Hartford, and remained there for three years. In 1869 he came to Naugatuck, where he served as bookkeeper and secretary of the Tuttle Manufacturing Co., for about seventeen years, or until appointed postmaster at that place. He assumed the duties of that office April 1, 1887, and capably discharged the same for two years and a half, since which time he has lived retired.

On June 5, 1870, Judge Bissell married Miss Lillian Adella Clarke, of Prospect, Conn., a daughter of Sela Clarke, and they have one son, George De Forest, Jr. They attend the Congregational Church, and are held in high regard by all who know them. Fraternally the Judge is a member of Shepherd's Lodge, No. 78, A. F. & A. M., of Naugatuck; and politically, he is a staunch supporter of the Democratic party. He was the first warden of Naugatuck; has served as selectman; was town clerk for about six years; and judge of probate four years. He has been found true to every trust reposed in him, and has made a most efficient and popular officer.

ENSIGN NORTHROP, an honored veteran of the Civil war, has been for many years a resident of Waterbury, where he has established an enviable reputation for himself both as a man of unquestioned probity and as a skilled worker, connected with one of the largest industrial establishments of that busy city.

Mr. Northrop was born in Chili, Monroe Co., N. Y., March 13, 1834, son of Miles Northrop, who was born in Cornwall, Conn., July 20, 1805, and died in Orleans county, N. Y., in 1891. Miles Northrop left home at the age of sixteen, and what knowledge is now obtainable of his parentage and ancestry is very obscure. He went into Genesee county, N. Y., at that time far from the old home, not only in distance but in the time necessary to cover it. There was little communication, and the young man drifted away from all intimate touch with his family. He learned the cooper's trade, and worked at same in Genesee, Monroe and Orleans counties, N. Y. He married Eliza Ensign, who was born in Sheffield, Mass., a daughter of Freeman Ensign, and died in Orleans county, N. Y., in 1890:

she was about a year older than her husband. The Ensigns were long settled in Massachusetts, and were of French extraction. Miles Northrop was the father of nine children: George was a farmer in New York, and later removed to Florida where he died. Emeline married Edwin Hinche, a cooper in Chautauqua county, N. Y., and is now deceased. Sarah is the wife of George Phillips, a Genesee county farmer. Warren is a farmer in Orleans county. Ensign is our subject. Betsy married Henry Pierce (who died in the Civil war), and is now deceased. Mary married George Oswell, and they are living in Cherry Creek, N. Y. Ellen married Henry Hale, and they live in Michigan. Esther died unmarried.

Ensign Northrop lived in Genesee county, N. Y., until he was twenty-two years of age, and then engaged in farming in Chautauqua county. At the breaking out of the Civil war he enlisted in Company K, 112th N. Y. V. I., serving three years, and seeing much active duty. He was a faithful soldier, and made a record of which he may be justly proud. In 1869 he went into Virginia to try northern farming in the South, but the result of the experiment was not encouraging, and in the spring of 1870, returning North, he located at Waterbury, where his home has been to the present time. Mr. Northrop entered the employ of the Scovill Manufacturing Co. in 1870, and is still with them. For twenty-seven years he has been engaged in sawing brass on the same machine.

Mr. Northrop and Miss Eunice Hinche were married Sept. 20, 1855. Mrs. Northrop was born in Chili, Monroe Co., N. Y., daughter of Joseph Hinche, a farmer, and is of French extraction. To this union were born three children: Miles, who died at the age of fourteen; Charles, a foreman in the White Dental Works, at Princess Bay, Staten Island; and Anna, wife of Edward Smith, of Naugatuck, Conn., a contractor and builder of more than local standing. Mr. Northrop is a Republican, and is a member of Wadhams Post, G. A. R. Since early youth he has been a member of the Baptist Church.

JOHN M. REDSHAW, the father of Samuel G. Redshaw, was born in Leeds, England, and remained in his native country, following the business of a cloth manufacturer, until after his marriage. When he came to this country he settled in Derby, where he resumed his trade, and followed it for some years in connection with the firm of Plumb & Beach. Mr. Plumb finally came to Ansonia, and started a business in this city under the name of Plumb & Co., John M. Redshaw being the "company." When the establishment passed into the hands of a stock company, Mr. Redshaw remained as a stockholder and superintendent of a department as long as the business was continued. He lived retired from active labor for a time before his death, on Feb. 3, 1899, at the age of seventy-nine years. He married Sarah Gaunt, who was born in the same town as her husband, a daughter of Samuel Gaunt, and they had five children, three of whom are living: Moses W. living in Bridgeport, Conn. Samuel G. is mentioned below; and Joseph, who lives in West Haven. The father was a well-known and active member of the community in his time. He came to Ansonia about 1844, and saw it change from a farming community to a great industrial center. Fraternally he was a Mason, and was enrolled in George Washington Lodge, A. F. & A. M., Mt. Vernon Chapter, R. A. M., and other Masonic organizations. He belonged to the Congregational Church. John M. Redshaw's only brother, Thomas M., served in the Union army during the Civil war, and was killed in the battle of Gettysburg, and Thomas M. Redshaw Post, G. A. R., at Ansonia, commemorates his name.

Samuel G. Redshaw was born in Ansonia, Conn., July 27, 1849, and there he spent his early life in attendance upon the local schools. On reaching manhood he entered the woolen mill, and after a time bought out the box factory of A. B. Hendricks, carrying on the business in a small way, without the aid of machinery, and employing only three girls. By close attention and the constant effort to please his patrons he has steadily increased his trade. On July 1, 1896, he became the owner of the factory in Derby, and working the two together he doubled his output, but he sold the latter in November, 1899, removing part of the machinery to his plant in Ansonia. His trade is strictly local, and the demand crowds the productive power of his business to the utmost.

Mr. Redshaw was married in 1877 to Amelia Lawton, a daughter of Lewis Lawton, who lived in Winsted, and was a spinner by trade. Mrs. Redshaw is one of a family of four children. Her parents are both deceased, both passing away at the age of sixty-nine years, and within a month of one another. They were members of the Episcopal Church.

Mr. and Mrs. Redshaw have two sons: John Lewis, the elder, is a stenographer and book-keeper for his father. Charles Joseph, the younger boy, is fitting himself for college.

Mr. Redshaw is a Republican in politics, but has refused all propositions to accept local offices. Long ago he united with the Masonic fraternity, being now a veteran Mason, and holding membership in Washington Lodge, A. F. & A. M., the chapter, R. A. M., New Haven Commandery, and Pyramid Temple of the Mystic Shrine, having progressed as far as the 32d degree. He has held all the offices in the Blue Lodge, and those up to master in the chapter. He is also a member of the Eastern Star, of which he was grand patron of the State in 1898, in that year making more than forty official visits, calling on every chapter in the State. Mr. Redshaw is also a veteran Odd Fellow, being enrolled in Naugatuck Lodge, No. 63, where he has filled all the offices; in Hope Encampment, No. 26, of which he is past chief patriarch; and in the Grand Encampment. He is connected with the A. O. U. W. and the Improved Order of Heptasophs. For twenty-five years Mr. Redshaw has been a member of Eagle Hose Co., No. 6. He and all his family are members of Christ Church.

FREDERICK WILLIAM BROCKSIEPER (deceased). The country that has produced a Bismarck and a Schiller, a Von Moltke and a Goethe, has contributed in no small way to the best development of America, for the habits of industry, the stern self-denial, the sterling integrity, and the faculty of true enjoyment and cheerful living are characteristic of the German race, and this combination forms a citizen of value to any country. A native of the Fatherland, Frederick William Brocksieper was one of the best known and most highly respected citizens of North Haven, Connecticut.

Frederick W. Brocksieper, Sr., his father, was born in Iserlohn, in the northern part of Westphalia, Germany, where he engaged in the manufacture of hardware very extensively, being the first manufacturer of screws in that country. A thrifty and industrious man, he never gave up labor until within three days of his demise, which occurred when he was eighty years old. He married Anna Maria Grueber, a native of Westphalia, the daughter of a learned man of that country, and the family born to this union consisted of five children: Helena married in Germany, and came to America, her husband locating in Posey county, Ind.; Theodore, a scholarly man, speaking and writing six languages, died in Germany from over-study; Elizabeth married and lives in Germany; Frederick W. is mentioned below; Moritz remained in Germany, where he is a skilled mechanic and engraver.

Frederick W. Brocksieper was born July 25, 1826, in Iserlohn, Westphalia, Germany, and was given excellent educational advantages. At the age of eighteen years he was apprenticed to an engraver and modeler, where he was taught mechanical drawing, remaining in the employ of the same engraver for a number of years. However, he began to feel a desire to see more of the world, and the land across the Atlantic seemed to possess untold attractions, hence the year 1849 found him on a sailing-vessel from Bremen, on his way to the United States. This vessel was a new one, requiring some work upon it when the time set for starting arrived, but the passengers were not willing to wait longer and volunteered to make the finishing touches themselves, in order to get under way. Our subject so impressed his companions with his superior knowledge of mechanics that he was unanimously elected leader, and the tedium of the long voyage was relieved for him by painting the vessel as it ploughed the water. It required much stamina to land in a strange country, with limited means and the necessity of facing a new language and new customs, but the courage that made him finish the "Elbe," when already floated, finally brought him employment, and he went to work making dies and patterns in the iron foundry of James Beebe & Co., on the corner of Central and Reed streets, New York City. This concern afterward became a very wealthy one, and they were the first range makers in the United States, the Beebe range being the most successful attempt in that kind of modern stoves. Going to New Britain, Mr. Brocksieper there engaged as a contractor with Peck & Walter, manufacturers of house and builders' hardware. The establishment passed into the hands of J. B. Sargent, still later to J. B. Sargent & Co., and at present Sargent & Co., and is now one of the largest manufactories in the country, the line of manufacture now including locks, builders' and harness hardware, in connection with former lines. When the business was removed to New Haven Mr. Brocksieper remained with them, and until September, 1899, he so continued in their factory, but at that time he concluded that a faithful service of fifty-one years entitled him to take the remainder of his life at ease, and with regret parted with his employers, who had also been personal friends. He passed away at his home in Montowese, April 27, 1900.

When Mr. Brocksieper retired from the factory he was the oldest employe, having been a witness of its growth from infancy to sturdy maturity. The first firm consisted of Mr. Sargent as president and treasurer, and Mrs. Sargent as secretary, with Mr. Brocksieper as superintendent. That the long and faithful connection was appreciated by Mr. Sargent has been shown in many ways, perhaps in none more happily than in the presentation of a unique, valuable and beautiful work of art which now adorns the late home of our subject. While traveling in China, in 1887, Mr. Sargent purchased a beautiful painting, on rice paper, representing the native insects and butterflies of China, a work of art exquisite in design and workmanship. While this gift was valued for its beauty, Mr. Brocksieper attached still more value to the inscription which was placed upon it by Mr. Sargent, viz.: "Canton, China, Oct. 1st, 1887, Annual Moon-day. To show that my long-time and true friend is in my memory forever, I purchase these four pictures of Chinese insect life for F. W. Brocksieper. J. B. Sargent."

In 1869 Mr. Brocksieper came with his family to Montowese, Conn., making their summer home at that place, spending their winters in the city. In the beautiful family lot is erected a monument in memory of the wife and mother who made a home wherever she was, but who passed away Dec. 10, 1898. In New York Mr. Brocksieper married Antoinette Hoelscher, a native of Elberfeld, Rhineland, Germany, born Nov. 2, 1828, and to her he attributed much of his success in life, and her devoted family will ever feel the value of her life of kindness, sympathy and encouragement. The following named children were born to this union: Antoinette, who married Francis T. Busse, is now deceased; Adrienne, born in 1851, died in the same year; Frederick W. married Adella J. Moulthrop, and now lives in Los Angeles, Cal., engaged in the fruit-growing business; John H. married Lucy Corcoran, and is a farmer in North Branford; Theodore died young; Carl Moritz, who married Mrs. Jennie Buckley, is now lessee and manager of the Lyric Hall, New London, and was assistant secretary of the Y. M. C. A.; Anna Maria; Emma L.; Adele; Charles died when seven months old; Joseph Bradford, who graduated at Yale Medical School in 1897, is a leading physician of New Britain.

In 1895 Mr. Brocksieper erected a home which is the largest and most complete and attractive in North Haven. For many years he had been a collector of butterflies, minerals and semi-precious stones, and had a large collection, gathered from all parts of the globe, some specimens of great rarity. He was the owner of considerable real estate, some of which he rented for farming purposes, and also the property which is occupied by the Montowese Brick Co., from which he received royalties for the fine quality of clay used in the manufacture of its brick. Originally Mr. Brocksieper was a Democrat, but later became a Republican, and fraternally he had attained the 32d degree of Freemasonry, affiliating with Hiram Lodge, A. F. & A. M., and Franklin Chapter, R. A. M.; he was also a member of the Improved Order of Red Men and Order of Chosen Friends. Brought up in the Lutheran Church, he was always an attendant of the same, although he gave liberally to every religious denomination.

GEORGE W. NETTLETON, a representative and prominent citizen of Naugatuck, is a native of New Haven county, born Sept. 5, 1828, in what was then called Osborne Hollow, as there were many Osbornes living in that locality at the time. His father, Caleb Nettleton, was born in Old Milford, and was a son of Caleb and Anna (Stone) Nettleton, farming people, who lived and died in Old Milford. They had three children: Jehiel, a farmer of Goshen, Litchfield Co., Conn.; Elijah, a Baptist minister, who lived and died in Goshen; and Caleb, our subject's father. The grandfather was twice married, and by his second wife, Louise Clark, who was likewise a native of Old Milford, also had three children, Alfred, David and Amy.

Caleb Nettleton was a young man when he removed to Middlebury, and there he was united in marriage with Miss Nancy A. Clark, a native of that town, and a daughter of Andrew Clark, who was born in Old Milford. After their marriage they located on a farm in Middlebury, where they reared their family. They were consistent and faithful members of the Congregational Church, and the father was a Whig in politics. Their children were: Clark, a farmer, who is now deceased; Sarah A., who married E. G. Stone, a farmer of Middlebury, both now deceased; Julia A., who married Chester C. Hitchcock, a wheelmaker of New Haven, both also deceased; Mariette, who married Charles C. Woodruff, a farmer of Watertown, Conn., both deceased; Enmerett L., wife of Henry W. Sperry, a carpenter of New Haven; Alma C., who married Walter Lake, a farmer of Bethany, both deceased; Royal O., who married Louise Sperry, of Bethany, and has been a carpenter of New Haven for half a century; and George W., our subject.

George W. Nettleton is indebted to the district schools near his boyhood home for his educational advantages. On leaving the parental roof, at the age of sixteen years, he went to New Haven to learn the carpenter's trade with his brother Royal O., and remained there until twenty-five. During the following six months he worked at his trade in Cheshire, this county, and then followed that occupation in Waterbury for some time. While there Mr. Nettleton was married, April 8, 1855, to Miss Eunice Morris, who was born in that town Aug. 26, 1832, and died Sept. 2, 1896. Her father, Amos Morris, a cooper by trade, was also born in Waterbury, in 1790. Our subject and his wife had two children: Mary, now the wife of Charles A. Smith, a laborer of Naugatuck; and Charles L., a carpenter of Middlebury.

Shortly after his marriage Mr. Nettleton removed to the farm in the town of Naugatuck, which has since been his home. It consists of sixty-two acres of well-improved and highly cultivated land, pleasantly located two and a half miles from Naugatuck borough. Mr. Nettleton has devoted his time and attention principally to his trade, leaving his farm to be operated by hired help. He is an earnest member of the Congregational Church and is highly respected and esteemed by all who know him. In politics he is a Republican.

JOHN SMITH TYLER, a popular and influential citizen of East Haven, was born in the house where he now resides, on Tuesday, Dec. 2, 1834. His father, William Tyler, was born June 26, 1799, in the same dwelling.

John Tyler, the paternal grandfather, was a native of Branford—near a well-known sea-side resort, Short Beach—and by occupation a shoemaker. He was a soldier in the Revolutionary war. After residing in East Haven a short time he married Mabel Bradley, who was also born on the farm now owned and occupied by the subject of this notice. Simon Bradley, her father, built the house about one hundred and fifty years ago, and it is still in excellent repair. He died July 22, 1802, aged seventy-one years; his wife, Abigail, passed away May 18, 1810, aged sixty-eight. To John and Mabel (Bradley) Tyler came six children: Ammi, born Feb. 20, 1780; John, June 29, 1792; twins, June, 1796; William, June 26, 1799; Jerusha Louisa, May 2, 1805.

Upon the farm mentioned, the ownership of which has descended down through many generations, and a portion of which is in the center of the town and very valuable, William Tyler spent his entire life. He was a shoemaker by trade, an active worker in and a prominent member of the Congregational Church, and widely known as a useful and respected citizen. He married Julia A. Thompson, who was born in 1799, a daughter of Abraham Thompson, and they had two children: Harriet A., born Feb. 6, 1838, who died at the early age of fourteen years; and John Smith, the only son. The father died at the age of sixty-four years, and the mother was fifty-six years old when she entered into rest, both of them honored and esteemed.

John Smith Tyler passed his youth upon the ancestral farm, and acquired a good practical education in the public schools and in the select or academic institute at the town hall, Messrs. Potter and Wolcott, instructors and principals. Although he was born within a few miles of the third largest city of New England he never at any time left the parental roof, and has always devoted his energies and time—except when called to official positions of trust and responsibility—to the management of his farm. He is a thorough agriculturist and skilled in all the details of general farming.

On June 3, 1866, Mr. Tyler married Miss Jane Elizabeth, daughter of Joseph and Sarah Lovisa Thompson. Two children were born to them: William Joseph and John Alexis Dibble. The first named was born May 12, 1867, and died Nov. 18, 1873, aged six years, six months and six days. The second, who was born Nov. 11, 1875, died July 16, 1879, when three years and eight months old.

Mr. Tyler is a staunch supporter of the Republican party and its principles, but the usual narrow confines of partisanship have not prevented him in his official life from acting for the good of all concerned. His manners are most gracious and pleasing, and marked by an affability not possessed by every person. In the Eastern States the office of selectman—like that of the town clerk—ranks as first in importance and one of the most difficult to administer in a satisfactory manner. Notwithstanding this, Mr. Tyler has held the office continuously—elected annually—since 1886. No official in this town (nor probably in any other) has such an enviable and remarkable record. The laying out of the suburban electric road, the erection of a new town hall, a magnificent new school house, and the building of a new State highway, with new roads on the north shore of Long Island Sound, also an engine house for a recently organized fire department, have all taken place during his term of office. Mr. Tyler ranks deservedly among the most prominent and public-spirited citizens of his town. He and his wife are members of the Grange, No. 106, and are active officials in this fraternal association.

DAVID BOUGHTON HAMILTON (deceased) was born in Danbury, Conn., Oct. 19, 1824. He was in the sixth generation from Sir William Hamilton, who was born in Scotland in 1643, and died in Danbury in 1746, aged one hundred three years.

(I) Sir William Hamilton was the son of Galatin Hamilton, of Glasgow, Scotland, and he settled with his family first on Cape Cod, where he was so fortunate as to capture a whale, which had been driven on the beach during a storm, and for this he was accused of witchcraft and of being in league with the Devil. In consequence he fled to Rhode Island, and later moved to Danbury, Conn. There, on the verge of civilization, he established his home at "Bear Mountain," where remains of the old house could be found as late as 1835. William had six children, all of whom lived to remarkable ages, and died in Danbury: Joseph, aged eighty-six; David, aged seventy-nine; Benjamin, aged ninety; Ezra, aged ninety-three; Thankful (spinster), aged one hundred two; Mercy, aged fifty-two.

(II) Joseph Hamilton, son of Sir William, had three sons, all of whom were born at Bear Mountain, and died in Danbury: Silas, Benjamin and Joseph, Jr.

(III) Silas Hamilton, son of Joseph, had five sons: Silas, Jr., Paul, James, John, and Orpha.

(IV) Paul Hamilton, son of Silas, was born Nov. 19, 1752, and died May 31, 1830. He married Anna Stevens (born 1757, died 1829), who was the daughter of Lieut. Ezra Stevens, an officer in the American Revolution. Lieut. Stevens' mother, Abigail Barnum, was a daughter of Thomas Barnum, and the first white child born in Danbury. Paul had six sons and four daughters, all born at Bullet Hill, Pembroke District, Danbury: Anna, born 1775, married Jesse Hoyt, and died in Danbury in 1848; Hannah, born 1776, married Elias Boughton, and died in Danbury, in 1843; Betsy, born 1779 (spinster), died in Danbury in 1859; Elizabeth, born 1781, married John Knapp, and died in Danbury in 1862; James, born 1783, married Waity Budlong, and died in Danbury in 1865; Daniel, born 1785, married Miss Aiken, and died in New Haven in 1823; Paul S., born 1789, married Reiney Wood, and died in Hartford in 1841; David, born 1791, married Deborah Knapp Boughton, and died in Hartford in 1834; Silas, born 1793, married Isabel Williken, and died in Albany in 1861; and Ezra, born 1801, married Sybil Prichard, of Waterbury, and died in Hartford in 1879.

(V) David Hamilton, son of Paul, born 1791, died 1834. He married Deborah Knapp Boughton, born in 1790, and died in 1864. They reared the following children: Julia Ann, born 1812, married William G. Ellis, died in Hartford in 1850. Clarissa Mariette, born in 1815, married Hiram Wildman, died in Hartford in 1889; Lorenzo, born in 1818, married Lavinia Delliber, died in California in 1869; Orville, born in 1821, married Elizabeth Lyon, died in Texas in 1888; David Boughton, born in 1824; Elizabeth, born 1827, married Henry Champlin, and is still living, a widow, in Hartford.

David Boughton Hamilton spent his boyhood days in Danbury, and received his education in his native town, and at a select school in Hartford. In early youth he had a desire for the ministry, and began preparation for a life work in the pulpit, but the bent of his mind was neither in that direction nor in the legal profession, to which he turned his attention for a time. His was a distinctively business nature, and, by a process of natural selection, he became a business man of high standing. In early youth he taught school for two years, and in 1851 became a clerk in the postoffice at Hartford. Two years later when the Rogers' Brothers organized for the manufacture of silver-plated ware, he became a salesman for the new firm. In 1858 he joined the firm of Rogers & Bros., and his connection with the silver plating industry was interrupted during forty-two years only on two occasions, once when he visited California in 1856 for the benefit of his health, and again during his service in the Union army in the Civil war.

Mr. Hamilton entered the service in 1861, almost immediately on the breaking out of the Rebellion. On that memorable April 19, 1861, he was in Baltimore, just after the attack upon the Union soldiers. The next day he was in Washington, and joined a company of volunteers raised by Col. Cassius M. Clay for the defense of the capitol. In a few days he returned to Connecticut, and enlisted for regular service in the 5th Conn. V. L., where he received a commission as first lieutenant. He was promoted to be captain in 1862, and was honorably discharged for serious disabilities Jan. 10, 1863. Capt. Hamilton made a fine record as a soldier, and was highly esteemed by all his old comrades.

Mr. Hamilton was secretary of Rogers & Bros. from the incorporation of the firm until 1868, when he was elected treasurer. In 1878 he became president also, filling both positions to the eminent satisfaction of all interested in the enterprise. Capt. Hamilton was president of the Manufacturers' National Bank from its incorporation in 1881, of the Waterbury Lumber and Coal Co. from its reorganization in 1883, and of the Connecticut Steam Boiler Inspection and Insurance Co. from 1891 to 1894. He was also extensively interested in various important business enterprises throughout the State, more especially in the William Rogers Manufacturing Co. of Hartford, the Meriden Britannia Co. and the Bridgeport Brass Co., being a director in each.

Politically Capt. Hamilton was a Republican, and in his time filled many important official positions, which were chiefly municipal and business in their character. In 1881 he was elected to fill the State Senatorial vacancy created by the death of Senator Brown. He served the city as councilman and alderman, and was a member of the Board of Water Commissioners from 1885 to 1893. He had been selectman of the town, and chairman of the Board of School Visitors. As a member of a committee of three, appointed by the Wadhams post, G. A. R., to raise money for a soldiers' monument, he rendered material assistance to that commendable enterprise. Capt. Hamilton belonged to the New York Commandery of the Loyal Legion, the I. O. O. F., and the Masonic fraternity, where he was also a Knight Templar. Capt. Hamilton was a man of much ambition and business energy, and, in his business character, had visited every State of the Union. He was an independent thinker, much interested in philosophical and social problems, and deeply devoted to the progress of the world.

On May 6, 1847, Capt. Hamilton married Mary Rogers, daughter of S. Rogers, of Hartford, and she died May 22, 1859, leaving one son, Charles Alfred, born May 3, 1849. On June 9, 1863, Capt. Hamilton was united in marriage with Mary Elizabeth, daughter of William Birely, of Frederick, Md. He became acquainted with Miss Birely while doing detached duty under Gen. Banks. She died Aug. 27, 1870, leaving two children, Lewis Birely and Katherine, of whom the former, born in 1864, is a graduate of Yale, class of 1886, and is a civil engineer by profession. Capt. Hamilton was married, Sept. 1, 1871, to Isabel L., daughter of John Griswold Ely, of Lyme. This union was blessed by the birth of one child, Paul, who was born Sept. 1, 1873, and is a graduate of the Sheffield Scientific School at Yale, class of 1894. Capt. Hamilton's last illness resulted from the lodging of a small fish-bone in the larynx, where it caused ulceration, and ultimately resulted in death. Eminent specialists were employed, but without avail, and Capt. Hamilton died Sunday morning, Aug. 14, 1898.

Mrs. Hamilton, the widow of this gallant soldier, distinguished leader in the business world, and old-school gentleman, still survives. She is eighth in line from Richard, "the settler." This Richard Ely, first of the Ely family in America, came from Plymouth, England, in 1660, and settled in Boston. His grandfather, Leonard Ely, Elder of Wouston, who died in 1615, was the grandson of John Ely, born about 1492, and who was Warden of the palace of the Bishops of Winchester in 1540.

When Richard Ely came to this country he was a widower with two sons, William and Richard. A carved oak chest which he brought with him is in a state of perfect preservation to-day, in the family of one of his descendants. In 1664 he married Widow Culliek, sister of Col. Fenwick, and settled at Lyme, on the Connecticut river, where he and his sons, in a few years, owned 4,000 acres of land. He died in 1690, and a few years later a stone was erected to his memory, in the Ely burying ground at Lyme, on which is recorded the following: "His descendants besides peopling these mansions of the dead, are greatly multiplied in the land."

(II) William Ely, son of Richard, born 1647, died 1717. He married Elizabeth Smith, daughter of Simon Smith, who with twenty-eight others took up all the land between Haddam and Saybrook, except Six-Mile Island; the latter was the home of William. To William and Elizabeth were born the following children: Ann, Elizabeth, Richard, Mary, Daniel (had four wives), William, Jr., Deborah and Johanna.

(III) William Ely, Jr., son of William, married, first, in 1715, Hannah Thompson, of Ipswich, Mass., and, second, Mary Noyes. He had ten children, seven of whom were born of his first marriage, namely: Jacob, James, Martha, Deborah, Mary Ann, Samuel and Ammi; by his second marriage: Hannah, Mary and Ann. The first six were baptized by the first minister of Lyme.

(IV) James Ely, son of William, Jr., born 1718, died 1766. He married Dorcas Andrews, of Ipswich, in 1742. They had ten children: Elizabeth, James, Ruhama, Jacob, Dorcas, Tabitha, Aaron, Andrew, John and Gad. Of these, all six of the sons served in the Revolution, and Aaron was killed at the battle of Kings Bridge in 1776.

(V) James Ely, son of James Ely and Dorcas Andrews, born in 1743, married Catherine Hays, in 1768, and afterward Prudence Hewitt. By his first wife he had nine children: Richard, James, Dorcas, Phebe, Aaron, John, Kate, William and Calvin.

(VI) John Ely, son of James and Catherine Hays, born 1781, died 1817, married Lucy Miller (died 1850, aged eighty-two). They had six children: Horace, William, John Griswold, Rodney, Ansel and Calvin.

(VII) John Griswold Ely, son of John and Lucy (Miller) Ely, born in 1810, died 1863, was the father of Mrs. Hamilton. In 1830 he married Sally Pratt Williams, who was born in 1812, and died in May, 1901, in Lyme. They had eleven children: John Heber, Elizabeth, Oscar, Ellen, Patterson, Isabel L. (Mrs. Hamilton), Ernest, Emma, Lewis, Edna J. and Edward W.

CAPT. ELBERT L. FORD, an influential citizen of Milford, was born in that town Feb. 21, 1847, son of Samuel A. Ford, and grandson of Samuel Ford. The family has been well known in the town for several generations, our subject's line of descent being as follows: Thomas Ford, Jr., Thaddeus, Samuel, Samuel A. and Capt. Elbert. The Fords are a very long-lived people, some living to be over one hundred years of age, and many to be over ninety.

Samuel Ford, the grandfather of Capt. Elbert, was a native of the locality, and passed his life there as a farmer. He married Polly Smith, of Milford, and had the following children: David S., who was a farmer and shoemaker in Milford; Lewis, a carriage-maker, who was last heard from while serving as a soldier in the Civil war; Samuel A., our subject's father; James, a carriagemaker, now residing in New York State; and Catherine, who married Everett Smith, a shoemaker in Milford, where she now resides.

Samuel A. Ford was born and reared in Milford and became a farmer there. Politically he was a Republican, and in religious faith both he and his wife were Congregationalists. He died March 7, 1882. He married Sarah E. Smith, a native of Stratford, Conn., and a daughter of John Smith, of that town. Mrs. Ford passed away Dec. 28, 1898. Our subject was the eldest in the family, the others being: Elizabeth M., wife of Alonzo W. Burns, of Milford; Emily E., wife of Merritt C. Ford, of Milford; Lauren A., a mason of the same town; and Edwin E., who died in infancy.

Elbert L. Ford attended the district schools near his home and the high school in Milford village. On leaving school he chose a seafaring life, and when only twenty-two years old was master of a vessel, and his skill as a master and pilot won him a high reputation. In November, 1881, he passed a successful examination and received a United States master's license for steam vessels, upon the Atlantic coast, its sounds, bays and harbors. In 1883 he became captain of William M. Merwin & Sons' oyster steamer, which position he held for twelve years. In 1869 Capt. Ford married Miss Elva W. Whittlesey, daughter of Samuel and Wealthy Whittlesey, of Stratford, Conn. She died in 1872, leaving one child, Bertha E. In 1875 Mr. Ford married Miss Carrie W. Sherwood, daughter of Capt. Joseph Wakeman Sherwood, of Southport, Conn., and by this marriage there are nine children: Lillian W., Grace S., Ethel S., Samuel E., Ada F., William A., E. Lewis, Cecil and Arthur S.

Capt. Ford is deservedly popular in his town. He was elected selectman in 1893-94-95-96-97-98-99-00-01, and for five years was first selectman and town agent. He is one of the oldest members of the Milford Fire Department, of which he served many years as foreman. Fraternally he is identified with Ansantawae Lodge, No. 89, F. & A. M.; Solomon Chapter, No. 3, R. A. M.; Harmony Council, No. 8, of New Haven; New Haven Commandery, No. 2, K. T.; Pyramid Temple, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, Bridgeport; Lucia Chapter, No. 25, O. E. S.; and Wopowage Lodge, No. 14, I. O. O. F., Milford. Capt. Ford and family attend St. Peter's Episcopal Church of Milford.

RUFUS NORTON LEETE (deceased) is remembered as one of the prominent and influential members of the Leete family, one of the oldest and best known in Guilford. He was born at Leete's Island, near Guilford, Aug. 17, 1812, the second son of Miner and Lucinda (Norton) Leete, and a descendant of Gov. William Leete, the progenitor of most of the Leetes in America. He was prominent in the Menuncatue plantation and in the town of Guilford, and in his official relations to the Colony of New Haven, and later the United Connecticut Colonies.

Gov. Leete came to America in the Rev. Henry Whitfield Company, and was one of the signers of the Plantation Covenant, on shipboard, Jan. 1, 1639. He was born in Dodington, Huntingdonshire, England, in 1612 or 1613, and was a grandson of Thomas Leete, of Ockington, Cambridgeshire, England, who married Maria Slade, of Rushton, Northamptonshire, daughter of Edward Slade. To Thomas Leete were born four children: John, of Dodington (the elder); John, of Islington; Jane, who married Richard Dale; and Rebecca, who married Thomas Fowler. John Leete, of Dodington, son of Thomas of Ockington, married Ann Shute, daughter of Robert Shute, one of the Justices of the King's Bench. To this union three children were born: William; John, of Medlow Grange, Huntingdonshire, England; and Ann, who married Robert Ruly.

William Leete, son of John, of Dodington, was bred in the law, and served for a considerable time as clerk in the Bishops' Court, at Cambridge, where, observing the oppressions and cruelties then practiced on the conscientious and virtuous Puritans, he was led to examine more thoroughly their doctrines and practices, and eventually to become a Puritan himself and to give up his office. Coming to America as noted above, he arrived at New Haven about July 10, 1639. When they had agreed upon Guilford as a place of settlement, he was one of the six selected to purchase the land from the native Indians in trust for the plantation until their organization. He selected for himself about 250 acres of land three miles west of Guilford, now known as Leete's Island. He filled many public offices in the New Colony, and was clerk of the plantation from 1639 to 1662. He was also one of four to whom was intrusted the full civil power of the plantation, without limitation, until a church was formed. He was selected one of the "seven pillars" of the foundation work. He was deputy from Guilford to the General Court in New Haven from 1643 to 1650 and from 1651 to 1658 he was magistrate of the town. In 1658 he was chosen deputy governor of the Colony, and continued in that office until 1661, when he was elected governor, an office which he held until the union with Connecticut, in 1664. After the union he was an assistant until 1669, when he was elected deputy governor of the Connecticut Colony, holding that office until 1676, when he was chosen governor. He retained the office by continuous re-elections until his death.

April 16, 1683. Upon being elected governor he removed to Hartford, where he lived continuously until his death, and was buried there.

William Leete married first in England, about 1638, Anna Payne, daughter of Rev. John Payne, of Southoe. She died Sept. 1, 1668. For his second wife he married April 7, 1670, Sarah, widow of Henry Rutherford; she died Feb. 10, 1673. He married for his third wife, Mrs. Mary Street, who had been twice married before, first to Gov. Francis Newman, and later to Rev. Nicholas Street; she died Dec. 13, 1683. His children were: John, born in 1639, is mentioned below; Andrew, born in 1643, married Elizabeth Jordan; William married Mary Fenn; Abigail married Rev. J. Woodbridge; Caleb, born Aug. 24, 1651, died Jan. 13, 1673; Gratiana was born Dec. 22, 1653; Peregrine, born Jan. 12, 1658, died young; Joshua, born in 1659, died Feb. 22, 1660; Anna, born March 10, 1661, married John Trowbridge.

(II) John Leete, son of Gov. William, was born in 1639 in Guilford, and is said to have been the first white child born in the town. He married, Oct. 4, 1670, Mary, daughter of William and Joanna (Sheafe) Chittenden. She was born in 1647, and died March 9, 1712. John Leete died Nov. 25, 1692. Children: Ann, born Aug. 5, 1671, married John Collins; John, born Jan. 4, 1674, married Sarah Allen; Joshua, born July 7, 1676, married Mary Munger; Sarah, born Dec. 16, 1677, married Eliakim Marshall; Pelatiah, born March 26, 1681, is mentioned below; Mehitabel, born Dec. 10, 1683, married Dr. Anthony Labore; Benjamin, born Dec. 26, 1686, married Rachel Champion; Daniel, born Dec. 23, 1689, died young.

(III) Pelatiah Leete, the fifth child of John Leete, was married July 1, 1705, to Abigail, daughter of Abraham and Elizabeth (Bartlett) Fowler, and they soon after removed to Leete's Island, where no settlement had before been made. The land had been allotted to his grandfather, Gov. Leete, after proper purchase from the Indians, and the title to the greater part of this soil has never been out of the family name. Upon these ancestral acres seven generations of Leetes have resided as farmers, members of each generation being content to remain and follow the occupation of their forefathers, most of them with success and profit. Originally the soil was very fertile, and it is said of Deacon Pelatiah Leete that he farmed so successfully that he did not consider a hundred bushels of shelled corn to the acre more than an average yield. He also had a herd of one hundred head of neat cattle. In 1735 he erected a large house on a commanding spot on his farm, overlooking the waters of the Sound, in which he lived until his death, Oct. 13, 1768, at the ripe old age of eighty-seven. This house was later occupied by descendants in several generations. Pelatiah was deacon of the Fourth Church of Guilford. He was also a representative of the town in the General Court. His wife died Oct. 22, 1769, aged ninety years. Their children were: Abigail, born Sept. 13, 1707, died June 2, 1792; Daniel, born Oct. 14, 1709, is mentioned below; Mehitabel, born Sept. 28, 1711, died Oct. 21, 1711; Pelatiah, born March 7, 1713, married Lydia Crittenden; Mehitabel, born in 1714, married John Brewster.

(IV) Deacon Daniel Leete, eldest son of Deacon Pelatiah, was also a deacon of the Fourth Congregational Church of Guilford. He was engaged in farming and stockraising at Leete's Island and built a house near the residence of his father, which became noted in the Revolution. In 1874 it was demolished and upon its site was erected the present residence of Calvin M. Leete. Deacon Daniel Leete died Oct. 1, 1772. He married, June 14, 1738, Rhoda, daughter of Caleb and Sarah (Meigs) Stone, of Guilford, born Nov. 2, 1719, died Dec. 23, 1760. Both are buried in the Guilford cemetery. Children: Rhoda, born April 14, 1739, married Noah Rogers; Daniel, born April 17, 1742, married Charity Norton; Ambrose, born Jan. 19, 1748, is mentioned below; Abraham, born Sept. 25, 1753, died Oct. 26, 1753; Abraham (2), born April 5, 1755, died Nov. 5, 1757.

(V) Deacon Ambrose Leete, son of Deacon Daniel, was born on the homestead at Leete's Island, Jan. 19, 1748. Like his father and grandfather he was a deacon of the Fourth Congregational Church, chosen to that office in 1786, and to the same office in the First Church in 1807. He married, Nov. 10, 1773, Miranda, daughter of William and Rachel (White) Chittenden, and died Feb. 14, 1809; his widow survived until Sept. 16, 1838, reaching the age of ninety-one years and six months. Children: Ambrose, born Nov. 10, 1774, married Catherine Ward; Miranda, born Jan. 8, 1777, died Dec. 21, 1822; Miner, born June 30, 1779, is mentioned below; Abraham, born Jan. 1, 1784, died Feb. 26, 1848; Wealthy, born Oct. 27, 1785, died March 23, 1870.

(VI) Miner Leete was born on the Leete's Island farm, where he spent his life in agricultural pursuits, a well-known citizen. He died comparatively young in life, Nov. 7, 1826, aged forty-seven years, and was buried in the Leete cemetery. He married, Nov. 17, 1807, Lucinda Norton, born Nov. 18, 1780, in Guilford, daughter of Col. Rufus and Hannah (Cook) Norton. She died Aug. 28, 1848, and was buried in the family cemetery. Their five children were as follows: (1) Edward Lorenzo, born June 28, 1810, resided through life at Leete's Island, was a deacon in the church, and died May 3, 1884. He married Sylvia Fowler, and had two children, Edward Walter and Lucy Louisa. He compiled the Leete genealogy. (2) Rufus Norton, born Aug. 17, 1812, is mentioned below. (3) Theodore Adgate, born May 18, 1814, married Mary C. White, and died April 28, 1886, leaving three children, Ella Louisa, Rev. William White, and Theodore Woolsey. He graduated from Yale College in 1839, subsequently from Yale Theological Seminary, and filled several pastorates. (4) Calvin Miner born Oct. 18, 1816, married Lucy Maria Leete. (5) Louisa Maria, born Aug. 20, 1822, died unmarried July 29, 1855.

(VII) Rufus Norton Leete passed his entire life in the locality of his birth, revered by the associations of six generations of ancestors. He was reared on his father's farm, and upon reaching manhood adopted agricultural pursuits as his life vocation, following same with merited and signal success all his days. In 1848 he erected a residence at Leete's Island, which he occupied until his death, which occurred Dec. 28, 1894, when he was aged eighty-two years. His remains were interred in Leete's Island cemetery. Mr. Leete was of a retiring disposition, and was known to be a man of unflinching honor and unimpeachable integrity, steadfast in his convictions and principles. In politics he was an earnest and consistent Democrat, in religious faith an active member and liberal supporter of the Baptist Church in Guilford during its existence. He was largely interested in the industrial development of his native town, aside from his farm pursuits; was a large stockholder in the Guilford Manufacturing Co., and for a number of years was an efficient member of the Guilford Savings Bank.

On Oct. 23, 1833, Rufus N. Leete married Sarah Bishop, daughter of Ezra S. and Abigail (Norton) Bishop, who survives him. Mrs. Leete is a descendant of an old New England family. She is of the seventh generation from (1) John Bishop, the founder of the family in Guilford. (11) John Bishop, his son, married Susannah Goldenham, and to them were born nine children, of whom (111) Nathaniel Bishop, the fourth child, was born in 1666, and died May 16, 1714. He married, Feb. 9, 1693, Mercy Hughes, who was born May 20, 1676, and died Dec. 7, 1760. Their children were as follows: Nathaniel, born Nov. 17, 1693, married Abigail Stone, and died Sept. 24, 1760; Samuel, born July 20, 1695, married Hannah Hull, and died Feb. 24, 1771; Mary, born Nov. 20, 1697, died young; Ebenezer, sketch of whom follows; Experience, born April 2, 1705; Temperance, born April 27, 1709, married Nathaniel Lee, and died March 29, 1751.

(IV) Ebenezer Bishop, youngest son of Nathaniel, was born Sept. 22, 1701, in North Guilford, where he engaged in farming. In 1729 he married Mehitabel Chittenden, who was born Sept. 30, 1712. Their fourteen children were as follows: Aliah, born March 26, 1730, married Ruth Srow, and died Nov. 30, 1705; Temperance, born March 1, 1732, married Giles Chittenden; Mabel was born Dec. 17, 1733; Amos, born May 5, 1735, died young; Ezra, born Nov. 27, 1736, died young; Ebenezer, born March 1, 1738, died young; Eber, born Sept. 1, 1740, resided in New Milford; Beulah, born Dec. 10, 1742, married Thomas Fowler; James, born June 3, 1745, married Eliza Wetmore, and died June 16, 1832; Nathaniel was born May 6, 1747; Olive, born June 6, 1749, married Noah Griswold, and died Nov. 28, 1817; Neriah, sketch of whom follows; Jared was born Aug. 17, 1753; Luther was born Aug. 20, 1755.

(V) Neriah Bishop, born Aug. 28, 1751, in North Guilford, died April 22, 1799. He married, May 10, 1781, Rachel Stone, who was born July 30, 1757. Their three children were: Rachel, born Feb. 13, 1782; Neriah, born May 16, 1783 (married Harriet Handy); and Ezra Stone, sketch of whom follows.

(VI) Ezra Stone Bishop, born June 13, 1786, in Guilford, died June 29, 1873. He married, April 23, 1809, Abigail Norton, born Feb. 11, 1791, daughter of Jared and Sarah (Brockett) Norton. She died Nov. 5, 1829. Their seven children were: Eliza, born Sept. 9, 1810; Sarah, born Sept. 18, 1812, widow of Rufus N. Leete, our subject; Margaret, born Sept. 11, 1815, who died Sept. 7, 1879; William H., born March 23, 1819, who married Sarah Griffing; Charles, born Dec. 12, 1823, who married Emily Cochrane; George, born Sept. 12, 1825, married to Florilla C. Fowler; and Abigail, born in October, 1829, who died Dec. 13, 1882.

To Rufus N. and Sarah (Bishop) Leete, were born six children: (1) Nancy, born Oct. 23, 1834, married, Feb. 12, 1862, Walter G. Bishop, of Meriden, and died in Guilford, April 4, 1886. (2) Richard Miner, sketch of whom follows. (3) Roger Calvin, sketch of whom follows. (4) Ellen Lucretia, born Aug. 20, 1840, married, Feb. 22, 1887, W. G. Bishop. (5) Rufus Burton, born June 22, 1843. (6) Margaret Elizabeth, born March 11, 1846.

RICHARD MINER LEETE, eldest son of Rufus N., was born on the homestead Nov. 20, 1836, and received his education at the district schools and the Guilford academy. Until his marriage he remained at home with his parents, working on the farm during the summers and teaching school in the winter seasons. After his marriage he commenced farming on his own account on a farm owned by his father in the Leete's Island District, and also kept store for seven years, though agricultural pursuits have practically been his life vocation. In religious faith he is a member of the Third Congregational Church, as are also his wife and the several members of his family. In his political predilections he was originally an ardent Democrat, but is now an equally zealous Prohibitionist, and for a term of years has faithfully served his town as justice of the peace.

On Nov. 14, 1861, Richard M. Leete was married to Mary E. Norton, a daughter of Anson and Fanny Norton, the former of whom descended from an old Guilford family, whose genealogy is given below. A brief record of the seven children born to Richard and Mary Leete is as follows. (1) Anson Miner, born Jan. 19, 1863, married Nellie Snow. (2) Arthur Bishop, born Jan. 13, 1864, married Eunice Stannard; he is station agent at East Haven for the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad. (3) Ellsworth Norton, born June 26, 1866, married, Oct. 30, 1889, Annie B. Fowler, who died June 3, 1896, leaving two sons, Richard F. (born Feb. 14, 1891) and Edgar R. (born April 30, 1893). He married second, Oct. 17, 1900, Elizabeth Dudley. He is a bookkeeper in New Haven. (4) Jennie Elizabeth, born June 27, 1868, married Nathan S. Rose, of North Branford. (5) Fanny Helen was born Feb. 2, 1870. (6) Sarah Ellen was born April 19, 1872. (7) Carrie May, born March 20, 1875, died March 29, 1875.

NORTON FAMILY. John Norton, son of Thomas and Grace Norton, the first of the name in Guilford, was a native of England, born in 1628 in Ockley, County of Surrey. He came with his parents to America, locating in Guilford, where in 1664 he married Hannah Stone, born in 1644. For his second wife he wedded Elizabeth Hubbard, born in 1638. He died March 5, 1704. His son John, who was the second of that name born to him, first saw the light in East Guilford, Conn., May 29, 1668. On Nov. 14, 1694, he married Hannah Buck, born April 12, 1671, in Wethersfield, Hartford county; he died March 15, 1712, in Guilford and was buried there; she died Oct. 22, 1739. For her second husband she married John Fowler. To John and Hannah Norton were born ten children.

John Norton, third in order of birth in the family of John, was born Dec. 13, 1699. He married Elizabeth Robinson, and died Jan. 9, 1797.

John Norton, son of John, was born in December, 1734, and died in Guilford Aug. 17, 1804. He married, Dec. 27, 1758, Lucy Lee, born in 1740, who died in March, 1802, the mother of eight children: (1) Ambrose, born Feb. 15, 1760, married Hannah Hall, and died in March, 1813. (2) Sarah, born in May, 1761, married Caleb J. Hall, and died Aug. 24, 1843. (3) William, born in 1762, served in the Revolutionary war, and died in 1782. (4) John, born in 1763, died Aug. 27, 1773. (5) Ruth, born in 1765, married Jehiel Strong. (6) Silas, sketch of whom follows. (7) James, born in July, 1774, married Huldah Chittenden, and died Sept. 1, 1850. (8) Andrew, born Sept. 13, 1776, married Ruth Chittenden, and died July 9, 1859.

Silas Norton, born Feb. 20, 1760, died Nov. 29, 1821. He married, Feb. 18, 1792, Lucy Chittenden, born Feb. 9, 1774, died July 22, 1859. Their children: (1) Alatheia, born Jan. 12, 1795, died July 22, 1811. (2) Harriet, born March 16, 1797, died Oct. 14, 1875. (3) Huldah was born June 18, 1798. (4) Polly, born Oct. 26, 1800, married Martin Hoadley. (5) John Ward, born Feb. 26, 1802, married Jane Nichols. (6) Anson, sketch of whom follows. (7) Silas, born Aug. 28, 1805, married Eliza Everts, and died Aug. 17, 1848. (8)

Lucyette, born Jan. 31, 1807, married George Stannard. (9) Augustus Dennison, born Dec. 1, 1810, married Julia Perow. (10) James Austin, born Dec. 22, 1814, married Ann Gale.

Ansen Norton, father of Mrs. Richard M. Leete, was born Dec. 7, 1803, and died Sept. 3, 1859. He married, Oct. 7, 1838, Mrs. Fanny Bishop, who was born Sept. 2, 1804, and died Nov. 10, 1871. Their children: Mary Emma, born Jan. 3, 1840, wife of Richard M. Leete; and James Lewis, born May 14, 1842, who married Minnie A. Hotchkiss.

ROGER CALVIN LEETE, second son of Rufus N., was born at Leete's Island, Guilford, Aug. 30, 1838, and received a good education, in part at the district schools, in part at the high school at Guilford. Until he was thirty-one years of age he remained on the homestead, and then removed to his present farm, which was part of the homestead, and where he has since followed agricultural pursuits.

In October, 1869, Mr. Leete married Miss Helen A. Park, who was born in Sheshequin, Pa., a daughter of Amos and Arlette M. (Griffen) Park, and two children came to them, viz.: Irving P., born Jan. 22, 1875, attended the district school of his neighborhood, also the Guilford high school, and entered the third year of a course at Yale University; he died Aug. 2, 1896. R. Wayne, the second son, born Aug. 9, 1876, received a similar education at the district schools, and had just entered Yale when he, too, was called from earth, Dec. 8, 1896. The mother died May 3, 1898. She and her sons were highly respected in the community, and their taking away—the sons within a brief period of a few months—the mother following so soon afterward, was a terrible blow to the bereaved father, who still finds in the genuine sympathy of the community some little solace to his sorrow. He is a quiet inmostentatious citizen, and a useful member of society, one who lives up to the "golden rule." In politics he is a Democrat, and at the present time is serving as selectman of Guilford.

WALTER A. MAIN, one of the most influential and esteemed citizens of Orange, was born in that town Aug. 6, 1854. His grandfather, Bradley Main, was a farmer of Coventry, Tolland county, Conn., where he passed his life, and where he died at an advanced age.

Elias T. Main, father of Walter A., was one of a family of six children, only one of whom is yet living, Abbie, wife of Elijah F. West, of Hartford, whose son Fred A. is a member of the board of aldermen of that city. Elias T. Main was a man of high personal character and great public spirit, and was universally respected and beloved by his fellow townsmen, who repeatedly evinced their admiration for, and confidence in, him by electing him to offices of grave responsibility and high trust. He was born in New Haven in 1819. In early life he was a carriage maker, and while yet a young man took an active part in public affairs, being foreman of a (hand) tire engine company and captain of the military organization known as the Governor's Foot Guards. In 1852 he disposed of his business in New Haven and removed to Orange, where he purchased a farm and engaged in agricultural pursuits. In 1858 he was elected town clerk, which office he held, through successive re-elections, for thirty years, or until his death, Sept. 20, 1888, at the age of sixty-nine years. In 1873, the location of the town offices being moved to the borough of West Haven, he abandoned farming and devoted himself wholly to his public duties. In addition to the office of town clerk he held that of registrar of vital statistics. His acquaintance was co-extensive with the limits of the town, and his incorruptible probity, joined to a keen business sagacity, commanded universal respect. He was an ardent Republican in politics, and was for many years chairman of the town committee and a delegate to numerous conventions. In 1872 he was elected a member of the Lower House of the General Assembly. He was of a genial disposition and fond of social pleasure. A charter member of New Haven City Lodge, I. O. O. F., he filled all the chairs in that body, including that of past noble grand, and was for forty years a member of the Grand Encampment. He was an earnest and consistent member of the Baptist Church of New Haven, as was also his wife, who preceded him to the grave, dying at the age of forty-three. Her maiden name was Jane E. Smith, and she was the only child of William A. Smith, a prosperous farmer of Orange, of which town her family were early settlers, and where she herself was born. Of the seven children born to Mr. and Mrs. Elias T. Main, five are yet living, Walter A. being the fourth. Martha is the wife of William M. Russell, of Tyler City, in the town of Orange; William D. is a resident of Hartford; Mary E. resides in West Haven; Arthur L. is manager of the Spring Lake Co. of West Haven. Clifford L., who was in the employ of the Electric railway, died during the summer of 1901, leaving a wife and four children, who reside in West Haven.

Walter A. Main passed his boyhood upon his father's farm in Orange, and his early education was received at the common schools and academy of that town. After graduating from the latter institution he entered his father's office, as assistant. Here under the care of a wise and loving father, he received his first business training, readily mastering all details and proving himself a capable and efficient clerk. In fact, he continued to render more or less aid to his father in the discharge of the duties of the office until the latter's demise, when he became his successor. Meanwhile he was made the incumbent of various other important offices. From 1874 until 1883 he was deputy postmaster at West Haven, the actual supervision of the office devolving almost wholly upon him. In addition thereto he was chosen tax collector for the town and borough in 1877, and was annually re-elected until 1885. In 1887 he was elected first selectman, but resigned that office to accept the post of town clerk, which, as has been said, was offered him upon his father's death. In 1891, however, failing health compelled him to seek recuperation in the more salubrious climate of California, where he remained until June, 1893. During his sojourn on the coast he was connected with various local companies for irrigation, besides being interested in orange culture. The following year, upon his return to Orange, he was again elected first selectman, and has been annually re-elected, holding the office at the present time. Like his father, Mr. Main is an earnest Republican, and a valued man in the councils of his party, having been for many years chairman of the town committee, and a frequent delegate to county and state conventions. In 1900 he was elected a member of the General Assembly to represent the town of Orange, and has served as clerk of the committee on Cities and Boroughs, which was one of the important committees of the session.

In 1883 Mr. Main embarked in the real estate and insurance business, which he resumed on his return from the West, and represents some of the oldest and soundest companies in the country, among them the German American, Aetna, London and Commercial Union. He is treasurer of the Spring Lake Ice Co., in which concern he is a large stockholder. Mr. Main's business career has been exceptionally successful, having been molded upon the principles of sound judgment and unwavering integrity.

Mr. Main is a member of the Royal Arcanum and a Mason of high rank, having passed through all the degrees of the fraternity up to the 32d, and affiliates with Annawan Lodge, No. 115, A. F. & A. M., of West Haven; Franklin Chapter, R. A. M., and Harmony Council, of New Haven; New Haven Commandery, K. T.; La Fayette Consistory; and Pyramid Temple, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. He is also a member of the Second Company of Governor's Foot Guards, of New Haven.

In November, 1879, Mr. Main was married to Carrie E., daughter of Sidney Smith, a shoe dealer in West Haven, and his wife, Sarah (Goodell), of Westville. Mrs. Main is one of a family of four children, of whom only she and a brother, Edward E., survive; her parents are also deceased. To Mr. and Mrs. Main have been born three children, Mildred L., Florence S. and W. Raymond. In religious faith Mr. Main is a Congregationalist, and attends the services of that denomination.

GEORGE AUGUSTUS WILCOX was born in Madison, New Haven county, Sept. 30, 1830, and makes his summer home in his native town. He comes of one of the oldest families of New England and is seventh in line of direct descent from John Wilcox, the first of the family in America, who settled in Hartford prior to 1639, was one of the original proprietors and held several responsible offices; he had his home on the present site of the Park, near the State House, and had a good estate. He died in 1651 and left one son, John, who came with him from England, and two daughters.

George Augustus Wilcox is a son of the late Jonathan S. Wilcox and Chloe (Hand), a sister of Daniel Hand. He was graduated from Yale College in 1852, and after spending a year at the South, went to Detroit, Mich., where he entered the law office of his uncle, Judge George E. Hand, and was admitted to the Michigan Bar in 1854. Mr. Wilcox began the practice of his chosen profession, and continued it until 1880, when he returned East, and has since spent his summers in Madison, and his winters in the city of New York. Mr. Wilcox is a gentleman of genial character and much culture. He has traveled quite extensively both in this country and abroad, and has occasionally contributed literary articles for publication. Independent in politics and religion, he holds his own views and does not hesitate to express them on occasion clearly and positively.

Mr. Wilcox was married, in Brooklyn, N. Y., to Mary H. Grenelle, a daughter of William H. Grenelle, and has one child, Constance.

MARTIN KELLOGG NORTHAM, a progressive and prominent farmer of the town of Branford, was born in Chatham, Middlesex Co., Conn., Oct. 16, 1818, son of John Cone and Rachel (Kellogg) Northam.

Jonathan Northam, the paternal grandfather of Martin K., was a soldier in the war of the Revolution, and received a pension on account of his service in the Continental army. He was a farmer, and died at Marlboro at the advanced age of eighty-seven years.

John Cone Northam was born in Marlboro, Conn. He was reared to farming, but became a quarryman, and was employed for many years in the quarries at Haddam Neck. He died at the age of sixty-four years. Mr. Northam first married Rachel Kellogg, a native of Chatham, and daughter of Martin and Rachel (Hosford) Kellogg, the former of whom was a farmer in the town of Chatham. To this union were born children as follows: John M., Martin K., Lucy A. (wife of Hubbard Fuller), Joel K. and William B., of whom Martin and Lucy survive. By his second wife, Anna Brainerd, daughter of Frederick Brainerd, Mr. Northam became the father of two children: Laura B., who married William Bishop; and Frederick B., a farmer, who married Ellen Lee.

Martin Kellogg Northam was reared in his native town, where he received a common school education, and at the age of sixteen years started out in life for himself as a driver in the quarries, in which employment he acquitted himself creditably, and won the good opinion of his employers. When he had become somewhat older he worked at stone cutting, beginning at this trade in 1836, and continuing in same until 1867. In 1859 Mr. Northam located in Branford, and there followed the stone cutter's trade up to 1867, when he turned his attention to farming, which has been his occupation ever since. He owns and cultivates a fine tract of eighty acres. Our subject is active in local affairs, especially in the advancement of educational interests, having been a member of the school board for twelve consecutive years, during which period he has given his time and influence with such good effect that three new school houses have been erected in Branford and Stony Creek. He has also acted as selectman of the town, and in his public service, as in his private life, his duties are ably and promptly performed. His political allegiance is given to the Republican party.

Mr. Northam was married July 2, 1863, to Ellen L. Palmer, who was born May 24, 1843, only child of Hezekiah and Mary (Beach) Palmer, of Branford. Both her parents died in 1892, within two weeks. Mr. Palmer was a sailor, as was also his father, James Palmer, who was drowned off the coast of New Jersey. Mr. and Mrs. Northam have had two children, John H. and Calvin K. John H. Northam was born Feb. 15, 1865, married Cora Bishop, who was born June 19, 1868, and has four children—Robert H., born Nov. 22, 1889; Adeline E., born May 12, 1891; Frederick R., born July 25, 1892; and Martin P., born Sept. 22, 1896. John H. Northam is an engineer in the Norcross Quarry, Stony Creek. Calvin K. Northam was born June 17, 1866, married Jennie Botsford, Nov. 16, 1897, and has one child, Eva May. He is a farmer by occupation. Mr. and Mrs. Northam both belong to the Stony Creek Congregational Church, and their long career of honorable industry and fine character are known and recognized in the community.

CHARLES THERON HOTCHKISS, a prominent and influential citizen of Cheshire, was born in the town of Bethany, July 9, 1834, and traces his ancestry back to Samuel and Elizabeth (Cleverly) Hotchkiss, natives of Essex, England, who came to New Haven, Conn., in 1641, and were married there the following year. Samuel Hotchkiss was a tiller of the soil, and was the founder of the settlement in Wallingford, where he died. His children were John, who was born in 1643, and died in 1682; Samuel, born in 1645; James, born in 1647; Joshua, born in 1651; Thomas, born in 1654; and David, born in 1657. Of this family, Joshua Hotchkiss was born in Wallingford, and wedded Mary Hotchkiss, of New Haven, by whom he had twelve children, namely: Mary, Stephen, Martha, Priscilla, Abraham, Desire, Isaac, Jacob, John, Elizabeth, Mary (2), and Mary (3). Jabez Hotchkiss, a son of one of these, was born in Bethany, New Haven county, and there spent his entire life. His children were Stephen, the grandfather of Charles T.; Mary, born June 3, 1763; Timothy, born Jan. 22, 1766; Lydia, born April 1, 1768, died in 1773; Eleazer, born June 4, 1770; Lydia (2), born June 7, 1774.

Stephen Hotchkiss was also a life-long resident of Bethany, where he was born Oct. 31, 1761, and he died in 1847, at the ripe old age of eighty-seven years. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Hannah Brown, passed away at the age of eighty. In their family were the following children: Harleley, father of Charles T.; Rebecca, wife of Minott Collins; Wealthy, who died young; Eber, who married Thurza Driver; Stephen, who married Abigail Hotchkiss; Hannah, wife of John Russell; Jared, who married Amy French, still a resident of Bethany; Jesse, who married Caroline Lounsbury; and George, who married Laura Sperry, who died in New Haven. All lived in Bethany and are now deceased.

Harley Hotchkiss was born Sept. 12, 1791, and reared in Bethany, where he married Harriet Collins, also a native of that town and a daughter of Benjamin Collins. (Her mother's maiden name was Ford.) They continued to make their home there throughout life, the father devoting his time and attention to agriculture. He died March 29, 1860, and his wife was burned to death by the destruction of a house two years later, when she was aged seventy years. To them were born four children: (1) Wealthy Ann married William Gilyard, of Seymour, and died in 1892, leaving three children, Mary, Thomas F. and Sarah L. (2) Andrew T. married Belinda Buckingham, and died in Bethany in 1877, leaving four children: Ernest Z., Isa A., Harley D., and Andrew T., now of New Haven. (3) Harris died young. (4) Charles T. completes the family.

Charles T. Hotchkiss was reared in his native town and obtained a good practical education, which enabled him to successfully engage in teaching for a period of thirty-six winters. As a teacher he came to Cheshire in early life, and here he purchased a farm in April, 1861. While following his profession during the winter season until recently he has engaged in farming, with marked success, through the summer months. He also gives considerable time to work at the mason's trade.

In 1861 Mr. Hotchkiss was married, in South Canaan, to Miss Emma Victoria Watson, a native of Torrington, Conn., and a daughter of George and Jane (Belden) Watson, the former of whom died in Roseville, Illinois, the latter in Norfolk, Conn. By this union were born three children, namely: Mary Claribel, Mrs. Warren Andrews, of Cheshire; Clarence H., who died at the age of six and one-half years; and Harriet I., wife of Everett Pardee, of New Haven. Both of the daughters have been teachers. Fraternally Mr. Hotchkiss is a member of the Patrons of Husbandry, and politically is a staunch Democrat. He is now serving as justice of the peace, and is the present chairman of the board of education. He is also secretary and treasurer of the Hotchkiss reunions, which held their twentieth annual meeting in 1900, when 175 representatives of the family were present. He is regarded as one of the leading and most highly respected citizens of Cheshire, and it is, therefore, consistent that he be represented in a work whose province is the portrayal of the lives of the prominent men of New Haven county.

ALBERT PHELPS is the president of the Phelps & Bartholomew Co., well known as manufacturers of clocks of all grades, and is prominent among the business men whose enterprise and energy have created the thriving city of Ansonia. The product of their factory is in demand in all parts of the United States, and the reputation of the firm for excellent workmanship is constantly increasing their trade. The business, which was established nineteen years ago under the firm name of Phelps & Bartholomew, was reorganized in 1886 as a stock company, with a capital of $15,000, and our subject has been at its head ever since. At present the other officers are A. H. Bartholomew, treasurer, and Howard D. Phelps, secretary. They started with twelve hands and a small shop, the Gardner building, and now employ over a hundred hands, and have a factory 125 feet long, 45 feet wide and four stories high, with a wing 30x25 feet in size. The firm has had some difficulties to overcome on account of persecution by larger firms on the question of patent rights, but they have fortunately been free from labor troubles and in the regular receipt of good orders.

Albert Phelps was born July 13, 1839, in Marlboro, Conn., where his ancestors were early settlers. Oliver Phelps, his grandfather, was a leading farmer of that locality and an active supporter of the work of the Methodist Church. He died at the age of sixty-seven, and his wife, Mary (Hills), who was born in that vicinity, died at the age of seventy-four. Their family consisted of six children, all of whom are deceased. David Phelps, our subject's father, was born in 1810, and reared at Marlboro, and learned the trade of stonemason. Later he went to Bristol and worked in a clock factory for a time, and for twenty years he was similarly employed in Hartford, but he retired a few years previous to his death, which occurred July 10, 1873. Politically he was a Republican, and he took an active interest in local affairs, serving on the board of relief and as justice of the peace. He was prominent in religious work as a member of the Methodist Church and for a number of years he led the choir, his voice being unusually fine. He married Hannah Freeman, a native of Hebron, Conn., who is now living in Bristol. Of their five children four are living, viz.: Jane, wife of William Garlick, of Bristol; Albert, our subject; Mary, wife of George Lewis, of Bristol; and George, who is employed in our subject's factory at Ansonia.

At the age of fourteen Albert Phelps accompanied the family to Bristol, and his education was secured in the common schools. At eighteen he began work in the Bristol clock shop, where he remained a number of years, and in 1871 he located in Ansonia, taking the contract to make movements for the Ansonia Clock Co. After a time he was made superintendent of the movement department, but on the removal of the company to Brooklyn he engaged in business for himself, in partnership with Arthur H. Bartholomew, as stated above. In politics Mr. Phelps is a Democrat, and he has served on the board of relief. Socially the family is prominent, and he is a member of Franklin Lodge, F. & A. M., of Bristol. He is identified with the Episcopal Church, his family being active workers in that organization.

In 1864 Mr. Phelps married Miss Nellie Oakley, a native of New York City, and they have two children: (1) Howard D., who is connected with our subject's factory, married Miss Annie Tuttle, and has two children, Helen and Albert. (2) Miss Maud is at home.

HON. DANA BARTHOLOMEW, whose active, busy and useful life closed Sept. 1, 1900, while he was staying temporarily with his family at Saratoga, N. Y., was for many years one of the leading citizens and business men of Ansonia, and a representative of one of the State's early families.

The branch of the Bartholomew family to which our subject belonged traces its ancestry into the sixteenth century to John Bartholomew, of Warborough, England, who was married there in 1551. William Bartholomew, a great-grandson of this John, grandson of John, and son of William, all of England, born there in 1602-03, married Anna Lord, and came to Boston in the ship "Griffin" in 1634. In 1635 he was chosen a deputy to the General Court of Ipswich, Mass. From this first American ancestor the subject of this sketch was a descendant in the eighth generation, his line being through William (2), Isaac, Abraham, Abraham (2), Jonathan and Jeremiah H. Bartholomew.

Hon. Jeremiah Hotchkiss Bartholomew, the father of our subject, was born April 18, 1814, in that part of Farmington, Conn., now Plainville. He received a limited education only, attending the district school until fifteen years of age, and then learned the tanner's trade. Subsequently he clerked for a time for Adna Whiting, of Plainville, and followed various occupations, always with application, intelligence and perseverance, characteristics which afterward brought him power and influence. He was employed in the Wolcottville Brass Kettle Factory, became superintendent and ultimately general agent of a large business of the same character in Ansonia, for which Anson G. Phelps, of New York, furnished the capital. Here Mr. Bartholomew's business capacity was given a field, and the Battery Mills, Brass & Copper, and Brass, Copper & Iron Wire Mills, with their numerous branches—which were built, started and operated most successfully for some twenty-five and more years by him as agent, superintendent, etc., of the very extensive manufacturing firm of Phelps, Dodge & Co.—are evidences of his ability. Mr. Bartholomew held such position until ill health, in 1876, compelled him to retire.

By the personal efforts of Mr. Bartholomew the New Haven & Derby railroad was built to Birmingham and Ansonia. He became its president in 1874, and continued as such until the time of his death, in 1884. In all matters of public interest Mr. Bartholomew was foremost in action, liberal in aid, and completed all his undertakings successfully. He represented his town and district in the House and Senate. His political affiliations were with the Republican party. He was a member of the Congregational Church from 1843 until his death.

On Sept. 15, 1834, Mr. Bartholomew was married to Polly H., daughter of Truman Root, of Bristol, Conn., and to the union were born children as follows: Sophronia, Adele (who died when ten years old), Dana, Frances, Arthur H. and Emma.

Dana Bartholomew, our subject proper, was born April 8, 1847, in what was formerly Wolcottville, now Torrington, Conn., where he attended the district school until he was sixteen years old, and he was also a student at the Eastman Business College. Then, in keeping with his father's opinion that the best school for a business life is the business life itself, he entered the employ of the Ansonia Brass & Copper Co. For fourteen years he familiarized himself with all the process of brass manufacture, and became a stockholder of the company. In 1877 he severed his managerial connection with the company and entered into partnership with A. B. Hendryx for the manufacture of wire bird-cages. This business venture was very prosperous, and when the business was moved to New Haven, Mr. Bartholomew's many interests at home requiring his attention, he severed his connection with this company and formed another for the manufacture, under patent, of bits, augers, screw-drivers and braces; but in 1884 the floods swept the entire plant away by the breaking of the dam of the Ansonia Water Co., in which he was a large owner. From that time until his death Mr. Bartholomew was occupied in caring for his many invested interests. He served as secretary, manager, then as president of the Ansonia Water Co., also as president, treasurer and agent of the Ansonia Hall Co., owning the principal building in the town for offices and hall. He was a director of the Ansonia Savings Bank, the Ansonia Ice Co. and the Naugatuck Valley Ice Co., of Bridgeport, a director and treasurer of the Meriden Ice Co., and vice-president of the Mallett Cattle Co. of Texas. At the time of his death he was president of the Ansonia Novelty Co. and the Ansonia Telephone Co. He was an enterprising and public-spirited citizen, and held at various times a number of the town offices. In 1880 he was a representative in the General Assembly from Derby.

Throughout life Mr. Bartholomew was closely identified with the Christian forces of the town. For years he was deacon in the Congregational Church and also church clerk. He was a Sabbath-school worker and teacher of great popularity. Like his father, too, he was for years one of the foremost supporters of the Young Men's Christian Association of the town, and whenever the general Christian enterprises of the section were in need of special help their appeals to him were not unheeded.

Mr. Bartholomew was twice married. On Sept. 17, 1867, he married Miss Lanette Wightman, of Southington, who died July 21, 1886, and on March 17, 1888, he married Miss Isabel H. Warner, of Springfield, Mass., a daughter of one of the old and honored families of Enfield, Conn. To the first union were born four children, namely: Ellen E., Dana W., Jeremiah Hotchkiss, and Valentine (who died in infancy). To the second marriage came Pauline, who died in infancy; and Helen Gertrude, born Nov. 25, 1890. The family home on South Cliff street is one where wealth has set its adornments and one from which its occupants have dispensed a generous hospitality.

ALLING. The New Haven branch of the Alling family to which the late Truman Alling and sons, Francis A. and John T. Alling, belonged, were descended from the first settlers of the Colony of New Haven.

Roger Alling, the first American ancestor of the New Haven branch of the family under consideration, was born in England, son of James, and came to New England, about 1638; he settled in the Colony of New Haven, then called Quinnipiac. About 1642 he married Mary, eldest daughter of Thomas Nash, of Bendley, England.

From this first settler the late Francis A. and John T. Alling, of New Haven, were in the eighth generation, their line being through John, Capt. Jonathan, John (2), Ebenezer, Jonathan (2), and Truman Alling.

John Alling, son of Roger, was born October 2, 1647, married at New Haven, in 1671, Susannah Coe, born in 1653. Mr. Alling died in 1717, and his widow in 1746.

Capt. Jonathan Alling, son of John, was born in 1683, and married in 1713, Sarah, born in 1693, daughter of John Sacket. Capt. Alling died in 1755 and his widow in 1766. His life had been a successful one, he became a prominent citizen, and was captain of a militia company. For twenty-three times he served in the Legislature, after 1730.

David R. Alling

John Alling (2), son of Capt. Jonathan, was born in 1714, and married, in 1738, Abiah Hitecock, born in 1715. They resided in Allingtown, where he died in 1761, and his widow in 1783.

Ebenezer Alling, son of John (2), was born in 1741 and married Lydia Punderson, born in 1745; and they resided in Allingtown, where he died in 1800, and she in 1832.

Jonathan Alling (2), son of Ebenezer, was born July 15, 1775, and Nov. 20, 1798, married Susannah Platt, born Jan. 3, 1780. By trade he was a carpenter, and his last days were spent in New Haven, where he died in 1861, and his wife passed away in 1854.

Truman Alling, son of Jonathan (2), was born on Feb. 7, 1800, and was married Aug. 20, 1820, to Clarissa Hendrick, born in 1801. He died June 15, 1892, and his wife Jan. 9, 1871. By trade Truman Alling was a carpenter, his principal work being the making of boats and suitably fitting them for the carriage of horses to the West Indies. A part of his time was occupied in farming. His children were: Mary, who married M. Armstrong, a skilled carriage builder; William, deceased, left two sons, Burton and Leonard, of New Haven; Francis A.; Robert; Julia, who is Mrs. Patrick, of Norwalk, Conn.; Amelia, who died at the age of eleven years; John Truman; and Harriet.

FRANCIS A. ALLING, son of Truman, was born Sept. 8, 1825, and married Dec. 29, 1853, Mary J. Briggs, born Dec. 13, 1829. Their children were: Charles F. Alling, born Dec. 29, 1854, married Oct. 31, 1888, Carlie A. Sweet, born Oct. 9, 1867, and the tenth generation came in with the birth of Gladys H., born Jan. 17, 1892; Truman F., born March 8, 1894; Hazel Z., born Nov. 14, 1896; and Olive A., born Dec. 27, 1897.

Francis A. Alling spent his early school days in New Haven, attending the public schools. His first important work in building was on the railroad on the first bridge across the meadows on the N. Y., N. H. & H. R. R., and he was foreman at the time the second track and bridge were put in. Early in his business career, he went into partnership with Charles Waterhouse, as bridge builders, pile drivers, joiners, etc., later continued in the business alone, and then the partnership of Case & Alling was formed about 1866, but this business was dissolved by the death of Mr. Case. A partnership was then formed between F. A. and D. R. Alling, cousins, this association still continuing.

John T. Alling, son of Truman, was born July 23, 1833, in New Haven, and in December, 1857, married Editha E. Baldwin, who died April 16, 1895. One daughter, Eva E., was born of this union, Nov. 23, 1863.

The early school days of John T. Alling were spent in New Haven, and he also worked on his father's farm, which was located where Spring street and vicinity make a thoroughfare through the city. When he began to learn the trade of builder, he was under the instruction of M. Weaver, and continued in active life until his retirement, in 1893. Mr. Alling was well known in the building and contracting business where he possessed the esteem of his associates. His residence is at No. 203 Spring street. Mr. Alling has always been opposed to secret societies and also to insurance.

David Alling, son of Jonathan (2), was born in New Haven May 26, 1802, and died May 4, 1883. His education was obtained in New Haven and later he engaged in farming in this city, in Orange and in Westville. As a matter of interest, it is related that Mr. Alling was a winner in a plowing contest, which was held on the New Haven Green, many years ago, and he was considered one of the best judges of cattle in New Haven county. For many years he had been a member of Trinity Church. David Alling married Anna, daughter of Philo Beers, of Trumbull, Conn., and their children were: Jane, deceased; Phebe Ann, who married Eli Page, and has a daughter, Mrs. B. G. Skilton; Emily, deceased; Eliza, who married D. O. Camp; Jonathan B., deceased; David Royal and Augusta Jane, twins, of whom the latter married C. G. Smith, and has one daughter, Lillian J.

DAVID ROYAL ALLING was born Sept. 15, 1845, in New Haven, where his youth has been spent. After leaving the public school, he entered the Charles Fabrique school, later the Stevens & Wells Business College in New Haven. Then he became clerk, and later bookkeeper for Case & Alling, and in 1873 bought the interest of F. A. Alling. In 1876, upon the death of Mr. Case, F. A. Alling purchased his interest, and the firm became F. A. & D. R. Alling, and this house is now one of the leading business firms of New Haven.

David R. Alling is a member of Quinnipiac Lodge, No. 1, I. O. O. F., Past Noble Grand; Sassacus Encampment, No. 1, I. O. O. F., Past Chief Patriarch; Grand Grand Canton Sassacus, No. 1, Patriarchs Militant, Past Commandant; Grand Lodge I. O. O. F., Past Grand Master and Past Grand Representative to Sovereign Grand Lodge; Naomi Rebekah Lodge, No. 1, I. O. O. F. In Masonic circles he is also prominent. Raised in Hiram Lodge, No. 1, A. F. & A. M.; affiliated with Wooster Lodge, No. 79, Past Master; Franklin Chapter, No. 2, R. A. M.; Harmony Council, No. 8, R. & S. M., Past Thrice Illustrious Master; New Haven Commandery, No. 2, K. T., Past Eminent Commander; E. G. Storer Lodge of Perfection, A. & A. S. R., Valorous Junior Grand Warden; Elm City Council, P. of J., A. & A. S. R., Most Excellent Senior Grand Warden; New Haven Chapter Rose Croix, A. & A. S. R., Most Wise and Perfect Master; Lafayette Consistory of Sublime Princes of the Royal Secret, A. & A. S. R., Second Lieutenant Commander; Supreme Council of Sovereign Grand Inspectors—General of the thirty-third and last degree of A. & A. S. R. For some time he has been auditor in the Grand Lodge of Masons of Connecticut, and is one of the managers of the Masonic and Odd Fellows Home. In his religious belief he is an Episcopalian, and is now serving as a vestryman in Trinity Church.

ALONZO GRANNISS was born March 27, 1820, in Waterbury, where he still resides, at his home on Prospect street, honored and respected by all who know him, and hale and hearty at the advanced age of eighty-two years.

Simeon Granniss, grandfather of Alonzo, was a native of New Haven county, Conn., and on marrying settled in Naugatuck, New Haven county, where he reared a family of five children, who were born in the following order: Emerilla married Leverett Benham; Polly married Lemuel Austin; Estella became the wife of Friend Sanford; Caleb was the father of Alonzo, our subject; Simeon settled in New York State, and was a farmer by occupation.

Caleb Granniss was doubtless born in Naugatuck, and was reared to blacksmithing and shoe-making. He married Miss Ruth Arnst, a native of Naugatuck, and a daughter of John Arnst, who came from France as captain's mate, and was the first professional tailor to settle at Salem Bridge, in that town. To Caleb Granniss and his wife were born children as follows: Edward was a carpenter and joiner in New York State, where his death took place (he served gallantly throughout the Civil war); Marshall was a mechanic in Waterbury, Conn., where he passed his life; James M. was a mechanic in Waterbury; Sarah became the wife of Frank Curtiss, and later married a Mr. Basford, and is still living; Alonzo is our subject. After the death of Caleb Granniss, the father of this family, his widow was united in marriage with Joseph Cook, to whom she bore two children: An infant that died unnamed and Sarah. She passed the remainder of her life in Waterbury.

Alonzo Granniss migrated back and forth with his parents between Waterbury and Salem Bridge (Naugatuck), and was a child when they last moved to the latter town. There he had his home for four years, when with his mother he returned to Waterbury, his father having died in the meantime. Here he has since resided. Mr. Granniss did not enjoy to any great extent the advantages of early education. At the early age of twelve years, or in 1832, he went to work in the factory of Benedict & Burnham, was shrewd and showed marked ability, and when sixteen years of age was made foreman of the rolling department, which position he held until 1893, making a continuous service of fifty-nine years—an unprecedented length of time in one employ in Waterbury.

In 1837 Mr. Granniss was married to Miss Esther D. Payne, who lived in the village of Prospect, New Haven Co., Conn., but was born in Ohio, a daughter of Silas Payne. This marriage was crowned with four children, viz.: Margaret, who died at the age of nine years; Frederick A., who survives; and two that died in infancy. Mr. and Mrs. Alonzo Granniss have been united in matrimony for sixty-five years, and together have attended the Episcopal Church that long period of time. In politics he was a Democrat in his early days, but of late he has affiliated with the Republican party. He has served his fellow townsmen six or seven years as a member of the council and as a member of the board of relief, as street commissioner, and was one of the organizers of the Mattatuck Engine Company, in 1839. He has never belonged to any of the fraternities. He has always relied on his own sterling integrity, and no man in Waterbury has ever been more respected for this than himself.

Hon. Frederick A. Granniss, only surviving child of Alonzo Granniss, was born Oct. 18, 1851, attended school in New Haven, in Litchfield, the Gunn School of Washington, Conn., the Episcopal Academy in Cheshire (Military Academy), and also a commercial college in Hartford, being better prepared in this respect, for the activities of business, than his father had been. He was educated practically in politics, and early became an adherent of the Republican party. In 1884 he was the Republican representative of the town of Cheshire in the State Legislature, but since then he has been attending to his father's and his own real-estate matters, being the owner of considerable real estate. Fraternally Hon. Frederick A. Granniss is a member of Temple Lodge, No. 16, F. & A. M., of Cheshire, and also of the Waterbury Club.

On May 3, 1873, occurred the marriage of Frederick A. Granniss and Fannie Charlotte McIntire, of Ottawa, Canada, a daughter of Thomas McIntire, and of Scottish descent. This union has been blessed with one child, Margaret McIntire, who is a musician of marked ability. She has been presented by her grandfather, Alonzo Granniss, with a Steiner violin over 200 years old, which was selected by Prof. Hermann, of New York City, from the collection of Dr. Von Derhor, of Europe. The summer home of Hon. Frederick A. Granniss is at Pine Orchard, Connecticut.

WALTER H. ZINK, M. D. (deceased), one of the oldest and most prominent physicians of Branford, New Haven county, was a man whose intellectual acquirements, professional character and enthusiasm, and open, candid countenance won the confidence and retained the respect of the public. His was a genial spirit, and he was very companionable, mingling freely in society, and taking an active and helpful interest in local affairs.

Dr. Zink was born in Nuremberg, Germany, March 21, 1841, son of Charles Frederick and Anna Maria (Ernst) Zink, the father a government forest master in the Province of Nuremberg. He was a son of Philip Zink, also a government forest master. Walter Zink was thoroughly educated in his native country, passing through the preparatory schools with credit, and in 1858 entering the University at Wurzburg, from the Medical Department of which he was graduated in 1862, with honor. In the fall of 1863 young Zink came to America, locating in New York, where he took a post-graduate course in Columbia College and practiced until interested in the Civil war. The cause of the Union aroused his enthusiasm for liberty and progress, and he was almost immediately given the post of surgeon and attached to the 5th Army Corps, then under the command of Gen. Warner, of Virginia. He continued to discharge the trying duties of that position for some two years, gaining a valuable knowledge of surgery and the practical application of medicine. During one of the fierce fights, while he was caring for a wounded soldier, a spent bullet struck him in the eye. Dr. Zink did not stop, but continued his work on the patient before him until the leg was properly set, and then discovered that for the rest of his life he would be deprived of the sight of one eye. The Doctor was very popular with the soldiers, as might be expected on account of his self-forgetfulness and devotion to his work. When the war was ended Dr. Zink returned to peaceful life and settled in New York, where he married, in the fall of 1865, and made his home in Newtown, L. I. After eleven years and seven months he went to Trenton, where he lived one year, and then moved to Branford. For over eleven years of his residence in Newtown he acted as the local health officer. Upon the death of Dr. Hall he came to Branford, in 1878, and until his death, Aug. 26, 1900, at the age of fifty-nine years, was a familiar and beloved presence in the homes of the people, and by the bedside of the sick. A kindly heart and a sympathetic spirit animated all his work, and he brought to the healing of the sick all the resources of his great profession. He enjoyed a patronage highly complimentary to his medical skill.

In Branford Dr. Zink was actively interested in public affairs and filled many positions of honor and trust, having been at different times justice of the peace (ten years in all), member of the school board, acting school visitor and health officer. The Doctor belonged to numerous social orders in the city, and his funeral was conducted by Widows' Sons' Lodge, F. & A. M. He was an honored member of the I. O. O. F.; of Woodland Lodge, No. 39, K. P., in which he was first commander of the castle; and of Mason Rogers Post, G. A. R., in which he held the office of post surgeon from the time of organization; he was post surgeon of the State for twelve years prior to his decease. Professionally the Doctor held membership with the New Haven Medical Society and the Connecticut State Medical Society. In religion he united with the Lutheran Church. The Doctor's death was caused by a cancer of the stomach, with which he had been afflicted some two years. The indomitable strength and courage of the man is manifest in the fact that he continued his active practice until about six weeks before his death.

Dr. Zink was married, Sept. 25, 1864, to Caroline A. Milling, daughter of Philip and Katherine (daughter of Lord Sminke) Milling, natives of Hessen-Cassel, Germany, and residents of the city of New York. To this union were born five children, three of whom survive: (1) Charles E., who graduated from the University of Vermont, and from the Medical Department of Baltimore University, in 1900; (2) Louisa A., who married Benjamin F. Hosley, warden of the borough; and (3) Walter R.

HARVEY G. DENNISTON. The family of Denniston is of Scotch-Irish descent. The progenitors of the American branch emigrated from Scotland and from County Longford, Ireland.

Abraham Denniston, the grandfather of Harvey G., was a farmer in Orange county, New York, where he was born, as was also his wife, Bathsheba Goldsmith. There they died, and there, too, they reared their three children, Harvey, Lydia and Goldsmith. The eldest son, Harvey, was a farmer, like his father, and passed his life in the county where he was born. Lydia married Aaron P. Johnes, an importer of, and wholesale dealer in, dry goods in New York City.

Goldsmith Denniston, the father of Harvey G., was born at Blooming Grove, Orange Co., N. Y., in 1801. He was educated at Union and Princeton Colleges. After a short time spent at farming, he removed to Newburgh, N. Y., and later to Steuben county, that State. He passed away in 1878, while on a visit to his son, Harvey G. Denniston. He was a man of prominence, and served many years as county judge of Orange county. A staunch Whig, he was active in the affairs of his party, was for a long time chairman of the New York State Central Committee, and was a personal friend of Henry Clay, with whom he was in frequent correspondence, as well as with Webster, Calhoun and other leading statesmen and politicians of the day. About 1825 he married a second cousin, Fanny Denniston, of Orange county, who died in 1865. To their marriage were born three sons, of whom Abraham, the eldest, was a soldier in the Union army, during the war of the Rebellion, and lost his life in the service, in 1863. Aaron, born in Newburgh, N. Y., in 1840, is a farmer and justice of the peace in Steuben county, New York.

Harvey G. Denniston was born at Blooming Grove, Aug. 23, 1829. He passed his youth in Newburgh, N. Y., and received a collegiate education, graduating from Union College in 1846. The eight years following his graduation he passed in the employ of the wholesale dry-goods house of Johnes, Otis & Co., of New York City, the head of which firm was his uncle. His preference, however, was for a professional life, and in 1854 he commenced the study of law in Hammondsport, Steuben Co., N. Y. He was admitted to the Bar in Poughkeepsie, and began practice at Branchport, Yates Co., N. Y. The outbreak of the Rebellion stirred his patriotism to its depths, and his impassioned oratory was constantly brought to bear in scathing and effective denunciation of slavery and secession. In the spring of 1862 he enlisted in Co. H, 107th N. Y. V. I., and was mustered into the service in August following. While serving with this regiment he took part in the battles of South Mountain, Antietam, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, Falling Waters and Lookout Mountain. In 1864 he resigned his lieutenancy in the 107th, having received a captain's commission in the 188th, which regiment he joined on October 7 of that year. After the first battle, at Hatcher's Run, he was made assistant adjutant general of the Second Brigade, First Division, 5th Army Corps. Later he was appointed to the same position for the Fifth Corps, and was successively brevetted lieutenant colonel, colonel and brigadier general. He participated in the second engagement at Hatcher's Run and in the raid on the Weldon Railroad; was under fire at Lewis Farm, Boydton Plank Road, Gravelly Run and Five Forks; and was present at the surrender of Lee at Appomattox.

General Denniston was a soldier of magnificent qualities. Naturally impulsive and of doubtless courage, in action he was cool, determined, resolute and always ready to lead where his command was threatened with danger. In a work published in Hartford, and entitled "The Battle Flag," the following description of his conduct in battle is given: "Major H. G. Denniston has a gold badge which was presented to him on the field of battle. At the close of the fight at Five Forks, Va., a short time before the end of the war, Major General Charles Griffin commanded. It was supposed that the contest was over, when the enemy opened a sharp musketry fire on the right. General Griffin turned to Major Denniston, who was then assistant adjutant general of the Second Brigade, and said, 'Stop that little firing.' A detail from the First and Second Brigades was assigned for the duty, and Major Denniston and his command advanced upon the Confederate forces. The conflict was short, but exceedingly sharp. About four hundred Federal soldiers fell. In the end, however, the enemy was driven back and four guns and a number of prisoners fell into Major Denniston's hands. On his return he simply reported, with characteristic modesty, 'General, we have stopped that little firing.' Instantly the commanding officer unpinned from his breast the red and gold badge of the First Division, and presented it to the brave officer in recognition of his intrepid service. The badge bears the inscription: 'Capt. H. G. Denniston, A. A. General; presented by Major General Charles Griffin, at Five Forks.'" General Denniston also enjoys the distinction of being one of the fifty officers to whom the New York Legislature awarded richly-painted diplomas, in testimonial of gallant, devoted service.

At the end of the war General Denniston returned to New York and resumed the practice of law, settling in Steuben county. In 1872 he married Miss Emogene A. Tuttle, a daughter of Philemon Tuttle, of Naugatuck. Thereupon he removed to that town, and, abandoning the law, for some time devoted his time to civil and electrical engineering. He has, however, retired from active pursuits, and in a serene old age is enjoying a well-earned rest. He is an independent in politics, while his religious affiliation is with the Congregational Church. He is an influential member of the G. A. R., but is connected with no other fraternal organization. Himself intelligent and well educated, he takes a lively interest in educational matters, and has been prominently identified therewith. In private life he is genial and warm-hearted, courteous and affable.

General and Mrs. Denniston have one son, Franklin T., who was born in 1882.

HOMER HEBER WELTON, one of Waterville's best-known citizens, is the possessor of a handsome property, and is enabled to spend his declining years in the pleasurable enjoyment of his accumulations. The record of his early life is that of an active, enterprising, methodical and sagacious business man, who bent his energies to the honorable acquirement of a comfortable competence for himself and family.

Mr. Welton was born at the old family homestead on Bunker Hill, Waterbury, Feb. 22, 1837. The progenitor of this family in America was John Welton, who came to this country from England or Wales about 1667, and was married while crossing the Atlantic to Miss Mary Upson, a native of England. They located first in Farmington, Hartford Co., Conn., and about 1679 came to Waterbury, New Haven county, where they spent the remainder of their lives, Mr. Welton dying here June 18, 1726, his wife Oct. 18, 1716. Their remains were interred in Hartford. In their family were ten children, namely: Abigail married Cornelius Bronson; Mary married John Richards; Elizabeth married Thomas Griffin, of Simsbury, Conn.; John married a Miss Buck, of Wethersfield, Conn., a daughter of Ezekiel Buck; Stephen married Mary Gaylord, daughter of Joseph Gaylord; Richard, the next in order of birth, is mentioned below; Hannah, born April 1, 1683, married Thomas Squires; Thomas, born Feb. 4, 1684, married Hannah Gaylord, a daughter of Joseph Gaylord; George, born Feb. 3, 1686, married Elizabeth Mallory, of Stratford; and Elsie, born Aug. 16, 1698, married a Mr. Griffin, of Simsbury. The first five were born in Farmington, the others in Waterbury.

MRS. MARY S. WELTON.

Homer H. Welton

Mrs H. H. Welton

Richard Welton, son of John, was born in Waterbury Sept. 27, 1679, the first male child of European parentage born in Waterbury, and there spent his entire life, engaged in farming, dying in 1755. He married, Mary Upson, who was born March 5, 1683, a daughter of Stephen and Mary (Lee) Upson, and granddaughter of John Lee, of Farmington. Nine children came to this union: Richard, born Jan. 5, 1701 (married Anna, daughter of Jonathan Fenton); John, born July 13, 1703; Stephen, born March 12, 1706; Mary, born June 1, 1708 (married Ebenezer Warner); Thomas, born Oct. 25, 1710; Keziah, born Dec. 1, 1713 (married A. Warner); Eliakim, born Jan. 21, 1715 (mentioned below); Tabitha, born Feb. 17, 1721 (married Edward Neal); and Ede, born April 24, 1729 (married a Mr. Lewis).

Eliakim Welton, son of Richard, spent his entire life in Waterbury, and owned and operated a large tract of land on Bucks Hill, making farming his principal occupation. He died Nov. 20, 1794, and was buried on Bucks Hill. He married Eunice, daughter of Moses and Jane (Wiah) Bronson, and to this union came the following children: Eliakim, born Sept. 22, 1736, married Amy Baldwin; Eunice, born Oct. 19, 1738, married David Roberts; Avis, born Aug. 13, 1740, married Thaddeus Barnes; Richard, born Oct. 10, 1743, is mentioned below; Eli, born Oct. 10, 1746, married Ann Baldwin; Moses was born June 25, 1749; Aaron, born Feb. 19, 1752, married Zerah Bronson; Benoni died unmarried; and Benjamin Lewis, born Feb. 18, 1756, died in infancy.

Richard Welton, son of Eliakim, was a life-long resident of Waterbury, where he died Feb. 26, 1820. He was married April 27, 1766, to Margaret Warner, and they had two children: Noah, born Feb. 15, 1767; and Richard Warner, born Oct. 10, 1768, who died Dec. 14, 1768. The wife and mother died Oct. 19, 1768, and subsequently Richard Welton married Hannah Davis, who died Dec. 11, 1839, aged ninety-four years. By the second union there were seven children, whose names and dates of birth were as follows: Richard, May 10, 1770 (married Sarah Sunn); Margaret, July 2, 1772 (wife of Daniel Steel); Thomas, Dec. 8, 1774; Lydia, April 1, 1777 (married David Roberts and died Aug. 31, 1828); Hannah, Oct. 10, 1779 (wife of David Warner); Joseph Davis, April 15, 1783; Bela, Sept. 9, 1787.

Joseph Davis Welton, the grandfather of our subject, was born in Waterbury, was ordained a deacon Dec. 18, 1802, and priest of the Episcopal Church Dec. 23, 1810. He had charge of churches in Woodbury and Easton, but in 1819, on account of ill health, was obliged to give up the work of the ministry. He then returned to Waterbury and located upon his father-in-law's farm, which was formerly the Zara Warden place, where he spent the remainder of his life, conducting a private school, where he fitted many young men for college.

He died Jan. 16, 1825, and in St. John's Episcopal church, Waterbury, there has been erected to his memory a baptismal font of carved marble, presented by Hobert V. Welton. He married Eunice Tomlinson, a daughter of Victory Tomlinson. She was born April 27, 1788, and died Feb. 20, 1832.

Joseph Welton, father of our subject, was born May 15, 1814, and was the third in order of birth in a family of four children. He received an excellent education, and at the age of fourteen years, while still in school, made a careful survey and prepared an outline map of the Green, in Waterbury Center, which is still preserved, and has furnished useful information for the history of Waterbury. He spent his entire life in that town, where he owned a large tract of land. After residing at his birthplace on the Wolcott road until 1836, he removed to the west side of the Naugatuck River, to Bunker Hill, where he made his home throughout the remainder of his life, devoting his time to agricultural pursuits. As a business venture he and Leonard Platt imported a large number of Norway spruce trees, some of which are still growing upon his farm. Politically he was first a Whig and later a Republican, and religiously he was a member of the Episcopal Church. He died May 1, 1894, honored and respected by all who knew him, and was laid to rest in Riverside cemetery. He was married Jan. 20, 1836, to Miss Mary S. Pierpont, a daughter of Seabury Pierpont, a well-known and highly-respected citizen of Waterbury. Of the three children born of this union our subject is the eldest; Eunice C., born Oct. 7, 1839, married Orrin Scott, and for her second husband, Lewis Garrigus; Lucy A., born Nov. 14, 1841, married A. B. Pierpont.

Homer Heber Welton, the subject proper of this review, was educated in the district schools of Waterbury, and also attended the Waterbury Academy and high school. While very young he was in the field with his father one day. When he started for home he lost his way in the woods, and kept traveling all night. When his parents discovered the loss the church bells of Waterbury were rung as an alarm, and many searching parties were sent out. He was finally found, early the next morning, near Oakville, by Charles D. Kingsbury, father of Frederick J. Kingsbury, of Waterbury. He was at that time only four years old, and although he never saw his rescuer again for thirty-two years he remembered him at once as the man who had found him in the woods, Mr. Kingsbury being very tall. During his minority Mr. Welton aided his father in the work of the farm, and also taught school during the winter months at Bunker Hill, and East Side, Watertown. He worked in Wheeler & Wilson's sewing machine factory one and a half years. At the age of twenty-four he went to Hartford, where he worked in the Sharps rifle factory during the Civil war, and later was employed in the pin factory at Oakville for one year. He then came to Waterville, where he embarked in the cutlery business in partnership with Messrs. Sprague and Boyden, continuing thus for ten years, and when he retired from the firm, in 1876, he became a contractor for a portion of their work and was so engaged for sixteen years. He is now practically living a retired life, though managing his father's estate on Bunker Hill and other property. Mr. Welton learned no trade, but worked as a machinist, tool-maker, and clock and watch repairer from boyhood. He spent his evenings at taxidermy (being the only one in the town engaged in that work), though he has never seen anyone else stuff a bird or other animal. In his collection are three scarlet tanagers that he shot on Lincoln's fast day; a night heron shot in front of the residence of Harriet Beecher Stowe, in Hartford, while it was in process of erection; a pair of the first pine grosbeaks seen in Waterbury; and the first mealy redpole on record in the State. He has made his greatest success doing his work in an original way, accomplishing more and better work with less outlay.

In 1868, in New York, Mr. Welton was united in marriage with Miss Ellen Jennette Garrigus, a native of Morristown, N. J., and a daughter of Isaac and Sarah (Sheppard) Garrigus. To this union have been born three children: (1) Julia A. is now the wife of Walter Warner, a minister of the Adventist Church of Portland, Oregon, and they have three children, Ethel M., Harold and Millard. (2) Joseph Dennison is a resident of Waterville, and a member of Goodwill Lodge, K. of P. He married Martha Leapean, and they have two children, Clifford and Edith. (3) Edith J., the youngest child of our subject, died at the age of eight years.

Mr. Welton is a member of Mad River Grange, the Sons of Temperance, and St. John's Episcopal Church. His estimable wife holds membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church of Waterbury. They are people of prominence in the community where they reside, and are held in high regard by all who know them. In political sentiment Mr. Welton is a Republican.

ELLIS BENJAMIN BAKER, general superintendent of the Southern New England Telephone Co., now residing in New Haven, has taken prominent place among the business men of that city. He is a representative man of Connecticut, descended from two of the most respected families in the State, and was born Sept. 24, 1854, at Winsted, son of John F. and Clarissa (Benjamin) Baker.

(1) Anthony Baker, the first of his paternal ancestors of whom we have record, was born about 1740. He was a Tory, and he and three of his sons—Jesse, Simon and Anthony, Jr.—fought in the Revolution on the British side. After the close of the war many Tories were given grants of land in the British possessions, and it is said that Anthony and his family, with the exception of Scott, who ran away and settled in Bridgeport, left the States and went to Nova Scotia. Anthony Baker had eight children: Jesse, Simeon, Anthony, Jr., Scott, Samuel, Lizzie, Sarah and Hannah.

(II) Scott Baker, born in 1768, died Sept. 19, 1852. He was a tanner and shoemaker by occupation. In 1790 he married Sarah Loveland, who was born in Glastonbury, Conn., and they had two children: Asa, born in 1791; and Jesse, born Sept. 18, 1794. Mrs. Baker's father, also a native of Glastonbury, was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, and died while in the army, at Roxbury, Mass., Oct. 24, 1775. For his second wife Mr. Baker married Mary Beush (or Beach). About 1810 Scott Baker and his family moved to Bakersville, Conn., where he died.

(III) Asa Baker followed farming. He was married, at South Salem, N. Y., Oct. 14, 1813, to Deborah Keeler, who was born in December, 1789, and died in New Hartford, Conn., Dec. 24, 1871. He died in Granville, Mass., Sept. 30, 1833. Their children were: William Swayze, born Nov. 28, 1814; Sarah, in September, 1816; John Fletcher, in October, 1817; Scott, March 2, 1819; Charles Linus, July 4, 1824; and Emily.

(IV) John F. Baker, born in Hartford, passed the greater part of his life in Winsted. He was married, in Salisbury, Conn., April 18, 1847, to Clarissa Benjamin, who was born in Sheffield, Mass., July 29, 1824. She died at New Haven, Conn., Oct. 16, 1890, and he died at Bristol, Conn., March 11, 1895. Three children blessed their union: Emerson John, born Feb. 18, 1848, who died Oct. 8, 1849; Emma Clarissa, born Sept. 25, 1850, who died Sept. 8, 1851; and Ellis Benjamin, born Sept. 24, 1854.

Through his mother Ellis B. Baker is descended from the ancient family of Benjamin, whose pedigree is traced back to the time of William the Conqueror. (1) John Benjamin, the first of the name in America, born in 1598, came over from England to Boston in the ship "Lion." Capt. Mason, on Sept. 16, 1632, with his wife, Abigail Eddy, two children and his brother Richard. Richard, in 1663, moved to Southold, Long Island, with his wife and daughter Ann, who was born Sept. 1, 1643. He was made a Connecticut freeman in 1664, and his descendants are influential in Queens county (N. Y.) politics at the present time. John and his wife, Abigail, and their children, John and Abigail, soon moved to Cambridge, where they owned considerable real estate. John was made a freeman Nov. 6, 1632, and was appointed constable by the General Court on May 20, 1633. Of him the history of Stratford, Conn., says: "John Benjamin, Esquire, Gentleman, was the first of that name who came to America. His ancestors were Welsh, and were among the first of the landed gentry of England. He came in company with Gov. Winthrop to the Massachusetts Colony and settled in Watertown, adjoining the present Cambridge, where he died in 1645. His house, accidentally destroyed by fire, was unsurpassed in elegance and comfort by any in the vicinity. It was a mansion of intelligence, refinement, religion and hospitality, visited by the clergy of all denominations from far and near." In 1637 he removed to Watertown, where he died June 14, 1645; it is supposed at an advanced age, as he was excused from military duty eleven years before. His will is abstracted in the Geneal. Register III, 177. Abigail, his wife, died May 20, 1687, at the age of eighty-seven. Children: John, born about 1620, died Dec. 22, 1706; Abigail was born about 1624; Samuel, born about 1628, died in 1669; Mary died April 10, 1646; Joseph was born Sept. 16, 1633; Joshua, born about 1642, died in 1684; Abel.

(II) Joseph Benjamin, son of John and Abigail Benjamin, born at Cambridge, Mass., Sept. 16, 1633, married, at Barnstable, Mass., June 10, 1661, Jemima Lambert, daughter of Thomas Lambert. She died there, and he removed to Yarmouth, where, previous to Dec. 7, 1668, he married (second) Sarah Clark. He removed to New London, Conn., where he died in 1704. Children: Abigail; Hannah, born in February, 1668; Mary, born in April, 1670; Joseph, born in 1673; Mercy, born March 12, 1674; Elizabeth, born Jan. 14, 1680; John, born in 1682, who died Aug. 2, 1716; Jemima; Sarah; Kezia.

(III) Joseph Benjamin, son of Joseph and Sarah Benjamin, born at Yarmouth, Mass., or New London, Conn., about 1673, married, Aug. 25, 1698, Elizabeth Cook. Children: Obed, born Aug. 15, 1701; Elizabeth, November, 1703; Joseph, 1705; Sarah, Jan. 17, 1707; Grace, Jan. 10, 1709; Jedediah, July 15, 1711; Daniel, Sept. 7, 1714; John; Abiel, Dec. 17, 1716.

(IV) Joseph Benjamin, son of Joseph and Elizabeth Benjamin, born at Preston, Conn., in 1705, was married, at Preston, Conn., April 3, 1722, to Deborah Clark. He died about 1803. She died at Mount Washington, or Egremont, Mass., at the home of her son Nathan. Children: Joseph, born Dec. 17, 1723; Elizabeth, June 8, 1725; James, April 3, 1727; Barzillai, March 28, 1730; Deborah, March 26, 1732; Josiah, March 13, 1734; Nathan, April 19, 1737; Mary, June 22, 1739; Isaac, April 15, 1742.

(V) Joseph Benjamin, son of Joseph and Deborah Benjamin, born at Preston, Conn., Dec. 17, 1723, married, at Preston, Abigail Dibble. He settled at Hampton, Conn. Some of his children removed to Mount Washington, Mass. Children: William, born June 18, 1748; Samuel, in December, 1749; Peleg, March 5, 1752; Judah, July 8, 1755; Mary, about 1757. The last four were baptized at Hampton, Conn., Sept. 3, 1758.

(VI) Judah Benjamin, son of Joseph and Abigail Benjamin, born at Hampton, Conn., July 8, 1755, removed to Mount Washington, Mass., about 1760, with his brothers William, Samuel and Peleg, and his sister Mary. He served as a private in the Connecticut militia in the Revolutionary war, from July 10, 1778, to July 14, 1779. He was married, about 1782, and had at least two children. In 1819 he resided in Hamilton, Madison Co., N. Y. He died Aug. 16, 1834, in Pike township, Bradford Co., Pa., leaving a widow, Susan, who might have been his second wife. Children: Orange, born Jan. 26, 1784; and Lavinia, who married a Wooden. The following letters explain themselves:

State of Connecticut.
Adjutant General's Office,
Hartford, Feb. 16, 1898.

MR. E. B. BAKER,
New Haven, Conn.

Sir—This is to certify that Judah Benjamin served in the Revolutionary war, and the following is said service, according to the records of this office.

On page 378. Conn. Men in the Revolution:

Judah Benjamin, a private, enlisted July 10, 1778. Term of service, one year; from town of Milford; occupation, shoemaker; stature, 5 feet, seven in.; complexion, dark; eyes, grey; hair, dark; discharged in 5th Troop, Col. Elisha Sheldon's Light Dragoons, 177. —83.

Its field of service during war generally the East side of the Hudson, along the Westchester front. Occasionally its companies served at different points. In the spring of 1777 Major Tallmadge joined Washington in New Jersey with two troops and fought at Germantown, October 4th. At the same time, Captain Seymour with his troop was serving under Gates against Burgoyne. The other troops were under Putnam's command at Peekskill.

In the spring of 1778, the regiment was on the Hudson, and in the fall formed part of Gen. Charles Scott's Light Corps, on the lines in Winchester.

On page 535, same book, appears the following:

Judah Benjamin; a private in Captain Caleb Mix's Company. Arrived in camp July 17, 1778, in Colonel Moseley's Regiment.

Two militia regiments were ordered to the Hudson soon after the battle of Monmouth, June 28, 1778, and were stationed at different points, such as Fort Clinton, West Point. They were commanded by Colonel Moseley and Colonel Enos.

On page 641, same book, the name of Judah Benjamin appears as a Connecticut pensioner, Act of 1818, and as residing in New York.

In testimony whereof, we have affixed hereto the seal of this office.

[Signed]
WM. E. F. LANDERS,
Col. and Asst. Adjutant General.

Record and Pension Office,
War Department,
Washington, April 4, 1898.

MR. E. B. BAKER,
New Haven, Conn.

Sir—The records of this office show that one Judah Benjamin served as a private in Captain Caleb Mix's detachment of Connecticut militia, commanded by Colonel Increase Moseley, Revolutionary war. He enlisted July 10, 1778, to serve two months; re-enlisted July 17, 1778, in Captain John Shethar's troop, 2d Regiment of Light Dragoons, Continental troops, commanded by Colonel Elisha Sheldon, to serve one year, and he was discharged July 14, 1779.

The following remarks appear on the records: "State of Connecticut;" "Town of Milford;" "trade, shoemaker;" "stature, 5 ft. 7 in.;" "complex., dark; eyes, grey; hair, dark." No further information relative to his service has been found on record.

In view of the statement that the soldier was a pensioner, it is suggested as a possibility that additional information may be obtained from the Commissioner of Pensions, Washington, D. C., who is the custodian of the pension records of all wars, and whose office is separate and distinct from the Record and Pension Office of the War Department.

By authority of the Secretary of War,
[Signed] F. C. AINSWORTH,
Colonel U. S. Army, Chief of Office.

Department of the Interior,
Bureau of Pensions,
Washington, April 15, 1898.

MR. E. B. BAKER,
New Haven, Conn.

Sir—Replying to your recent communication, you are advised that Judah Benjamin made an application for pension on Oct. 11, 1819, at which time he was sixty-five years of age, and residing at Hamilton, N. Y., and his pension was allowed for one year's actual service as a private in the Connecticut troops, Revolutionary War; a part of the time he served under Col. Sheldon. He enlisted at Claremont, N. H.

Very respectfully,
[Signed] H. CLAY EVANS,
Commissioner.

Treasury Department,
Office of the Auditor for the Interior Department,
Washington, May 5, 1898.

MR. E. B. BAKER,
New Haven, Conn.

Sir—In reply to your letter of May 3rd, in case of Judah Benjamin, Certificate 15762, New York and Penna. Agencies, Revolutionary roll, you are informed that the records of this office show payment to have been made at $8.00 per month in September, 1834, to August 16, 1834, date of death.

The pensioner died on the above date at Pike township, Bradford County, Pennsylvania, leaving a widow Susan Benjamin, to whom the accrued pension was paid as above stated.

In July, 1820, pensioner resided at Hamilton, Madison County, New York.

Respectfully, yours,
[Signed] WM. YOUNGBLOOD,
Auditor.

(VII) Orange Benjamin, son of Judah Benjamin, born at Mount Washington, Mass., Jan. 26, 1784, married, at Sheffield, Mass., March 10, 1811, Clarissa Thorp. He died at Dover, N. Y., Oct. 5, 1846. She died at Brooklyn, N. Y., Aug. 1, 1852. Children: Joseph Seymour, born Dec. 3, 1811, died June 20, 1870; Hiram, born July 26, 1813, died Nov. 11, 1850; Mary, born July 15, 1815; Laura, born June 4, 1817, died June 20, 1859; Harriet Whipple, born July 8, 1819, died May 20, 1834; Jane, born July 20, 1822; Clarissa, born July 29, 1824, died Oct. 16, 1890 (the mother of Ellis B. Baker); Orange, born March 8, 1828; John Peck, born Oct. 10, 1830; Richard Graham, born Dec. 14, 1833.

The following in regard to Ellis B. Baker appeared in "Telegraphers of To-day": "Like most boys who have achieved success in business, he left home at an early age. His first employment was in the job room of the Winsted Herald, where he acquired a thorough knowledge of the trade. At the age of fifteen years he entered the employ of Beardsley & Alvord, a firm engaged in general business in West Winsted, where he served three years as a clerk. In 1872 he entered the employ of Edward Miller & Co., of Meriden, holding the position of paymaster, and also acting as telegraph operator on the firm's New York wire.

"In the early part of 1878 Mr. Baker introduced the first set of telephones into Meriden. He soon saw the possibilities of the telephone, and on January 31st of that year he opened the Meriden District Telephone Exchange, which is said to be the second exchange opened in the world.

"Upon the consolidation of the Western Union and the Bell Telephone interests, in 1881, he was offered the position of general superintendent of the Connecticut Telephone Co., with headquarters at New Haven, which position he has held for the past seventeen years, during which time the corporation became the Southern New England Telephone Company, with the State of Connecticut as its territory.

"Mr. Baker is also the superintendent of the Connecticut Telegraph Company, a corporation operating several hundred miles of telegraph wires throughout the State of Connecticut. He was, for several years before his removal to New Haven, the superintendent of the Fire Alarm Telegraph, at Meriden."

On Sept. 21, 1876, Mr. Baker was united in marriage with Mary Gorham Frost, who was born at Bristol, Conn., Nov. 11, 1856, and two children have been born to them: Ellis Benjamin, July 24, 1877; and Carroll Frost, Jan. 2, 1880. The former is at Meriden, Conn., the latter at Springfield, Mass. Mr. Baker is a thirty-second-degree Mason, belonging to Hiram Lodge, No. 1, F. & A. M., Franklin Chapter, Harmony Council, New Haven Commandery, and E. G. Storer Lodge of Perfection, A. & A. S. R. He is a member of the Second Company, Governor's Foot Guards, being a member of Major Clark's staff; of the Old Guard of New York; of Putnam Phalanx, Hartford; of the Pequot Association, New Haven; and of the Connecticut Society, Sons of the American Revolution.

FRANK POTTER, a successful farmer and market gardener of Waterbury, is a native of that town, born on the old Potter homestead in what is now Hopeville, Nov. 19, 1826.

Rev. Samuel Potter, his father, was born Sept. 23, 1778, a son of Lenuel and Rachel (Perkins) Potter; he was a prominent Baptist minister of his day, and was pastor of the Salem Church in the town of Waterbury, and also ministered to the spiritual wants of the people at Woodbridge, Conn., but made his home near Pearl Lake, Waterbury, where our subject now resides, and there he died Dec. 5, 1833, being laid to rest in Brackett cemetery. In 1799 he married Leva Judd, daughter of Roswell Judd, and to them were born two children: Samuel Darius, born Dec. 15, 1799, died in June, 1803; and Leva Maria, born July 25, 1801, married M. Baldwin. The mother of these died, and for his second wife Rev. Samuel Potter married Chloe Brockett, March 14, 1803. Our subject was the youngest child born of this union. The oldest, a son, was born in May, 1804, and died same month; Roxana, born June 23, 1805, married M. D. Root; Samuel, born April 25, 1807, died March 7, 1894; Zenas, born Aug. 8, 1809, wedded Mary Hotchkiss, and died Jan. 11, 1856; Thomas Perkins, born Nov. 12, 1811, died May 22, 1822; Miller, born July 27, 1813; Isaac Fuller, born July 23, 1815; Wilson, born June 19, 1817; Dr. Gano, born July 19, 1819; Chloe, born Sept. 13, 1821, married W. G. Chase; and Thomas Perkins, born June 2, 1824, died March 8, 1848.

On the maternal side Frank Potter is descended from John Brockett, a native of England, who was one of the early settlers of New England, and removed from New Haven to Wallingford in 1667 with John Moss. He was chosen by the people of New Haven as one of the committee to manage the affairs of the settlement. He filled many public positions in the village, and represented it in the General Court after its incorporation. He died in Wallingford, March 12, 1689, aged eighty years. His children were John B., who was born in England, and became a physician at Muddy River, North Haven; Benjamin, born in 1648, who married Lydia Elcock, and died May 22, 1679; Abigail, born March 10, 1649; Samuel, born Jan. 14, 1650; Jabez, born Oct. 24, 1654, who was married Nov. 20, 1691, to Dorothy Lyman; Silence, wife of Joseph Bradley; and Mary, wife of William Pennington, of New Jersey.

Samuel Brockett, son of John, was married, Nov. 21, 1680, to Sarah Bradley, and they had seven children, whose names and dates of birth were as follows: Samuel, Feb. 15, 1682; Daniel, Sept. 30, 1684; John, Nov. 8, 1685; Joseph, Oct. 25, 1688; Josiah, July 25, 1691; Alice, April 23, 1693; and Josiah, July 25, 1698. The last named married Deborah Abbott, and John married Huldah Ells.

Samuel Brockett (2nd), son of Samuel, was married, April 15, 1699, to Rachel Brown, who died Jan. 24, 1718, and on Aug. 5, 1718, he married Elizabeth Howe. In his family were the following children: Titus, who was born June 28, 1700, and wedded Mary Turnhand; Sarah, born Aug. 26, 1702; Isaac, who was born Sept. 3, 1705, and was married, June 16, 1733, to Mary Sedgwick; Rachel, born March 20, 1708; Abigail, born Feb. 11, 1711; and Samuel, born June 21, 1714.

Samuel Brockett (3rd), son of Samuel (2nd), married and by his wife, Ruth, became the father of six children, namely: Eunice, born Jan. 15, 1744; Zuer, born March 24, 1746; Joel, born June 14, 1749, died in infancy; Joel, born July 28, 1750, was a soldier of the Revolutionary war; Zenas, born July 12, 1752; and Benjamin, born Oct. 1, 1760.

Zenas Brockett, son of Samuel (3rd), was born and reared in Wallingford, and when a young man came to Waterbury, locating on what is now known as Brockett Hill, near Pearl Lake, where he purchased a large tract of land from the Indians for a small consideration. He was a farmer by occupation, and was well known and highly respected as a man of sterling integrity, upright and true in all his dealings, and he was beloved by all who knew him. He was one of the first members of the Baptist Church in the town of Waterbury, in which he served as deacon. Before the Baptist Church in Waterbury was organized, there being no church of that denomination nearer than Wallingford, he would go sixteen miles to that town to worship, in the absence of roads finding his way through the thick forest by marked trees. He would transact no business on Sunday. He gave a small piece of land for the cemetery now known as the Brockett cemetery, and the first bodies buried there were those of his grandchildren of the Potter family. He died on his farm on Brockett Hill, and was also laid to rest there by the side of his wife, who in her maidenhood was Miss Abigail Johnson, of Wallingford. They had eight children: Chloe, born July 15, 1781, was the mother of our subject; Anna, born June 3, 1783, married Benjamin Farrell; Peter, born Sept. 17, 1784; Abigail, born Jan. 21, 1787, died Sept. 16, 1787; Abigail (2nd), born July 1, 1788; Rebecca, born April 30, 1790, married Loveland Judd in 1812; Rhoda, born Sept. 24, 1792, married Jesse Wooster; and Zenas, born April 28, 1794, died May 14, 1794.

Frank Potter, whose name introduces this review, received a district school education, and at the age of fifteen years began his business career as a buttonmaker, working in the ivory button shops of Union City, Waterbury and Bridgeport, Conn., for over a quarter of a century. Since then he has given his entire time and attention to farming and market gardening on the old homestead at Pearl Lake, where he has made many useful and valuable improvements.

In Waterbury, Feb. 20, 1850, Mr. Potter was united in marriage with Miss Lucy Chase, a native of New Preston, and a daughter of Chauncey and Clarissa (Clemens) Chase. She died of heart trouble Aug. 6, 1898, and was laid to rest in the Brockett cemetery. To them were born three children: (1) Edna C. married William Snagg, of Waterbury, and they have four children, Gertrude, a stenographer and typewriter; Anna, a school teacher; Burton; and Adella. (2) Adella married John Buchanan, of Simonsville, and they have one child, Frank, who is studying dentistry in Philadelphia. (3) Frank, the youngest child of our subject, died at the age of two years and a half. Mr. Potter also had an adopted son, Frederick, now deceased, who married Fanny Lum; for her second husband she wedded Samuel Clark, and they make their home with our subject. Their children are Helen and Marion M.

In early life Mr. Potter affiliated with the Democratic party, but since the Civil war has been a staunch Republican. He is a temperance man and active member of the Second Baptist Church of Waterbury, in which he has served as deacon for the past five years. He has been a member of the school committee, and has always given his support to those enterprises calculated to advance the moral, intellectual or material welfare of his town or county. He is therefore numbered among the valued and useful citizens of his community, and by all who know him he is held in high regard.

JOHN JUSTUS WARNER, a well-known farmer and highly-esteemed citizen of Cheshire, New Haven county, was born in the town of Hamden, this county, Sept. 8, 1840, son of Alonzo and Ruth Ann (Chatfield) Warner, and grandson of Simeon T. and Cynthia T. (Tuttle) Warner. The grandfather was also a native of Hamden and a farmer by occupation. His children were Alonzo; Emma; James, a sea captain; Truxon; Vina; and Justus.

Alonzo Warner, father of our subject, was born in 1812 in Hamden, and there passed his boyhood and youth. He was married in Bethany, this county, but continued to make his home throughout life in Hamden, where he died in 1892. His widow is still living, and resides in Birmingham, Conn. In their family were seven children, namely: Charles, who was a member of the 10th Conn. V. I. during the Civil war, and now resides on the old home farm in Hamden; John Justus, our subject; Sarah, wife of Wales Chatfield, of Oxford; George William, of New Haven, now deceased; Emma, Mrs. Daniel Holbrook, of Ansonia; Frank, a resident of Florida; and Birdsey, a resident of Ansonia.

In the town of his nativity John Justus Warner grew to manhood and attended school. Later he engaged in farming there until after the Civil war broke out, when he enlisted, in September, 1861, in Company K, 6th Conn. V. I., for three years, as a teamster. He was appointed wagonmaster under Gen. Sherman's command at Port Royal, S. C.; was at City Point, Va.; and later was under Gen. Grant at Bermuda Hundred, Fort Fisher and Raleigh, N. C. On the expiration of his three years term of enlistment he was honorably discharged in Virginia, in September, 1864, and later served in the government employ as a civilian wagonmaster until the close of the war, looking after teams, having wagons painted, and keeping everything in order. When hostilities ceased and his services were no longer needed he returned to Hamden and resumed farming. For some time he made his home in Bethany, where he still owns a good farm, but in 1896 he came to Cheshire and purchased the Daniel Humiston farm, upon which he has since successfully engaged in agriculture.

In 1866, in Hamden, Mr. Warner was united in marriage with Mrs. Mary E. Smith (widow of Edgar Smith), who was born in Bethany, a daughter of Kneeland and Ann (Andrews) Downs, natives of Wolcott and Bethany, respectively. Mr. Warner and his wife have four children: John, who is married and lives in New Haven; Minnie, now Mrs. Harry Munson, of Cheshire; Burton; and Marshall. Socially Mr. Warner is a member of Admiral Foote Post, No. 1, G. A. R., of New Haven, and politically he is identified with the Republican party. He served as assessor in the town of Bethany, and his duties of citizenship have always been most faithfully and conscientiously discharged.

HENRY BEVERLY HALL was born May 31, 1835, in South Main street, Wallingford, a son of John Parsons Hall, whose birth occurred Nov. 18, 1808, in Wallingford, where he died June 4, 1894.

The father of our subject was a farmer, and at one time in his life manufactured razor strops and combs. A Whig in early life, he became a Republican on the formation of the party, and served on the school committee. A member of the Congregational Church, he stood well in the community. A home man in every sense of the word, the domestic virtues strongly prevailed in his character, and to his family he was all a husband and a father should be. Mr. Hall and Miss Eunice Hotchkiss were married Oct. 20, 1833. Mrs. Hall was born July 9, 1812, a daughter of Timothy Hotchkiss, of Wolcott. To Mr. and Mrs. Hall were born the following children: (1) Henry Beverly is mentioned below. (2) John Randolph, born in 1837, died in Chicago June 4, 1893, while in attendance upon the World's Fair, representing the William Rogers Mfg. Co. For many years he was a wholesale dealer in notions and hosiery in New York. (3) Frederick Hotchkiss, born July 28, 1849, lives in New York City, where he is connected with the wholesale house of Porter Brothers. He married Miss Agnes Hall, daughter of Joel Hall. (4) Charles S. is mentioned below.

Dr. Rice Hall, the grandfather of the above named children, was born in Wallingford May 8, 1784, and followed farming. He was also extensively engaged in teaming, before the era of railroads, running an express between Wallingford and New Haven. A man of strong convictions, he was a staunch Whig, and a devout member of the Congregational Church. It is said that he only missed one service in fifty years, and that was caused by an accident which compelled him to stay at home.

Henry Beverly Hall was born in Wallingford, where he received his education in the common school. For one year he was a student in Russell's Military School, New Haven. Leaving school when nineteen years of age, he helped his father on the farm for about two years, when he went to the city of New York to take a position as entry clerk with the jobbing house of John J. Hinchman & Co., later on becoming a partner in the concern. In 1874 he returned to Wallingford to clerk for Leonard B. Bishop, the proprietor of an agricultural implement store in New Haven, Conn. After a year with that gentleman Mr. Hall secured a position as traveling salesman for the R. Wallace & Sons Manufacturing Co., being the first representative of that company to go on the road. For ten years he remained with them, covering the territory from Maine to Kansas City, and from Canada to Kentucky. Mr. Hall's next engagement was with Simpson, Hall, Miller & Co., and he was their representative in New York, Philadelphia, Washington and Baltimore. After one year spent with that house, Mr. Hall went on the road in the interest of the Bristol Brass & Clock Co., continuing with them for four years. At the present time he is devoting all his thought and care to his extensive real estate interests. In 1893 Mr. Hall was one of the originators of the Biggins-Rodgers Co., manufacturers of all kinds of hollow ware, and employing about fifty hands. Mr. Hall is secretary of that corporation. Our subject is a strong Republican, and active in political affairs. He was elected warden in 1896, again in 1897, and a third time in 1899. An attendant of the First Congregational Church, he takes a deep interest in the welfare of the church, and is a liberal supporter of its principles.

Mr. Hall and Miss Susan Parker were married Oct. 17, 1866. They had no children. Mrs. Hall was born May 25, 1835, daughter of Dr. Lyman Parker, who practiced medicine in Wallingford. She died July 19, 1892.

CHARLES STORRS HALL was born Nov. 13, 1852, in Wallingford, obtained his early education in the public schools of that city, and supplemented same by a year in Hopkins Preparatory School, and another year in French's Private School. At the age of nineteen he left school and secured a clerkship in New York with the firm of Tooker, Waring & Co., dealers and jobbers in Yankee notions and hosiery, in which concern his brother Henry B. was a partner. He remained there about seven years, and for the last year and a half that he was in New York clerked for Hall & Co., dealers and jobbers in the same line. About 1880 he came to Wallingford, and took a place in the postoffice under Judge Hubbard, which position he held for a year and a half. For the next three years he was connected with Simpson, Hall, Miller & Co. as order filling and stock clerk. Mr. Hall was then connected with the Domestic Manufacturing Co. for about three years, as order filling clerk, and had charge of the stock department. In 1890 he entered the postoffice as assistant to Postmaster W. Burr Hall. When Mr.

Hall retired and Mr. Jones assumed the duties of the office Mr. Hall was still continued as assistant postmaster. On Feb. 1, 1898, he was appointed postmaster, entering upon the duties of the position the 1st of the following month. Mr. Hall was instrumental in securing free delivery in Wallingford while assistant to Postmaster George T. Jones. As postmaster Mr. Hall is very efficient. In September, 1900, he succeeded in introducing free delivery throughout the town of Wallingford. Charles S. Hall is a staunch Republican, and has never hesitated at any labor in behalf of the party organization. From 1880 to 1894 he was on the Republican town committee, and for nine years served as its chairman. In religion Mr. Hall is a Congregationalist, while his wife attends the Baptist Church.

On June 14, 1894, Mr. Hall married Miss Flora A. Fordham, of Essex, Conn., a daughter of Theodore P. Fordham, a prominent surveyor and farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Hall are the parents of two children: Randolph Fordham, born Nov. 7, 1896, and Theodore Parsons, born Dec. 18, 1898. Mr. Hall belongs to the N. E. O. P., the Masonic fraternity and the Pilgrim Fathers. He was a charter member of the local lodge of the last named order, as he was of Robert Wallace Court, No. 123.

JAMES CALLAN, the efficient superintendent of the tube department of the Holmes, Booth & Hayden Manufacturing Co.'s extensive works in Waterbury, was born April 12, 1841, in Douglas, Lanarkshire, Scotland, son of John and Jane (Fleming) Callan, who were born in the same place.

John Callan, the son of a farmer, was a weaver by trade. He and his wife had eleven children, of whom all save two reached mature years, and of the other nine three—Adam, William and James—came to Connecticut. Adam is now a machinist in Waterbury. William died in New Haven.

James Callan attended school in his native town until ten years old, at which age he lost his father. His mother having a large family to care for, he was obliged to exercise his best activities in providing for himself and in aiding in the support of his mother and the little ones at home. He labored on the farm until twenty years of age, when he went to Glasgow, where he found employment in a store for some time, and then, in 1871, came to America and to Waterbury, where he has ever since been employed by the Holmes, Booth & Hayden Co., with the exception of two and a half years passed with the Randolph & Clows Co.

In 1866 Mr. Callan married Elizabeth Harriott, who was born near Edinburgh, Scotland, a daughter of William and Alice Stratton, and to this union six children have been born, viz.: John, William H., Adam, James A., Alice H. and George S., all still living. John and William H. are married.

In politics Mr. Callan was a Liberal in the old country, and since coming to America has been a Republican. He is very popular with his party, and has represented the Third ward of Waterbury in the common council two terms, while a member of this body serving on the committee on Lights and Lamps at the time the first electric lights were placed in the city. He has just concluded a term of two years in the board of aldermen, has been re-elected for a similar term, and is now vice-president of the board.

As a Freemason Mr. Callan stands very high. He was "made" a Mason in Scotland in 1859, and has attained to the Mystic Shrine. He affiliates with Harmony Lodge, No. 42, F. & A. M., of Waterbury, of which he was three years master; with Eureka Chapter, of which he has been high priest three years, and at the present time is grand high priest of the Grand Chapter, Royal Arch Masons, of Connecticut; he also holds membership in Clark Commandery. He is a charter member of the Third Congregational Church, which his family also attend. Socially they all are held in the highest estimation by their neighbors and acquaintances, and they have made hosts of friends during their residence in Waterbury.

WILLIAM COOK WILLIAMS, M. D., deceased, who was for many years a leading physician of Cheshire, was born Aug. 21, 1828, in Roxbury, Conn., the eldest son of William Chauncey Williams, M. D., and his wife, Julia White Cook. Through his father he was descended from Robert Williams, who settled in Roxbury, Mass., in 1637, and on his mother's side from Major Aaron Cook, who located at Dorchester, Mass., in 1630.

Robert Williams was born in England about the year 1593, perhaps in Norwich, County of Norfolk, and was married before coming to America to Elizabeth Stratton. He disembarked at Boston, with his wife and several children, in the year 1637. Before the close of that year he had joined the neighboring settlement at Roxbury, and, this early, his name and that of his wife are found upon the records of Roxbury Church, to which the Rev. John Eliot then ministered. He was there made a freeman, May 2 of the following year. That he was a staunch and typical Puritan, whose scruples forbade his conformity with the tenets of the Established Church in England, during the intolerant reign of the first Charles, and encouraged his departure thence for Massachusetts Bay, where he could the more freely exercise his individual rights of conscience, may readily be believed from the single glimpse had of him, as signer of the petition to the governor of the Colony, in 1672, in censure of Harvard College. He was one of the five townsmen or selectmen in 1647 and 1653, and was interested in the early founding of schools in Roxbury. Ellis speaks of him as "one of the most influential men in the town affairs," and Farmer calls him "the common ancestor of the divines, civilians and warriors of the name who have honored the country of their birth." His wife, Elizabeth, died July 28, 1674, aged eighty years. He married Nov. 3, 1675, for his second wife, Margaret, widow of John Fearing, and upon her death he married, according to tradition, a Martha Strong, who died Dec. 22, 1707, aged ninety-two. His last will and testament is dated Nov. 26, 1685, and was probated Sept. 29, 1693. He died at Roxbury, Sept. 1, 1693, aged one hundred years.

Capt. Isaac Williams, born Sept. 1, 1638, baptized in September, 1638, in Roxbury, Mass., married in 1660, for his first wife, Martha Park, born March 2, baptized March 13, 1643, the third daughter of Deacon William and Martha (Holgrave) Park, of Roxbury. In 1661 he settled in Cambridge village, now Newton, Mass., and was there made freeman in 1685. He and his wife were among the earliest members of the first church instituted at Cambridge village, and he was afterward deacon therein. He served as captain of a military company and was selectman, 1691-93, and deputy to the General Court, 1692, 1695, 1697, 1699, 1701 and 1705. In 1706 he was chosen with two others on the first school committee. His wife died Oct. 24, about the year 1676, aged thirty-four. He married, Nov. 13, 1677, for his second wife, Judith Cooper, of Taunton, Mass., who died in 1724, aged seventy-six. He died Feb. 11, 1707, aged sixty-eight, and was buried under arms by the Company of Foot, at Newton, Feb. 14, 1707. His last will and testament bears date Jan. 31, 1704, but was set aside by the court for undue influence, July 27, 1708, on petition of disaffected heirs.

Isaac Williams, born Dec. 11, 1661, baptized March 11, 1662, in Cambridge village, Mass., married, about 1685, for his first wife, Elizabeth Hyde, born Sept. 4, 1659, the eldest daughter of Jonathan and Mary (French) Hyde, of Cambridge village. They were both early members of the church in Cambridge village, in which settlement he continued to reside until within a few years of his decease. He was captain of the military company at Newton and selectman for that town, 1734. His wife, Elizabeth, died June 26, 1699, aged thirty-nine years. He married, in 1709, for his second wife, Mary, widow of Nathaniel Hammond, Jr., and, upon her death, a third wife, Hannah. He soon afterward removed to Roxbury, where he died June 27, 1739, aged seventy-seven. His last will and testament is dated Dec. 12, 1738.

Ebenezer Williams was born Oct. 16, 1691, in Newton, whence he early removed to settle in Lebanon, Conn., soon after its organization as a town. The deed for his first purchase of land is dated Nov. 17, 1718. He was married there on July 27, 1721, to Mary, eldest daughter of Andrew and Elizabeth Veach, of Lebanon. His name is found on the records of Lebanon (Goshen) Church as a member thereof, April 2, 1732, and upon the records of the town as a lieutenant and selectman, 1736 and 1738. His last will and testament is dated March

W.^m C. Williams.

5, 1740, and he died Aug. 6, 1740, aged forty-eight years. His widow died prior to March 25, 1782, at which date letters of administration were granted upon her estate to Jonathan, the eldest son.

Veach Williams, born April 23, 1727, baptized April 29, 1727, in Lebanon, was married Oct. 12, 1753, to Lucy Walsworth, born Dec. 3, 1732, fourth daughter of William and Mary (Avery) Walsworth, of Groton, Conn. He resided in Lebanon from birth until death, and the names of both himself and wife appear on the records of the Third (or Goshen) Church as admitted to membership Nov. 24, 1776. He was captain of a company of Connecticut Colonial militia, and for the fourteen consecutive years from 1765 to 1778, inclusive, was townsman or selectman, together with Jonathan Trumbull, governor of the Colony, William Williams, signer of the Declaration of Independence, Hon. Joshua West, Capt. Seth Wright, and one or two others, who constituted the remaining members of that board during the greater part of this period. Here, at the home of the governor of the Colony and of the speaker of the Colonial House of Representatives, at a time when all was busy preparation in anticipation of an eventful war, it may be presumed those called into the service of the town were its most patriotic and representative citizens. He was deputy to the General Court of Connecticut in 1785. His last will and testament bears date of Oct. 27, 1795, and his death occurred Sept. 11, 1804, at the age of seventy-seven. His wife Lucy died Aug. 10, 1795, aged sixty-two years.

William Williams, born Aug. 2, baptized Aug. 8, 1762, in Lebanon, married May 20, 1784, for his first wife, Lydia, daughter of Samuel Williams, of Lebanon. She died June 22, 1790, aged twenty-six. He married, in 1793, for his second wife, Lydia, daughter of Joseph Loomis, of Lebanon. William Williams was a farmer in Lebanon, and served as a member of the House of Representatives in the Connecticut Legislature, session of 1813. He died Nov. 5, 1818, aged fifty-six. His widow, Lydia, died in Lebanon, Nov. 5, 1861, aged ninety years.

Dr. William Chauncey Williams, born Oct. 23, 1800, was baptized Jan. 25, 1801, in Lebanon. He married, June 7, 1827, Julia White Cook, daughter of Aaron Cook, of Ashford, Conn. He was a physician, and was entered as a student of medicine, about 1820, with Dr. Stephen Hubbard, of Pomfret, Conn. He was an undergraduate in the Medical Department of Yale College in 1821-22, and removed in 1829 to Manchester, Conn., where he remained in active practice until his death. He received the degree of M. D. from Yale College in 1841. He died Oct. 6, 1857, aged fifty-six years, and his widow died July 19, 1875, aged sixty-seven.

Dr. William Cook Williams, the subject of this sketch, received his preparatory education at Williston Seminary, Easthampton, Mass., and was graduated from the Yale Medical School in 1850. On June 19, 1850, he married Lucinda, daughter of Beman Fairchild, of Brookfield, Conn., a descendant of Thomas Fairchild, one of the first settlers of Stratford, Conn. Their children were William Edward, who died at the age of twenty-one years; George Clinton Fairchild and Elizabeth Julia, both of whom are living.

Immediately after his graduation Dr. Williams began the practice of medicine in New Hartford, Conn. In 1851 he removed to New Milford and thence, in 1854, to Cheshire, where he remained in active practice through the remainder of his life. The following remarks concerning his professional career are quoted from the "Obituary Record of Graduates of Yale University," published in June, 1894: "He had by far the most extensive practice of all physicians ever located in that place (Cheshire), including a large clientele in all the surrounding towns. His success in his profession was phenomenal, and he left the remarkable record of having never lost an obstetrical case in all his long career. He was gifted with the faculty of inspiring patients with confidence in his skill, while his gentleness and cheerfulness made him welcome in the sick room as a friend as well as a physician." In his method of practice he was liberal, and did not limit his resources for the treatment of disease by allegiance to any of the "schools" of medicine.

In other respects he was equally broad-minded and progressive. He never interested himself in politics and would not accept political office, but was among the foremost in supporting and encouraging all measures for the public welfare and for the benefit of his town. In the early years of his residence in Cheshire he took a lively interest in public matters. He was active in the religious work of the Congregational Church, of which he was a member, and he bore a prominent part in the organization and maintenance of a Young Men's Christian Association under the auspices of which courses of lectures were delivered—an organization which made, in many ways, a marked beneficial impress upon the young men of that time. He delivered lectures on anatomy and physiology at the Episcopal Academy of Connecticut, and contributed articles to the public press. He was the means also of securing to Temple Lodge, No. 16, A. F. & A. M., the restoration of its charter, which was surrendered during the dark days of free-masonry in this country, and he was the first master of that lodge after the charter was restored. During his later years, as the demands of an extensive practice absorbed his time and bore heavily upon him, he withdrew from other affairs and devoted his energies exclusively to his professional work. His devotion to duty was absolute. He rarely took a vacation. With him the interests of his patients were first and personal welfare a secondary consideration. Despite the wearing effects of much continuous work, he was always cheery and jovial, never failing in sympathy for the suffering, and ever ready with jest or anecdote to cheer the dispirited and to brighten the irksome days of convalescence. He was a trustee of the Masonic Mutual Benefit Association of Connecticut, a director in various business enterprises, and, to the time of his death, post-surgeon and medical examiner of his district. On May 18, 1894, he died of septicemia, contracted in the course of professional work. He was a "beloved physician," and he will be long remembered as an able and conscientious physician, a wise and trusted counselor, a firm friend, a genial companion, and a moral and upright man.

RANSOM CHIPMAN (deceased) was in his day one of the most progressive and highly respected residents of Waterbury. He traced his descent from one of the earliest of the New England Colonists.

Thomas Chipman, the first of this family to come to America, was born in Dorchester, England, in 1570. John Chipman, his son, was born in the same place, and came to America in 1630. In 1646 he here married Hope, daughter of John Howland, and granddaughter of Gov. John Carver, the two last named passengers on board the famous "Mayflower." Twelve children were born to this union. John Chipman was an elder in the church at Barnstable, Mass., and was a deputy, or representative, to the General Assembly of the Colonies. Deacon Samuel Chipman, of Barnstable, son of John and Hope (Howland), was born in 1661, and died in 1723. His son, Samuel Chipman, also called "Deacon," of Barnstable, was born in 1680, and died in 1780. John Chipman, of Stratford, Conn., was born in 1728, son of Deacon Samuel (2), and his son, Joseph Chipman, was the father of Samuel Chipman. Samuel Chipman became the father of eleven children, including Sherman B. and Daniel L. Chipman, of Waterbury (whose sketches are given in full elsewhere), and Ransom Chipman, whose name stands at the opening of this memoir, and who, it will be seen, was of the eighth generation of the Chipman family in America.

Ransom Chipman was born in 1810, in what is now called Town Plot, and passed his early days on the home farm. He began the active business of life by making regular trips to New Haven with his father, Samuel Chipman, who was then a stage driver to that city. Many thousands of dollars were in this manner transferred to New Haven, there being at that time no bank in Waterbury. When he was about thirty-five Mr. Chipman entered the employ of Holmes, Booth & Hayden, manufacturers, and for twenty-five years was foreman of the rolling department of their immense concern, a reliable indication of his steady-going habits and executive ability.

Ransom Chipman was twice married. By his first wife, Charlotte Hurd, of Newtown, Conn., he had three children, viz.: Harriet R., who married George Speer, of Bridgeport; Edgar H., foreman in Holmes, Booth & Hayden's factory, Waterbury; and Charlotte M., who married Hollis D. Segur, of Waterbury, a native of Suffield, and a representative of one of the oldest families in New England, the Segurs having been among the early settlers of Hartford. Mrs. Charlotte (Hurd) Chipman died, and in 1857 Ransom Chipman wedded, for his second wife, Martha Beach, who was born in Hartland, Conn., a daughter of Elias and Betsie (Hayden) Beach, both also natives of Hartland. Col. Nathaniel Hayden, father of Mrs. Betsie Beach, was colonel of his training district, and was quite a prominent agriculturist. He married Sallie Ransom. The Beach family descended from William Beach, who settled in America in 1640; Elias Beach was a son of Zopher, who was born in Goshen, Conn. To the second marriage of Mr. Chipman no children were born.

Mr. Chipman was a devout member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and for many years was a trustee of the society. He died in this faith Oct. 31, 1884, and no citizen's decease was ever more deeply deplored by the residents of Waterbury. Possibly no more fitting tribute can be paid to his memory than the following obituary notice, published in the Waterbury American immediately after his demise:

"In the death of Ransom Chipman his wife loses a good husband, his children a kind and faithful father, and the community at large a generous and faithful citizen. Ever ready to give in a good cause, hundreds have reason most substantial for blessing his memory. In the beautiful Riverside cemetery we have laid away all that remains of our loved friend—the friend of the poor, and the man whose life will in many respects serve as a worthy model for the youths of to-day. Peace to his ashes, blessed be his memory."

The honored widow of Mr. Chipman still makes her residence in Waterbury, and is passing her days in retirement, surrounded by a host of loving friends, and devoting her time to acts of kindly charity.

RICHARD WOODWARD (deceased), for many years a highly respected citizen of East Haven, was a native of that town, born Jan. 17, 1815, in the house now occupied by his daughter.

Hezekiah Woodward, his father, was born on the same farm Jan. 13, 1763, it being the home of the grandfather, who was born in 1742. The latter was a grandson of Rev. John Woodward, who was graduated from Cambridge College in 1693, and was ordained a minister Dec. 6, 1699. Both the father and grandfather of our subject took up arms against the mother country and aided the Colonies in achieving their independence during the Revolutionary war. Hezekiah Woodward married Asenath Bradley, who died in the fall of 1854, and his death occurred May 21, 1815.

Throughout his active business life Richard Woodward engaged in farming upon the old homestead in East Haven, and he was numbered among the leading and prominent citizens of that town. He married Miss Annie M. Potter, who was born June 17, 1815, a daughter of James Potter. She died in August, 1855, and Mr. Woodward departed this life Aug. 25, 1855. To them were born three children: Mary A., who is mentioned below; George R., who served for three years as a member of the 10th Conn. V. I. during the war of the Rebellion, and died in 1867; and James, who died at the age of two years.

On May 9, 1860, Miss Mary A. Woodward was united in marriage with Collis B. Granniss, who was born Nov. 13, 1830, on the farm in East Haven where his brother Lyman now lives, and is now successfully engaged in dairy farming on the old Woodward homestead. He has served as school treasurer for several years, and for fifteen years has been a deacon in the Congregational Church, of which he and his wife are active and prominent members. They have one child, Mary W., who was born Aug. 19, 1867, and was married Oct. 27, 1891, to Andrew P. Allen, who was born Sept. 24, 1861. This union has been blessed by one daughter, Estelle M., born June 18, 1893, in New Haven. Mr. Allen resides with Mr. and Mrs. Granniss, aiding in the operation of the farm. The family are widely and favorably known, and are quite prominent in the community where they make their home.

DUDLEY FAMILY. (1) William Dudley, one of the original settlers of Guilford, and a signer of the Plantation Covenant, was born at Richmond, County of Surrey, England. He was a member of Rev. Henry Whitfield's Church and parish at Ockley, in Surrey, where he married Aug. 24, 1636, Miss Jane Lutman. They came with Mr. Whitfield's company to America in 1639, and their eldest child, William, was born at sea, during the voyage. On their arrival at Guilford they established their home on the east side of what is now Fair street, where Dr. R. B. West now lives. William Dudley's homelot contained three and one-fourth acres, and he had also considerable outlying land. He was a farmer as appears by his will and inventory. He died March 16, 1683-84, and his wife on May 1, 1674. They had five children: (1) Deacon William, born at sea June 8, 1639, died in May, 1701; he married Nov. 4, 1661, Mary Stow. He removed in 1670 to Saybrook, Conn. (2) Joseph, sketch of whom follows. (3) Ruth, born April 20, 1645, married June 20, 1664, John Whittlesey, of Saybrook. (4) Deborah, born Sept. 20, 1647, died in October, 1681. In June, 1671, she married Ebenezer Thompson, who died in May, 1674. They had two children—Jabez, born Oct. 16, 1672; and John, born in November, 1674. She married for her second husband Thomas Scranton, who died Nov. 10, 1711, and they had two children—Samuel, who married Elizabeth Bishop, and Hannah, who married Joseph Evarts. (5) There was another child, whose name is not known.

(11) Joseph Dudley, second son of William and Jane (Lutman) Dudley, was born at Guilford April 24, 1643, and died there June 3, 1712. He married Oct. 6, 1670, Ann Robinson, daughter of Thomas and Mary Robinson. He was a cooper by trade, also a farmer, and owned part of a sawmill which he bequeathed to his son Caleb. He lived, probably, on the homestead of his father on Fair street. His father mentions him in his will as follows: "I give and bequeathe to my son Joseph Dudley, all my housings and lands and rights of lands in Guilford, etc." In 1691 he was chosen by the town "for the making of coffins on all occasions of death." At the time of his death the inventory of land, distributed to his six sons as designated by his will, amounted to £751, 10s, 6d. Movables, £166, 15s, 6d. Joseph Dudley had nine children: (1) Joseph, born June 11, 1671, died Feb. 22, 1726. He married July 27, 1704, Abigail Hubbard. (2) Benjamin, twin of Joseph, died Feb. 23, 1720; he married Jan. 5, 1703, Tabitha Avered. (3) Caleb, sketch of whom follows. (4) Joshua, born Dec. 17, 1674, died Jan. 29, 1750; he married Oct. 20, 1712, Sarah Perry, of Stratford. (5) Miles, born Dec. 17, 1676, died Aug. 10, 1753; he married Jan. 23, 1706, Rachel Strong, daughter of Thomas Strong, of Northampton, Mass. She died Jan. 4, 1769, aged ninety-three. (6) William, born Oct. 18, 1684, died Feb. 28, 1761; he married Ruth Strong, daughter of Thomas Strong, of Lyme; she died Sept. 18, 1743; and he married (second) Widow Rebecca Fisk, daughter of Joseph Elliot. (7) Anna, born in 1687, died April 27, 1687. (8) Mary married Joseph Wright, of Colchester, Conn. (9) Mercy married Josiah Bartlett, of Northampton, Massachusetts.

(111) Caleb Dudley, the third son of Joseph and Ann (Robinson) Dudley, was born in Guilford in June, 1673, and died March 20, 1730. He married June 23, 1700, Elizabeth Buck, of Wethersfield, who was born June 4, 1676, and died April 14, 1738. She was a daughter of Emanuel Buck and Mary (Kirby), and granddaughter of John Kirby, one of the first settlers of Middletown, Conn. Caleb Dudley was a farmer, and the first one of the Dudley name who made his home on "Clapboard Hill," the neighborhood afterward called "Dudleytown." His father, in his will, gave him the portion of his real estate lying in that vicinity. Caleb Dudley built his house on what is now (1902) the home-lot of Joseph E. Dudley (the old house stood a little west of Joseph E. Dudley's present home). It was afterward successively the home of his son Caleb; grandson Nathaniel; great-grandson John; and the birthplace of his great-great-grandchildren Hooker, Elon, John, Horace Dudley and Ruth (Dudley) Norton, the mother of Deacon J. W. Norton. The value of (111) Caleb Dudley's estate, as inventoried after his death, was £2,108. He had eight children, seven sons and one daughter: (1) Thomas, born April 23, 1701, died May 22, 1776; he married June 11, 1733, Abigail Seward, of Durham. (2) Caleb, sketch of whom follows. (3) Ruth, born Dec. 28, 1704, died April 13, 1730; she married March 9, 1732, Samuel Evarts (Daniel, Daniel, John). (4) Daniel, born April 3, 1707, removed to Bethlehem, Conn.; he married Jan. 20, 1732, Joanna Rose, of Branford. (5) Josiah, born Aug. 30, 1709, died Oct. 20, 1755; married in 1738 Silence Dowd. He lived at East Guilford. (6) Samuel, born Dec. 4, 1711, died Nov. 10, 1789. He married May 3, 1738, Jane Talman, daughter of Dr. Ebenezer and Ann (Morrison) Talman, and they had but one son, Samuel, born Nov. 27, 1747, who died Dec. 17, 1819, he married Hannah Evarts (Jonathan, Jonathan, James, James, John). Their only son Deacon Asher Dudley, born April 2, 1770, who died Oct. 27, 1862, was the father of Maria Dudley, born April 30, 1802, who married Oct. 13, 1819, Jonathan Parmelee. Samuel Dudley lived in (and probably built) the old house now occupied by his great-great-grandson, Charles E. Parmelee, west of the residence of Herbert E. Parmelee, in the Clapboard Hill District. (7) Noah, born Aug. 15, 1716, removed to Roxbury, Conn.; he married May 28, 1752, Submit Talman, daughter of Dr. Ebenezer Talman (Dr. Peter, Peter). (8) David, born Nov. 27, 1718, died Feb. 17, 1807; he married Feb. 17, 1742, Mary Talman, daughter of Dr. Ebenezer Talman (Dr. Peter, Peter). They had one son who died young, and five daughters, one of whom, Anna, born April 13, 1752, married Timothy Field. They were the parents of Rev. David Dudley Field, D. D., born May 20, 1781.

(IV) Caleb Dudley, son of Caleb and Elizabeth (Buck) Dudley, was born in the Clapboard Hill District, Guilford, Nov. 20, 1702, and died Oct. 10, 1793. He married May 31, 1739, Hannah Stone, daughter of Nathaniel and Hannah (Graves) Stone. He was a farmer, and lived upon the homestead of his father. Caleb Dudley had five children, all sons. The eldest died in infancy, and the others settled near their parents at Clapboard Hill. (1) Caleb, born Feb. 24, 1740, died in March, 1740. (2) Caleb (2), born July 24, 1741, died Sept. 14, 1802. (3) Abraham, sketch of whom follows. (4) Nathaniel, born Oct. 3, 1745, died Feb. 21, 1826; he married March 12, 1777, Mary Hart, daughter of Thomas and Concurrence (Bartlett) Hart. (5) Amos, born Nov. 3, 1747, married Feb. 27, 1771, Mary Evarts, daughter of Eleazer Evarts (Samuel, Judah, John). She died Aug. 23, 1797, aged forty-seven, and on July 15, 1799, he married (second) Deborah (Johnson), widow of Elon Lee. Of this family

(V) Caleb Dudley married Nov. 28, 1764, Hannah Evarts, daughter of Eleazer Evarts (Samuel, Judah, John). She died Sept. 6, 1765, aged twenty-one, leaving one child, (1) Caleb, born Aug. 28, 1765, who died June 30, 1815. Caleb Dudley married (second) Jan. 18, 1769, Anna Munger, daughter of Ebenezer, and they had five children: (2) Hannah, born Oct. 31, 1769, died Feb. 17, 1828

(married Jan. 13, 1790, John Griswold). (3) Anna, born May 11, 1773, died Aug. 20, 1866 (married Amos Bartlett; their daughter Ruth, born April 15, 1802, married Capt. George Bartlett). (4) Ruth, born July 19, 1777, died June 30, 1847 (married Peter Talman). (5) Abel, born Sept. 3, 1781, died March 11, 1821 (married Betsey Minor). (6) Huldah, born Oct. 29, 1784, married Timothy Terryl, of Woodbury, Connecticut.

(V) Abraham Dudley, son of Caleb and Hannah (Stone) Dudley, was born March 2, 1743, and died July 24, 1818. He married Jan. 28, 1773, Deborah Cruttenden, daughter of Joseph Cruttenden (Joseph, Abraham, Abraham) and Lucy (Spencer). For some years after his marriage he lived in the "Sabbath Day House," on the west side of Guilford Green, near the present home of Rev. G. W. Banks; but some time between 1785 and 1790 he built and removed to the house nearly opposite his father's, now the home of his great-grandson, Charles A. Dudley. He was a farmer and weaver.

Abraham Dudley had three children: (1) Lucy, born August 3, 1775, died April 13, 1837; she married June 11, 1796, Deacon Asher Dudley (Samuel, Samuel, Caleb, Joseph, William). They had two children—Horace, born Nov. 10, 1798, was drowned July 9, 1810; Maria, born April 30, 1802, who died April 25, 1893, married Oct. 13, 1819, Jonathan Parmelee (see sketch of Parmelee family). (2) Deacon Abraham, born Feb. 2, 1779, died July 18, 1852. (3) Joel, born July 13, 1788, died Nov. 14, 1869. He married Dec. 8, 1814, Harriet Griswold, daughter of John Griswold and Hannah (Dudley) (Caleb, Caleb, Caleb, Joseph, William). She died Feb. 26, 1849, aged fifty-eight. They had four children—Hon. Lewis Joel, born Nov. 11, 1815, graduated Yale College in 1838; lived in Northampton, Mass. Henry Nelson, born Nov. 9, 1818, died Aug. 1, 1894; he married Maryette Minor, of Woodbury, and had two children, Katherine Minor and Harriet Griswold. Mary, born Dec. 29, 1820, died July 31, 1892, unmarried. Emily was born Sept. 17, 1825.

(VI) Deacon Abraham Dudley, the eldest son of Abraham and Deborah (Cruttenden) Dudley, was born Feb. 2, 1779, and died July 18, 1852. He married Dec. 8, 1802, Mary Bassett, who was born March 10, 1781 (died June 23, 1863), daughter of Elisha Bassett and Hannah (Stone) (Deacon Thomas, Nathaniel, Nathaniel, John), of East Guilford (now Madison). Abraham Dudley lived in the house built by his father, at Clapboard Hill, and like him was a weaver and farmer. In 1808 he and his wife united with the First Congregational Church, of which he was chosen a deacon Aug. 20, 1827; this office he held until his death, almost twenty-five years later. Deacon Abraham Dudley had three children: (1) Clarissa, born Dec. 23, 1804, died Dec. 10, 1873; she married Oct. 22, 1834, Joel Evarts, son of Nathaniel and Julia (Parmelee)

Evarts, of the Nutplains District. (2) George, sketch of whom follows. (3) Eliza, born March 2, 1810, died May 10, 1894, unmarried.

(VII) George Dudley, only son of Deacon Abraham and Mary (Bassett) Dudley, was born Nov. 30, 1807, and died Dec. 8, 1869. He married May 3, 1832, Lucy Evarts, who was born May 31, 1809, daughter of Nathaniel and Julia (Parmelee) Evarts, of the Nutplains District, and died Jan. 6, 1888. George Dudley lived in the house with his father till 1840, when he built and removed to the house on the opposite side of the street, now the home of Eli T. Dudley. He was a member of the First Congregational Church, with which he united in 1831, and his wife in 1827. He died at the age of sixty-two, after a week's illness with erysipelas, which developed in an injured limb. George Dudley had six children: (1) Lydia Clarissa, born Sept. 9, 1833, died Dec. 15, 1889, unmarried. (2) George Edwin, born Dec. 10, 1836, died July 16, 1847. He was drowned in East river while bathing. (3) Lucy Jemette, born Nov. 7, 1839, died Feb. 20, 1842. (4) Charles Ellsworth, born Feb. 11, 1842, died April 28, 1844. (5) Eliza Jemette was born Sept. 8, 1845. (6) Charles Abraham, sketch of whom follows.

(VIII) CHARLES ABRAHAM DUDLEY, born Aug. 14, 1849, became a farmer of the Clapboard Hill District, Guilford. He married April 10, 1872, Lucy E. Anger, born May 26, 1849, daughter of the late Deacon Phineas M. Augur, of Middlefield, Conn., who married May 7, 1846, Lucy Eliza Parmelee, daughter of the late Jonathan Parmelee, of Guilford (see sketch of Hon. Phineas M. Augur). Mr. Dudley lives in the house built by his great-grandfather, Abraham Dudley, between 1785 and 1790. He is a member of the First Congregational Church. Mr. and Mrs. Dudley have had six children: (1) George Edwin, born July 12, 1873, died June 23, 1888; he was drowned in a vain attempt to save his brother. (2) Alice Lucy was born June 27, 1875. (3) Charles Parmelee, born May 19, 1877, died June 23, 1888; he was drowned in East river, while bathing. (4) Susan Marilla was born Dec. 11, 1878. (5) Arthur Augur was born Nov. 4, 1881. (6) Ruth Christine was born Oct. 9, 1891.

PARMELEE FAMILY. (1) John Parmelee, Sr., one of the original settlers of Guilford, Conn., and a signer of the Plantation Covenant, was one of the older men who came from England in Rev. Henry Whitfield's company, in 1639. His home-lot, consisting of one and one-half acres, embraced the land now occupied by the First Congregational Church and the buildings in the rear. Hannah, his first wife, was the mother of his children. He married (second) Widow Elizabeth Bradley, of New Haven, who after his death married, May 22, 1663, John Evarts, of Guilford. John Parmelee died in 1659 [Steiner's History of Guilford gives the date of his death as Nov. 8, 1659, but another record says that his will was proved on that date]. His children were probably all born in England, and dates of birth are not known. The only ones of whom we find record are: (1) John, sketch of whom follows; (2) Hannah, who married Sept. 3, 1651, John Johnson, of New Haven, afterward of Guilford; and (3) Mary, who married Sept. 16, 1660, Dennis Crampton, and died March 16, 1667. Widow Elizabeth Bradley, second wife of John Parmelee, Sr., was the mother of Stephen and Nathan Bradley, who afterwards settled in Guilford.

(II) John Parmelee, Jr., born in England, son of John and Hannah Parmelee, came to Guilford in 1639. He had a home-lot on the east side of what is now State street, his house standing on or near the site of the house of the late J. Seymour Benton. He was the "town drummer," serving in that capacity on "training days," and from a very early period he beat the drum to call the people to church on Sabbath-days, and to summon them to town-meetings. He died in January, 1869. The first wife of John Parmelee, Jr., Rebecca, died Sept. 29, 1651, leaving one son, Nathaniel, born in 1645, who died in the Indian war; he married Sarah French, daughter of Thomas French. John Parmelee, Jr., married (second) in 1651 Widow Ann Plane, who died March 30, 1658. He and his third wife, Hannah, were married in February, 1659 (the maiden names of his first and third wives do not appear on any Guilford records). They had nine children: (2) John, born Nov. 25, 1659, died March 21, 1725; he married June 29, 1681, Mary Mason. (3) Joshua, born in 1664, died June 7, 1729. (4) Isaac, sketch of whom follows. (5) Hannah, born Nov. 5, 1667, married in November, 1688, Tappan Hill. (6) Stephen was born Dec. 6, 1669. (7) Job, born July 31, 1673, died March 6, 1765; he married Elizabeth Edwards. (8) Caleb was born in 1675. (9) Priscilla was born May 8, 1678. (10) Joel, born in 1679, died in July, 1748; he married June 30, 1706, Abigail Andrews, and lived in Durham.

(III) Isaac Parmelee, son of John Parmelee, Jr., and his third wife, Hannah, was born in Guilford Nov. 21, 1665, and died Jan. 23, 1749. He married Dec. 30, 1689, Elizabeth Hiland (or Highland), who was born June 18, 1666, daughter of George and Hannah (Cruttenden) Hiland, and died Jan. 3, 1746. They had nine children: (1) Ebenezer, born Nov. 28, 1690, died Sept. 27, 1777; he married July 24, 1718, Hannah Cruttenden, daughter of Abraham and Susannah (Kirby) Cruttenden. (2) Abraham, born May 18, 1692, died Sept. 19, 1752. (3) Joseph, sketch of whom follows. (4) Elizabeth, born Jan. 20, 1696, married April 8, 1718, Nathaniel Baldwin. (5) Sarah, born Aug. 11, 1699, died May 6, 1780; she married Oct. 17, 1720, Michael Hill. (6) Isaac, born May 20, 1702, died July 13, 1752; he married May 20, 1725, Elizabeth Evarts, daughter of Sergt. James Evarts

(Daniel, John) and Anna (Bow). (7) Andrew, born July 20, 1704, died Aug. 7, 1794; he married Anna Crampton. (8) Rachel, born Nov. 18, 1707, died Nov. 9, 1793; she married June 27, 1730, Samuel Evarts, son of Daniel Evarts (Daniel, John) and Mary (West). (9) Josiah, born in December, 1709, died in August, 1739.

(IV) Joseph Parmelee, son of Isaac and Elizabeth (Hiland) Parmelee, was born at Guilford Sept. 14, 1694, and died April 14, 1750. He married Sept. 19, 1716, Abigail Kimberly, who was born July 28, 1696, daughter of Nathaniel and Hannah (Downs) Kimberly, of West Haven, Conn. Mrs. Parmelee died Nov. 28, 1763. They had six children: (1) Abigail, born Jan. 21, 1719, died Feb. 8, 1780; she married Caleb Bishop. (2) Joseph, born April 3, 1721, died in July, 1804. (3) William, sketch of whom follows. (4) Elizabeth, born Nov. 21, 1728, married Ebenezer Chittenden. (5) Beulah, born Aug. 30, 1732, died Sept. 16, 1818; she married Jan. 3, 1754, Nathaniel Elliott. (6) Samuel, born July 27, 1737, died Jan. 2, 1807.

(V) William Parmelee, son of Joseph and Abigail (Kimberly) Parmelee, was born in 1724, and died March 13, 1799. He united with the First Congregational Church in 1749. On June 6, 1749, he married Mary Rossiter, and they had five children: (1) Jerusha was born Feb. 27, 1750. (2) Eunice, born March 27, 1751, married Ebenezer Hopson. (3) William, born Dec. 12, 1752, died Dec. 31, 1835. (4) Nathaniel, born Oct. 6, 1754, died Nov. 17, 1828. (5) Amos, born Nov. 19, 1756, died Dec. 8, 1820. William Parmelee married (second) Dec. 17, 1764, Widow Mary (Kirby) Johnson, daughter of John and Hannah (Stow) Kirby, of Middletown, Conn. She was born in December, 1727, and married (first) Nov. 8, 1753, Amos Johnson, of Middletown, who died in camp at Lake George, in September, 1758, while serving in the French and Indian war. She died Feb. 13, 1813. William Parmelee and his second wife had three children: (1) Jonathan, sketch of whom follows. (2) Mary, born March 1, 1767, died March 7, 1854; she married Oct. 8, 1787, Thomas Hart, son of Thomas and Concurrence (Bartlett) Hart. (3) Eli, born May 28, 1772, died Jan. 27, 1805, unmarried; he was a sailor.

(VI) Jonathan Parmelee, son of William Parmelee by his second marriage, with Widow Mary (Kirby) Johnson, was born in Guilford Oct. 4, 1795, and died Dec. 7, 1835, aged seventy. He was a shoe-maker by trade, and lived in a house which stood just west of the residence of Isaac Kelsey, on Boston street. He married Feb. 15, 1792, Elizabeth Hart, who was born July 17, 1765, daughter of Thomas and Concurrence (Bartlett) Hart, of Guilford, and died Dec. 21, 1846. The graves of Jonathan and Elizabeth Parmelee are in one of the front lots of the west or oldest part of Alderbrook cemetery. They had seven children: (1) Jerusha, born Sept. 8, 1793, died Sept. 2, 1795. (2) Elisha, born May 21, 1795, died July 21, 1821; he married Clarissa B. Elliot, daughter of Reuben and Grace (Fairchild) Elliot. (3) Sarah, born Feb. 28, 1797, died Oct. 31, 1884; she married (as third wife) April 30, 1851, Rev. Silas McKee, D. D., of Bradford, Vt. (4) Jonathan, sketch of whom follows. (5) Mary, born Sept. 18, 1801, died Aug. 18, 1882; she married (as second wife) Charles E. Fowler. (6) Charles S., born Oct. 11, 1804, was a sailor, and was drowned at sea. (7) Eli, born June 7, 1808, died Aug. 28, 1882; he married Betsey Ann Benton, who was born May 8, 1808, daughter of Dan Lindley and Betsey (Seward) Benton, and died Nov. 10, 1891.

(VII) Jonathan Parmelee, son of Jonathan and Elizabeth (Hart) Parmelee, was born Sept. 3, 1798, and died June 18, 1880, aged eighty-one years and nine months. He married Oct. 13, 1819, Maria Dudley, who was born April 30, 1802, and died April 25, 1893, being only five days less than ninety-one years of age. She was a daughter of Asher Dudley (Samuel, Samuel, Caleb, Joseph, William) and Lucy (Dudley) (Abraham, Caleb, Caleb, Joseph, William). They lived together sixty-one years and eight months. The fiftieth anniversary of their marriage (Oct. 13, 1869) was celebrated by a Golden Wedding, at which nearly one hundred guests were present, including all their children; all their grandchildren, except one; and a great-grandchild.

In his youth Jonathan Parmelee learned the shoemaker's trade with his father, but after his marriage was engaged as a farmer, and lived in the house built by his father-in-law, now the home of his grandson, Herbert E. Parmelee. In 1821 he and his wife united with the First Congregational Church, from which they were dismissed in 1843, with those who left to form the Third Congregational Church, of which they continued active members until their death. Two weeks after the organization of that church Jonathan Parmelee was chosen superintendent of the Sunday-school, and served faithfully in that relation for many years. After the marriage of his youngest son, Henry E., he left to him the care of the farm and removed to the borough, where he built a house south of the "Old Stone House," on Whitfield street. This house was destroyed by fire in 1898. There he was for many years connected with a fishing company, until obliged to give up work because of the infirmities of age. He was a genial, upright, Christian gentleman, universally respected and beloved. He died suddenly, of heart disease, having been in the street an hour or two before his death.

Jonathan and Maria (Dudley) Parmelee had a family of five children: (1) Horace Dudley Parmelee, born March 22, 1821, died Dec. 10, 1901. He married Oct. 20, 1842, Clarissa Chapman Seward, who was born Feb. 24, 1824, daughter of Samuel Lee Seward (Timothy, David, Deacon William, John, William) and Sarah (Bartlett), of Guilford. Their children—(a) Charles Edward, born Oct. 28, 1844, a farmer of Guilford, married May 15, 1868, Ann E. Grosvenor, who was born May 15, 1849, daughter of Joseph and Ann (Oakley) Grosvenor; they had one child, Frank Ernest, born April 17, 1869, who died May 20, 1870. (b) William Henry, born Jan. 1, 1858, a merchant of South Norwalk, married Dec. 31, 1885, Mary E. Monroe, who was born Sept. 2, 1857, daughter of Beverly and Elizabeth (Fowler) Monroe; no children. (c) George Head, born Sept. 26, 1868, a lawyer of Johnstown, Pa., married April 22, 1891, Mary E. Bishop, who was born April 22, 1871, daughter of William C. and Abigail L. (Davis) Bishop; they have three children—Harry Bishop, born Jan. 23, 1892; Earle Lindley, Jan. 18, 1894; and William Horace, Jan. 21, 1897.

(2) Mary Maria Parmelee, born May 18, 1823, died Dec. 3, 1887. She married Sept. 11, 1845, Alfred G. Hull, who was born May 10, 1822, and died Jan. 31, 1894. He was a son of Joseph and Fanny (Chittenden) Hull, of Clinton, Connecticut.

(3) Lucy Eliza Parmelee, born July 15, 1825, died Jan. 4, 1895. She married May 7, 1846, Phineas Miller Augur, who was born Feb. 8, 1826, son of Phineas and Esther (Kirby) Augur, of Middlefield, Connecticut.

(4) Sarah Marilla Parmelee, born April 30, 1828, died Sept. 9, 1892. She married Dec. 3, 1858 (as his third wife), Josiah Pierson, son of Rev. Josiah Pierson, of Bergen, New York.

(5) Henry Elisha Parmelee, born Jan. 1, 1830, died Sept. 7, 1896. He married May 27, 1851, Georgiana Elvira Rossiter, who was born April 21, 1829, daughter of Theophilus and Eliza A. (Chittenden) Rossiter, of North Guilford. The former traced his line through William, Theophilus, Josiah, Dr. Bryan. Mrs. Eliza A. (Chittenden) Rossiter is descended from Amos, Jared, William, William, Thomas, William. Mr. and Mrs. Henry E. Parmelee had three children: (1) Herbert Eugene, born Nov. 27, 1853, farmer and sawyer, married Oct. 31, 1888, Mary Potter, of North Guilford, who was born Nov. 6, 1862, daughter of Russell and Polly A. (Hull) Potter; they have one child, Sarah Elvira, born Oct. 29, 1889. (2) Ella Louisa, born June 23, 1855, died Sept. 12, 1857. (3) Edgar Pierson, born Oct. 16, 1859, farmer and sawyer, of Guilford, married Oct. 16, 1884, Helen Hill, of North Guilford, who was born July 17, 1863, daughter of George and Mary (Kimberly) Hill; they have three children—Mabel Maria, born Sept. 30, 1885; Ernest Eugene, born March 14, 1890; and Ella Hill, born Jan. 29, 1892.

HON. PHINEAS M. AUGUR (deceased), who in his lifetime was prominent in agricultural affairs of the State, and especially active in the Prohibition movement, being that party's candidate for governor at the last election before his death, was born Feb. 8, 1826, in the town of Middletown, Middlefield Society. Mr. Augur was in the sixth generation from

(1) Robert Augur, his first American ancestor, who came to the New Haven Colony from England. He was the son of John and Ann Augur, of London, England, and nephew (as shown by Nicholas Augur's will) of Nicholas Augur, a physician and trader at New Haven. Robert Augur was married Nov. 20, 1673, to Mary Gilbert, born June 11, 1651, daughter of Deputy Gov. Matthew Gilbert.

(II) John Augur, son of Robert, born Nov. 16, 1686, married July 1, 1710, Elizabeth Bradley, daughter of Isaac and Elizabeth Bradley, of East Haven, Connecticut.

(III) Isaac Augur, son of John and Elizabeth (Bradley) Augur, born about 1718, died July 27, 1808. On Oct. 25, 1748, he married Eunice Tyler, born Oct. 6, 1729, died Feb. 3, 1812; she was a daughter of Abraham and Eunice (Arnold) Tyler, of Haddam, Conn. Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Augur lived in Haddam, and had twelve children, six sons and six daughters, all of whom married and had children. One son, Felix, was the grandfather of the late Gen. C. C. Augur, of Washington, D. C. Prosper Augur, a sketch of whom follows, was the fourth child.

(IV) Prosper Augur, son of Isaac, born Jan. 18, 1756, married May 30, 1781, Thankful Miller, born Oct. 16, 1755, died Sept. 16, 1825. She was a daughter of Deacon Giles Miller, of Middlefield, Conn., who was a prominent man of that community, a descendant of Thomas Miller (through Joseph), who came from Massachusetts to Middletown, Conn., soon after its settlement, and located at South Farms. The children of Prosper Augur and his wife were: Elizabeth, who married Comfort Johnson; Sally, who married Luman Wetmore; Polly; and Phineas. The parents settled in Middlefield. Prosper Augur was self-educated, a man of sound mind, much stability of character, sterling integrity and great usefulness. He was for many years a deacon in the Congregational Church of Middlefield. He died Dec. 16, 1836.

(V) Phineas Augur, only son of Prosper, born Aug. 11, 1788, settled in the neighborhood of his father. On Oct. 29, 1821, he married Esther Kirby, of Upper Houses, Middletown (now the town of Cromwell), who was born June 24, 1790, and died April 16, 1872. At the age of sixteen years Mr. Augur commenced teaching school; at the close of his first examination, before Dr. David Dudley Field, of Haddam, the Doctor quoted Timothy, "Let no man despise thy youth." After teaching very successfully for several years he died, Nov. 18, 1825, in early manhood. His only child (posthumous), Phineas Miller, was born Feb. 8, 1820.

(VI) Phineas M. Augur received a common-school education and later attended an academy. During his early life he was appointed surveyor for the county, and later deputy surveyor-general of Middlesex county. He made the first survey and maps of Middlefield, with the necessary post route.

which was used successfully in Washington, D. C., in obtaining a post office at Middlefield, by the late David Lyman. When the town of Middlefield was set off from Middletown, in 1866, Mr. Augur was chosen assessor, and made out the first assessment list of the town. At the same time he was chosen a member of the board of education, and held the place continually until his death, which occurred July 14, 1891. He served one term on the State board of education in 1869, and declined re-election. In 1869 he was elected to the General Assembly, serving on the committee on Incorporations, and several bills that he introduced now form part of the general statutes. When the Middlefield Farmers' Club was organized Mr. Augur became one of its leading lights. In 1872 he was elected pomologist by the State board of agriculture, and continued to serve in that capacity until his death; he made a collection of Connecticut products for the Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia. Mr. Augur was always an independent thinker, anti-slavery in old times. He believed in economy in government, and that good teaching should be given in the public schools and to children at home. He was faithful to Temperance reform, became an ardent Prohibitionist, was prominent in their gatherings, and was nominated for the highest office in the State by that party at the State convention some time prior to his death. He was for more than thirty years a deacon in the Congregational Church of Middlefield.

At the age of twenty Mr. Augur was married to Miss Lucy Eliza, daughter of the late Jonathan Parmelee, of Guilford. To them came children as follows: (1) Edwin Prosper, born Jan. 31, 1847, surveyor and civil engineer of the town of Middletown, Conn., was for twenty-nine years, from 1872 to 1901, city surveyor of Middletown. On May 20, 1860, he married Susan Buell Case, who was born April 16, 1848. (2) Lucy Elizabeth, born May 26, 1849, married April 10, 1872, Charles Abraham Dudley, born Aug. 14, 1849, of Guilford, Conn. (3) Mary Eliza, born April 27, 1852, married Oct. 13, 1874, Horace Francis Dudley, born March 9, 1846, of Guilford, Conn. (4) Alfred Henry, born Feb. 5, 1855, married May 25, 1880, Anna Elizabeth Camp, born Oct. 18, 1855, daughter of Charles E. and Elizabeth (Hart) Camp, of Durham, Conn. He has been for several years town clerk of Middlefield. (5) Charles Parmelee, born Feb. 17, 1857, resides in Middlefield and is a florist, in business with his brother Alfred. He married Nov. 18, 1880, Ida Eulalie Bradley, who was born March 20, 1857, and died April 4, 1901. She was a daughter of Edward J. and Harriet (Wilex) Bradley, of Westfield Society, Middletown.

LEWELLYN BEAUMONT, a prosperous farmer and stockman of the town of Wallingford, where his industrious habits and upright character have made him many friends, was born in that town Nov. 12, 1830, a son of John and Ann (Tyler)

Beaumont, well and favorably known in the early part of the last century in that locality. Mr. Beaumont received his education in the district school, and remained at home helping with the farm work until the outbreak of the Civil war. The appeal of his country for help in her hour of need found in him a ready response, and he enlisted in Company K, 15th Conn. V. I., serving throughout the war, and participating in numerous battles and engagements. He passed through all the scenes and experiences of that great struggle safely, and returned home to resume the occupations of peaceful life, thankful that the war had not been in vain, and that the Republic still lived. He settled down to farming on the place where he now lives, and has seventy acres of good land under cultivation, the intervening years having brought him the prosperity that is the reward of honest effort.

Mr. Beaumont has never married, and is a happy and contented gentleman, with a genial spirit. Well read on all questions of the day, he is a Republican with independent habits of thought. A hard-working man, he practices the strictest economy, and has a horror of debt. A good all-around man, with industrious habits and an honest spirit, is the judgment of all who know him.

ELIZUR EDWIN PRICHARD (deceased) was born in Waterbury, New Haven county, Sept. 19, 1804, of English descent, and was a member of one of the oldest families in New England, the genealogy of which may be traced to the Old World, as follows:

David Prichard, father of Elizur, was born in Waterbury, Oct. 24, 1775, and died Dec. 22, 1838. David Prichard, father of David, was born here also, April 7, 1737, and died Dec. 22, 1838. James Prichard, father of David (1), was born in Milford, Conn., was there baptized in 1698, and died Sept. 3, 1749. Benjamin Prichard, father of James, was born in Milford Jan. 34, 1657, and died April 9, 1743. Roger Prichard, father of Benjamin, was born in England (perhaps Wales), and lived in Wethersfield, Conn., in 1640, in Springfield in 1643, and in Milford in 1653. At the latter place he married Elizabeth, daughter of James Prudden, one of the original settlers of Guilford. He died in New Haven Jan. 26, 1670. All the family were agriculturists, but many of the members also followed some trade in connection with farming, and all were conspicuous as members of the Church of New England.

James Prichard, great-grandfather of the subject of this sketch, came to Waterbury in 1733, and settled where the old rink now stands, at the corner of Bank and Grand streets. He married, Dec. 25, 1721, Elizabeth Johnson, who was born in Stratford, Conn., Aug. 28, 1701, and died Dec. 10, 1797, the mother of seven children: James, George, Elizabeth, Isaac, John, David and Hannah. The family lived in the village of Waterbury, but the father conducted a farm on the opposite side of the river. He was a man of wealth for his time and acquired much land. He died in the "great sickness" of 1749.

David Prichard, youngest son of James, was a farmer, cabinet-maker, carpenter and joiner. On Dec. 20, 1757, he married Ruth Smith, to which marriage were born ten children, viz.: Archibald, Ruth, Mariana, Philo, Sylvia, Mollie, Mollie (2), David, Damon and Sally. The father of this family lived to be over 101 years of age. When he heard that his favorite son, David, had died, he never spoke again. The remains of both were interred at one time.

David Prichard, Jr., son of David, married Nov. 9, 1797, Anna Hitchcock, a daughter of Benjamin Hitchcock. She died Feb. 17, 1860. David Prichard, Jr., was a cabinet-maker, which business he followed some forty years. He was also largely engaged in the manufacture of clocks, in which he did an extensive trade in the Southern States and Canada. He reared a family of nine children, born in the following order: Minerva, William, Julius S., Elizur E., Anna, Sally H., David, Samuel H. and Charlotte L. Of these, William and Julius S. went to Ohio. David graduated from Yale Medical School in 1832, practiced medicine in Madison, Conn., also in Ohio and New Jersey, and was in practice in Norwalk, Conn., at the time of his death, Oct. 30, 1868; he was a manufacturer of German silver spoons in Waterbury, Conn., and the first to make them in Waterbury; was also associated with Julius Hotchkiss, under the firm name of Hotchkiss & Prichard, in the manufacture of webbing, cotton, etc., and held other interests.

Elizur E. Prichard, the subject of this biography, grew to manhood in Waterbury. He married Betsey Cooper, who was born in Derby, this county, Oct. 25, 1805, a daughter of Asa and Hannah (Botsford) Cooper. The Botsfords trace their descent from Henry Botsford, one of the original settlers of Milford. The Coopers were also among the original settlers of New Haven, Mrs. Prichard tracing her line through John, John, John, Caleb, Caleb and Asa. To Elizur E. Prichard and his wife were born five children, as follows: Elizabeth Ann, Sarah J., one that died in infancy unnamed, Katherine A., and Florence C. Of these, Elizabeth Ann died in 1854. The surviving daughters remain at the old home unmarried.

Elizur E. Prichard was about twenty-four years of age when he began to take part in manufacturing in Waterbury by making iron and brass castings. In 1829 he engaged in making gilt buttons, and in 1833 in the manufacture of umbrella, parasol and cane trimmings of fine quality, occasionally of gold. He enjoyed the confidence of the solid men of Waterbury, by whom he was implicitly trusted, and on one occasion, when making a trip to Boston, he carried with him to the bank in that city $30,000, to accommodate a New Haven Bank. In 1840 he erected a residence on the corner of Bank and Grand streets, in the center of Waterbury. In 1843 he was engaged in the manufacture of cloth buttons, as in that year there was a diploma granted to him by the American Institute (of New York) for "superior specimens of silk buttons." For a number of years he was also engaged in Norwalk, Conn., in making door knobs, etc. In Waterbury and in New Haven, in partnership with his brother, Dr. David Prichard, he was engaged in the manufacture of elastic webbing; from this partnership sprang the American Suspender Co.

In 1852 Mr. Prichard retired from active business, but in 1855 his interests in the Wolcottville Knitting Co. obliged him to assume the management of that business, which he controlled until the time of his death, Nov. 29, 1860. He was possessed of a spirit of tireless activity, was progressive, public-spirited and benevolent. It is believed that no suppliant for aid ever appealed to him without receiving instant and substantial relief. Much he lost by lending—in his kindness of heart—the use of his name to his friends in their business difficulties, and, in fact, his kindness was his overpowering weakness. He never filled a public office, but devoted his energies and time to the industrial and social elevation of his fellow men. He died a member of the First Church, in which faith his widow also passed away, May 29, 1887.

HON. CHARLES STODDARD SPAULDING, prominent farmer and ex-member of the State Legislature from Cheshire, New Haven county, is a native of this State, born in Norfolk, Litchfield county, May 9, 1837, son of Frederick A. and Mary (Goodwin) Spaulding. The father was born in New Marlboro, Mass., June 13, 1810, a son of Austin and Betsey (Clark) Spaulding, the former also a native of that State, the latter of Connecticut. Austin Spaulding lived and died in Massachusetts, but at an early age Frederick, his son, removed to Litchfield county, Conn., where he made his home with an uncle, and where he followed farming throughout his active business life. He died there Aug. 30, 1892, and his wife, whom he had married in Litchfield county, died in Norfolk Dec. 8, 1881. In their family were eight children of whom Charles Stoddard is the eldest; Jane P., Mrs. Booth, died in New Marlboro, Mass., in 1876; Mary A. is the wife of John A. Stevens, of Atlantic, Iowa; Ellen K., widow of Byron J. Perkins, lives in Winsted, Conn.; Almira, wife of Erastus Burr, lives in Norfolk; Alice, Mrs. Johnson, is a resident of Goshen, Litchfield county; Abbie K., Mrs. Norton, died in Bristol, Conn., in 1890; and John lives on the old homestead in Norfolk.

Charles S. Spaulding was reared in Litchfield county, and was educated in the schools of Norfolk. In early life he engaged in business as a contractor and builder throughout his native county. When the Civil war broke out he enlisted there, in 1861, in Company E, 11th Conn. V. I., which was assigned to the 9th Army Corps, and later to Gen. Burnside's command. He participated in the battles of Newbern, N. C., Roanoke, Frederick-burg, Antietam, South Mountain, the siege of Suffolk, Va. (which lasted twenty-three days), and in various skirmishes. At Drury's Bluff Mr. Spaulding received a gun shot wound, which confined him to the hospital at Richmond, Va., for six months. He was honorably discharged at Annapolis, Md., in June, 1865, and returned to his home in Litchfield county, where he continued to reside until coming to Cheshire, in 1886. Here he purchased one of the old and valuable farms, and has since devoted his energies to agricultural pursuits, with good results.

In Litchfield county, in 1875, Mr. Spaulding was united in marriage with Miss Grace Merrill, a daughter of Augustus and Adaline (Wooding) Merrill, all natives of that county, as were the grandparents, Norman and Annie (Marsh) Merrill. Her maternal grandparents, Edmund Anson and Lu Anna (Pond) Wooding, were born in New Haven and Hartford counties, respectively. Mr. Spaulding and his wife have three children: Jessie G., who has successfully engaged in teaching school in Falls Village, and is now attending College in Holyoke, Mass.; Annie M., also a teacher of New Haven county; and Ethel, at home. Mr. and Mrs. Spaulding are both members of the Episcopal Church. Fraternally he is an honored member of E. A. Doolittle Post, No. 5, G. A. R.; Temple Lodge, No. 16, A. F. & A. M.; and the Ancient Order of United Workmen. As a Republican he takes an active and prominent part in political affairs, and his fellow citizens, recognizing his ability and worth, have called him to public office. He has been a member of the board of selectmen of Cheshire, and in November, 1898, was elected to the State Legislature, in which body he served in a most creditable and acceptable manner.

THOMAS FRENCH, an honored veteran of the Civil war, and a worthy citizen of Town Plot, Waterbury, was born in Nealsworth, Gloucestershire, England, Sept. 11, 1826, a son of Thomas and Anna French, also natives of that shire, where the former worked as a millwright until his emigration to the United States in 1846, making the voyage on a sailing vessel. In 1851 he located in Naugatuck, Conn., where he was first employed as a carder in the mills, and later as a machinist. He was a member of the Church of England, and died in that faith in 1891. In his family were nine children.

Thomas French was educated in the schools of his native land, and was eighteen years of age when he took passage on a sailing vessel at Liverpool bound for the New World. After two months spent upon the water he landed in New York, in June, 1844, and proceeded at once to South Hadley, Mass., where he was employed in a woolen mill at $15 per month for one year. He then went to Rockville, Tolland Co., Conn., where he worked as a carder and spinner in the woolen mills until 1850, and later was employed in the latter capacity in the woolen mills at Naugatuck, New Haven county, until 1854. During the following two years he worked as a farm hand at one dollar per day, and then engaged in the butcher business with J. E. Gunn and Samuel Osborne, buying cattle in Canada. In 1861 Mr. French enlisted in Company E, 8th Conn. V. I., at Naugatuck, under Capt. Martin B. Smith, and was in several engagements, including the battles of Roanoke and Newbern, N. C. He was discharged May 12, 1862, on account of disability, and returned to Naugatuck, where he was employed in the rubber works until 1872. He then came to Town Plot, Waterbury, and took up his residence on the Chatfield farm, where for the past twenty-eight years he has carried on general farming with fair success.

In 1849, in New York State, Mr. French was united in marriage with Miss Martha, daughter of William Culverhouse, and to them was born one son, Aaron W., now a resident of Naugatuck, who married Nellie Primrose, and has two children, Harry and William. Mrs. French died in Naugatuck, in 1863, and for his second wife our subject married Miss Polly Ann Chatfield, a native of Southington, Conn., and a daughter of David and Polly (Hitchcock) Chatfield. By this union were born four children, but all died in infancy. Mr. French is a member of Wadhams Post, No. 49, G. A. R., of Waterbury. In religious connection Mr. French holds membership with the Episcopal Church, while his wife belonged to the Congregational Church, and in that faith died June 13, 1901. Mr. French is widely and favorably known, and his circle of friends in Waterbury is extensive.

The Chatfield family, to which Mrs. French belonged, is one of the oldest of New Haven county. Three brothers, Francis, Thomas and George Chatfield, came to this country from England in 1639, and located in Guilford, Conn., where they engaged in farming. Francis died unmarried in 1647. Thomas moved to New Haven, where he married Ann Higginson, a daughter of Rev. Naness Higginson, and later went to Long Island, where he became a magistrate. George, the third brother, located in Killingworth, Conn., where he died Jan. 9, 1671. On Sept. 30, 1651, he married Sarah Bishop, and for his second wife married Isabelle Nettleton, daughter of Samuel Nettleton. He had three children: John, born April 8, 1661; George, born Aug. 18, 1668; and Mary, born April 20, 1671.

Lieut. Daniel Chatfield, the great-grandfather of Mrs. French, was a native of Oxford. He spent the greater part of his life in Waterbury, where he owned property. He was a member of the early militia, being commissioned second lieutenant of the 3d Company in March, 1761, and later first lieutenant. In 1771 he removed to Derby. He joined the Continental Army in May, 1778, and on Jan. 10, 1781, was commissioned captain of the 13th Company, 2nd Regiment, serving with distinction throughout the Revolutionary war. He married Prudence Baldwin, who died in March, 1828, aged ninety-two years, and he died July 11, 1818, aged eighty-three. They had four children: Esther, who was born in 1770, and died October 21, 1776; Daniel; Reuben; and James.

Daniel Chatfield, son of Lieut. Daniel, was a farmer and land owner of Waterbury, where his death occurred. He married Esther Lonsbury, who died May 6, 1848, at the age of seventy-six years. Their children were: David, father of Mrs. French; Leonard; Enos; Esther; Polly, wife of J. N. Morris; and Anna Maria, wife of Zenas Bronson.

David Chatfield, Mrs. French's father, was born Sept. 9, 1704, and was married, June 5, 1820, to Polly Hitchcock who was born June 17, 1705, a daughter of Caleb Hitchcock, of Southington. They had five children: Jane, born Aug. 22, 1822, married M. E. Judd; Polly Ann, born Sept. 5, 1824, became Mrs. French; Cyrus, born May 16, 1826, was married in April, 1848, to Philena Martin, of Prospect, Conn.; Fidelia, born Feb. 16, 1828; and Emaline, born March 3, 1833.

On the maternal side Mrs. French is descended from Matthias Hitchcock, who came from London, England, to Boston on the bark "Susan and Ellen," in the spring of 1635. His third son, John Hitchcock, was born in New Haven, where he grew to manhood, but later became one of the first settlers of Wallingford. He was quite an extensive land owner and farmer, and a prominent citizen of that town, where he died July 6, 1716. On Jan. 18, 1670, he married Abigail Merriman, who was born April 18, 1654, a daughter of Capt. Nathaniel Merriman, one of the first settlers of Wallingford. After his death, his second wife, Mary Hitchcock, married Samuel Clark. John Hitchcock had twelve children. The oldest, a daughter, born in New Haven, Oct. 1, 1671, died in infancy; Samuel, born in 1672, died young; Abigail, born April 10, 1674, married Jacob Johnson; Mary, born Dec. 10, 1676, married Benjamin Beach; Nathaniel, born April 10, 1679, married Sarah Jennings; Margery, born Sept. 6, 1681, married Joseph Munson; Elizabeth, born April 8, 1684, married Daniel Lines; John, born Oct. 18, 1685, married Marlow Munson; Matthias, born May 26, 1688, married Thankful Andrews; Hannah, born Jan. 9, 1690, married John Lines; Damaris, born July 11, 1693, married Sylvanus Clark; and Benjamin, born March 24, 1696, married Elizabeth Ives.

Capt. Benjamin Hitchcock, just mentioned, was born and reared in Wallingford, and from there removed to Cheshire, Conn., where he spent the remainder of his life, dying there Feb. 12, 1767. He owned land in that town and also in Southington, Hartford county. On Oct. 1, 1718, he married Elizabeth Ives, a daughter of Joseph and Esther Ives. She was born Sept. 6, 1700, and died Aug. 8, 1762. They had twelve children: Bela, born Oct. 27, 1719, married Sarah Atwater; Hannah, born Sept. 12, 1721, was married, May 26, 1740, to Elnathan Andrews; Benjamin, born Feb. 23, 1724, married Rhoda Cook; Elizabeth, born Feb. 23, 1726; Abigail, born May 10, 1728, was married, Dec. 9, 1747, to Daniel Bradley; Samuel, born April 1, 1730, is mentioned below; Nathaniel, born June 30, 1732, died March 12, 1734; Enos was born in 1734; Joseph, born July 12, 1737, died Nov. 1, 1760; Nathaniel, born in Sept., 1739, was married, May 4, 1763, to Lydia Dutton, and died May 30, 1770; David, born June 29, 1742, married Hannah Doolittle; and Damaris, born Sept. 3, 1745, died Nov. 25, 1756.

Samuel Hitchcock, son of Capt. Benjamin, was born in Cheshire, New Haven county, and became a resident of the town of Southington, where he owned and operated a farm. He died May 8, 1798, and his wife, Tamar, died Dec. 7, 1816, at the age of eighty years. They had five children: Samuel, born Feb. 27, 1757, married Mary Munson; Caleb, born May 17, 1760, married Ada Malory; Elizabeth, born Dec. 29, 1763, married Lewis Thorpe; Tamar, baptized in August, 1765, married Thomas Cowles; and Esther was married Nov. 11, 1798, to Barnabus Powers, and died Sept. 20, 1802.

Caleb Hitchcock, a son of Samuel, and the grandfather of Mrs. French, was born in Southington, and was a sea captain throughout life. He died March 17, 1826. On Dec. 28, 1784, he married Ada Malory, who died Aug. 22, 1808, and on April 10, 1809, he married Julia Thorpe, daughter of John Thorpe, of Southington. She died May 2, 1851. The following children were born to Caleb Hitchcock. (1) Harmon, born Oct. 15, 1785, was a sailor in the war of 1812, during which conflict he had an ear cut off and was sent as a captive to England. He died Sept. 24, 1817. (2) Solomon was born Nov. 24, 1786. (3) Ada, born May 6, 1788, was married, Nov. 7, 1811, to Benjamin Rich, and died Oct. 25, 1862. (4) Esther, born Sept. 4, 1789, married A. Rupert, and died May 21, 1860. (5) Phila, born April 17, 1791, was married, Aug. 22, 1815, to Sidney Brockett, of East Haven, and died Oct. 26, 1869. (6) Caleb, born Sept. 21, 1793, went to New Orleans as a soldier of the war of 1812, and is supposed to have died of yellow fever at that place. (7) Polly, born June 17, 1795, married David Chatfield, the father of Mrs. French. (8) Cyrus, born July 25, 1798, was married, Aug. 10, 1820, to Elizabeth Howe, and died March 4, 1826. (9) Huldah, born March 26, 1800, married Jesse Matthews, and died Feb. 2, 1875. (10) Leusania, born Feb. 19, 1802, married a Mr. Seeley. (11) Alvah, born Feb. 15, 1807, was married, March 30, 1828, to Emily Neal. (12) John, born Feb. 18, 1810, died Dec. 22, 1811. (13) Albert, born Sept. 24, 1812, completes the family.

JOHN R. TYLER, whose name is familiar to all who are acquainted with the region known as Stony Hill, at Indian Neck, where he has long been a fisherman, was born in Branford Oct. 27, 1835, and is a son of John and Eunice (Averill) Tyler. John Tyler, his paternal grandfather, was a Revolutionary soldier, and one of the participants in the "tea party" in Boston Harbor, which may be said to have ushered in the Revolution. Daniel Averill, the maternal grandfather of Mr. Tyler, was a sailor, and had his home in Branford. John Tyler was a joiner by trade, and lived and died in Branford. To him and his wife Eunice were born the following named children: Betsy, Mary, John R., Samuel and William A.

John R. Tyler passed his boyhood and youth in Branford, where he attended the public school, and at the age of seventeen years began life for himself, becoming a sailor, and following that vocation fifteen years. Leaving the ocean at the expiration of that time, he put in twelve years at the joiner's trade, and has since followed the calling of a fisherman.

Mr. Tyler has been twice married, the first time to Mary, daughter of Thomas C. Mather, a descendant of Cotton Mather. Elmer S. Tyler is the only living child of this marriage. The second wife of John R. Tyler was Emma, daughter of Capt. John and Desire F. (Thompson) Faren, of East Haven. There were three children born to this union: Leonard F., Eugene and Lillian M. Mr. Tyler in politics is a Republican. He and his family are members of the Congregational Church, and they are all highly respected members of the community. Our subject is regarded as one of the most upright and trustworthy citizens of the town.

MONSON. That branch of the family of this name at New Haven, several members of which are yet actively engaged in business, among them Capt. David C. and Charles Monson, sons of the late venerable William Monson, of Litchfield and Morris, Conn., and men of prominence in business circles and social life, is one of the oldest of Connecticut's families, its history reaching back to the Colonial period, covering a time of 260 or more years.

The late William Monson, of Litchfield and Morris, was descended in the seventh generation from Thomas Monson, who was first known in this country as a resident of Hartford, Conn., in 1637, performing military service in the Pequot war. Soon thereafter he became a resident of New Haven, where he continued to live until his death. His birth occurred about 1612, and his death in 1685. He was a carpenter by trade, was of the faith of the Congregational Church, and made a good citizen. His wife's Christian name was Joanna, and she died in 1678. From this Thomas Monson, the settler, the late William Monson's line of descent was through Samuel, Samuel (2), William, William (2) and William (3).

Samuel Monson, son of Thomas, the settler, was baptized in 1643, and in 1665 married Martha, a daughter of William and Alice (Pritchard)

Bradley. Mr. Monson was a tanner and also made shoes, and resided first in New Haven, then in Wallingford, and again New Haven. His death occurred in 1693.

Samuel Monson (2), son of Samuel, born in 1669, married first, in 1707, Martha, and second, in 1708, Mary, born in 1674, the widow of Caleb Merriman, and a daughter of Deacon Eliasaph Preston, and resided in Wallingford, where he had served as town clerk. His death occurred in 1741 and that of his widow in 1755.

William Monson, son of Samuel (2), was born in 1695, married Rebecca, daughter of Thomas Curtis, of Wallingford, and resided in that part of that town which is now Cheshire. His death occurred in 1733.

William Monson (2), son of William, was born in 1731. He married in 1753, Sarah, born in 1734, a daughter of Isaac Griggs, of Wallingford and resided in what was then the town of Waterbury, but later, Wolcott. Mrs. Monson died in 1806, and her husband in 1815.

William Monson (3), son of William (2) was born in 1769, and he married first, in 1790, Olive Dayton, and second, in 1835, Elizabeth Ford. He resided in Plymouth and Litchfield, Conn., and Meredith, N. Y.

William Monson (4), son of William (3), and the father of David C. and Charles Monson, of New Haven, was born Jan. 10, 1793, in the town of Plymouth, Conn., and became a carrier and tanner, by occupation, residing in Litchfield, in that part of the town which, in 1850, was set off as the town of Morris. His religious connections were with the Congregational Church, and his political affiliations with the Whig and later with the Republican party. Mr. Monson was twice married, first, Sept. 4, 1815, to Alice Emmons, who was born May 3, 1791, and died May 6, 1821. He married second March 19, 1822, Polly Benton, born in March, 1792, and died Sept. 30, 1875. Mr. Monson survived until Aug. 5, 1887, when in the ninety-sixth year of his age. His children were: William H., born Aug. 1, 1816, a tanner, settled at Cheraw, S. C., where his death occurred in 1887 (he served in the Confederate army as adjutant of the Home Guards); Julius, born in 1818, died in 1819; Charles B., born in 1821, died in 1825; Phebe A., born April 5, 1823, married May 8, 1845, Elias C. Woodruff, and resides in Westville, Conn.; Cornelia A., born March 22, 1825, married twice, and died in Hamden, in 1877; Elizabeth L., born Nov. 3, 1827, resided in Westville, and died, unmarried, at an advanced age, in 1895; David C., born Aug. 7, 1832; Charles, born Feb. 14, 1834, is a merchant of New Haven; and Homer G., born April 11, 1837, is an orange grower and investor, residing at Sanford, Florida.

Captain David C. Monson, son of the late William Monson, was born Aug. 7, 1832, in the town of Litchfield, Conn., where his school days and youth were passed. Learning the trade and business of tanner from his father, he followed that during his earlier life. On Aug. 4, 1862, during the progress of the Civil war, in response to the call of President Lincoln for 300,000 men, in July of that year, Mr. Monson enlisted, as a private, in Company C, 19th Conn. V. I., which later became Company C, 2d Conn. Heavy Artillery. The engagements in which this regiment participated were: Spottsylvania, Va., May 22 to 24, 1864; Talopotomy, Va., May 28, 1864; Cold Harbor, Va., June 1, 1864; Petersburg, Va., June 20 to 26, 1864; Winchester, Va., Sept. 19, 1864; Fisher's Hill, Va., Sept. 22, 1864; Cedar Creek, Va., Oct. 19, 1864; Hatcher's Run, Va., Feb. 6, 1865; Petersburg, Va., March 25 and April 2, 1865; and Little Sailor's Creek, Va., April 6, 1865. Captain Monson shared the fortunes of his regiment from start to finish, and returned to his home with an honorable war record, being promoted from sergeant on Dec. 26, 1864, to second lieutenant, and April 18, 1865, to first lieutenant of his company, and was mustered out with his regiment Aug. 18, 1865.

Captain Monson has resided in Litchfield, Morris, Wolcottville, now Torrington, and Westville, and for many years was foreman in the Diamond Match Co., of Westville. His political affiliations have been with the Republican party, in which he has been active and influential. Since a resident of Westville he has served as constable, fence viewer and registrar of the Thirteenth ward, and is an enterprising and public-spirited citizen and commands the respect of his fellow townsmen.

On April 27, 1856, Capt. Monson was married to Sarah A. Holcomb, of Torrington, Conn., born Nov. 2, 1837, and to this union have come children as follows: Alice Elizabeth, born March 13, 1859, in Morris, Conn., married Homer L. Cooper, formerly of Westville, now of New Haven, and they have had four children, Gertrude and Roland surviving; Mary Eliza, born Nov. 18, 1860, in Morris, Conn., is a resident of Westville; William Holcomb, who died in January, 1899, was born Dec. 10, 1862, in Torrington, Conn., married Oct. 23, 1889, Annie Wright Page, and had three children, Marjorie Fuller, Ruth and Mary; and Clifford Benton, born Nov. 13, 1875, in New Haven, died Feb. 6, 1892. Capt. and Mrs. Monson are members of the Congregational Church.

When the town of Morris was set off from Litchfield, Capt. Monson went to Hartford to represent his section of the town before the committee for this purpose. His fraternal connections are with the Masonic order, Olive Branch, No. 55, having entered in 1860, through Seneca Lodge, in Torrington; American Mechanics; and Admiral Foote Post, G. A. R., of which he is past commander. His connection with the Diamond Match Co. ended when it went into a trust, in 1895. In 1897 he was made postmaster of Westville, and when this office was consolidated with the New Haven office, he was made superintendent, and as such has since efficiently served the Government. His home on Central Avenue, Westville, Conn., was erected by himself, and there he is passing his declining years in peace and comfort, surrounded by many friends.

WILLIAM N. HOUGHTALING, builder of concrete walks and floors, Ansonia, is a native of New York State, born Jan. 22, 1838, at Sandlake, Rensselaer county.

Tunis Houghtaling, his great-grandfather, a farmer by occupation, was born in Holland, whence he came to this country, settling near Sandlake, N. Y., where he died at the age of eighty years, the father of ten children. His son Christopher Houghtaling, grandfather of William N., was born at Coeymans, N. Y., and passed his entire life on a farm there, dying when seventy-eight years old. He married Nancy Mixer, who died at the age of fifty-six, the mother of a large family.

William M. Houghtaling, the father of William N., was born at Sandlake in 1813, and received his education at the common schools. After following agricultural pursuits for some years at the place of his birth he removed to Canaan, N. Y., then, after a couple of years, making his home in West Stockbridge, Mass., later, for six years, in Lenox, Mass. Following this he resided in North Adams two years; Colerain ten years; Windsor, Vt., for a time; finally in Holyoke, Mass., where he died at the age of eighty-one years. He married Cynthia P. Gardner, of Stephentown, N. Y. (one of ten children born to her parents), and they had ten children, six of whom survive: William N., Martha, Christopher, Charles, George and David, all living in Holyoke except William N., in Ansonia, and Charles, in Seymour. The mother, born April 13, 1813, is yet living, at the patriarchal age of eighty-nine.

William N. Houghtaling, our subject, received a liberal education at the public schools, and remained under the parental roof until he was twenty-two years old, at which time he went to Goshen, Mass., thence to Colerain. From there he proceeded to Shelburne Falls, where he engaged as a mechanic, in 1866 removing to Seymour, Conn., being there employed as a bit and anger maker up to 1884, when he commenced the business of making concrete walks and floors. He remained in Seymour until November, 1891, in that year coming to Ansonia, where he has since remained, his house and office being at No. 33 Pleasant street. He is the only one in his special line in the city, and does a large amount of work, employing a considerable number of men. What he does is of the finest quality, and he has achieved an enviable reputation, not only as a thorough master of his business, but also as a citizen of the community, in which he is highly respected by all who know him. In politics he is independent.

In 1860 William N. Houghtaling married Miss Lucy L. Loomis, who was born Feb. 3, 1841, in Goshen, Mass., a daughter of Almon B. Loomis, a native of Becket, Mass., and a granddaughter of Calvin Loomis, who was born in Springfield, Mass., Dec. 13, 1779. Her great-grandfather, Jonathan Loomis, first saw the light in Feeding Hills, Mass., where he followed farming during his early life, then removed to Becket, Mass.; he died at the age of ninety years. He served in the war of the Revolution.

Calvin Loomis left Becket when a young man, and journeyed to what is now Painesville, Ohio, but which was then a part of the great unknown West. After seven years he returned to Becket, and on July 10, 1810, he married Anna Freeland, daughter of Joseph and Mollie (Mann) Freeland, of Blandford, Mass. She died Jan. 7, 1876, at the age of ninety-five, after sixty-six years of happy wedded life. Mr. Loomis survived until Dec. 14, 1878, when he passed away at the advanced age of ninety-nine years. He could well remember his great-grandmother, at the great age of 103 years, as she laid her hands in blessings on his head. Six children blessed the union of Calvin and Anna Loomis, of whom Almon B. was the third son, and was of the sixth generation in descent from Joseph Loomis, who came from Braintree, England, in 1638, and settled in Windsor, Conn., in 1639; he was born about 1590, and died in 1658.

Almon B. Loomis, father of Mrs. William Houghtaling, was born Dec. 11, 1816, and passed his early years in Becket, Mass., later removing to Washington, Mass., then living in Peru, Windsor and Savoy, Mass., each for a short time, and finally settling in Goshen, Mass.; he purchased the old homestead, conducting same, also quarrying the finest flagstone in Massachusetts, until retiring from active life; he has since made his home with our subject. He married Hester Willcutt, a daughter of Rev. William Willcutt, a minister of some renown, who was born in 1796, and died at the age of seventy-three years. Rev. William Willcutt was a son of Zebulon and Mercy (Litchfield) Willcutt, the former a soldier of the Revolution, who received a life pension; he died at the age of ninety-six years. Rev. William Willcutt's wife, Betsy (Daniels), was born in Plainfield, Mass., May 1, 1796, and died Nov. 3, 1875, aged seventy-nine years and six months. She was one of eight children, and had a family of eight children. Her mother died at the age of eighty-nine. Mrs. Houghtaling's parents reared a family of four children, two of whom are yet living, viz.: Mrs. Houghtaling and Mrs. Addison D. Blanchard, the latter residing in Goshen. The mother died Dec. 14, 1803, at the age of seventy-four years. Mr. Loomis is a Republican in politics, and a man of rare intelligence, now eighty-five years of age.

To Mr. and Mrs. Houghtaling have been born three children, a brief record of whom follows: (1) Lucy, born May 24, 1862, died at the age of two years. (2) Idella G., born Aug. 7, 1860, died April 27, 1899; she married Henry W. Phelps, a mason by trade, at present working for Mr. Houghtaling. (3) Lillian L., born Feb. 3, 1872, was educated in the Seymour schools, and later commenced the study of medicine, but on account of ill health had to abandon it. When the eldest daughter Lucy was born she had living four grandparents and five great-grandparents—a most unusual record.

In January, 1900, Mr. Houghtaling purchased land at No. 10 Arch street, West Ansonia. His daughter Lillian at once designed and drew plans for a fine residence, which was built accordingly, and in November the place was ready for occupancy, and is now the family home. The house is well elevated, large and well lighted, and is furnished with all modern improvements, including gas and electric lights.

CHARLES H. PULFORD, M. D., so widely and favorably known in the town of Seymour, is a man of sterling quality and broad, sound education, which he has manifested most liberally in his life and work. He was born in Stafford Springs, Conn., Dec. 18, 1859, and spent his early life under the guidance of his father, obtaining his primary education in the public schools of Connecticut. Later he took the Collegiate Institute Course at Hacketts-town, N. J., and then went to New York City to enter the college at the corner of 23d Street and Third Avenue, and in 1888 he was graduated from the Hahnemann Medical College of Chicago. He practiced with his father until the latter's death, after which he continued in general practice by himself, continuing to occupy the same office. Dr. Pulford is the oldest practitioner in the town, and has a large clientele both in this and surrounding towns.

A glance into the ancestral life and history of our subject may here be of interest. His grandfather, William C. Pulford, was born in Leeds, England, and there he spent his life. He married a Miss Bannister, who was also of English birth and lived to the age of sixty years. Six children were born to them; one resides in Delaware, Ohio; one in Bradford, England; Elizabeth and Charlotte, both married, reside in Worcester, Mass., and two are deceased.

Frederick W. Pulford, the father of our subject, and the oldest son of William C., was also born in Leeds, England, where he lived until twelve years of age, when he sailed for this country, taking up his abode in Ohio. His early education was that afforded by the public schools. He was engaged in the woolen business until 1865, in which year he began the study of medicine. He commenced practicing in Royalston, Mass., continuing there until 1876, when he removed to Seymour, where he resided until his demise in June, 1893, at the age of sixty-six years. He was the oldest practitioner in the town and had a larger practice than any other physician there. In politics he was a Republican.

Fraternally he was a member of Morning Star Lodge, F. & A. M., of Seymour, and professionally, belonged to the State Medical Society. He married Sarah A., daughter of Chester Leonard, a lumber dealer of Dunkirk, who lost his life on Lake Erie. Two daughters and seven sons were born to them of whom the following are now living: (1) Rufus A., superintendent of a department of the Scoville Mfg. Co., resides in Waterbury; (2) Charles H. is our subject; (3) William E. resides in Prospect, Conn.; (4) Arabella E. married Andrew J. Miles, of the firm of Baldwin & Miles, meat dealers. Dr. and Mrs. Frederick W. Pulford were both members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. They possessed considerable musical talent and ability, and were active in all local musical entertainments. In addition to his vocal accomplishments Dr. Pulford was a violinist and cornetist and played in a band and orchestra at one time. Mrs. Pulford died in 1892, aged sixty-three years.

Born and reared in an environment of culture and refinement, the early inclinations of Dr. Charles H. Pulford received that recognition and training which developed the ability displayed in his daily life. He has lived very largely among the people, and is deservedly popular. As a vocalist he is active in all musical entertainments, and he also plays the piano. His religious views are liberal. In his fraternal relations, he is identified with Morning Star Lodge, No. 47, F. & A. M., of which he is the musical director; and he also belongs to Evening Star Lodge, R. A. M. Professionally, he is a member of the State Medical Society. In politics he is a Republican. His office and residence is at No. 26 Maple Street.

JUDGE ALEXANDER DANA McLEAN is a worthy and notable descendant of the McLean family of Wallingford, one of the most respectable and noted names in New England history.

Dr. Neil McLean, the first of the family in America, was born in the Island of Coll, in Scotland, about 1702, and, according to tradition, came to this country in 1736, with the celebrated Dr. Morrison, with whom he was associated in several difficult cases. On Jan. 5, 1737, he settled in Hartford, Conn., where he was highly esteemed as a successful physician and as a man of much intelligence and of high character. He had a beautiful country seat at Bloomfield, Conn., which was approached through an avenue of white pine trees, but these trees were cut down soon after his death because "they shaded the soil." Dr. McLean died in Hartford, Jan. 15, 1784, while on a visit to his friend, Dr. Nichols. He had been twice married. His first wife, whom he wedded in Hartford, was Mrs. Hannah (Stillman) Cadwell, daughter of Geo. Stillman, who came from London, England, about 1680, and married Rebecca, daughter of Lieut. Philip Smith, and granddaughter of Nathaniel Foote, of Wethersfield, Conn. Mrs. McLean was the great aunt of General Warren and James Otis, of Revolutionary fame. She died April 22, 1755, at the age of fifty-two years. In 1757 Dr. McLean married Mrs. Knowles, who died in 1766. By his first marriage Dr. McLean became the father of the following children: Allen, baptized Oct. 2, 1737, died Sept. 19, 1741; Lachlan, born Nov. 4, 1739, married Sarah Humphrey, and lived in White-stone, N. Y., until his death Sept. 19, 1813; Allen (2), born Dec. 13, 1741, graduated at Yale College in 1762, became a physician, and died in March, 1829 (he married Mary Sloan, of New Haven); John, baptized Jan. 29, 1744, is mentioned below; Neil, born Feb. 9, 1746, died in August, 1793; and Catherine, baptized Sept. 23, 1748.

John McLean, fourth in the family of Dr. McLean, became a farmer in Windsor, Conn., where he spent his life, dying Sept. 2, 1822. Sarah Goodwin, his wife, was a daughter of Daniel Goodwin, of one of the best-known families of Hartford, and died May 5, 1817, at the age of seventy years. She was a woman of good character, kind heart and ardent piety. To John McLean and his wife Sarah were born the following children: (1) Dolly Goodwin, born May 18, 1771, married William Williston, of Suffield, and died May 1, 1861. (2) John, born in 1776, was a sailor, and died in 1805. (3) James, born May 6, 1779, was a sea captain, and was one of the impressed seamen that caused the war with England in 1812, and spent seventeen years on board a British man of war; he died Jan. 2, 1865, at Sailors Snug Harbor, Staten Island. (4) Harry is mentioned farther on. (5) Sally, born in 1784, married Edward Vining, of Simsbury, and died in 1815. (6) Betsy, born Aug. 9, 1787, died Nov. 15, 1810.

Harry McLean, the father of Judge McLean, was born in Windsor, which is now the town of Bloomfield, April 30, 1782, and died in 1844, and his remains were buried in the old Bloomfield cemetery. He was a farmer by occupation, and was one of the best known men of Bloomfield. A staunch Democrat, he worked hard for the party, and was a man of influence in political matters, and served as selectman many years. He attended the Episcopal Church, and was a good Christian man and upright citizen. On Dec. 22, 1807, Mr. McLean married Miss Susanna Gillette, a daughter of Jonathan Gillette, of Windsor. This union was blessed with eight children: (1) Betsy, born April 25, 1810, married Eliezur Latimer, and removed to Ohio, where she died Oct. 15, 1886. (2) Polly, born April 30, 1812, died May 10, 1817. (3) Henry, born April 17, 1814, died May 25, 1815. (4) Henry (2), born May 26, 1816, married Jan. 9, 1846, Abigail Allyn, and died Oct. 26, 1863. (5) John, born April 25, 1818, married Elizabeth Allyn in 1842, and died Feb. 16, 1897. (6) Daniel Goodwin, born Sept. 3, 1820, married Maria Dana, of Wilkesbarre, Penn., and removed to Enterprise, Fla., where he died March 30, 1895. (7) Susanna married Watson Dewey, of Granby, and died in 1854. (8) Alexander Dana, born May 24, 1829.

Alexander Dana McLean was still young when he lost his father. He had his education at the public schools, the Connecticut Institute at Suffield, and at a private school in Bloomfield. Growing up on the farm, he took up the study of surveying and civil engineering, and engaged in the practice of that calling in his native town, and was also a carpenter. He remained in the town of Bloomfield until 1860, when he went to Edgerton, Wis., and engaged in tobacco culture and general farming for nine years. He took up the study and practice of law, becoming quite successful, and was judge of the city court of Edgerton four terms, and justice of the peace, filling other offices as well. In 1878 he removed to Chester, Virginia, where he carried on extensive building operations, the Presbyterian church of that place being one of his principal constructions. He was one of the organizers of this church, and became an elder. After spending four years in that country he returned to Wallingford, Conn., settling at North Farms, and engaging in tobacco and general farming for six years; and while he has been in the tobacco business for twenty-five years, he never uses the article in any form. In 1887 he removed to Wallingford, where he settled in the city, and followed his profession as surveyor, for four years being surveyor for the borough of Wallingford. For a number of years his wife was engaged in the florist business, and this business has grown so much that it now takes the most of Mr. McLean's time as well. He is a man well-known and highly respected. He was elected Borough Judge of Wallingford in 1895, and has served two years, filling the position with dignity and honor. The Judge is a life-long Democrat, and has held many positions of trust. In 1863 he was elected to the State Legislature from Wallingford, and served on the committee on civil engineering. He was selectman, tax collector and assessor. All his life he has been known as a thoroughly honorable and upright man, of the most unswerving integrity, and wherever he has lived has had a host of friends. He is a prominent and active member of the Wallingford Agricultural Society, and is deeply interested in everything that touches the local welfare. He belongs to the Congregational Church, and is a devoted worker in the Sunday School, having been a superintendent of different Sunday-schools for ten years.

Judge McLean has been twice married. On March 30, 1851, Ellen A. Dana, daughter of Francis Dana, and a sister of the wife of Daniel Goodwin McLean, became his wife; she died in July, 1863, leaving two children: (1) Harry Francis, who married Nancy Stewart, and settled in Michigan City, Ind., where he is a railroad engineer. (2) Nellie Edith, who married Pitman Angel, of Manchester, Va. Judge McLean, for his second wife, married Mrs. Mary J. Churchill. She was born in Wethersfield, and is the mother of one child, Charles Levi, who is in the express business between Wallingford and Meriden; he married Emma Tooth, and has two children, Harry E. and Russell J. Mrs. Mary J. McLean was the widow of Levi Churchill, and a daughter of Elisha Blinn, of Wethersfield.

CALVIN MINER LEETE, late of the town of Guilford, was one of the best known and most highly respected citizens of New Haven county, and his industry, thrift and intelligent application to agricultural pursuits won him a marked degree of success in that vocation.

Mr. Leete was born Oct. 18, 1816, on the old Leete homestead in the town of Guilford, the youngest son of Miner and Lucinda (Norton) Leete, and received his education at the common schools of the neighborhood. He worked on his father's farm up to the age of nineteen years, at which time, impaired health demanding a change of residence, he removed to Meriden and made his home there for several years. Returning to Guilford greatly improved in health, he began his life vocation on Leete's Island, and there engaged in agricultural pursuits until his retirement from active life. Mr. Leete died Feb. 17, 1899. His estimable virtues made him one of the foremost citizens of the community, and his many sterling qualities won for him the high regard and respect of all. Though averse to holding office he was elected a representative of Guilford in the State Legislature in 1850, again in 1862, and, for a third time, in 1878. He also served the town in various other capacities, and was always deeply interested in the local welfare and progress. Early in life he espoused the cause of abolition, and he cast his presidential vote for Birney and Hale. He voted for Van Buren in the Free-Soil movement, and after the formation of the Republican party supported its principles and candidates. In 1849 Mr. Leete became a member of the Congregational Church in Meriden, from which he transferred his membership to the Third Church at Guilford, of which, for a long time, he was a leading member and for many years a deacon.

Deacon Leete married, Feb. 7, 1866, Lucy M., daughter of Morris A. and Clarinda (Graves) Leete. Of this union there is one son, CALVIN MORRIS LEETE, born Jan. 11, 1867, and now living at the ancestral home.

(III) Pelatiah Leete (1681-1768), the great-great-grandfather of Deacon Calvin M. Leete, was the great-great-great-grandfather of his wife, Lucy M. She is of the eighth generation from William Leete, the founder of the family in Connecticut. From Pelatiah (III) the line of descent to Mrs. Leete is as follows:

(IV) Pelatiah Leete, born March 7, 1713, married, March 26, 1740, Lydia Crittenden, who was born in Guilford March 14, 1719, daughter of Deacon Samuel and Mindwell (Meigs) Crittenden.

Calvin H. Loring

She died Aug. 13, 1772, and he survived until May 28, 1783. He was a deacon of the Fourth Congregational Church. The children of Pelatiah and Lydia Leete were: Pelatiah, born March 4, 1741, died April 20, 1741; Pelatiah, sketch of whom follows; Lydia and Noah (twins) were born Oct. 24, 1749 (Lydia married John Leete); Eber, born March 25, 1752, died Oct. 22, 1769; Simeon, born April 14, 1753, married Zerviah Norton; Amos, born April 25, 1758, married Hannah Ward; Nathan, born in 1762, died Nov. 1, 1769.

(V) Pelatiah Leete, son of Deacon Pelatiah, was born Aug. 22, 1744. He married, June 17, 1766, Bethiah Norton, daughter of Thomas and Bethiah Norton, of Guilford. She died June 30, 1793, aged fifty-six years. For his second wife Pelatiah Leete married, Nov. 10, 1794, Mary Frisbie, of North Branford, who died Jan. 14, 1852. He died March 2, 1806, at Leete's Island. His children were: Joel, sketch of whom follows; Noah, born Feb. 22, 1770, married Hulda Ward; Pelatiah, born July 3, 1773, married Betsy Rany; Mary, born Feb. 15, 1798, married Jude Ludington.

(VI) Joel Leete, born April 15, 1768, married, May 27, 1790, Molly Crittenden, who was born Aug. 25, 1765, daughter of Noah and Naomi (Atwell) Crittenden. They lived at Leete's Island, where he died Jan. 28, 1842, his wife surviving to Nov. 24, 1843. Their four children were: Alvan, born Aug. 24, 1791, married Rebecca Butler; Polly Maria, born March 7, 1794, died Jan. 3, 1795; Morris Atwell, sketch of whom follows; Frederick William, born July 6, 1803, married Sarah Jane Fowler.

(VII) Morris Atwell Leete, son of Joel, was born at Leete's Island Nov. 10, 1795. He married, Oct. 25, 1820, Clarinda Graves, who was born Aug. 27, 1795, daughter of Milton and Lucy (Buel) Graves. They had children as follows: Joel Morris, born Dec. 25, 1821, died Oct. 7, 1858; George Augustus, born May 4, 1824, died Nov. 27, 1825; Lucy Maria, born June 2, 1827, became the wife of Calvin M. Leete, our subject; George Cornelius, born Sept. 17, 1820, married Harriet Stebbins; Henry Walter, born Nov. 9, 1832, died Feb. 26, 1853; Harvey Ward, born Nov. 9, 1832, married Miss Christiana Faulkner; Joseph Alvan, born Aug. 19, 1836, married Orphana Hill.

JOHN W. OSBORNE (deceased) was for many years prominently identified with the industrial and business interests of Derby and Ansonia, New Haven county, and was one of the most highly esteemed citizens of his community. He was a native of New Haven, and a son of Stephen Osborne, who was engaged in business in that city for some years.

Our subject, who was one of a large family of children, came to Derby with his parents during childhood, and was there reared and educated. When a young man in 1842, he formed a copartnership with his brother-in-law, George W. Cheese-man, and embarked in general merchandising, which business they carried on until 1858, when they turned their attention to the manufacture of hoop-skirts. The following year they moved their plant to Ansonia and were engaged in business there for many years, meeting with marked success in their undertakings and becoming quite well-to-do.

In 1864 Mr. Osborne married Mrs. Eliza Hill Baker, of Redding, Conn. Our subject died March 6, 1895, at the age of eighty-four years. Politically he was a Republican, and he gave his support to every enterprise which he believed would prove of public benefit, or would advance the moral or material welfare of his town and county. He was one of the founders of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Derby, and took a very active and prominent part in all church work, contributing liberally to its support. He commanded the respect and confidence of all with whom he came in contact, either in business or in social life, and in his death the community lost one of its best citizens.

DEACON SAMUEL WILLIAM DUDLEY, late of North Guilford, was a lineal descendant of (III) Capt. William Dudley (born Oct. 18, 1684, died Feb. 28, 1761), youngest son of (II) Joseph, who was the second son of (I) William, one of the original settlers of Guilford, as set forth in the Dudley genealogy.

(III) Capt. William Dudley was a prominent man in North Guilford in his day. Early records show that in 1725 he was a justice of the peace, captain of militia, and a deacon in the church in that place. The latter office he held until his death, in 1761. He married Ruth Strong, daughter of Thomas Strong, of Lyme. She died Sept. 18, 1743, and he married (second) Rebecca Fisk, of New Milford, daughter of Joseph Elliott. His children, all by the first wife, were: (1) Submit, born Oct. 1, 1713, died April 16, 1733. (2) William, born Dec. 28, 1715, died Oct. 23, 1717. (3) William (2) was born Dec. 28, 1717. (4) Asabel, born June 17, 1719, died in 1809; he removed to Middletown; he married Jan. 25, 1742, Betsey Hatch. (5) Lucy, born March 29, 1721, married Michael Baldwin, son of Timothy Baldwin. (6) Lois, born Feb. 14, 1723, died Oct. 7, 1743. (7) Medad, born Feb. 23, 1726, is mentioned below. (8) Jared, born Nov. 17, 1727, died June 14, 1811; he married Dec. 25, 1754, Mary Chittenden, daughter of Daniel C. (9) Sarah, born July 14, 1730, died Oct. 7, 1743. (10) Mabel (twin of Sarah) married April 30, 1754, Ebenezer Russell. (11) Ruth, born June 9, 1733, died June 20, 1745.

(IV) Medad Dudley (son of (III) Capt. William), born Feb. 23, 1726, died Feb. 10, 1804. On June 10, 1756, he married Mary Fowler, daughter of Daniel Fowler. She died July 14, 1810, aged eighty-one. They had nine children: (1) Ambrose, sketch of whom follows. (2) Lucy, born Jan. 18, 1759, died Dec. 23, 1834; she married

March 3, 1790, Oliver Fowler, son of Ebenezer and Desire (Bristol) Fowler. (3) William, born Feb. 19, 1761, lived at Litchfield, Conn.; he married May 18, 1785, Abigail Baldwin. (4) Rebecca, born Dec. 8, 1762, died Feb. 10, 1846, unmarried. (5) Medad, born Dec. 16, 1764, died Jan. 13, 1854; in 1797 he married Phebe Conklin, of East Hampton, L. I. (6) Charles, born Dec. 6, 1766, lived at Litchfield; he married Ruth Hart and (second) Rhoda Baldwin. (7) Submit, born Nov. 26, 1768, married Jan. 2, 1797, Jonathan Bishop. (8) Paul, born Oct. 19, 1771, died Oct. 10, 1847; he married Anne Moulthrop, of East Haven, Conn. (9) Molly, born Feb. 20, 1774, died Aug. 11, 1810, unmarried.

(V) Ambrose Dudley, the eldest son of (IV) Medad and Mary (Fowler) Dudley, was born April 1, 1757, was a farmer of North Guilford, and died Jan. 10, 1826. He married April 29, 1783, Elizabeth Russell, born Nov. 23, 1758, died July 15, 1834, daughter of Samuel Russell. Ambrose Dudley served in the Revolutionary war, being in 1776 a private in Capt. Hand's Company, Col. Talcott's Regiment. He had three children: (1) Russell, born Jan. 19, 1784, died at sea Dec. 1, 1806, unmarried. (2) Abigail, born Oct. 21, 1788, died Nov. 19, 1872; on Oct. 27, 1816, she married Daniel Fowler; and she subsequently married (second) Benjamin Rossiter. (3) Samuel William, sketch of whom follows.

(VI) Deacon Samuel William Dudley, son of (V) Ambrose and Elizabeth (Russell) Dudley, of North Guilford, was born July 16, 1800, and died Dec. 11, 1881. He was a farmer, and lived all his days on the homestead. He was a prominent and influential member of the Congregational Church of North Guilford, which he served in various capacities. He was chosen a deacon in the same in May, 1856, and held that office until his death, or over twenty-five years. He was a justice of the peace as early as 1832; a representative to the General Assembly in 1844, 1853, 1857, 1863 and 1865; and state senator in 1869. Physically, he was a man of large proportions and commanding personal appearance. His manner was courteous and cordial, his integrity unswerving. A faithful friend and a wise counselor, he was universally respected and loved. He received a liberal education at the district schools, also North Guilford Academy, and for several years taught school in the town of Guilford. He was a large land owner in both North Guilford and North Branford, and in addition to general farming, stock raising, etc., he shipped away considerable quantities of timber.

On Jan. 2, 1833, Deacon Samuel W. Dudley married Lucy Ann Chittenden, daughter of David and Lucy (Fowler) Chittenden, and they had six children: (1) Charles Samuel, born May 24, 1831, is an insurance agent at New Haven, Conn. He married, in 1871, Mary Austin, of Westville, Conn., a teacher. He was a soldier in the Civil war, serving as a private in the 14th Conn. V. I. (2) Henry Chittenden, born May 9, 1836, died while in the army, Jan. 17, 1863; he was sergeant in the 14th Regiment, Conn. V. I.; he married Oct. 16, 1861, Anna E. Parmelee, daughter of Deacon Eli Parmelee, of Guilford. She subsequently married (second) Lieut. Edward Griswold. (3) Elizabeth Russell, born June 25, 1838, married Jan. 3, 1876, Deacon John W. Norton, of Guilford. (4) James Ambrose, born Aug. 21, 1840, married Oct. 13, 1870, Emelyn M. Griswold, of Guilford. He is deceased. (5) George Chittenden, a sketch of whom follows. (6) William Russell, born March 1, 1849, was a professor at Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y., afterwards professor at Leland Stanford University, San Francisco, California.

(VII) GEORGE CHITTENDEN DUDLEY, son of (VI) Deacon Samuel W., was born Sept. 1, 1842, on the homestead, and has always lived there, having operated same since the death of his father. His education he obtained in part at the district schools of the neighborhood of his home, in part at North Guilford Academy, and he is otherwise a well-read and well-informed man. In politics he is a Republican, but has never aspired to political preferment, though he has served as tax collector and in some minor town offices. In religious faith he is a member of and deacon in the Congregational Church, and is a member of the choir. Socially he is affiliated with the Good Templars and with the Grange. Mr. Dudley's industry, integrity and sound common sense have secured for him, in an unusual degree, the uniform respect of the community in which he lives.

JAMES H. BARTLETT, a well-known and highly-esteemed citizen of Oxford, New Haven county, who is now successfully engaged in general farming and tobacco growing, was born on a farm near Millbrook, Dutchess county, N. Y., Oct. 7, 1829, son of Joseph and Elizabeth (Swift) Bartlett, and grandson of Littlefield Bartlett, all natives of Dutchess county. Our subject is the eldest in a family of nine children, the others being as follows: Deborah, wife of Lucius Osbourne, a farmer of Dutchess county; Susan, wife of Dewitt Benson, of Clinton, Iowa; Sarah E., wife of Edwin Chapin, of Minneapolis, Minn.; Phebe J., wife of Davis White, of Dutchess county, N. Y.; George L., a carpenter of Ansonia, Conn.; Maria J., wife of Clarence Vail, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; Charles T., a farmer of Jackson county, Iowa; and Annie, wife of Edwin Dunham, of Minneapolis, Minnesota.

In the county of his nativity James H. Bartlett grew to manhood, and in its public schools he acquired his literary education. On leaving the parental roof, at the age of twenty years, he went to New York City, where he clerked in the wholesale grocery house of Meads & Co. for a year and a half, and was then with Skeel, Van Valkenberg & Co., as receiving and delivering clerk, for eight years. At the end of that period, in company with Truman E. Herd, of Southbury, Conn., he went to Freeport, Ill., where he was engaged in general merchandising from 1855 to 1863. During the latter year he secured a position as clerk in the quartermaster's department at Corinth, Miss., and held same for a little over a year, at the end of which time he returned to Freeport, Ill. He soon afterward purchased a farm in Adams county, that state, and operated the same for one year, during which time his wife died. With his three little children he then returned to New York, taking them to their maternal grandmother, in Chester, Orange Co., N. Y. He next went to the oil regions of Pennsylvania, and in Pit Hole City he purchased an interest in what was known as the Ball farm, and also served as superintendent of the Fisher oil wells for six months. Subsequently he engaged in the manufacture of paper at Southford, Conn., until 1867, when he purchased the place in Oxford, New Haven Co., Conn., where he now resides. It is one of the finest farms of its size in the Quaker Valley, and in its cultivation he has met with well-deserved success.

Mr. Bartlett has been three times married, his first wife being Phoebe Beach, of Orange county, N. Y., by whom he had three children: Ella E., who was for many years a teacher in the schools of Oxford and Seymour, Conn., and for the last four years in the Emma Willard Seminary, at Troy, N. Y., but is at present traveling in Europe; Eva J., wife of Horace H. Oatman, of New Haven, Conn.; and Joseph L., who died in infancy. The mother of these children died in 1865, and in 1866 he married her sister, Kate C. Beach, by whom he had two children, twins: Kate, wife of Arthur J. Benson, of Dover Plains, N. Y.; and Joseph, a machinist of Clinton, Iowa. Our subject's present wife was in her maidenhood Miss Josephine Flagg. There is one child by this union, Annie, who is at home.

Socially Mr. Bartlett is a member of King Solomon Lodge, No. 7, F. & A. M., of Woodbury, while politically he is not identified with any particular party, but votes independent of party lines. He was a member of the State Legislature in 1879 and again in 1882, and served as selectman for fifteen consecutive years, with credit to himself and to the entire satisfaction of all concerned.

EDWARD GRISWOLD has in the thirty-five years of his mercantile career in Guilford become one of the best-known figures in the commercial and public life of that town and vicinity, where he is widely and favorably known in many connections.

Mr. Griswold was born June 30, 1839, in Guilford, son of Joel and Polly Griswold, and received his early education in the district schools in the neighborhood of his home, later attending the Guilford Institute. From early boyhood he was trained to farm work, assisting his father on the home place, where he remained until the breaking out of the Civil war. On Oct. 26, 1861, he enlisted in the Union service, becoming a member of the 1st Light Battery, C. V., which formed a part of the 10th Army Corps, and serving a full three years, being mustered out Oct. 26, 1864. He took an active part in all the battles, etc., in which his command was engaged. After his return from the army Mr. Griswold rented the homestead, and also embarked in merchandising in partnership with his brother Charles, as general merchants and produce dealers, our subject taking charge of the produce business and his brother of the other branch. They continued thus three years, when our subject bought his brother's interest, and he has since engaged in general merchandising on his own account. Though he has always commanded a wide patronage Mr. Griswold has met with reverses, and at one time lost his all, but he has continued in the face of discouragements, and does a thriving business at present. His store, however, has not occupied all his time and attention. For a few years he was interested in the canning business, being one of the first in that line in Guilford. In the organization of the Savings Bank he was prominent as one of the prime movers and promoters, and he served several years as trustee, being one of the first to hold that office. He was the organizer of the Guilford Light Battery, in whose welfare he has always taken the deepest interest, and served as commander of same for six years. It was through his efforts that this battery was accepted as the battery called for from Connecticut by the United States Government in the Spanish-American war, in 1898.

Mr. Griswold is a lifelong Republican and an ardent supporter of the principles of that party, though he is independent in giving his support to candidates, especially in local affairs. He is a loyal friend of Gen. Hawley, the Connecticut senator, and was a staunch McKinley man. Though not an office-seeker he has never shirked public service, and his ability and trustworthiness have been recognized by his fellow townsmen, whom he has not disappointed in his discharge of the duties of the various offices to which he has been chosen. In 1882 he was elected to the State Legislature, on his own party ticket, and was re-elected to that incumbency the following year as the candidate of both Republican and Democratic parties. During his first term he served on the committee on Fishery, the second term as chairman of committee on Military Affairs, and he proved his efficiency in many ways gratifying to his constituents. However, no more flattering approval of his services could be desired than his return to the House as noted. On Nov. 5, 1901, Mr. Griswold was elected by the citizens of his town as delegate to the Constitutional Convention, held Jan. 1, 1902, at Hartford, for the purpose of revising the State Constitution. He is the recognized leader of the country contingent, and it is claimed by his fellow townsmen that he is more widely and favorably known throughout the state than any other citizen of Guilford.

Mr. Griswold has ever been active in the G. A. R., and has served as delegate to the National Encampment. He was a charter member of Parmelee Post, of Guilford, in which he filled many offices, and now belongs to Foote Post, No. 17, New Haven. At present he is serving on the staff of the Department Commander of Connecticut as chief mustering officer, and in his visits to the different posts is heartily welcomed by the comrades. Being an interesting and ready speaker, he seldom escapes being called upon for remarks or addresses.

On May 12, 1868, Mr. Griswold was married, in Guilford, to Mrs. Anne E. (Parmelee) Dudley, who was born March 22, 1834, daughter of Eli Parmelee, and first married Henry D. Dudley; he was killed while serving in the Civil war. Three children blessed this union, born as follows: Elizabeth Hart, July 23, 1869; Edward Parmelee, July 6, 1870; and Nelson Hotchkiss, Jan. 12, 1872. The mother passed away Nov. 1, 1899, and was laid to rest in the cemetery at Guilford. She was a devout Christian, a woman of charitable impulses and kindly deeds, and was sincerely mourned by her many friends in the town. Mr. Griswold holds membership with the Congregational Church, of which his wife was also a member. Though always an active man, his tastes are domestic, and he takes his greatest pleasure in his home and family. In his long and honorable life he has gained many warm friends, and though his independence of spirit and action have sometimes roused aggression it has always been in the support of what he believed to be right, and he is universally respected for his sincerity and integrity.

CLARK W. STOWE, one of the venerable residents of the town of Milford, senior member of the firm of C. W. Stowe & Son, well-known seed growers and farmers, was born in that town March 17, 1838, son of William and Elizabeth (Baldwin) Stowe. Our subject bears an honored name, the Stowe family having been prominently identified with the town from an early day, and Jedediah Stowe, his grandfather, was probably born there. This worthy citizen was a farmer by occupation, and for some time he also conducted a store in Milford. He and his wife had the following children: Isaac, a seafaring man, who died in Milford; David, a shoemaker and farmer; Jeremiah, a farmer; William, our subject's father; Sally, who married Elnathan Baldwin, a farmer; Sybil, who married Clark Platt, a farmer; and Nancy, who married William Platt, a farmer.

William Stowe, who was also a farmer, was born in Milford in 1794, and died in 1844. His wife, Elizabeth (Baldwin), was a daughter of Ezekiah Baldwin, a prominent farmer of Milford. She was born Aug. 16, 1809, and died Dec. 30, 1885.

They had two children: Clark W., our subject; and Mary Elizabeth, who was born in 1842, and died at the age of three years.

Clark W. Stowe was reared upon the old homestead in Milford, and obtained a common-school education in his district. When a young man he commenced in farming, and at present he has the able assistance of his son, the farm of 100 acres affording scope for various branches of their work. Mr. Stowe lived on the old homestead until 1865, when he moved to what is now known as Walnut Beach, he being one of the first to settle there. Politically he and his son are Republicans, and the family is active in religious and philanthropic work. Mr. Stowe having given the lot for the chapel at Walnut Beach.

Mr. Stowe married Miss Mary Catherine Hand, who was born Jan. 22, 1841, in Litchfield county, Conn., daughter of Guy S. Hand, a farmer of that section. She died Nov. 3, 1898, leaving two children: (1) Miles W., born July 12, 1857, married Miss Mercy Blakeman, born in 1862, in Fairfield county, Conn., daughter of Ezra and Urania (Hubbell) Blakeman. They have had two sons—Clark W., born Nov. 25, 1895, and Cornelius Ard, born Jan. 15, 1897. (2) Edith E., born Feb. 24, 1865, married Edward W. Beers, of Stratford.

Our subject has won success far beyond the ordinary, by methods that have retained for him the profound respect of all. He is a plain going man, and has so lived as to leave to his posterity a name that may be referred to with pride.

JOHN GILBERT CUTLER, who has been in the harnessmaking business in Waterbury for the long period of thirty-seven years, is a native of Bennington, Vt., and of English extraction.

David Cutler, grandfather of our subject, was born in Killingly, Windham Co., Conn., married there, and followed farming. He and his wife both died in Killingly, the latter at the age of about one hundred and six years. They were the parents of two children: David H. and Asa S.; the latter was a farmer in Killingly, and died in Putnam, Connecticut.

David H. Cutler, father of our subject, was born in Killingly, was educated there, and in early manhood went to Bennington, where he followed the trade of shoemaker. He married Harriet A. Gilbert, who was born in Mansfield, Conn., a daughter of John Gilbert, a farmer and country merchant. Two children were born to David H. Cutler and his wife: Harriet A. and John Gilbert. The father died in 1879, in the Shaker settlement, Mass. He was a lifelong Whig in politics. The mother passed away March 4, 1882, in Waterbury.

John G. Cutler, whose name introduces these lines, at the age of six years was taken from his native place, Bennington, Vt., to Tolland county, Conn., and there remained on a farm for some time, receiving his education in the district schools.

Clark W. Howe

At the time of the breaking out of the Civil war he was learning the harnessmaker's trade, and after coming to Waterbury, in 1862, he followed same as a journeyman until March 22, 1865, at which time he commenced in that business in Exchange place, Waterbury, on his own account, and has continued it ever since. He is now located in Platt's block, at No. 39 East Main street. There is only one man in business now in the city who was in business at the time our subject commenced. Mr. Cutler deals in harness, leather, saddlery hardware, horse clothing, trunks, and everything to be found in a shop of that nature.

In 1863 our subject was married in Waterbury to Mary Karmann, who was born in Middletown, Conn., Nov. 10, 1843, a daughter of Sebastian Karmann, a German by birth. They have no children. Mr. and Mrs. Cutler attend the services of the M. E. Church; in politics he is a Republican; socially he is a Knight Templar Mason and a member of the Royal Arcanum.

MRS. ESTELLA J. (HARTLEY) MILLS. The Mills and Hartley families are well known in this section, the former having been identified with Ansonia, and the latter with New Haven, since their first settlement, and the names of both are associated with a high order of citizenship.

The late Thomas Mills, who was for many years a leading resident of Ansonia, was born at Huddersfield, England, Aug. 24, 1801, a son of James Mills, and came to this country about 1828, locating at Little Falls, N. J. From there he removed to Newark, N. J., where he followed the blacksmith's trade for several years, and in 1843 he removed to Derby, Conn., being there employed at his trade, by Phelps, Dodge & Co., in their new plant. In their employ he remained forty-five years, removing with them to Birmingham, Conn., afterward to Ansonia, and he was regarded as an excellent workman in his line. On going to Birmingham he moved into the second house built there, and in Ansonia he was also one of the first settlers. During his residence there he witnessed the development of Derby, Shelton and Ansonia, the location having been metamorphosed from a farming community to a thriving business and manufacturing center, with a population of more than 20,000 people. He took an active part in town affairs, being an ardent Republican in politics, and he was prominent in fraternal society work as a member of the I. O. O. F. He united with the Order before coming to this country, and continued active in its work throughout his life, holding every office in the local branch. In religious faith he was a Methodist, and he served on the committee for locating and building the new church at Ansonia. His death occurred in Ansonia Feb. 3, 1883. Mr. Mills was first married, in England, Dec. 4, 1825, to Miss Grace Eastwood, who was born April 2, 1805, and who died at Ansonia in 1857. By this marriage he had ten children, two of whom are still living: Mary J., who married J. M. Burrall, of Waterbury; and George E., a resident of Wallingford. On July 1, 1860, Mr. Mills married Miss Margaret Ball, who survives him, and by this union he had two children: Thomas B., mentioned below; and Albert E., who died in childhood.

Mrs. Margaret (Ball) Mills still resides at the family homestead, No. 185 North Main street, and is highly respected in the community for her philanthropic work. For years she has been one of the active members of the Methodist Church of Ansonia, having been in entire sympathy with her husband in his religious work, and for some time she was a teacher in the Sunday-school. She was born in Oldham, England, a daughter of Joseph Ball (2), and granddaughter of Joseph Ball (1), a native of Manchester, England. Her father, who was a mechanic, came to America in 1841, locating in Pennsylvania, and he passed away in Pottsville, that state, at the age of eighty years. Her mother, Margaret (Hargreaves), a native of Manchester, England, and a devout Methodist, died at the age of thirty-nine, when Mrs. Mills, who is the only survivor of eleven children, was but four weeks old. She was reared in England, and came to America at the age of twenty-five.

Thomas B. Mills, son of Thomas and Margaret (Ball) Mills, was born June 18, 1861. After securing a common-school education he learned the trade of machinist, and became one of the most valued employes of the firm of Wallace & Sons. His death, which occurred June 20, 1891, cut short a promising career. His high character was recognized in the community, and for so young a man he held an influential place in social affairs, and in the Republican organization. For a number of years he served as an active fireman in Eagle Hose Co., No. 6, and on many occasions he showed marked courage in the discharge of his duties. As a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, he took a prominent part in the Sunday-school work and Young People's Meetings. Socially he was a member of the Order of Red Men, in which he held office, and of Naugatuck Lodge, No. 63, I. O. O. F. At the age of twenty-two he had passed all the chairs in the latter organization, being then the youngest noble grand ever elected to that office. On April, 20, 1887, Mr. Mills married Miss Estella J. Hartley, and they had two sons, Paul H. and Albert E. Paul died at the age of seven years and nine months; he was a remarkably bright boy, as may be judged from the fact that his favorite reading was biographies of Garfield, Grant and Franklin.

Mrs. Estella J. Mills, who is widely known as an author, was born May 5, 1864, in Westville, New Haven Co., Conn. She completed a course in the Hillhouse high school, at New Haven, in the class of 1883, with the intention of teaching. Her tastes and abilities inclined to business life, however, and she took a position as bookkeeper with George W.

Walker, on Main street, Ansonia, remaining three and one-half years, when she married Thomas B. Mills, as above related. In 1892 she opened a store next door to her residence, and here she carries a supply of dry-goods, fancy goods, notions, school supplies and art materials. She is a gifted artist, and has done notable work in oil and on china, but her literary efforts have met with such success as to indicate that the pen is her best medium for expression. At the close of her last year at high school she wrote the class song, and was chosen class poet. In all she has written over 150 poems. A large volume, "Storm Swept," published by James H. Earle, of Boston, has been widely sold. Her sympathy with reforms of all kinds has led her into public life, and in 1893 she was elected to the board of education, being the first woman in the State to be chosen for that office. In 1896 she was re-elected, for another term of three years, and since March, 1894, she has served as school visitor. Mrs. Mills is an active member of the W. C. T. U., the Daughters of Liberty, the Order of the Golden Cross, the Woman's Relief Corps, and she and her mother both belong to the Ells-Wood Rebekah Lodge, No. 9, in which she has held different offices, including that of secretary. In religious faith she is a Methodist, and she formerly taught in the Sunday-school. Her family has been identified with New Haven for many years, and her father (William Hartley) and grandfather (Henry Hartley) were prominent in business circles in that city.

Henry Hartley, who died in New Haven in 1813, aged forty-seven years, was born in Manchester, England, and after coming to America gained a wide reputation for skill as an architect and builder, and carried on a large business in bridge-building and other branches of engineering. Many of the large buildings and bridges of this section—including some of the Yale College buildings—were constructed under his direction, and for building purposes he ordered stone from Portland, Conn. William Hartley was born and reared in New Haven, and for three years attended Yale College. He taught school in North Haven, and later became a civil engineer of marked ability. In 1850 he published a map of New Haven, and he served some years as deputy surveyor general; he also made the survey for the first sewer laid in the city of New Haven. During the Civil war he enlisted in the 27th Conn. V. I., which regiment was first assigned to the 2d Army Corps under Gen. Hancock, and for six months he served as topographical engineer of the Engineer Corps. Mr. Hartley was in several battles including Fredericksburg, and at Gettysburg he was surgeon's assistant in the ambulance corps. He died in New Haven Aug. 16, 1877, at the age of seventy-two, and was buried with Masonic honors, having been a member of the F. & A. M. for years. His widow, who in her maidenhood was Jane E. Barnett, now resides in Ansonia. She is a native of New Hartford, was reared at Westville, this county, and was married, first, in 1842, to William L. Bliss, son of the Hon. Abel Bliss, of Wilbraham, Mass. By this marriage she had one child, now deceased. By her marriage with William Hartley she had five children, two sons and one daughter dying in infancy. Estella J. is the widow of Thomas B. Mills. Lillian C. who was two years her senior, married Henry O. Coon, and died June 5, 1900; she is survived by her husband and three children, Glen H., Jeanette E. and William O. William Hartley first married Rebecca Thorpe, of North Haven, and their son, William H., Jr., made the first survey of Pike's Peak, and the first survey and map of Denver, Colo. He accompanied John Brown in his first encounter with the border ruffians, and fired the first shot in the first engagement, Brown saying "Let Hartley fire first, for he's the best shot among us." A daughter by the first marriage, Mrs. Adelaide (Hartley) Merz, resides in North Haven.

In her mother's line Mrs. Estella J. Mills is descended from Jabez Barnett, an Englishman, who was among the first settlers in New Haven. His son, Jeremiah, great-grandfather of Mrs. Mills, kept a tavern on what is now Armstrong's Wharf, in New Haven, and also followed the cooper's trade, being extensively engaged in manufacturing barrels for the West Indies. Rev. Eli Barnett, grandfather of Mrs. Mills, was, at the age of fifteen years, apprenticed to the shoemaker's trade, but feeling a strong call to the ministry, he educated himself by private study in his evenings and early mornings. During his years of active service he preached the Gospel from Canada to Long Island Sound, the earliest portion of his work being done on the Middletown circuit. He died in New Haven in 1878, at the age of eighty-six. On Jan. 6, 1822, he married for his second wife, Betsey Tabor, of Shelburne Point, Vt., and they had three children, two of whom are living: Mrs. Jane E. Hartley, of Ansonia; and Mrs. Betsey A. Cowap, of Danville, Ill. The third daughter, Miss Ellen C. Barnett, a writer of note, died in 1886. The Tabor is a well-known family in New England, and Mt. Tabor in Vermont was named for them. Betsey Tabor was a daughter of Major John and Jemima (Trowbridge) Tabor, the former of whom was born in 1766, at Princeton, R. I., and became a pioneer settler at Shelburne, Vt., where he died in 1813. His title of Major was gained by his service in the militia.

AUGUSTUS HALL BARTHOLOMEW, deceased. The Bartholomew family, of which Augustus Hall Bartholomew, of Wallingford, was a descendant, has a record which is a credit to New England. The first of the name to come to these shores was William Bartholomew, son of William, of Burford, England, who was educated in Burford, was chaplain to King Charles, became sub-dean of Westminster, and upon his marriage with Ann Lord came to America in the ship "Griffin," arriving in Boston in 1634. In 1654 he with others was granted the privilege of trading with visiting vessels. He died at Charlestown in 1683.

William Bartholomew (2), son of the emigrant, born in 1646 in Ipswich, married Mary Johnson, a daughter of the Capt. Johnson who had the title of surveyor to the King's armies in America. William was a carpenter, and followed his trade in Roxbury, later moving to Branford, Conn., where he built a mill. He died in Woodstock.

Andrew Bartholomew, son of William, was born in Roxbury in 1670, and married Hannah Frisbie, of Branford, who died in 1741. As manager of his father's mill in Branford he continued until the death of his father, when, in association with his brother Benjamin, he engaged in farming very extensively, removing in 1727 to Wallingford, where he spent the remainder of his life, dying about 1754.

Joseph Bartholomew, the ninth in the family of Andrew, was born in Branford in 1721, and married Mary Sexton in Wallingford. At the time of his death he owned large tracts of land in the southeastern part of Wallingford, near the Branford line, and was a lieutenant of militia.

Isaac Bartholomew, son of Joseph, born in 1748 in Wallingford, first married Martha Morse, his second marriage being to Demaris Hall. His death occurred in 1821. Isaac was a large farmer, owning the land which now constitutes the homestead in Wallingford. In 1793 there was made a record telling that Harvey and Ruth Stephens, of Wallingford, deeded to Demaris, wife of Isaac Bartholomew, for love and affection, a farm in Wallingford. Their children numbered nine, the sixth of the family being Ira, the father of our subject.

Ira Bartholomew was born on the homestead in 1788, and Oct. 1, 1816, married Eunice Hall, who was born in 1794, a daughter of Augustus and Parmelia Hall. Their children were: (1) Augustus Hall was born Sept. 20, 1817. (2) Frederick. (3) Sarah E. married Samuel M. Cook, and became the mother of three children—John A. Cook, of Wallingford; Frank, deceased; and Abba. Mrs. Samuel E. Hopkins, of Naugatuck, Conn. (4) Abby Ann in 1851 married Elisha M. Pomeroy. Mr. Bartholomew received a liberal education, and followed farming all his life on the homestead at East Farms, where he built the house in 1850. Well known and highly respected, he was also noted for his industry, working unceasingly all his life. He owned at the time of his death 125 acres of valuable land. First a Whig, then a Republican, he served in many of the town offices, was a selectman, and a correct and estimable member of the Congregational Church. He passed away at the age of sixty-three years.

Our immediate subject was born on the old homestead Sept. 20, 1817, attended the district school, and was also sent to the best select schools in Fairhaven and Meriden. Later he engaged in teaching in Durham, Meriden and Wallingford, but returned to the farm and remained the comfort of his parents' declining years. Upon their decease he took charge of the farm, continuing there until 1882, and making many desirable improvements. He became known as a successful farmer and stock raiser, and also was one of the first in the section to make a success of raising tobacco. For the last eighteen years of his life he resided in Wallingford, where he erected a fine, modern brick residence, at a cost of $8,000.

The first marriage of our subject took place Jan. 11, 1846, to Mary K. Cook, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Cook; the latter first married Ralph Pomeroy. One child was born to this union, Edward, who passed away in infancy. Mrs. Bartholomew died in 1848. In 1850 Mr. Bartholomew was married to Mary E., daughter of Enos Camp, the children of this union being: Elizabeth M., born in 1851, married Hiram N. Childs, of Hanover, N. H., by whom she had two children, Bertha and Lena; her second marriage was to Alexander Hamilton. Emma Jane died young. James D. married Anna Chandler, and had two children, Harry and Ethel. William H., born in 1857, married Lillian Andrews, and lives on the homestead. Charles F., born in 1859, married Carrie Crook, and has three children, Augustus, Dale and Delius.

Mr. Bartholomew was formerly an Old-line Whig, but later became an ardent Republican, and he held many offices of the town: was selectman; served some years on the board of relief; for eight years was the efficient assessor; and was a member of the school board. A kind and generous man, he was one of the most highly esteemed men of Wallingford, where his death, on Aug. 25, 1900, was sincerely mourned. A member of the Congregational Church, he ever lived according to its teachings, and was a cheerful and liberal supporter of all benevolent and charitable enterprises. Living up to the Golden Rule, kind to the poor and generous to the unfortunate, setting an example through life of industry and sobriety, Mr. Bartholomew lived up to what must be considered the height of good citizenship.

MILES BLACKSTONE (deceased) was in his lifetime a prominent representative of the agricultural interests of the town of Branford, where he was born April 1, 1806, and where he made an eminent success of his career. Industry, economy and unswerving integrity marked all his life, and as the years passed his sterling worth and genuine manhood were more and more appreciated.

Miles Blackstone was a son of Timothy and Margaret (Goodrich) Blackstone, and his paternal grandfather was John Blackstone, who was a son of John Blackstone, and a grandson of that John Blackstone who settled in Branford about 1717, and was a son of Rev. William Blackstone. That eminent worthy of the early days was a graduate of Emanuel College, at Cambridge, England, and was among the first settlers of Boston, where he was made a freeman in 1671.

Timothy Blackstone, father of Miles, was a leading farmer in Branford, where he died at the advanced age of eighty-eight. To him and his wife were born the following children: Eunice, who married Charles Harrison; James, who married Sarah Beach; Grace, who married Andrew Hopson; Willis, who married Lucinda Hoadley; Samuel; Nancy; and Miles.

Miles Blackstone was reared in Branford, and as he grew to manhood became deeply interested in farming, which was his life occupation. He was a hard-working and industrious man, and alive to all new and progressive methods of agriculture. He married Lois Robinson, daughter of Linus and Rebecca (Hobart) Robinson, and a granddaughter of Mason Hobart, one of the pioneers in the settlement of Branford. The Robinsons were also a well-known family there. To this union were born five children: Elizur, who died when two years old; Betsey J.; Edwin E., a farmer, who died at the age of 58, unmarried; Grace R., who married William H. Warner; and Miss Sarah, who died aged thirty-one. Mr. Blackstone was a most unassuming and modest gentleman of the Old School, with a kindly heart, and was greatly honored and respected in the community in which he lived.

In his religious relations he was strongly attached to the Episcopal Church, where he habitually attended and to which he contributed liberally. In politics he was an intelligent and broad-minded Republican, much devoted to the good of the community, and anxious to promote by his vote the prosperity of his country. He died March 29, 1875.

GEORGE HOADLEY, who is now living retired in Branford, belongs to an old and distinguished family of Connecticut, whose members in different generations have been conspicuous in the various fields of action in which they have been engaged.

The record of this branch of the Hoadley family begins with William Hoadley, who was born in England about 1630, and was a resident of Saybrook, Conn., as early as 1663. In 1666 he bought property in Branford, and engaged in mercantile business. His name first appears in the Branford Covenant in 1667, and he was made a freeman of the Colony in 1669. He was one of the deputies from Branford at nine sessions of the Assembly between 1678 and 1685; was one of the patentees of the town in 1685; between 1673 and 1690 was one of the selectmen for the town; in 1683 was appointed to keep the ordinary in Branford; was one of the grand jurors at the court held in New Haven in June, 1688; and was one of a committee appointed in 1686 to make application to the General Court at Hartford for liberty for the town to form itself into a church estate. He was a slaveholder, and owned at his death a mulatto maid and an Indian boy. His estate was valued at more than five thousand dollars. William Hoadley died in 1709.

Abraham Hoadley, son of William, died in Branford July 14, 1748, at an advanced age. He was made a freeman of Branford in 1702, and was a farmer. Elizabeth (Maltby), his wife, was the daughter of Capt. William Maltby.

Abel Hoadley, son of Abraham and Elizabeth (Maltby) Hoadley, was born in Branford, Dec. 24, 1705, and died in August, 1734. His wife's name was Martha. He was a farmer in the Damascus District.

Isaac Hoadley, son of Abel and Martha Hoadley, was born in Branford in December, 1728, and died Jan. 21, 1812. Elizabeth (Blackstone), his wife, daughter of Capt. John and Elizabeth (Foote) Blackstone, was noted among the women of her time for her domestic skill. Isaac Hoadley was a carpenter by trade, inherited his father's farm, and became a very prosperous resident of the Damascus District. He was a prominent member of Trinity Episcopal Church.

Abel Hoadley, son of Isaac and Elizabeth Hoadley, was born in Branford Oct. 1, 1764, and died March 29, 1845. He married Lucinda Bradley, daughter of Timothy and Sarah (Goodsell) Bradley, of Branford, and they had children: Martha, who married Denning Hoadley; Isaac; Samuel; Ralph; Sally S., who married James Harrison; Lucinda, who married Wyllys Blackstone; Harvey; Harriet, who married John Gordon; and Ammi. Abel Hoadley was a farmer in the Damascus District, and was selectman and constable for many years.

Isaac Hoadley, father of our subject, married Laura Tyler, daughter of Solomon and Doreas (Fisk) Tyler, the former a farmer of Branford. Isaac Hoadley was a sailor in early life, and then engaged in farming. He died on the farm now occupied by his son George, Oct. 10, 1825, at the early age of thirty-five years. His children were George, Anna Tyler and Charles E. The last named married Elizabeth Gunn, a native of Georgia, and a daughter of James and Elizabeth Gunn, and they had four children: Laura, who is the wife of R. T. Humphrey; Susan D., who married J. Edwin Towner, and died in March, 1897 (she had three children, Anna P., who died July 27, 1899, Merle E. and Laura E.); M. Georgia, who died Jan. 21, 1884; and Edna J. Charles E. Hoadley was a merchant in Fredonia, Ala., where his children were all born. He returned East in 1866, and his wife died Oct. 11, 1867. He died Oct. 22, 1878.

George Hoadley, whose name introduces this article, was born Feb. 14, 1814, in the house he now occupies, and was reared on the old homestead—where he yet resides. The house in which he lives is over one hundred years old. In the sitting-room is one of the old "grandfather's" clocks, made in England, probably more than two hundred years old, and which still keeps good time. Mr. Hoadley

George Hoadley

Mrs. Wirth was an able business woman, taking keen interest in the management of her estate, and not long before her death she purchased a large tract of land with five houses near her home, in order to protect her beautiful grounds from intrusion. In the house are to be found many interesting and valuable relics of the past, one room, which she called her "Curiosity Shop," being entirely devoted to heirlooms. Among a large number received from her mother are rare spoons and pieces of valuable plate, from fifty to one hundred and fifty years old, and a gold and silver tea set presented the mother on her wedding day. Excellent portraits of both her mother and father occupy places of honor in the house, testifying to her filial reverence and devotion. She contributed liberally to the support of Christ Church, Quaker Farms, and left in her will $2,000 for the same purpose as her father's bequest; also $3,200 to St. Peter's Church, in Oxford, and $3,200 to the Congregational Church in Oxford, the interest to be used to put the cemeteries in the best of order and keep them so at all times. She made many other bequests for the benefit of the public. Mrs. Wirth was prominent in many lines of social activity, including the work of the D. A. R., in which she held membership by right of descent from John Riggs. She passed away Nov. 6, 1900, and her death was sincerely mourned among a wide circle of friends and acquaintances.

ERASMUS D. KETCHAM is one of the older citizens of Waterbury, and holds a responsible position in the industrial life of that city. He is a plain, straightforward man of good habits, and possessing an intimate knowledge of his business, commanding at once the confidence of his employers and the respect of the community.

Mr. Ketcham was born in the town of Perinton, Monroe Co., N. Y., Jan. 23, 1838, son of John V. N. Ketcham, a native of Rensselaer county, that state. Joseph Ketcham, the grandfather of Erasmus D., came from the eastern part of the State, and was a farmer in Rensselaer county. He married a Miss Van Ness, and they had twelve children: Morgan, a farmer in St. Joseph county, Mich.; Daniel, a farmer in Monroe county; John V. N., already mentioned; Cornelius, a farmer of Oswego county, N. Y.; William, a farmer and an influential politician in Ontario county, N. Y.; Joseph, a farmer in Monroe county, where he is yet living; Melvin, a miner and speculator in California; Marvin, a Monroe county farmer; Elidie, who married Jacob Van Ness, a farmer of Monroe county; Phoebe, who married a Mr. Porter, and later a Mr. Washburn, a farmer of Ontario county; Sally, wife of Mr. Mosher, a mechanic; and Angeline, wife of John Aldrich, a farmer in Monroe county.

John V. N. Ketcham was a farmer by occupation. He married Miss Alma J. Tedman, a native of Wayne county, N. Y., and a daughter of Robert Tedman, a farmer, and a native of Connecticut. After marriage Mr. Ketcham and his wife settled on a farm in Monroe county, where they reared a family of five children: Erasmus D.; Mary S., deceased, who married Joseph Nellest, a farmer in Niagara county, N. Y.; Charlotte A., who married Burt Rowley, a farmer in Ontario county, N. Y.; Arabella, who married Homer Foote, a farmer in Niagara county, N. Y.; and Franklin L., a farmer, who lives on the old homestead. Mr. Ketcham passed away in 1886. Mrs. Ketcham is still living at the advanced age of eighty-three.

Erasmus D. Ketcham spent his boyhood and youth on the farm in Monroe county, N. Y., attending the old district school, and also enjoying the advantages of a year at an academy and a term at a business college. In 1872, then in the prime of life, he came to Waterbury to take the position he holds to-day, and which he has filled so acceptably in all the intervening years, that of foreman of the yard, or outdoor foreman for the Scovill Manufacturing Co. As foreman of the outdoor work of this company he is reliable and attentive to the interests of his employers, and careful and considerate of the needs of the men under his direction.

Mr. Ketcham and Miss Caroline B. Webster were married Jan. 10, 1881. Mrs. Ketcham is a native of Waterbury, daughter of Truman Webster, a mason of that city. Two children have been born to this union, Truman J. and Earl D. Mr. Ketcham is a Republican, and a reliable and honored citizen. His face is a familiar sight in the assembly halls of Nosahogan Lodge, No. 21, I. O. O. F., and he is much interested in the workings of that noble order. The Ketcham family attend the Congregational Church.

LEONIDAS W. ALLING (deceased) was born in Orange, New Haven county, Feb. 23, 1840, the sixth child in the family of Charles W. and Lucy (Booth) Alling, who are mentioned elsewhere.

Mr. Alling spent his boyhood, after attendance at the district school (and during that time as well), assisting his father in the latter's woolen mill, a moderate business and large family necessitating contribution to the general fund on the part of the sons as well as of the father. Yet his intuitive inclination was toward a higher education, and his father was willing to gratify the boy's natural trend. Accordingly young Leonidas received a course of instructions at Wilbraham Academy, and later matriculated at Yale. Ill-health prevented the completion of his college course, and returning to Orange in 1868 he engaged in the manufacture of woolen yarns. In this he was reasonably successful until 1861, in which year his plant was destroyed by fire. In that year, not caring to resume business in Orange, he removed to Derby, where he assumed a responsible position in connection with the management of the extensive factory owned by his brothers, A. H. and C. B. Alling. This post he filled, with an ability born of native talent and ripe experience, until his death, May 12, 1896.

On Dec. 28, 1870, Mr. Alling married Marion Merwin, a daughter of Alpheus and Mary (Alling) Merwin, the latter a daughter of Bela Alling, who was the great-uncle of Leonidas W. The earliest American progenitor of the Merwin family, of whom any authentic record is preserved, came from Scotland nearly two centuries ago. His baptismal name was John, and following down the line we find John, born in Milford; John, a native of Orange; Nathan; and Alpheus, who was Mrs. Alling's father. Nathan Merwin, the father of Alpheus, was born in Orange, as were also his father and his children. He married Esther Clark, born in the same town in 1791, a daughter of Elias Clark, and their nine children were: Elias, Esther, Nathan, Sarah, Alpheus, John, Mary, Susan and Sheldon. Elias removed from Connecticut to Oakland, Cal., where he lived and died; he was a landed proprietor. Esther (deceased) became Mrs. Frederick Durand, of Seymour. Nathan was a prosperous dealer in grain and flour at New Haven, where he died. Sarah married Joseph Treat, of Milford, and died in Iowa. John engaged in the manufacture of cutlery at Lakeville, Conn., and died there. Mary is the widow of Harvey Seward, a merchant in Leadville, Colo., where she yet lives. Susan died unmarried. Sheldon died in early youth.

Alpheus Merwin was reared in Orange, where he learned the trade of a carpenter under the instruction of his father and Elias Clark, of Derby; he followed same until his death, July 13, 1880. In 1848 he married Miss Mary Alling, and they had two children, Marion and John. Marion, as has been said, became Mrs. Leonidas W. Alling; John is a farmer in Orange. Bela Alling, father of Mrs. Mary Merwin, married Julia Rogers, of Orange, and three children were born to them: Mary, Mrs. Merwin; Sheldon, a farmer in Orange; and Julia, who died in childhood. Julia Rogers was the daughter of Jonathan Rogers, who was born in Orange in 1780, and was a farmer. In 1803 he married Polly Treat, whose father, Joseph Treat, was a soldier in the Revolutionary war. The children of this marriage were four in number: Julia, Jonathan, Jonah and Mary. The youngest daughter (Mrs. Merwin) is yet living.

Leonidas W. Alling was a man of kindly disposition and affectionate heart. His blameless life, joined to keen mental power and a genuinely unselfish interest in public affairs, gained for him the warm respect of his friends and neighbors. Politically he was a Republican, and he was a successful candidate on that ticket for the offices of town treasurer and representative in the Legislature. He was a deacon in the Congregational Church for many years, and in his daily life exemplified the sincerity of his belief in the religious faith which he professed; yet his virtues were of the unassuming rather than of the assertive sort.

To Mr. and Mrs. Alling were born four children: Mary, Walter, Wilbur M. and Leon. Mary is married and lives in Philadelphia. Walter died in boyhood, and Wilbur is a manufacturer of hosiery, with mills in New York and Philadelphia. Leon is assistant superintendent of the New York City mill.

REUBEN H. COE. New Haven county has many well-to-do and successful farmers who have accumulated what they have of this world's goods through individual effort. Among this class the name of the subject of this notice is entitled to a place. For forty years he has been a resident of East Haven, where he is industriously engaged in the prosecution of his noble calling, and is meeting with far more than ordinary success.

Mr. Coe was born in the town of Durham, Middlesex Co., Conn., May 26, 1837, a son of Merrick R. Coe and grandson of Abram Coe, also natives of Durham. The latter was a soldier of the war of 1812, and was living at that time in East Haven; he helped to build the old Tomlinson bridge. His death occurred when he was about the age of seventy-two years. By his marriage with Rebecca Elwell, he had three children: Hannah, wife of William Peck; Phebe, wife of Samuel Peck; and Merrick R.

In early life Merrick R. Coe served a four years' apprenticeship to the shoemaker's trade, which he followed for a time in East Haven, but the greater part of his life was spent upon a farm in Durham. He married Miss Asenath Harrison, of Northford, Conn., a daughter of Amos Harrison, and to them were born two children, Reuben H., our subject, being the youngest; Mary, born in 1831, became the wife of Enoch Camp, and died in 1849. The father died in the fall of 1888 in his eighty-fourth year; the mother Dec. 29, 1874, at the age of sixty-seven years. Both were consistent and faithful members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Reuben H. Coe remained under the parental roof until twenty years of age, and then went to Plymouth, Conn., where he was variously employed, working on a road and also on a farm. In 1860 he came to East Haven, and for two years operated what is known as the Richard Woodward place. He then purchased his present farm in the same town, and here he has made his home since April, 1862. His first purchase consisted of but twenty-seven acres, but as he has prospered in his undertakings he has added to his landed possessions from time to time, and is now the owner of about 200 acres in Branford and East Haven. He has made all of the improvements upon his place, which is now one of the most attractive and desirable farms in the locality. In connection with general farming, he has also engaged in the wood and dairy business, and for the past ten years has given special attention to the raising of hogs. He has been eminently successful, and is now one of the most substantial and prosperous farmers of the community.

On June 25, 1857, Mr. Coe was united in marriage with Miss Mariette Sanford, of Plymouth, Conn., a daughter of William Sanford, and to them were born two children: Hattie R., who died in her twelfth year; and Herbert W., who is engaged in the milk business in East Haven. He married Imogene Hall and has three children, Herbert E., Ethel M. and Bertha H. Both Mr. and Mrs. Coe hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church, and are highly respected and esteemed by all who know them. He is quite prominent in agricultural circles and has served three years as master of East Haven Grange, No. 100, and treasurer of the New Haven County Pomona Grange for five years. He is a staunch supporter of the Democratic party and its principles, and has been elected to official positions of honor and trust, having served as assessor of his town for seven years, and first selectman for two terms, first with Henry Smith and Ruel Thompson, and second with John S. Tyler and Ruel Thompson. Over his life record there falls no shadow of wrong; his public service was most exemplary; and his private life has been marked by the utmost fidelity to duty. He is public-spirited and progressive, and gives his support to all measures for the public good.

JOHN E. MAR, a citizen of West Haven, is one of New Haven county's successful business men. His family is of Scotch extraction and noble descent, his great-great-grandfather, John Mar, having been the eldest son of the Earl of Mar. He came to America from Scotland in 1715, settled in Kittery, Maine, and married Catherine Surplus, of that place. They were members of the Congregational Church, in which faith their four sons were baptized. Some years later, wishing to visit Scotland, John Mar took passage in a vessel which was wrecked off Cape Cod, and he was drowned. His youngest son, Surplus, passed his life as a farmer in Kittery.

James Mar, the grandfather of John Mar, was born in the town of Kittery, Maine, and removed to Lincoln county, that State, settling in the town of Alna, where he became a citizen of substance and influence. He was a mason by trade, and was also a surveyor and civil engineer. He served as lieutenant in the war of 1812, and was conspicuous for his gallantry and daring. He passed the eighty-seventh milestone on life's journey, and died full of years and honors. He married Susannah, daughter of Lieut. Richard Bailey, who served in the French and Indian war.

James Mar, son of James, learned the trade of a mason, which he followed through the greater portion of his life, which ended at the age of eighty-four. He married Susan Averill, who was born in the town of Alna, a daughter of Ezekiel Averill, who enjoyed the proud distinction of having been a member of Washington's body guard. After he had seen independence an accomplished fact, he returned—as did most of New England's patriot soldiers—to the farm, to resume the pursuits of peace, and to do his part toward the building up of the infant Republic. He attained the extraordinary age of ninety-eight years. His family consisted of four daughters and three sons, and Mrs. Mar was the fifth in order of birth. She died in her eighty-fifth year. Mr. and Mrs. Mar had four children, three of whom are yet living: Frederick, whose home is in Kent, Va.; John E.; and William H., who is still a resident of Maine.

John E. Mar was born March 15, 1834, in Alna, where his parents settled. As a boy his mind was quick and his memory retentive, and before he was twenty-two years old he had learned the two trades of mason and carpenter. From the little hamlet in Maine where he was born he went to Boston, and thence after some years to Fair Haven, Conn. This was in 1862, when the government was a constant buyer of steam vessels at a high price. Mr. Mar, in company with others, built several steamers, and in 1865 went to West Haven, which town has since been his home. His father-in-law was at that time engaged in shipbuilding there, and he became associated with him, the business relations continuing for many years. The business of the yards grew apace, and at present includes both steam and sail vessels, of many grades and large burden. Mr. Mar's name is a pledge of probity and a synonym for skill. In the two elements in his character, capability and integrity, may be found the keynote of his success. He has built many four-masted schooners, barges and grain elevators.

On Nov. 11, 1863, Mr. Mar married Helen Gesner, whose father, William Nicholas Gesner, was a shipbuilder in New York City, and thence removed to Connecticut. Four sons and one daughter have blessed their home: (1) Frederic W. attended the West Haven schools, graduated from Hillhouse high school of New Haven, and from Yale University with the degree of B. A., in 1888; he spent three years in post-graduate work, and is now principal of a school in Brooklyn, N. Y. He married, at Sirampscott, Mass., Carlotta Lotsch, and they have one child, Frank. (2) James C. graduated from Eastman's Business College, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and is now engaged in the lumber business. He married Kate Smith, of Brooklyn, N. Y., and they have one child, Frederick Eugene. (3) Margaret G. married Eugene F. Perry, of Nyack, N. Y., secretary of the Wholesale Lumbermen's Association. They have three children, Dorothy, Helen and Eugene F., Jr. (4) John E., Jr., now of Bayonne, N. J., is a joiner by trade. He married Amy Dillion, of New Haven. (5) Charles Edgar is in Bridgeport, Conn., where he is engaged as mechanical draughtsman; he is unmarried.

For more than a century Mr. Mar's family has been prominently identified with the growth and development of the Congregational Church in the localities in which its various members have resided. Men and women of rugged character and sterling worth, they have never lost sight of their bounden duty to the cause of Christ, for which all the members of Mr. Mar's immediate family are active workers. While our subject has not departed from the family tradition, he is a man to whom the advanced ideas of the latter half of the nineteenth century have not appealed in vain. Social by instinct and genial by temperament, his popularity has been assumed without any concession to lower impulse. He is a Republican in politics, but has never had any desire to hold office. He is prominent in the Masonic fraternity, having been senior warden and twice master of Annawan Lodge, No. 115, F. & A. M.; treasurer of Joseph Andrew Chapter, No. 46, R. A. M.; and a member of Crawford Council. He takes a deep interest in the cause of temperance, being ever ready to co-operate in every well-directed effort for its advancement.

EDWIN ALONZO LEETE, a well-known business man and resident of Guilford, now engaged in undertaking and embalming, is a descendant in the eighth generation from William Leete, the founder of the family in America. The first three generations of the ancestral line are: (I) Gov. William Leete, 1612-1683; (II) John Leete, 1639-1692; (III) Pelatiah Leete, 1681-1768.

(IV) Pelatiah Leete, son of Pelatiah, noted in the foregoing, was born March 7, 1713, married Lydia Crittenden, a daughter of Deacon Samuel and Mindwell (Meigs) Crittenden, and had the following family: Pelatiah, Pelatiah (2), Lydia (Mrs. John Leete) and Noah (twins), Eber, Simeon (who married Zerviah Norton), Amos (who married Hannah Ward) and Nathan.

(V) Pelatiah Leete, born Aug. 22, 1744, married Bethia Norton, a daughter of Thomas and Bethia Norton, of Guilford. She died June 30, 1793, and for his second wife he married Mary Frisbie, at North Branford. He was the father of four children: Joel, Noah, who married Huldah Ward; Pelatiah, who married Betsy Ramy; and Mary, who married John Ludington.

(VI) Joel Leete, born April 15, 1768, died Jan. 28, 1842. He married Mollie Crittenden, a daughter of Noah and Naomi (Atwell) Crittenden, who lived at Leete Island. Mrs. Leete died Nov. 24, 1843. Their children were: Alvin, mentioned below; Polly Maria; Morris Atwell; and Frederick William, who married Sarah Jane Fowler.

(VII) Capt. Alvin Leete, son of Joel and Mollie Leete, was born on Leete Island Aug. 24, 1791, and was married Jan. 15, 1816, to Mrs. Rebecca Butler, widow of William Butler. She was born Feb. 14, 1798, a daughter of Isaac and Abigail (Tyler) Palmer, and died Jan. 16, 1862. Capt. Leete died July 6, 1882. His children were: (1) Abigail Maria, born Nov. 18, 1816, married A. W. Leete; (2) Eliza Ann, born March 3, 1818, married C. Robbins; (3) Isaac Palmer, born March 9, 1821, married Clarissa Foote; (4) Edwin Alonzo is mentioned below; (5) Marietta, born July 20, 1827, died Jan. 18, 1877. Capt. Leete earned his title in the militia service. He was a Whig and a Republican, and belonged to the Congregational Church. He was deeply interested in all educational matters, and for more than thirty years was a teacher in the public schools.

Edwin A. Leete was born Dec. 21, 1822, and married Ellen Hotchkiss, who was born Nov. 10, 1825, daughter of Eber S. and Fannie (Norton) Hotchkiss. To this union came two children: Fannie Rebecca, born Oct. 23, 1848, married Ezra S. Kelsey; and James Spencer, born Sept. 8, 1850, died March 23, 1857. Mrs. Leete died July 5, 1854. On Jan. 1, 1855, Mr. Leete married Mary Ann Leete, who was born Sept. 20, 1827, a daughter of Albert A. and Betsy A. (Parmelee) Leete, and granddaughter of Ambrose Leete. To them came children as follows: (1) Edward Morris, born Aug. 18, 1858, is mentioned below. (2) Catherine Ward, born Nov. 28, 1860, married Fred W. Seward. (3) Elizabeth Morris, born Feb. 10, 1867, was graduated from the State Normal School at New Britain, and for the past five years has been a teacher in the William Penn Charter school, in Philadelphia. (4) William Henry, born Dec. 3, 1868, in Guilford, married Caroline Hopkins Barnes, of Binghamton, N. Y. He has been engaged in the railroad service for ten years, having been on the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, and assistant to the general superintendent of the Los Angeles Terminal Railroad. He is now cashier and paymaster on the San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad.

Edward Morris Leete married Eva Bishop, who was born April 19, 1859, daughter of Elisha Chapman Bishop, and they have three children—Frank Chapman, born Aug. 16, 1881, who is quite proficient in music; Earl Bishop, born in November, 1888; and Charlotte Elizabeth, born Aug. 14, 1890. Edward Morris Leete is a partner in business with his father, and at present represents his district in the State Legislature, to which he was elected in 1900. In religion he unites with the Congregational Church, and socially he is a member of the Masonic Fraternity. Mrs. Edward Morris Leete belongs to an old family, and is a lady of unusual attainments. She is an extensive dealer in antique furniture.

Edwin A. Leete became a cabinetmaker, learning his trade under John Kimberly, with whom he spent four years. For a time he worked as a journeyman with Jonas H. Bowditch, of New Haven, manufacturer and dealer in furniture. Afterward he came to Guilford and worked two years in the shipyards at East River, for Eber Hotchkiss.

For several years he dealt in hardwood timber for the New York market.

Mr. Leete donned the Union blue in 1862, becoming a member of Company I, 14th Conn. V. I., under Col. Dwight Morris and Capt. Isaac Brunson. He was in the service six months, taking part in the battle of Antietam, and was discharged at Alexandria on account of serious disability. Returning from the war he resumed the cabinetmaking business, in which he has been continuously engaged for thirty-seven years, and is known as the leading undertaker and furniture dealer on the shore line.

Mrs. Leete descends from Deacon Daniel Leete, eldest son of Deacon Pelatiah Leete. He married Rhoda Stone, a daughter of Caleb and Sarah (Meigs) Stone, and resided on Leete Island. He was a deacon of the Fourth Congregational Church of Guilford. He died in 1772, his wife in 1769. They were the parents of five children: Rhoda, who married Noah Rogers; Daniel, who married Charity Norton; Ambrose, who is mentioned below; and two who bore the name of Abraham, both deceased in infancy.

Deacon Ambrose Leete in 1773 married Miranda Chittenden, a daughter of William and Rachel (White) Chittenden, of Guilford. He was made a deacon of the Fourth Church of Guilford in 1784, and of the First Church in 1801. He died in 1809, his wife in 1838. Their children were: Ambrose, Miranda, Minor, Abraham and Wealthy. Minor married Lucinda Norton.

Ambrose Leete was born in 1774, and in 1802 married Catherine Ward, who was born in 1780, a daughter of Thelus and Sarah (Shelley) Ward. They had the following children: Sidney Washington married Susan Atwater; Albert Augustus is mentioned below; Harriet married John Fowler; Ambrose Ward married Abigail N. Leete; Catherine Ward; Miranda Cornelia married Hzekiah Parmelee; Charles Frederick, born in 1820, married Martha H. W. Lay.

Albert A. Leete, the father of Mrs. Edwin A. Leete, was born Oct. 11, 1805, and married June 6, 1825, Betsy A. Parmelee, of Fair Haven. She was born Dec. 23, 1805, and died Oct. 14, 1881. Albert A. Leete was made a deacon of the First Congregational Church in Guilford in 1832, and served forty-three years in that capacity. The following children were born to him and his wife: Mary Ann, born Sept. 20, 1827, married Edwin A. Leete; Sidney Ward, born April 7, 1833, married Isabelle H. Clark; John Fowler, born May 1, 1838, died in 1840; Martha Elizabeth, born June 4, 1841, married Samuel S. Parmelee; Harriet Cornelia was born April 3, 1848.

DENNIS BARNETT, one of Ansonia's pioneer citizens, was born in Ireland in 1831, son of Patrick and Ellen (O'Brien) Barnett, both natives of the Emerald Isle. His father, who was a farmer by occupation, died in Ireland, and the mother is also deceased. Of their six children our subject is now the only survivor.

On coming to America, in 1850, Mr. Barnett located in Ansonia, where he has since remained almost continuously, making but few visits, even out of town. In 1851 he entered the employ of the A. B. C. Co., in whose service he was retained forty-three years—longer than any other man in the factory. Since retiring from that work he has carried on a grocery store at No. 72 Central street, Ansonia, the active management being in the hands of his daughter Ellen, and he also owns three lots upon which he built two houses. Mr. Barnett has seen Ansonia develop from a village of one thousand inhabitants to its present proportions, and his intelligent observation and excellent memory enable him to give most interesting and instructive accounts of the early days. At the time of his arrival there were but one store and only a few houses on Main street, and none on the west side of the river, where there are now five hundred houses. Extensive farms have been transformed into residence tracts under his eyes, and two generations have passed before him, there being now only two or three men who were here on his arrival. In 1851 Mr. Barnett married Ellen Hannagin, who was born in Ireland, daughter of Thomas Hannagin, and of their twelve children three are now living: (1) Patrick has been employed for some time in the clock shop in Ansonia, (2) Thomas, who is now with the A. B. C. Co., married Mary A. Driscoll, and has had eight children, six of whom are living, Ellen, Timothy, Mary, Geneva, Dennis and Thomas, Jr. (3) Ellen was married in 1884 to James Cotter, shoe manufacturer of Philadelphia, who died two years later. Mrs. Cotter now manages the store for her father. Politically Mr. Barnett is a Democrat, and he has always been a devout Catholic, his parents having reared him in that faith. He was one of the first members of the Catholic Church in Ansonia, and is the only one now living who took part in the organization of the society. Temperance reform has claimed his warm support for many years, and he is now the only living charter member of the Father Matthew Temperance Society, organized in 1868, and later known as the St. Joseph Temperance Society.

GEORGE SCARD, one of the most prosperous dairy farmers and stock dealers of East Wallingford, was born in Dorchester, England, May 9, 1838. Robert Scard, his father, was a native of the same place, and was a tanner by occupation. The latter part of his life was spent in farming, and his closing days were passed in the homes of his children in Wales, where he died at a ripe old age. In his religious belief he was an Episcopalian. He was a man of good character, and is remembered as a gentleman of high standing with those who knew him best. Sarah Mores, his wife, was born in Dorchester, and was the mother of his thirteen children, of whom six died young. Those who grew to more mature life were: George; Moses, dead; Robert, who resides in Newport, South Wales; Simeon, who was drafted for service in the Bristol police (England), and remained several years, but now has a store in Newport, South Wales, selling groceries and other goods; Henry, deceased; Sarah, who married a Mr. Anthony, and is now deceased; and Charlotte, deceased.

George Scard had a common school education in the national schools of England. When he was ten years old his parents took him to Newport, South Wales, where he became errand boy for his brother Simeon, working in the beginning for his board and clothes. After some years he saved enough to buy a team and go to farming. That was his occupation for several years, when he turned to trade. In 1871, having a strong desire to see the New World, he came to New York, whence he went on west to Chicago, at that time just rallying from the great fire. He went to work as a hod carrier at three dollars and fifty cents a day, and put in something over nine months in that way. After the expiration of this time he returned to New York, and, locating in Meriden, secured a position with the Malleable Iron Works, being employed here for four years at one dollar and fifty cents a day. Here he was joined by his family, and all united their energies in farming, first in a small way, and then as they began to know their power, they moved into Wallingford, and bought the Terry farm in 1876. Here they started in the dairy business, and as circumstances improved, bought the William Every place, and still later the Robinson farm. Here they have a fine home, which Mr. Scard built, and this with other buildings cost more than $10,000. Mr. Scard keeps more than forty cows, and is known as the most extensive dairy farmer and stockman in the town of Wallingford. This entire family is noted for the industry and thrift of all its members. They are all enterprising and progressive people, and richly deserve the good fortune that has waited on their labors.

In July, 1859, Mr. Scard was married in Newport, South Wales, to Ellen Gammon, who was born in Barnstable, England, and was a daughter of George and Hannah Gammon, both of whom are now deceased. To this union were born nine children: Mary Jane, who married James Prin, and is now deceased; Lavinia, who married David A. Crouch, of Middletown, and is the mother of two children, Frances and Etta Mabel; Emily, who married Albert Beaumont, of Wallingford; George, who is a partner of his father; Eliza, who died young; Moses and Simeon are both at home; Charlotte, who married John Mead, of North Haven; and Rosanna, unmarried and at home.

The sons are interested with their father in the dairy business. All the family attend the Congregational Church. Mr. Scard is independent in his politics. Known as a man of most temperate habits, and as a hard worker, and a good neighbor, he is much respected in the town. With his sons he belongs to the Grange, and is much interested in all questions that pertain to the welfare of the farmer.

George Gammon, the grandfather of Mrs. Scard, was a native of Devonshire, England, where he followed farming, and died at the venerable age of one hundred years. George Fishley, the maternal grandfather of Mrs. Scard, was a native of Thornington, Devonshire, England, where he was engaged in the making of pottery; he owned a farm, and lived to be more than one hundred years of age. Both her grandfathers were members of the Church of England. The mother of Mrs. Scard died when she was very young.

WILLIAM G. MITCHELL, the well-known manufacturer of Milford, was born in Paisley, Scotland, Dec. 3, 1827. His family has long been identified with manufacturing interests, and his father, William W. Mitchell, was engaged in the manufacture of carpets in Scotland before coming to this country. An uncle, James W. Mitchell, preceded the other members of the family and carried on the same business in New York City. Hand looms were then in use. Later he removed to Yorkers, N. Y., and in 1849, after the introduction of power looms, the establishment there was bought by Alexander Smith, who continued and enlarged the business. It is now the largest carpet manufacturing concern in this country.

William W. Mitchell came from his father's (David Mitchell's) carpet factory in Kilmarnock, Scotland, in 1829, and brought with him a colony of workmen for the carpet works of Orrin Thompson, at Thompsonville, Conn. The descendants of this worthy colony are now numerous in that place. About 1835 he went to New Haven to take a position with Galpin & Robertson, carpet manufacturers, each member of which firm was called in turn to serve as mayor of New Haven. In 1836 he returned to Scotland and took charge of a cotton factory belonging to his brother George, and his death occurred in Glasgow, Scotland, in 1888. He married Agnes Dunlop, and had three children, of whom only two lived to mature age, Janet and William G. Janet is the widow of David Mitchell, and resides in Manchester, England.

William G. Mitchell went to Lovell's Lancasterian school in New Haven, and, spending a portion of his youth in Glasgow, went to school there until 1841. On completing his course he entered the office of a friend in Glasgow as a clerk, and he was afterward employed by his father for a time. For two years he was in the office of a wholesale commission house, without pay, his experience being regarded as a sufficient recompense, and later spent six months in a Scottish Marine Insurance office. For nine years he was employed as a bookkeeper by Oliver F. Winchester, of New Haven, and in 1857 he went to Milford as bookkeeper for Flagg & Baldwin, manufacturers of straw goods, continuing with the house through various changes of name. The firm became known as Flagg, Baldwin & Co. in 1859; N. A. Baldwin & Co. in 1865; Baldwin, Rice & Read in 1867; Baldwin & Hills in 1872; The Baldwin Manufacturing Co. in 1874; N. A. Baldwin in 1878; and the business has since 1886 been conducted in the name of our subject. The factory is composed of very large brick and frame buildings, and in the season about 250 hands are employed in making various kinds of straw hats for men, women and children. During the half century of its existence the business has been a recognized factor in the development and prosperity of Milford, millions of dollars having been put into circulation by it.

On Jan. 11, 1853, Mr. Mitchell was married, in West Granby, Conn., to Miss Harriet A. Kasson, of Granby, born July 4, 1830, in Hartford county, daughter of Thomas A. and Amelia (Holcomb) Kasson. They have had two children, Hattie and Amie, both at home. The family is identified with the Episcopal Church, and Mr. Mitchell also belongs to Ansantawae Lodge, No. 89, F. & A. M., of Milford; Solomon R. A. Chapter, F. & A. M., at Derby, Conn.; and City Lodge, No. 36, I. O. O. F., of New Haven. In politics he is a Democrat, and he takes interest in local affairs, though he has been a business man, rather than a politician. He served about twelve years as judge of probate, while his interest in educational advancement is shown by his continuous service on the board of education since 1862.

CAPT. CHARLES GRISWOLD, one of the prominent citizens of Guilford, served as an officer during the Civil war in two Connecticut regiments, and is the representative of one of the oldest and most influential families of the State. He is of the seventh generation from Michael Griswold, who was one of the first settlers of Wethersfield. About the time the founders of the family in America migrated to the New England coast close relatives had become prominent in English history. In 1600 the Malvern estate came into the possession of Humphrey Griswold, a "lord of the manor," and the heritage still remains with the English branch of the family.

The American branch of the Griswold family claims as its first known English progenitor Matthew Griswold, Esq., of Kenilworth, Warwickshire, an uncle of Humphrey Griswold, first Lord of the Manor, above named. He had three sons, Thomas, Edward and Matthew. Of these, Matthew, the youngest, was the first to come to America. While yet very young he joined a company of pilgrims collected from Warwickshire, Worcestershire, Somersetshire and Devonshire, under the leadership of Rev. John Wareham, who left England during the reign of Charles I, and landed on the shores of Massachusetts Dec. 20, 1630. Nine years later Edward Griswold joined his brother Matthew, and they removed from Massachusetts to Connecticut, Edward settling at Windsor, and the younger brother at Saybrook.

In 1645 another member of the Griswold family, Michael by name, emigrated from England to Connecticut, and settled at Wethersfield. He was born in 1610. His descendants are numerous, and many of them are among the most prominent citizens of that section of the State. He himself may be reckoned among Wethersfield's pioneers. He bought land, and, being by occupation a mason, erected thereon a fine house, besides making other improvements. There he passed the remainder of his days, dying Sept. 26, 1684, highly esteemed for his many admirable qualities. The children of Michael and Ann Griswold were as follows: Thomas, born Oct. 22, 1646; Hester, born May 8, 1648; Michael, born Feb. 14, 1652 (died young); Abigail, born June 8, 1655; Isaac, born Sept. 30, 1658 (died June 18, 1727); Jacob, born in April, 1660 (died July 28, 1737); Sarah, born Sept. 30, 1662; Michael, born Jan. 7, 1667 (died Sept. 9, 1741). The line of descent to our subject is as follows:

(I) Thomas Griswold, son of Michael, was born in Wethersfield Oct. 22, 1646. He and his wife, Mary, whom he married Nov. 28, 1672, had children as follows: Thomas, born June 11, 1674, is next in the line; Jacob, born Feb. 5, 1676, married Abigail Hand; Martha was born Aug. 20, 1678; Michael, born Jan. 28, 1681, married Mary Gilbert; Samuel married Mary Francis, and died in September, 1733.

(II) Thomas Griswold (2), born June 11, 1674, in Wethersfield, removed to Guilford in 1695, and was the first settler of the name in that town, where he spent the remainder of his life. He died Oct. 19, 1729. He married, May 9, 1697, Sarah Bradley, who was born in Guilford Oct. 17, 1676, daughter of Stephen and Hannah (Smith) Bradley. The children of Thomas and Sarah Griswold were: Mary, born Sept. 28, 1700, married Samuel Fitch; Experience was born May 9, 1703; Sarah, born Jan. 15, 1706, married Samuel Post; Thomas, born March 26, 1708, died Jan. 11, 1754; Submit was born Sept. 26, 1710; Anna, born April 4, 1713, married John Hall.

(IV) Thomas Griswold (3), born at Guilford March 26, 1708, married Feb. 17, 1735, Ann Graves, who was born April 12, 1715, daughter of John and Elizabeth (Stevens) Graves, of Guilford. She died May 29, 1801. The children of Thomas and Ann Griswold were as follows: Miles, born Jan. 2, 1736, married Sarah Crittenden, and died March 20, 1821; Thomas was born Sept. 1, 1737; John, born June 17, 1742, married Mary Burgis, and died May 10, 1777; Ezra, born Dec. 10, 1753, married Mehitabel Cleveland, and died March 4, 1815.

(V) Thomas Griswold (4), the great-grandfather of our subject, was born in Guilford Sept. 1, 1737. It is said he served as a private in the Revolutionary war. He died Jan. 7, 1821. He married, Dec. 17, 1761, Hannah Crittenden, who was born Aug. 22, 1740, daughter of Joseph and Lucy (Spencer) Crittenden. She died March 31, 1816. The children of Thomas and Hannah Griswold were: Thomas, born April 26, 1763, married Miner Crittenden, and died March 8, 1846; Joel, born Dec. 6, 1764, is mentioned below; Hannah, born May 26, 1771, married John Hall, and died Nov. 10, 1840; Amos, born Jan. 1, 1780, married Rachel Bushnell, and died Aug. 21, 1876.

(VI) Joel Griswold, the grandfather of our subject, was born in Guilford Dec. 6, 1764, and died July 19, 1835. He married Lucy Lee, who was born July 8, 1770, daughter of Capt. Samuel and Agnes Lee, and died March 24, 1854. The children of Joel and Lucy Griswold were: Joel, born Feb. 27, 1796; Clarissa, born Jan. 7, 1791, who married Abram F. Scranton, and died Dec. 18, 1881; and Lucy Ann, born Sept. 19, 1808, who died Dec. 22, 1816.

(VII) Joel Griswold, the father of our subject, was born in Guilford Feb. 27, 1796. He married Jan. 5, 1820, Sally Bartlett, who was born Nov. 20, 1801, daughter of Noah and Sally Judson Bartlett, and granddaughter of Joseph and Sarah (Crittenden) Bartlett. She died Nov. 14, 1876. Children were born to Joel and Sally Griswold as follows: Lucy Ann, born Nov. 16, 1820, is the widow of D. Loper Davis, of Guilford. Clarissa Judson, born Dec. 9, 1822, died Sept. 2, 1826. Henry Bartlett, born Nov. 25, 1824, married Polly E. Wilcox. Clarissa Judson (2), born Nov. 10, 1827, is the widow of Henry N. Davis, of Guilford. Thomas, born March 10, 1832, married Sophia F. Bishop. Joel, born Jan. 2, 1836, first married Margaret Coan; Mrs. Carrie (Walters) Griswold, his widow, is yet living in Guilford. Mary was the twin of Joel. Edward, born June 30, 1839, married Anna E. Dudley. Charles, born July 26, 1841, married Mary Griswold. Joel Griswold, the father of these children, was a man of unusual intelligence. He received a good education in his younger days, and taught school for a number of terms, but his principal occupation was farming. He was an extensive land owner, and ranked as one of the leading citizens of Guilford. His sage counsel was frequently sought, and his good judgment and business capacity often led to his selection as administrator of estates and guardian of orphaned children. In politics he was a Whig and later a Republican. He served the town of Guilford as selectman and filled various other local offices. During the Civil war he was an active defender of the Union, and only his advanced age prevented him from enlisting in the army. However, he gave to his country three sons, all of whom survive, and two of whom are now business men of Guilford. He was honorable in all his dealings and scrupulously honest.

He lived a good Christian life, and died Aug. 29, 1879, mourned by a wide circle of friends.

Charles Griswold, youngest son of Joel and Sally (Bartlett) Griswold, was born at Guilford July 26, 1841. He was reared in his native town, and was in his youth when the war of the Rebellion began. He enlisted Aug. 5, 1862, becoming a private in Company E, 15th Conn. V. I., was made a sergeant, and later was transferred to the 29th Conn. V. I., as captain of Company B. During his service he was in Virginia and North Carolina, and later through Maryland, South Carolina and Texas, and in the latter State was stationed along the Rio Grande to enforce the Monroe Doctrine. Among the men in command were Gen. Shafter and the late Gen. Lawton. Among the battles and sieges in which Capt. Griswold participated were Fredericksburg (where he was under Gen. Burnside) and the siege of Richmond, his regiment being the first to enter Richmond after the surrender. In the siege of Richmond Capt. Griswold lost twenty-two men, killed and wounded, out of his company of sixty-six. He was mustered out of the service Oct. 24, 1865.

At the close of the war Capt. Griswold returned to Guilford and engaged in business, so continuing, with the exception of four years, up to the present time. In 1875 he helped to establish the Guilford Savings Bank, and in 1880 was elected its treasurer, remaining in that position until 1889, the time of his appointment as bank commissioner of the State. After four years in this position he was again elected treasurer of the Savings Bank. In 1900 he promoted and organized the Guilford National Bank, of which he is cashier and general manager. Among Capt. Griswold's other accomplishments may be mentioned surveying, in which line he has done much work in his own and neighboring towns. His father was a mathematician, and had intended to educate his son for the business of civil engineering. The Captain is very methodical in his business affairs, and his annual reports while he was bank commissioner were prepared with great care, and were published in a volume of some 300 pages. During this time he traveled over 20,000 miles, visiting many States. While out of business in Guilford he was interested in real estate in New Haven. He has been made conservator, guardian or administrator in a number of cases.

In local affairs Mr. Griswold has taken a prominent part, and has been an active worker in the ranks of the Republican party. He has held a number of town offices, was school visitor for twenty years, has been president of the Board of Education, and is justice of the peace. In 1887 he was elected to represent his district in the State Assembly, and was chairman of the committee on Manufactures, and a member of the committee on Engrossed Bills. At present he is trustee of the Guilford Institute. In religious connection he is a member of the Congregational Church, and at present trustee of the society. Socially he belongs to the Loyal Legion, of New York, the Sons of the American Revolution, the Army and Navy Club, and Parmelee Post, G. A. R. (of which he was the first commander).

Mr. Griswold was married, Feb. 18, 1864, to Miss Mary E. Griswold, who was born March 13, 1841, daughter of Russell B. and Mary (Jones) Griswold, of Guilford. To them were born two children: Anna L., born Oct. 4, 1866, married Rev. Edmund Vittum, D. D., of Grinnell, Iowa, May 16, 1889; and Alfred Russell, born June 17, 1868, is engaged in business with his father.

ICHABOD LEE SCRANTON, a retired sea captain, is a member of one of the oldest and most prominent families of New Haven county, of which he is a native, having been born March 12, 1829, in the town of Madison.

(I) John Scranton, the first of the name in Guilford, was a native of England, whence he came to America with a number of other families, and in October, 1639, settled at Guilford, Conn., where he passed the rest of his days, dying Aug. 27, 1671. He was twice married. His first wife, Joanna, whom he married in England, died July 22, 1661, and, for his second wife he wedded, in Guilford, Mrs. Ada Hill, widow of Robert Hill; she died in April, 1685. Children: (1) John, sketch of whom follows; (2) Thomas, born in 1643, married Mrs. Deborah Thompson, widow of Ebenezer Thompson, and daughter of William Dudley; (3) Sarah, born May 16, 1645, married John Bushnell.

(II) Capt. John Scranton, born in 1641 in Guilford, removed in early manhood to the eastern part of the town (now Madison), locating in the Hammonasset school district, where he spent the remainder of his life engaged in farming. He died in 1703, and was buried in Madison cemetery. Capt. Scranton took the oath of freeman in 1670, and was a member of the Congregational Church. He was twice married, first time on March 12, 1673, to Mary Seward born Feb. 28, 1652, daughter of William and Grace (Norton) Seward. This wife died in 1688, and for his second wife he married Dec. 16, 1691, Elizabeth Clark, born in 1660, a daughter of John Bishop; she died in August, 1727. Eight children were born to (II) Capt. John Scranton, as follows: (1) John, sketch of whom follows; (2) Mary, born in 1678, married July 9, 1699, Joseph Stone, and died March 21, 1758; (3) Mercy, born 1680, married Dec. 27, 1717, Samuel Cowles, of Cheshire; (4) Mehitabel, born 1682; (5) Elizabeth, born Nov. 4, 1692, married Dec. 27, 1717, William Rowson; (6) Anne, born Dec. 27, 1693, married Ebenezer Munger, and died April 20, 1725; (7) Ebenezer, born March 16, 1696, married Ann Rowson, and died Oct. 6, 1774; (8) Deborah, born Dec. 3, 1697, married July 5, 1721, Abel Chittenden, and died Nov. 6, 1749.

(III) Capt. John Scranton was born in East

Guilford, in 1676, and passed all his life there, engaged in farming, dying March 21, 1723. He was three times married: (first) Dec. 12, 1699, to Mary Norton, born in 1680; (second) to Mrs. Sarah Evarts, widow of Ebenezer Evarts (she died Oct. 8, 1749); (third) to Mary Bushnell, of Saybrook, daughter of Deacon Francis and Sarah (Scranton) Bushnell. Children born to (III) Capt. John Scranton: (1) Mary, born July 6, 1701, married Benjamin Bushnell; (2) John, born April 14, 1703, was drowned in 1738 in the Hammonasset river, Madison; (3) Josiah, born July 19, 1705, married Mary Dickson, and died Sept. 8, 1751; (4) Sarah, born Nov. 25, 1707; (5) Hannah, born March 3, 1709; (6) Submit, born June 18, 1712, married Simeon Chittenden, and died April 15, 1796; (7) Noah, born June 20, 1715, married Esther Bradley, and died Dec. 4, 1760; (8) Ichabod, sketch of whom follows; (9) Hannah, born March 3, 1718, married Nathaniel Allis, Nov. 20, 1739, and died June 20, 1783; (10) Ann, born May 16, 1720, married John Bushnell, of Saybrook, Conn.; (11) Rebecca, born Sept. 12, 1722, married David Hoyt, of Madison, and died May 5, 1798.

(IV) Ichabod Scranton, born Feb. 19, 1717, in East Guilford (now Madison), Conn., was a life-long agriculturist. He was a captain in the old French war, and in that capacity went to Louisbourg, Cape Breton, Canada, also to Ticonderoga. While returning home from the latter expedition he was seized with smallpox at Albany, N. Y., of which he died Dec. 1, 1760, and he was buried privately, by night, on Clapboard Hill. Several soldiers of his company died during the campaign in the north. Ichabod Scranton married Chloe Fowler, born March 29, 1723, and died Dec. 10, 1791. Children: (1) Chloe married Daniel Meigs, and died May 26, 1788; (2) Elizabeth, born 1747, married Edmund Wilcox, and died Aug. 26, 1813, in Bergen, N. Y.; (3) Theophilus, sketch of whom follows; (4) Abraham, born Sept. 10, 1754, married Lucy Stone and he died Feb. 24, 1844; (5) Ichabod, born Dec. 10, 1757, died May 24, 1792 (he was an officer of distinction, in a troop of cavalry in the Revolutionary war).

(V) Theophilus Scranton, born Dec. 1, 1751, in Madison, a farmer by occupation, died Feb. 16, 1827, and is buried in Madison cemetery. He married Abigail Lee, born July 11, 1754, daughter of Jonathan and Mary Lee, of Madison; she died Dec. 23, 1840, at the ripe old age of nearly eighty-six years. Children: (1) Erastus, born Aug. 1, 1777, was a minister; he married Mary Prndon, and died Oct. 5, 1861; (2) Parnel, born March 18, 1779, married William Whitsey, and died April, 1858; (3) Jonathan, born Oct. 10, 1781, married Roxanna Crompton, and died July 27, 1847; (4) Charlotte, born Jan. 21, 1783, married Nathan Clark, and died March 5, 1823; (5) Chloe, born Oct. 2, 1784, married first Reuben Judson, and second, Jan. 18, 1823, Nathan Bushnell, of Madison, and died July 5, 1873; (6) Theophilus, born April 13, 1786, married Elizabeth Warner, and died May 14, 1859; (7) Hubbard, born May 4, 1788; (8) Lemau, born May 10, 1790, died Aug. 20, 1791; (9) Ichabod Lee, sketch of whom follows; (10) Henry, born Nov. 1, 1794, married Rachel Linsley, and died March 4, 1876; (11) Abigail, born May 15, 1797, died May 10, 1810.

(VI) Ichabod Lee Scranton, father of the subject proper of this sketch, was born July 15, 1792, in Madison, Conn., where he was reared and educated. In his younger days he taught school, later becoming engaged in mercantile business in Madison, as coal dealer, grocery merchant, etc., from there moving to New Haven, afterward to New York, in both of which cities he was engaged in business, in the latter conducting a produce business some fifteen years. The later days of his life he spent in Madison, dying there June 18, 1881, and his remains were buried in the cemetery there. He was a colonel in the militia, and at one time was offered the position of brigadier general, but declined the honor. In politics he was first a Whig, later a Republican, while in religious faith he was a member of the Congregational Church for over fifty years. He built and owned over twenty vessels, being captain of several engaged in the local trade, and he was also a stockholder in the Shore Line Railroad. A very quiet, unassuming man, he was of a comparatively retiring disposition, and was highly respected for his integrity and probity.

Mr. Scranton was twice married, (first) Nov. 26, 1827, in Madison, to Artemisia Hand, born Sept. 15, 1807, and died June 12, 1838; she was a daughter of Daniel and Artemisia (Meigs) Hand, and a granddaughter of Capt. Daniel Hand. Children by this union: (1) Ichabod Lee, sketch of whom follows; (2) Artemisia Meigs, born April 14, 1831, died Sept. 10, 1832; (3) Artemisia Meigs (2), born Sept. 7, 1833, married William Skinner; (4) Daniel Hand, born Jan. 15, 1838, died in infancy. For his second wife Mr. Scranton wedded Lucey Ann Easton, born March 1, 1808, in New York, died March 6, 1880, and is buried in Madison cemetery. By this union there was one child, Mary Augusta, born June 8, 1848, died July 2, 1848.

(VII) Ichabod Lee Scranton, whose name opens this memoir, received his education in part at the district schools of Madison, in part at Lee's Academy, and at an early age commenced "a life on the ocean wave," first on his father's vessel. At the age of eighteen he was part owner and master of the sloop "Falcon" in the produce trade to New York and other ports on the Atlantic coast. For over thirty years he was engaged in the coasting trade, freighting, etc., after which he took up agricultural pursuits on the Leete farm at East River, where he is now living retired. Mr. Scranton is a man of education, well read, well known and highly respected, a member of the Congregational Church, and a member of the I. O. O. F. He is a Republican in politics, and in 1880 was elected on that ticket to the State Legislature, and served on the committee on Sales of Land.

Capt. Scranton has been twice married, (first) May 18, 1853, in Madison, to Deborah Ward Scranton, born Feb. 9, 1834, and died June 22, 1877; she was a daughter of Ichabod Benjamin and Fanny Antha (Wilcox) Scranton, and granddaughter of Abraham and Lucy (Stone) Scranton, the former of whom was a soldier in the war of the Revolution from the time he was sixteen years old up to the close of the conflict. Children born to this marriage: (1) Wallace Lee, born June 24, 1854, is a mechanical engineer of Madison; he married Harriet ("Hattie") Crompton, daughter of George Crompton; one child, Catherine Deborah, born in 1886, graces their home. (2) Benjamin Hand, born Nov. 7, 1856, resides in Detroit, Mich., and is president of the American Electrical Heater Co.; he married Nancy Andrews. (3) Daniel Hand, born May 22, 1859, married Oct. 11, 1888, Alida Josephine Scranton; he resides in Trenton, N. J., and represents R. G. Dun & Co.'s Mercantile agency. (4) Lizzie Ward, born Dec. 17, 1863, married Edwin W. Munger. (5) George Edward, born Aug. 1, 1865, lives in Chicago; he married Julia Jerome, of Detroit, Mich. (6) William Skinner, born Feb. 22, 1873, is in the building and loan business, and running a Pan-American hotel at Buffalo. On June 20, 1900, in Buffalo, he married Ethel Blackstone. For his second wife Capt. Scranton married, in 1879, in New Haven, Mrs. Emily (Isbell) Lee, of Killingworth, Conn., widow of Newton Lee. She died in 1884, and is buried in Madison cemetery. There were no children by this marriage.

MICHAEL DONOHUE, retired merchant, Waterbury, of which city he has been a resident since 1836, is a native of Ireland, born June 18, 1817, in County Cavan.

Bryan Donohue, father of our subject, and who never left his native land, Erin, was a farmer there all his days. He married Ellen Lynch, also of County Cavan, and a family of eight children were born to them, named as follows: Thomas, Patrick, James, Bryan, Michael, Ann, Bridget and Mary. Of these, Mary is yet living in Ireland; and Patrick came to America, lived in Waterbury for a time, and then went to Wisconsin, where he died. All the rest, except our subject, are also deceased.

Michael Donohue, whose name introduces these lines, attended school in his native land, also helped on his father's farm, and at the age of nineteen, came to the United States, landing at New York after a voyage of over seven weeks in a sailing vessel, there being no steamships in those days. From New York he came direct to Waterbury, in 1836, and has been here ever since, except for a short time spent in Wisconsin, where he bought 100 acres of land. He is now the oldest living Irishman in the city, all those that were here when he came being dead. For a time he worked in Benedict & Burnham's factory, before the days of steam power, when bells were rung to call the people to work, and he well remembers the hard times of 1837, when everything was at a standstill, and during that long-to-be remembered financial crisis not a bell was heard from the six factories in Waterbury.

About the year 1840 Mr. Donohue embarked in the grocery business at the corner of Bridge and Baldwin streets, and successfully conducted same for several years, or until 1842, when he retired, having amassed a comfortable competence.

In 1840 Mr. Donohue married Bridget Coyle, a native of County Longford, Ireland, and seven children were born to this union, a brief record of them being as follows: Thomas (deceased) was a lawyer in Waterbury; Michael (deceased) was a painter; James died in infancy; Helen is the widow of Maurice Grelle; Mary A. is a school teacher in Waterbury; Kate is the deceased wife of Albert Beach, of Waterbury; and the youngest died in infancy. The mother of these passed from earth Jan. 16, 1892. In religious faith Mr. Donohue is a member of Immaculate Conception parish, Roman Catholic Church. When he came to Waterbury there was no Catholic priest nearer than New Haven. A Democrat in politics, his first presidential vote was cast for Martin Van Buren; in municipal matters he has served his adopted city as councilman and as a member of the board of education. He owns considerable property in Waterbury, which he rents, and he is one of the most popular men in the city and vicinity, all his fellow countrymen looking up to him as to a patriarch.

SUMNER WESLEY BRAY, a highly esteemed resident of Milford, in which town he ranks among the most thrifty farmers, was born in Dover, Maine, March 21, 1838, son of Sumner and Sarah (Shipley) Bray. The family is of English origin, and his great-grandfather was born in England.

Daniel Bray, the grandfather of our subject, was born probably in Maine, where he spent his manhood, engaged in farming. He married, and had the following children: Daniel is a farmer near Houlton, Aroostook Co., Maine; Asa was a farmer in that State; Lebbens is a Methodist minister; Comings was also an M. E. preacher; Cyrus is a farmer in Maine; Sumner is mentioned more fully below; Betsey (deceased) was a school teacher; Jane married Moses Washburn; Phoebe, a school teacher, died unmarried.

Sumner Bray, our subject's father, was born in 1811, in Minot, Maine, and followed farming for many years, dying in 1885. His wife, Sarah (Shipley), was born in Maine, and her father was a native of the same State. They had four children: Mary died unmarried, aged twenty-one; Sumner W., our subject, was next in the order of birth;

Sarah married Elijah Marrell (now deceased), a native of Maine, and a farmer and carpenter by occupation; Willard is a farmer in Milford, Connecticut.

Our subject assisted his father on the homestead until he reached the age of twenty-three, and, though his advantages were inferior to those enjoyed by the youth of the present day, he secured a practical education in the neighboring district school, attending until eighteen years old. While under the parental roof he gave his earnings to his father, and his own start in life was accordingly humble, his only capital being a full stock of energy and ambition. Hard work and persevering industry, however, supplied the financial lack, and before many years had elapsed he was on the high road to prosperity. Shortly after his marriage he located in West Upton, Mass., where he was employed for seven years in a straw factory. Here his native ability for getting the best results in whatever he undertakes soon asserted itself. He began very modestly, but his faithful services and steady habits were noted by his employer, W. Knowlton, who rewarded them with advancement, so that at the end of the period mentioned he had charge of the large farm of that gentleman, who owned 3,000 acres of land, and kept much stock. Mr. Bray also filled numerous positions of responsibility in and about the factory, being general superintendent of the outside work and having charge of the shipping. In 1870 he left, of his own accord, and came to Milford, New Haven Co., Conn., taking a similar position in the factory there, and so continued for about fifteen years. At the end of that time he purchased his present farm, but instead of taking possession at once he went to Scarsdale, N. Y., to manage a farm for William Adams, of No. 33 Wall street, New York City. The position came unsolicited, Mr. Bray having the reputation of being a first-class farmer.

Returning to Milford four years later our subject engaged in farming at his homestead, an attractive place of fifty-six acres, where he now makes a specialty of raising garden stuff and dairying. Mr. Bray has erected all the buildings on this place, which under his systematic management has been brought to a high state of cultivation. He has succeeded, by constant thrift, in acquiring a very comfortable competence, and has succeeded equally well in maintaining the high standards of integrity and honor which were early set before him. Reared under Christian influences, and impressed with the value of a good name, he has never swerved from the paths laid out for him in his youth, all his transactions bearing the stamp of honesty and straightforwardness. To-day he stands high in the esteem of his fellow men, a credit to his parentage and to the community which has so long claimed him. Mr. Bray is very unassuming in his manners and habits. He takes an intelligent interest in public affairs, is a staunch Republican in politics, and is conscientious in the discharge of what he believes to be his duty as a citizen.

In July, 1861, Mr. Bray was united in marriage with Miss Hattie Field, of Garland, Maine, who was born July 16, 1838, a daughter of Capt. William Field, a well-known sea captain. All Mr. Bray's children were by this union, viz.: Edgar, born May 27, 1863, died in infancy. Ervin J., born Aug. 1, 1864, is married and has three children, Bessie M., James S. and Helen; he is employed in a straw factory in Brooklyn. Seyston V., born March 3, 1869, is a conductor in the North Haven freight yard; he is married and has one child, Elliott. Lillian, born July 11, 1870, died in infancy. Howard E., born March 9, 1874, died in infancy. William S., born Sept. 25, 1880, died May 1, 1901; he was a most promising young man, superior in every way, and of great help to his father, having always lived at home. The mother of these passed away Nov. 28, 1881. On June 17, 1883, in Milford, Mr. Bray married, for his second wife, Mrs. Martha Ellen (Dickey) Clements, who was born in 1838 in Cornwallis, Nova Scotia, daughter of George and Sarah Jane (Bennett) Dickey, who had a family of nine children. Mr. Dickey was a farmer by occupation. Mrs. Dickey now makes her home with her daughter, Mrs. Bray, in Milford, and, though almost ninety-one years old, is well preserved and enjoys good health. Mrs. Bray is a thorough business woman, and has proved an efficient helpmate to her energetic husband, who attributes much of his success to her careful management and industry. She is a Baptist in religious connection, and our subject is identified with the Congregational Church.

HERBERT CLARK BALDWIN, a representative farmer and one of the most influential and popular citizens of Beacon Falls, is a native of New Haven county, born in the town of Oxford Sept. 3, 1840, son of Lucian Baldwin.

Our subject's father was born Feb. 6, 1800, in what is now Naugatuck, but was then known as Waterbury. The grandfather, Mathew Baldwin, spent his life as a farmer in Naugatuck. In his family were seven children, namely: Alanson, who engaged in farming in Naugatuck until his death; Marshall, also a farmer of that town; Lucian, the father of our subject; Miles, who died young; Lockey, who married a Mr. Wooster, a farmer of Naugatuck; Emeline, who married a Mr. Sperry, a farmer of Milford; and Harriette.

By occupation Lucian Baldwin was a farmer and school teacher. In politics he was a Whig. He died Sept. 20, 1855, honored and respected by all who knew him. He first married Laura Johnson, and they had one child. The mother died young, and Mr. Baldwin married Aurelia Tolles, who was born in Bethany, this county, Aug. 12, 1803, and died Sept. 21, 1889. Her father, Daniel Tolles, was a farmer of Bethany. Our subject is the fifth in the order of birth in a family of seven children, the others being as follows: Mary T., born July 8, 1833, died Jan. 1, 1837; Ellen A., born Dec. 5, 1834, died April 5, 1836; Milo L., born March 12, 1836, died May 23, 1864; Henry D., born Aug. 15, 1837, was a stone mason by trade, and died Nov. 15, 1882; Edward W., born May 29, 1843, is a hotel-keeper in Boston, Mass.; and Ellen A., born March 20, 1846, is the wife of William D. Gilbert, a carpenter of Derby.

During his boyhood and youth Herbert C. Baldwin attended the local schools and assisted in the labors of the home farm. He was fifteen years of age at the time of his father's death, when more of the farm work fell to his share, and for three years thereafter he also worked for neighboring farmers. In September, 1861, he laid aside all personal interests and joined the boys in blue, being mustered in at New Haven, Nov. 7th, as a member of Company K, 13th Conn. V. I., which was first assigned to the Department of the Gulf. He participated in the engagements at Georgia Landing, Irish Bend, Cane River, Mansuary Plains, and the siege of Port Hudson; was also through the Red River campaign, and in 1864 was transferred with his command to Virginia, having re-enlisted for three years' more service. There under Gen. Sheridan, he took part in the battles of Berryville, Winchester, Fisher Hill and Cedar Creek, where he was wounded. He was made corporal Dec. 12, 1862; sergeant, Aug. 27, 1863; first sergeant, Nov. 1, 1864; second lieutenant, Jan. 1, 1865; and was brevetted first lieutenant to date from March 13, 1865, for gallant and meritorious service at Port Hudson. He was mustered out April 25, 1866, and returned to Oxford. In the fall of that year he bought his present farm of eighty-eight acres, in Oxford, and now included in the town of Beacon Falls, which was incorporated as a town in 1871. He has since devoted his energies, with the most gratifying results, to the cultivation and improvement of this tract.

On Dec. 25, 1866, Mr. Baldwin was united in marriage with Miss Josephine H. Jones, a native of Scott, Cortland Co., N. Y. Her parents, Van Rensselaer and Helen (Clute) Jones, were natives of Onondaga and Saratoga counties, N. Y., respectively, and the father was a farmer and country merchant. He died in 1888, but the mother is still living. They were faithful members of the Baptist Church, and in politics he was a Democrat. To them were born eight children: One that died in infancy; Elizabeth; Harriet; Mary; Josephine H.; another who died in infancy; George; and William. Mr. and Mrs. Baldwin had seven children, whose names and dates of birth are as follows: Edward D., June 11, 1868; Lucian E., Jan. 20, 1870; Alfred C., Dec. 5, 1872; Hattie M., May 2, 1874; Herbert C., Jr., Aug. 8, 1876; William A., Jan. 21, 1884; and Harold T., Dec. 21, 1886. Edward D. died Feb. 18, 1899, and William A. died July 7, 1885, but the others are still living. Lucian

E. is now a traveling salesman, residing in Rye, N. Y., and Alfred C. is an attorney of Derby, Connecticut.

Mr. Baldwin is a member of Upson Post, No. 40, G. A. R., of Seymour, and also of the Grange. Politically he is a staunch supporter of the Republican party, and his fellow citizens, recognizing his worth and ability, have often called him to public office. He has served as assessor; member of the board of relief; justice of the peace; first selectman many years; selectman from 1873 to 1890, inclusive, being chairman of the board during that time with the exception of two years; and represented his town in the State Legislature in 1876, 1880, 1883, 1884, 1891, 1899 and 1901. His public and private records are above reproach, for his career has ever been characterized by the utmost fidelity to duty. He is public-spirited and progressive, and gives his support to all measures for the general good.

RICHARD TALBOT was born in the parish of Dagnal, near London, England, Feb. 28, 1838, a son of George Talbot, who was born in London Oct. 16, 1818. The father was a straw hat and bonnet manufacturer, and was quite successful in his business. He took an active part in London politics, and was a great worker in the Episcopal Church. In 1860 he came to the United States, and set up in his business at Westboro, Mass., and also at South Framingham, same State, for a number of years being engaged in it, but finally removing to Cheshire, Conn., where he lived on a farm several years before his death, Aug. 18, 1888. His remains were interred at Wallingford, Conn. Hannah Norman, of Buckingham county, England, born March 11, 1810, became his wife in 1837, and died in Dunstable, England, June 1, 1850, and was buried in the cemetery at that place. To them were born two children: Richard; and Charles W., now living in Leominster, Mass., where he is an etcher on cutlery.

George J. Talbot, father of George and grandfather of Richard, was engaged as a house decorator in London, and had his place of business on Drury Lane. Born in 1784, he died at the early age of thirty-four. Fannie Paul, his wife, was of the family to which John Paul Jones, the great sailor, belonged. Their children were: Mary M., Mira B., John G. (who died at the age of sixteen years), George and Fannie. George John Talbot, father of George J., was a man of independent means, which largely came to him as an inheritance. His wife's Christian name was Mary Martha, and they had two children, George J. and James. The family sprang from one of the youngest branches of the Shrewsbury family, and is one of the oldest names in England. Its ancestry can be traced farther back than 1442, when John Talbot was knighted and made an Earl.

Richard Talbot was educated at Dunstable, England, and left school at the age of thirteen years, to become an apprentice at the shoemaking trade in Northampton, where he remained seven years. He then worked at his trade in London and in Northampton until he came to this country. Leaving Liverpool, Jan. 19, 1861, he crossed the ocean, and immediately came to Wallingford, employment being secured by him with L. C. Ryerson, where he worked as a boot-maker for about a year. On May 2, 1862, he began business for himself in the Lewis building, on North Main street, where he remained eleven years. For about five years he was on Fair street, and then he built his present store on Centre street. Mr. Talbot is a very skillful workman, and in former days made a specialty of fine custom work, and had several men working for him. At the present time he is devoting his attention to fine repairing, and is carrying a first class stock of boots and shoes.

The oldest business man in Wallingford, his reputation as a boot and shoe maker is second to none in the State.

Mr. Talbot is a member of Accanant Lodge, No. 77, I. O. O. F., where he has passed through the various chairs, and is now chairman of the board of trustees, and he is a member of Atlantic Encampment, No. 28, of Meriden; he is also identified with the Red Men. He has been treasurer of Compass Lodge, No. 9, F. & A. M., since 1878, and has risen to high standing in the Masonic fraternity in the intervening years, having attained the 32d degree. He is enrolled in Keystone Chapter, No. 27, R. A. M.; Hamilton Council, No. 22, R. & S. M.; St. Elmo Commandery, No. 9, K. T.; the Mystic Shrine; and LaFayette Consistory, S. P. R. S., Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite, 32d degree. Politically Mr. Talbot is a Republican, and in his religious belief is a Methodist.

On Nov. 20, 1858, Mr. Talbot was united in marriage with Miss Elizabeth James, of Northamptonshire, England, a daughter of Joseph James. They have had the following children: (1) George J., connected with his father in business at Wallingford, married May Chapman, and is the father of Arthur R.; G. Vernon; Earl C.; Milton A. and Hazel M. (2) Fannie E. died at the age of thirteen months. (3) Frank W., a silver smith with R. Wallace & Sons, married Mrs. Sarah Shries, of Kansas. (4) William A., a railway mail clerk on the N. Y., N. H. & H. R. R., between Springfield and New York, has his home in Springfield; he married Miss Mattie M. Wilcox, of New Haven, and has two children: Frank E. and Louise W. (5) Harrie J., born Jan. 12, 1860, is employed at the factory of R. Wallace & Sons; he married Miss Emma A. Williams, of Wallingford, who died May 2, 1900. (6) Frances A. died June 20, 1872.

WILBUR W. SMITH. One of the best known citizens of Seymour is its genial and popular postmaster, the subject of this sketch. For many years he has resided in that flourishing little city, and by his fellow citizens he has been frequently honored at the polls. He was a veteran officer of distinction and merit.

Captain Smith was born in Westville, Conn., Jan. 9, 1829, a son of Sylvester and Henrietta (Cadwell) Smith. The father, a prominent paper manufacturer, was born in Springfield, Mass., in 1808, and in 1832 removed to Seymour. There he found work in a paper mill, following it for a number of years. Later he began the manufacture of paper and continued the business successfully until 1869. At that time he was the oldest paper manufacturer at Seymour. He was also engaged in the manufacture of strawboard, employing a large number of hands. Sylvester Smith was a man of unusually forceful character. He was ardent in his political convictions, a prominent church worker and in every sense public spirited and enterprising. In politics he was a Republican and twice he was elected a member of the State Legislature, first in 1850 from the town of Derby, which then included Seymour, and later in 1865, from the latter town. Himself and wife were prominent members of the M. E. Church; in fact Mr. Smith was a leading spirit in the denomination and often conducted religious services, preaching in every village within a radius of twenty miles. He accumulated considerable real estate, the rewards of his manufacturing business. He was a member of Mechanics Lodge, I. O. O. F., serving many years as chaplain of the Lodge. He died in 1892, aged eighty-four years. His worthy helpmeet died aged eighty-two years. To Sylvester and Henrietta Smith were born twelve children, four of whom, our subject; Mary, wife of Seth Warner; Martha, wife of William B. Bissell; and Robert N., a paper maker of Seymour, are still living.

The education of Wilbur W. Smith was received in the common schools, and he then began work in his father's mill, in which service he continued with increasing responsibility and duties until his enlistment in 1862 in Company H, 20th Conn., V. I. It was largely through the efforts of Capt. Smith that the company was enlisted. He was commissioned its first lieutenant, and in January, 1863, was promoted to captain of Company C., same regiment, serving in that rank until the close of the war. The 20th Connecticut was first assigned to the 12th Army Corps, First Division, and later to the 20th Corps. Our subject participated in a number of severe engagements, including Chancellorsville, Gettysburg and about twelve battles fought by Gen. Sherman in his march from Atlanta to the Sea. At Chancellorsville Captain Smith was taken prisoner and confined for a time in Libby Prison, rejoining his regiment when exchanged.

When mustered out as captain at the close of the war, Capt. Smith returned home and resumed his connection with his father's paper mill, until the latter's retirement in 1869. He then assumed charge of the business and conducted it until 1890, when he closed the mill. In 1891 he was appointed postmaster at Seymour, serving four years. In 1899 he was re-appointed and is now filling his second term. The office has steadily risen in importance, and is now a third class office, handling 3,000 letters per day, and Postmaster Smith has two assistants. In 1896 he was elected first selectman and town agent and re-elected in 1897 and 1898, successively, serving until October, 1899. Among other local offices he has filled are those of assessor and member of the school board.

In 1850 Mr. Smith was married to Miss Jane M. Wooster, one of the seven children of Mark and Eliza (Lake) Wooster, the former a farmer of Oxford, and at one time sheriff, and a member of an old and influential family that took an active part in public affairs. To Mr. and Mrs. Smith was born one daughter, Jennie W., a young lady of many accomplishments, who is now officiating as the efficient assistant of her father in the postoffice. The estimable wife of our subject died June 4, 1899, aged sixty-nine years. She attended the Episcopal Church. To her surviving parent Miss Jennie is a most devoted daughter and helper, both in the office and at home.

Captain Smith is a staunch Republican in politics. He is a member of the Morning Star Lodge, F. & A. M., of Seymour, and for two years has been its secretary. He is also a prominent member of Upson Post, No. 40, G. A. R., and for four years has served as its commander. Possessing that kindness and courtesy which mark the gentleman, and that camaraderie which invites respect and friendship, Capt. Smith has a warm place in the hearts of his fellow men. He has a large circle of friends and is widely popular. With his genial manners are associated a high integrity, a public spirit and keen business judgment, which make him one of Seymour's most valued citizens.

ANSON F. ABBOTT, one of the most prominent and influential citizens of Waterbury, and a man intensely interested in every good work and word, was born in Middlebury, this county, April 23, 1830.

Alvin Abbott, his father, was born in the same place May 7, 1794, and died in Waterbury Jan. 23, 1861. Robert Abbott, the ancestor of the family on these shores, was one of three brothers from England. He came to Wetherfield, Conn., about 1640, thence moving to New Haven, and in 1645 to Branford, where his son Daniel was born. Stephen Abbott, son of Daniel, married Hannah Frisbie in 1725, and moved to Middlebury, Conn., in 1750. His son, Daniel Abbott, was born in 1726, and married Lois Smith, and their eldest son was David, the grandfather of Anson F. The Smiths were of Wallingford, Connecticut.

David Abbott, the grandfather of Anson F., was born June 6, 1764, in Middlebury, where he died. On May 30, 1786, he married Sarah Tyler, daughter of James Tyler, and sister of Rev. Bennett Tyler, D. D., at one time president of Andover Theological Seminary, and a noted man of his time. David Abbott and his wife settled on the old farm in Middlebury, where they reared the following family: Eben, born in 1789; Philomelia, born in 1791, who died young; Alvin, born May 7, 1794, the father of Anson F.; David, born in 1797; Sally, born in 1799, who died young; Anna, born in 1800; Philo, born in 1802; Philomelia (2), born in 1805; Emma, born in 1807; Ruth, born in 1810; Iva, born in 1812; and Sarah, born in 1817. Those who reached maturity married and reared families. Ira was a Methodist minister, and the other sons were all farmers.

Alvin Abbott, the father of Anson F., was reared in Middlebury, and studied for the ministry, but was prevented from following it as a life work by long-continued ill health, followed by a permanent nervous infirmity. He married Fanny Wooster, who was born in Oxford, Conn., April 3, 1794, and died Feb. 3, 1884. Thomas Wooster, her father, was captured by the Indians when a young man and carried off to Canada, where he suffered many hardships. At the close of the Revolutionary war he returned from Canada and settled in Oxford, Conn., where he died at the age of forty-three. He married Elizabeth Bishop. Thomas Wooster, father of this Thomas, was a grandson of a Wooster who, according to family traditions, came from England and settled at Derby, Conn. After marriage Alvin Abbott and his wife settled on a part of the old homestead farm in Middlebury, and there lived until 1840, when they moved to New Haven, in 1846 coming to Waterbury. They had eight children: (1) Larnon W., born Jan. 11, 1818, died April 12, 1900; he was a Methodist minister. (2) Benjamin, born Aug. 10, 1820, was a farmer, and died in Nebraska March 21, 1898. (3) Charles S., born Dec. 12, 1822, is now living in Bridgeport, Conn., where he is a printer, and owns an office. (4) Lochinvar, born Jan. 11, 1825, was a carpenter, and died in Waterbury May 14, 1888. (5) Alvin V., born Dec. 12, 1827, is now a Methodist minister. (6) Anson F. is mentioned below. (7) Nathan B., born Feb. 10, 1833, is a contractor in Columbus, Ohio. (8) James M., born June 12, 1835, was a manufacturer in Waterbury, and died at Noroton, Conn., June 15, 1893.

Anson F. Abbott spent the first ten years of his life in Middlebury, two years in New Haven, and five years on a farm in Watertown, Conn. He attended district school, and the academy winters, and when his school days were over, served three years as clerk in the stores of Amos A. Gridley and Eli Curtiss, removing to Waterbury in 1850. As a bookkeeper and salesman he worked six years in the store of the Benedict & Burnham Mfg. Co., and with the Benedict & Scovill Co., of which latter company he was secretary and then became secretary and treasurer of the Waterbury Building and Loan Association, which ceased to do business in 1867. Since that time Mr. Abbott has been extensively engaged in real estate, insurance and investments. In September, 1901, he admitted Howard T. Parker to a partnership in his business, which is now conducted in the name of Abbott & Parker.

Mr. Abbott and Miss Nancy H. Merriman were married Sept. 28, 1852, and to this union seven children have been born: Mary M. is a graduate of Vassar College, and is now a teacher in the Waterbury high school. Anna E. is the wife of Rev. T. M. Peck, an Episcopal minister. Frederick C. is in the real estate business and president of the Southern States Trust Co., in Charlotte, N. C. George Benjamin has a fruit farm in Corning, Cal. Kate B. married Frank B. Deane, and died July 23, 1894. Burton H. died in infancy. John V. is a surveyor in Waterbury. Mrs. Abbott was born in Watertown, where the family of her father, George F. Merriman, a farmer, had been long established.

Mr. Abbott is a Republican of independent proclivities. He and his family are members of the Methodist Church, of which he was trustee and treasurer for twenty-five years and superintendent of the Sunday school for twenty-seven years. Mr. Abbott was the first secretary of the local Y. M. C. A. From his pen has come a history of his church in Waterbury, which appears in a history of that city. In 1858 he organized a Band of Hope in Waterbury, and, always active in temperance work, lent assistance in organizing the Waterbury Women's Christian Temperance Union, and other temperance societies. As a man, a citizen and a gentleman of the old school he is highly respected by all who know him.

WILLIAM SKINNER (deceased), in his lifetime one of Guilford's leading citizens, than whom none was more highly respected, was a member of one of the old settled families of New England, ranking among the best.

(1) John Skinner, the first of the name in New England, was a native of England, born in Braintree, County of Essex. (There is a family tradition that after the revolution in England three brothers by the name of Skinner came to America, one settling in Vermont, one in Maryland, and the third in Connecticut, but of this there is no reliable record.) (1) John Skinner was a member of the Rev. Thomas Hooker company that settled in Hartford, Conn., and he became one of the original proprietors. He died in Hartford in 1650. In Windsor, Conn., he married Mary, daughter of Joseph Loomis, and after the death of Mr. Skinner she wedded, Nov. 13, 1654, Owen Tudor, of Windsor, in which town she passed the rest of her days, dying Aug. 10, 1680. Children born to John and Mary (Loomis) Skinner: (1) Mary, born Dec. 1, 1638, married Robert Reeves, of Hartford; (2) Ann, born in 1639, married John Colt, the ancestor of the Colts of Hartford; (3) John, sketch of whom follows; (4) Joseph, born in 1643, married Mary Filley, of Windsor; and (5) Richard, born in 1646, removed to Colchester, Conn.

(II) John Skinner, son of (I) John, was born in 1641 in Hartford, and passed all his life there, dying Sept. 15, 1690. In 1662 he married Mary, daughter of Joseph Easton, and they had seven children, as follows: (1) Mary, born in 1664, married Joshua Carter; (2) John, sketch of whom follows; (3) Joseph D., born Aug. 26, 1669, married Mary Grant, of Windsor; (4) Nathaniel, born April 5, 1672, married Mary Gillette, of Windsor, May 13, 1706 (he removed to Colchester, and was the father of Rev. Thomas Skinner, pastor of Church at Westchester); (5) Richard, born Jan. 16, 1674, married Sarah Garrie; (6) Sarah, born Nov. 4, 1677; and (7) Thomas, born Nov. 15, 1680, married Sarah Grant. The mother of this family died June 18, 1695, and she and her husband were both buried in Hartford cemetery.

(III) John Skinner, son of (II) John, was born March 1, 1666, in Hartford, and there passed his entire life, dying Oct. 27, 1743. On Feb. 22, 1693, he married Rachel Pratt, who died Aug. 17, 1748. Their children: (1) Rachel, born Feb. 2, 1694, and died Jan. 18, 1787, married, May 19, 1726, Ebenezer Wells, who died Dec. 27, 1737; (2) John, sketch of whom follows; (3) Daniel, born Jan. 19, 1699, died Jan. 15, 1701; (4) Timothy, born Feb. 8, 1701, married, May, 1738, Ruth Colson; (5) Mary, baptized May 26, 1704; (6) Hannah, born June 27, 1707, died Oct. 23, 1707.

(IV) John Skinner, son of (III) John, was born July 1, 1697, and died Aug. 14, 1773; married, Dec. 24, 1724, Mary Turner, of Hartford; she died Aug. 15, 1771. Their children: (1) John, born March 29, 1726, married (first) Mary Whiting, Nov. 21, 1748; she died May 23, 1772, he on May 19, 1794. (2) Mary, born March 22, 1727, married James Steele Dec. 7, 1749. (3) Deliverance, baptized March 8, 1729, married March 26, 1752, Jared Seymour. (4) Ephraim, born Aug. 1, 1730, died in infancy; (5) Rachel, baptized Oct. 9, 1737, married Jan. 9, 1757, Ashbel Steele. (6) Ephraim, baptized Feb. 24, 1737. (7) Elizabeth, baptized Aug. 22, 1742, married Oct. 9, 1765, Joseph Gladings, of Windham. (8) Nathaniel sketch of whom follows.

(V) Nathaniel Skinner, son of (IV) John, was born in Hartford July 28, 1745, and passed all his days there. It is supposed that he fought in the Revolutionary war. Twice married, for his first wife he wedded July 28, 1769, Rebecca Bigelow, and for his second he married, in 1781, Margaret Hunt. The names and dates of birth of his children are as follows: (1) Nathaniel, 1782, died 1784; (2) Crosby, 1783; (3) Nathaniel Leonard, sketch of whom follows; (4) Alexander, 1787; (5) John, 1788; (6) Samuel H., 1790; (7) Charles King, 1792; (8) George, 1793, died in infancy; (9) George (2), 1795; (10) Thomas Chapman, 1800; (11) William Thomas; and (12) Crosby.

(VI) Nathaniel Leonard, son of (V) Nathaniel, and father of the subject of these lines, was born in 1785, in Hartford, and there educated. He was a man of prominence and considerable literary ability, being at one time editor of a newspaper in Bridgeport, where he died in 1826, in middle life. By his wife, Abigail (Weller), of Boston, he had nine children, their names and dates of birth being as follows: (1-2) Abigail Weller and Crosby (twins), born 1811; (3) Sarah Copeland, born 1813, married John Worstell, of Ohio; (4) Maria, born in 1814, died in infancy; (5) William, sketch of whom follows; (6) Nathaniel, born 1818, died in 1873; (7) Abigail, born 1820, died in early life; (8) George, born 1823, died in New York, 1900; and (9) Charles, born 1825, died in New York, 1890. The entire family were members of the Episcopal Church.

(VII) William Skinner, the subject proper of this memoir, was born, in 1816, in Bridgeport, Conn., and was ten years old when his father died. Removing then to Philadelphia, to live with his uncle, Rev. George Weller, he received his education there. On his return to Connecticut he learned the printing trade with Sidney Babcock, in New Haven, later becoming engaged in the stationery and music business in that city with a Mr. Sperry, of Woodbridge, Conn., under the firm name of Skinner & Sperry. In 1876 the partnership was dissolved, and Mr. Skinner retired into private life, making his home in Guilford, where he passed the rest of his days, dying Oct. 1, 1896; his remains were laid to rest in Grove street cemetery, New Haven.

Mr. Skinner was a lifelong Democrat, but never an aspirant for official preferment. In matters of religion he was a member of the Episcopal Church, for many years was a vestryman of St. Paul's Church, New Haven, and for ten years was warden of Christ Church, Guilford. Socially he was affiliated with the F. & A. M., and I. O. O. F., at New Haven. Fidelity to duty was one of the predominating traits of his character, and in all the relations of life he was found true and faithful to the trusts reposed in him, thereby winning the confidence and high regard of all.

In New York City, in October, 1857, William Skinner married Artemisia Meigs Scranton, who was born in Madison, Conn., a daughter of Col. Ichabod Lee Scranton, mention of whom is made in the sketch of Capt. Ichabod Lee Scranton elsewhere. Five children graced this union, namely: (1) William Scranton, born Sept. 23, 1858, is engaged in the lumber business in New York City; he married Bertha Anderson Booth, of New Haven, and they have one child, Theodora Booth. (2) Elizabeth Augusta, born Aug. 23, 1860, married Frank Elbert Platt, and they reside in Scranton, Penn.; they have four children—Margaret Seranton, born Jan. 9, 1886; Joseph Curtis, Nov. 18, 1887; Philip Skinner, Nov. 20, 1889; and Leonard Seranton, June 12, 1900. (3) Alice Weller, born Dec. 18, 1862. (4) Artemisia Hand, Aug. 2, 1868, and (5) George Edward Hand, Sept. 3, 1878; all three reside in Guilford.

DANIEL H. GRANNISS, a leading and representative citizen of New Haven, has for many years been identified with the oyster business. He has done much to promote the commercial activity, advance the general welfare and secure the material development of his town, and is recognized as one of the most useful and valued of its citizens.

Mr. Granniss was born Nov. 23, 1821, on the farm in East Haven where his brother Lyman now resides, and comes of good old Revolutionary stock, his grandfather, Samuel Granniss, having aided the Colonies in achieving their independence. His great-grandfather was Joseph Granniss. The father of our subject, who also bore the name of Joseph, was born in the town of East Haven, July 24, 1791, and by occupation was a farmer and oyster dealer, being one of the first to establish himself in the oyster business in his locality. He was engaged in the wholesale trade. On Nov. 26, 1812, he married Miss Louie Luddington, who was born July 22, 1794, and they became the parents of thirteen children, namely: (1) Almira, born Aug. 22, 1813, died March 11, 1888. On April 4, 1833, she married John Lindsey, by whom she had three children—Maria, born Oct. 17, 1833, died April 7, 1878; Olive A., born June 25, 1836, died Oct. 29, 1850; and Hannah A., born June 11, 1838, died April 11, 1897. By her second husband, John Foote, she had two—Harriet Emma, born Sept. 2, 1846, living; and Henry H., born March 16, 1850. (2) Joseph A., born May 25, 1815, died May 1, 1895, in Mount Carmel, Conn. On May 16, 1838, he married Eliza Tuttle, daughter of Edward Tuttle, and they had three sons and three daughters—Leander C., born May 29, 1841, died Sept. 17, 1847; Adelia S., born April 14, 1843; Charles W., born Aug. 25, 1844, died Feb. 4, 1845; Almira F., born Jan. 1, 1846; Anna Eliza, born Sept. 17, 1847; and Charles E., born March 27, 1852. (3) Ebenezer C., born Feb. 21, 1817, removed in 1846 to Macon, Ga., and died there Feb. 25, 1890. He married Huldah E. Luddington, and they had five children—Charlotte A., born July 22, 1838, died Sept. 5, 1838; Horace M., born July 16, 1839, is living in Orlando, Fla.; Edward J., born Jan. 9, 1841, died July 4, 1863 (he joined the Confederate army, in which he held the rank of lieutenant, and was killed while doing his duty); Emma A., born Nov. 22, 1849, died March 2, 1893; and Harriet L., born July 12, 1851, died Sept. 17, 1874. (4) Sylvester M., born Jan. 4, 1820, died May 4, 1882, in Hamden, Conn. On Oct. 6, 1847, he was united in marriage with Lois R. Curtis, and they had one child, Lois

A., born April 14, 1854, who died in infancy. Mrs. Granniss died April 29, 1854, and on Sept. 25, 1854, he married Lyda L. Bradley, by whom he also had one child, Joseph W., born July 14, 1857. The mother died Sept. 24, 1875, her death being caused by the explosion of a lamp. For his third wife Mr. Granniss married Ellen H. Blatchley, on Sept. 1, 1881. They had no children. (5) Daniel H., our subject, is next in the order of birth. (6) Willard, born March 2, 1823, died May 28, 1850, in Galveston, Texas. He never married. (7) Henry L., born April 10, 1825, died Dec. 17, 1845, unmarried. (8) Harriet was born March 4, 1827. (9) Hezekiah, born Dec. 16, 1828, died Oct. 4, 1850, unmarried. (10) Collis B., born Nov. 13, 1830, is a prominent and successful dairy farmer of New Haven; he is mentioned elsewhere. (11) Harriet L., born Feb. 10, 1834, died Oct. 4, 1850. (12) Lyman and (13) Louie, twins, were born March 3, 1837. The former is now a prominent dairy farmer and ice dealer, residing on the old homestead in East Haven. On April 23, 1862, he married Antoinette M. Thompson, of East Haven, and they had two children—Henry H., born Nov. 5, 1863, died March 30, 1865; and Lon Elizabeth, born Nov. 14, 1868, died May 23, 1874. Louie married Dwight Kellogg, and died in Baltimore, Md., April 21, 1889. Hezekiah and Harriet left home Sept. 28, 1850, with the intention of journeying to Macon, Ga., to spend the winter with their brother, Ebenezer. Going to New York they took passage on the barge "Isaac Meade," but when fourteen hours out from harbor they encountered a storm, and the ship was lost Oct. 4, 1850, both being drowned. The father died Feb. 29, 1876, the mother Aug. 12, 1859.

At the age of eight Daniel H. Granniss was bound out to Daniel Hinman, of Harwinton, Conn., for about two years. He then returned home, where he remained until seventeen years of age, and next learned the joiner's trade with Elbert L. Munsel, serving a four years' apprenticeship. He continued to follow that trade until he entered the service of his country during the dark days of the Rebellion. On Aug. 12, 1862, he enlisted in Company D, 15th C. V.; was mustered into the United States service at New Haven; and from there was ordered to Washington, D. C., where the regiment was stationed in defence of the city for some time. He participated in the battles of Fredericksburg, Suffolk and Yorktown, and after eighteen months of active service was transferred to the War Department at Washington, where he remained until honorably discharged, June 29, 1865.

Mr. Granniss married Miss Abigail W. Broughton, who was born in East Haven April 30, 1822, and died Aug. 30, 1876. They had five children, as follows: (1) George H., born Nov. 8, 1846, died July 11, 1891. He married Henrietta White, who was born in Bridgeport, Conn., April 17, 1847, and they had one child, Edward L., born Sept.

1, 1868. (2) Willard A., born March 16, 1849, married Parthenia Laverre, and they have one son, Willard A. (3) Lillian A., born May 13, 1854, died April 1, 1861. (4) Nettie L., born March 11, 1859, is the wife of Robert C. Hart, of Fair Haven. (5) Harriet A., born April 11, 1862, died April 14, 1864. Each year the Granniss family has a reunion, which on Aug. 20, 1901, was held at the home of our subject, some sixty being present on this occasion, the thirty-fifth reunion at which he presided.

Soon after his return from the war Mr. Granniss opened a meat market and grocery store in Fair Haven, which he conducted for about ten years, and then embarked in the wholesale and retail oyster business, which he has since carried on with marked success. His son, George H., was engaged in business with him until his death. He was also a soldier in the Civil war, enlisting on the same day as his father, and in the same company and regiment, being one of the youngest soldiers from Connecticut to bear arms in that struggle. He participated in all the battles in which his father took part and was made color-bearer of the regiment. At the battle of Kinston he was captured with his command. For many years he was a prominent member of Admiral Foote Post, G. A. R., of New Haven, and also of Polar Star Lodge, I. O. O. F. In politics he was a Republican. Our subject is also one of the leading members of both of these orders, having united with the Odd Fellows Society in 1854 and filled all the chairs in the local lodge, at present serving as treasurer, which office he has filled for fourteen years. Politically he is a strong Republican, and he never withholds his support from any enterprise for the public good.

NOYES S. WILMOT was born Sept. 16, 1830, in that portion of the town of Naugatuck which was then a part of Waterbury. He is a grandson of Valentine Wilmot, who was born in what is now Bethany (then Milford), where both he and his wife died, and was a farmer by occupation. He was the father of two children, John and Finnette. The daughter married Eliphalet Tyrrell, a farmer of Hartland, Connecticut.

John Wilmot, the father of Noyes S., was born in Bethany in 1779, and spent the greater portion of his life there, engaged in farming. He married Asenath Clark, who was born April 29, 1789, in Old Milford, a daughter of Andrew and Annie Clark. They were also born in Old Milford, the father about 1751. He was a farmer by occupation, and died in Middlebury, Conn., about 1835, aged eighty-four years. His wife also died at the age of eighty-four. She was a granddaughter, on the maternal side, of Gov. Treat, of Connecticut. Andrew Clark and his wife were the parents of nine children, Nancy, Nathan, Asenath, Andrew, Samuel, Julia, Edmund, Susan and Mary. Nathan was a farmer as well as carpenter, and lived in Middlebury. Asenath, as has been said, was the wife of John Wilmot, and the mother of Noyes S. Nancy married Caleb Nettleton, also a farmer, who was the father of George Nettleton, of Naugatuck; after her death he married her sister Mary, who passed away in 1896, aged ninety-four years. Andrew was a tailor by trade, and made his home in the South. Samuel married, and was a farmer in Middlebury. Julia became the wife of Almond Clark, of Waterbury. Edmund, who was a tailor in Troy, N. Y., died in Bridgeport aged ninety-two years; he was twice married, each time to a Miss Fry, his wives being sisters; he went to California in 1849. Susan died in infancy.

Andrew Clark served with gallantry and distinction in the patriot army during the Revolution. His first experience as a soldier covered a period of eighteen days under Lieut. Col. Thomas Seymour, at the time of the "Lexington Alarm." From July 10, 1776, until Aug. 5, following, he served in Major Skinner's troop of light horse, and from Sept. 7 to Nov. 10, of that year, he was with the 21st Regiment of militia in New York. Later, from March 12, 1782, to Jan. 12, 1783, he was a member of a company commanded by Capt. Jabez Fitch. He was a Revolutionary pensioner in New Haven county, where he died. The following Wilmots served in the Revolutionary war: John, Daniel, Amos, David, Elisha, Francis, Joel, John A., Joseph, Samuel, Thomas, Timothy, Walter (brother of the grandfather of our subject) and Zophar.

After their marriage our subject's parents settled upon a farm in Bethany, and in April, 1830, removed to Naugatuck. He died in 1837, and his widow Feb. 1, 1887, aged nearly ninety-eight years. Noyes S. Wilmot was the youngest and is the only surviving member of a family of five children. Lewis, a carpenter in New Haven, died about 1891. Lucius died at the age of nineteen. Juliana died when two years old. Edmund A., who was a farmer, died April 6, 1887. The male members of the family were Whigs, and all of the adults became members of the Congregational Church.

Noyes S. Wilmot passed the first seventeen years of his life in Naugatuck, but when his school days were over he went to New Haven to learn the trade of an iron molder. He remained there six years, when he returned to his native place and found work in the Naugatuck Iron Foundry. For thirty years he remained with that concern, manifesting such mechanical skill, fidelity, industry and executive capacity that during twenty-one years he filled the post of superintendent. At the age of fifty-eight he retired, having accumulated a handsome competence, which through judicious investment and wise management he has since materially increased. His home is at Union City, where he owns farms comprising 220 acres. During the Civil war he served one year in Company H., 23d Conn. V. I.

Both socially and as a citizen Mr. Wilmot is deservedly popular, while his high moral worth commands respect. Besides being a member of the G. A. R., he belongs to the Masonic fraternity, the I. O. O. F. and the I. O. R. M. As a Mason he has attained high rank, being a member of Shepard's Lodge, No. 78, A. F. & A. M., Allerton Chapter and Waterbury Council. He is also an officer in the I. O. O. F. Politically he is a Republican, and in religious faith a Congregationalist.

On Nov. 24, 1859, Mr. Wilmot married Miss Mary A. Breneiser, a daughter of Benneville and Lavina (Drinkle) Breneiser. She was born in Reading, Pa., her parents being also natives of that State, although of German extraction. Mr. Wilmot's marriage has been blessed with seven children: Edmund B., Louisa R., Frank H., Charles E., Lewis H., Benneville N. and Mary T. Louisa and Charles are deceased, the former dying in 1895, and the latter in 1893. Edmund and Mary live at home. Frank was formerly superintendent of the Malleable Iron Co., of Bridgeport. Lewis H. is a practicing physician in Ansonia. Benneville N. is a clerk in the Naugatuck National Bank.

HENRY WILLIAM HUBBARD, well and favorably known as a leading manufacturer of carriages in Branford, was born in Hartford, Conn., June 27, 1833, son of Richard and Rhoda (Andrews) Hubbard. The father is supposed to have been a native of Durham, Conn., but he lived a good part of his life in Hartford and Middletown, where he followed the trade of a shoemaker. He died at the home of his son, Henry William, in Branford, Jan. 27, 1860, at the age of seventy-eight years. Richard Hubbard was twice married. By his first wife he had five children, William, Edwin, Hiram, Frederick and Sara A. He married for his second wife Rhoda (Andrews) Graham, of Wallingford, New Haven Co., Conn., and they had four children: Sara A., who married Harvey Barker; Susan, wife of Edward Spencer; and Henry W. and H. Cornelia, twins, the latter of whom married Harvey Beach.

Henry William Hubbard was reared from the age of five years in Middletown, where he received a limited education in the common schools, and at the age of sixteen he was apprenticed to the carriagemaker's trade in Middletown, at which he served six years, becoming a master workman, and developing an unusual business capacity. In 1854 Mr. Hubbard located in East Haddam and engaged in business in partnership with Edward H. Cheney. This partnership was terminated the following year. In 1855 Mr. Hubbard came to Branford, and in October of that year began business with his half-brother, William E. Graham, under the firm name of Graham & Hubbard. This association continued for many years, and when it was terminated the business was divided, Mr. Hubbard taking into his own hands the blacksmith and painting departments. Mr. Graham died in 1889 and Mr. Hubbard has since continued the business in all its branches. Our subject was one of the incorporators of the Branford Savings Bank, and of the James Blackstone Memorial Library.

During the Civil war Mr. Hubbard was a member of Company B, 27th Conn. C. V., Capt. C. L. Ely, enlisting Aug. 22, 1862, for nine months, and being mustered into service on Oct. 3, of the same year. He participated in the desperate battle of Fredericksburg, and was taken prisoner at Chancellorsville, being confined in Castle Thunder about two weeks, after which he was paroled, on May 3, 1863, and for a time was at the parole camp at Annapolis, subsequently at the convalescent camp at Alexandria, Va. From this point he was honorably discharged July 27, 1863, with the rank of corporal, to which he was promoted before the battle of Chancellorsville. On his return from the war he joined Company K, 2d Conn. N. G., and served five years. He entered that command as orderly sergeant, was promoted to second lieutenant, and later to first lieutenant, being discharged with the latter rank.

Mr. Hubbard was married, June 6, 1858, to Miss Emma P. Linsley, a daughter of James and Henrietta (Monger) Linsley, of Branford, the former a native of that place; Mr. Linsley was a carpenter by trade. Mr. and Mrs. Hubbard have three daughters: (1) Ida married Frank W. Jerrold, and has three children, Olive M., Gladys L. and Emma H. (2) Henrietta W. (3) Luella L. is the wife of Wilfred L. Moore, and has one child, Ethel. Mr. Hubbard and his wife are members of the First Baptist Church of Branford, in which he is deacon. In politics he is a Republican. Though no politician, he has been delegate to the county convention, and once was nominated for the Legislature, but was defeated, the town being Democratic. In May, 1901, he was elected Burgess. Mr. Hubbard belongs to Mason Rogers Post, No. 7, G. A. R., and his wife is a member of Mason Rogers Relief Corps, No. 46, which is associated with the Branford post. They are good people and have a host of friends.

JOHN LAMBERT FOOTE. Fortunate is he who has back of him an ancestry honorable and distinguished, and happy is he if his lines of life are cast in harmony therewith.

Our subject, one of the prominent citizens and retired business men of Cheshire, is blessed in this respect, for he springs from one of the oldest and most prominent families of Connecticut. The first to locate here was Nathaniel Foote, who was a pioneer of Wethersfield, Hartford county. His son, Robert Foote, removed from that town to New Haven county, and took up his residence in Wallingford, where he remained until 1678. He then went to Branford, Conn., where he died suddenly, in 1681, at the age of fifty-two years, and was buried there. He was married in 1650, and after his death his widow, Sarah, married Aaron Blachley, of Branford, in 1686.

H. W. Hubbard

John Foote, the sixth child of Robert and Sarah Foote, was born July 24, 1670, and spent his entire life in Branford, dying in 1713. Seven children were born to him and his wife Mary.

John Foote, son of John and Mary, was born in Branford in 1700, and when a young man located in North Branford, where he died Jan. 26, 1777. He was twice married, first Dec. 25, 1733, to Elizabeth Frisbee, who died Feb. 3, 1737, aged twenty-two years. On Aug. 16, 1738, he married Abigail Frisbee, who died May 17, 1779. By the first union there was one son, Jonathan, who was born Jan. 23, 1737, and died in North Branford in 1801. The only child by the second marriage was John, mentioned below.

John Foote, grandfather of our subject, was born in North Branford April 2, 1742, and was graduated at Yale College in 1765. He had studied in the divinity school and was ordained a minister of the Congregational Church, succeeding Rev. Mr. Hall at Cheshire, where he ministered to the spiritual needs of the people until his death, which occurred Aug. 31, 1813, when he was aged seventy-one years. His remains were interred in Cheshire cemetery. He was beloved and respected by the entire community. He was twice married, his first wife being Abigail Hall, of Cheshire, a daughter of Rev. Samuel Hall, and granddaughter of Gov. Jonathan Law, of Connecticut. She died Nov. 19, 1788, at the age of thirty-nine years, and for his second wife he married Eunice Hall, a daughter of John Hall. Her death occurred Jan. 31, 1817. All of his children were by the first marriage, namely: Abigail Sarah Hall, born Jan. 2, 1769, died Jan. 20, 1775; Mary Ann, born Sept. 21, 1770, died Sept. 25, 1775; Lucinda, born May 19, 1772, married Dr. Thomas T. Cornwall, of Cheshire; John Alfred, born Jan. 2, 1774, died Aug. 25, 1794; Abigail M. A., born Sept. 16, 1776, died Aug. 9, 1778; William Lambert, father of our subject, was next in the order of birth; Samuel Augustus, born Nov. 8, 1780, died Sept. 16, 1846; Roderick, born Dec. 15, 1782, died May 16, 1791; and Matilda, born May 6, 1785, died Oct. 9, 1787.

William Lambert Foote, father of our subject, was born in Cheshire Oct. 10, 1778, and attended the schools of his native town. Subsequently he was graduated from the Medical Department of Yale College, and throughout the remainder of his life successfully followed his chosen profession in Cheshire and adjoining towns, having built up an extensive practice. He was quite prominent in public affairs, and was one of the first to hold the office of judge of probate in his town; also served as town clerk, and represented Cheshire in the State Legislature. He was one of the leading and influential residents of the town, and one of the most highly respected, and always faithfully performed his duties of citizenship. In politics he was a lifelong Democrat. Religiously he was a member of the Congregational Church. He died Aug. 9, 1849, and was laid to rest in the family cemetery in Cheshire. In March, 1801, he wedded Mary Scoville, a native of Berlin, Hartford Co., Conn., and daughter of Capt. Daniel Scoville, later of Saybrook, Conn. She, too, was an earnest member of the Congregational Church, and died in that faith Jan. 1, 1861; she was buried in Cheshire cemetery. In their family were six children, of whom John L. is the youngest, and the others were as follows: (1) William Sidney, born Nov. 21, 1802, graduated from Yale College, and became a physician of Ohio. He was married in 1827 to Mary Butler. (2) Mary A., born May 23, 1806, died unmarried April 20, 1888. She possessed a remarkably sweet voice, and sang for a number of years in the Congregational Church of Cheshire. (3) Abigail, born April 28, 1808, was also a singer, and was connected with the choir of the same church. She married Edward Doolittle, who died March 4, 1837, and she died March 29, 1892. (4) Scoville D., born April 10, 1810, married Martha Whiting, of Milford, Conn., and was engaged in merchandising in New York, where he died March 28, 1883. (5) Eliza S., born June 29, 1812, died unmarried March 19, 1892.

John Lambert Foote, whose name introduces this sketch, was born Sept. 14, 1817, and pursued his studies in the district and select schools of Cheshire. While still quite young he worked in a store at New Haven for two years. After his return to Cheshire he was employed at farm labor for a time, and from his wages managed to save $16, with which he embarked in merchandising on a small scale, although only fourteen years of age. By close application to business his trade steadily increased, and from time to time he enlarged his stock until he had a good general store. For over forty-eight years he was successfully engaged in business along that line, and on his retirement, in 1885, had accumulated a handsome fortune, having become one of the wealthiest men of the town. His career seems almost phenomenal, yet his success has by no means been the result of fortunate circumstances. It has come to him through energy, labor and perseverance, directed by an evenly balanced mind and by honorable business principles. From early life he made it his plan to spend less than his income. Although economical, he is liberal. In his religious views and in politics he is independent, and during President Van Buren's administration served as postmaster at Cheshire for four years. Although he is now over eighty-four years of age, he is still quite active in both mind and body. His life has been well spent, and he is now enjoying a well-earned rest, surrounded by a large circle of friends and acquaintances who esteem him highly for his sterling worth.

Gov. Samuel Augustus Foote, an uncle of our subject, was born in Cheshire Nov. 8, 1780, a son of Rev. John and Abigail (Hall) Foote. He was graduated at Yale in 1797, and after studying law engaged in practice in his native village. He married Endocia Hull, a daughter of Gen. Andrew and Elizabeth Mary Ann Hull, of Cheshire, and later became a partner of Gen. Hull in commercial business at New Haven, though he continued to make his home in Cheshire, where his mansion is still standing. He was a member of Congress in 1810; was re-elected in 1823 and 1834; was Speaker of the House of Representatives in the Connecticut Legislature in 1825-26; and was chosen United States senator in 1827. In 1834 he was elected governor of Connecticut, and while in that office received the degree of LL. D. from Yale. He died Sept. 16, 1846, and was buried in Cheshire. His wife died at the home of her son, in Cleveland, Ohio, but her remains were brought back and interred by the side of her husband. In their family were five children, two of whom died in infancy, and the others were: Hon. John A. Foote, a prominent lawyer of Cleveland; Rear Admiral Andrew H. Foote, of the United States navy, who died in New Haven; and Augustus E. Foote, of Cleveland.

CAPT. FREDERICK ALONZO WELD (deceased) was, in his day, one of the best-known whaling captains along this part of the Atlantic coast, and in his long life on the water met with many an adventure. He was born Feb. 1, 1820, in the town of Guilford, and attended the public schools there and on Long Island, whither he removed with his parents while still young. A portion of his boyhood was spent upon a farm, and at the age of twelve he became an apprentice to the jeweler's trade with Zebulon Elliot, of Sag Harbor, who was also a watchmaker, gunsmith and repairer of chronometers. He acquired a thorough knowledge of all these branches, remaining with Mr. Elliot three years, after which for a time he was engaged with his father in carpenter and joiner work. Having a strong desire to go sea, when fifteen years of age he shipped as cabin boy on a whaling vessel, and in time worked himself up from that humble position until he commanded a vessel. He was promoted from second mate on the old whaling ship "James Hamilton," under Capt. Isaac Ludlow, to captain. The first ship he commanded was the whaler "Italy," of Greenport, Long Island. Later he was master of the "Marengo," of New Bedford, and his last voyage was made in the "Odd Fellow," of Sag Harbor, returning in 1868. Capt. Weld met with gratifying success in his chosen calling, and during his career as a sailor went farther north than any of the explorers had yet penetrated, and twice sailed around the world. His voyages took him to many seas and strange lands, and his home contains numerous relics and souvenirs of his voyages to different countries. He was the first man who went whaling in the Sea of Ochotsk, and as the natives along the shore had never seen a whaling vessel, they were much alarmed, thinking it a Russian man-of-war. However, he was a very unassuming man, and although he passed through many exciting and perilous scenes, he never boasted of his achievements in any line. On Nov. 3, 1856, he encountered a hurricane in Behring Straits, almost wrecking the vessel, which was laden with a valuable cargo of oil and whale-bone. In a badly disabled condition they drifted about forty-two days before reaching the Sandwich Islands, and as pieces of the vessel had been picked up, they had been given up as lost. During those forty-two days the vessel had been leaking fearfully—both pumps going night and day in order to keep afloat, clothes and bedding wet, and men dying frequently with scurvy, sometimes two in one day, induced by wet clothes, exposure and want of vegetable food. The men, themselves, had long given up all hopes of life, when land was finally discovered, and then lives and cargo saved; only six men of a crew of thirty were able to be about the vessel. On account of the saving of the cargo, the underwriters of the vessel presented Capt. Weld with a valuable ring. During one of Capt. Weld's voyages in the "Italy," five of the crew, being thwarted in their plans to steal a boat and desert, conspired to fire the ship, throw the mate overboard, kill the captain and other officers. The ringleader carried a knife in his boot leg, and at one time drew it to attack the captain. Fortunately the fire was discovered; the mutineer were put in irons, and when the vessel reached Lahaina, Sandwich Islands, they were delivered to the American Consul to be dealt with according to law.

After abandoning the water Capt. Weld settled at Guilford, where he passed the remainder of his days in quiet retirement, dying in January, 1890. His remains rest in Guilford cemetery. On Apr. 26, 1849 he married, at Sag Harbor, Miss Mary Douglass Washburn, who was born in that place, daughter of Capt. Noah Washburn (3), a native of Hartford, and Nancy C. (Hodges) Washburn. Capt. Noah Washburn was a mate on a gunboat in the war of 1812, and later a captain of artillery in the 13th Regiment, of New York State, and later for twenty-five years was an officer in the Customs House. Two children were born to Captain and Mrs. Weld: Frederick Floyd, who is mentioned below; and Elias J., who died young. Capt. Weld attended the Episcopal Church, as does also his widow. In political faith he was a Republican, but was not active in public life. Fraternally he held membership in St. Alban's Lodge, F. & A. M. Guilford, and he and his wife both belonged to the Order of the Eastern Star. Mrs. Weld serving as matron in her lodge for eight years. She is highly esteemed by her many friends in Guilford, and a woman of many sterling Christian qualities.

FREDERICK FLOYD WELD (deceased) was born Feb. 19, 1850, in Sag Harbor, Long Island, and early displayed a penchant for his father's calling. While yet in his teens he made application, et dorsed by the governor of Connecticut and other citizens of the State, for appointment as cadet engineer at the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md. Receiving assurance that his application would be granted, providing he was qualified to enter, he prepared himself to pass the necessary examinations. For some reason, however, Congress failed to pass the necessary appropriation for the academy for that year, and Mr. Weld instead entered the Sheffield Scientific School of Yale, taking the course in civil engineering, in which he was graduated with the class of 1872. For the year following he was in the employ of the United States Coasting Survey, surveying the Delaware river from Easton to Trenton, and in August, 1873, he obtained a position as draughtsman and general assistant in the office of the city engineer at New Haven, continuing in that incumbency until July, 1881, when he resigned in order to accept a more lucrative position, becoming managing engineer for Thomas P. Simpson, a contractor on the Pittsburg & Western railroad. In the summer of 1883 Mr. Weld accepted a position as assistant engineer in charge of the construction of a system of sewers in Waterbury, Conn., designed by Rudolph Hering, and so ably did he discharge the duties of this position that when, a few months later, a vacancy occurred in the office of city engineer, caused by the resignation of N. J. Welton, he was at once selected for the incumbency. In this office he remained continuously under different administrations until his death, June 28, 1890. Although a large portion of his time and resources were given to devising means for checking the ravages of preventable diseases, he was one of the first victims in the epidemic of typhoid which prevailed in Waterbury that year. For several years he had been one of the most prominent and efficient workers on the Waterbury board of health, and in company with H. J. Kellogg, his first assistant, he designed a system of sewers for the borough of Wallingford. He also acted as consulting engineer in the construction of the sewer systems of Torrington and Ansonia, as well as many less important engineering works. On Sept. 3, 1884, he became a member of the American Society of Civil Engineers, and he was a leading member of the Connecticut Civil Engineers & Surveyors Association, of which he was serving as president at the time of his demise.

The Waterbury American under date of June 28, 1890, says:

City Engineer F. Floyd Weld died at his home at No. 127 North Main street at 2:30 this morning. Mr. Weld had been confined to his home not quite two weeks with a severe attack of typhoid fever. June 16, he was one of a party that left this city to visit New York and investigate the laying of asphalt paving in that city. He returned the same night and his physician found him suffering from an advanced stage of the disease. For weeks he had not been himself and his physical condition was such that it feebly opposed the ravages of the fever.

The deceased was born at Sag Harbor, L. I., and was forty years of age last February. Graduating with the class of '72 from the Sheffield Scientific School, he entered the office of the city engineer in New Haven. He was assistant city engineer there when called to this city in June, 1883, by City Engineer N. J. Welton, who was then very busy in laying out and constructing the sewer system just adopted here. In January, 1884, Mr. Weld was appointed city engineer and from that time devoted himself to the extension of a pipe system for Waterbury which has few superiors in eastern cities, and which has served as a model for many more pretentious cities. As an accurate engineer his reputation was State wide, if not more. Every foot of sewer planned and laid by him was the result of a carefully thought out system, and every minor detail of the work was completely mastered and carried in mind by him. His maps were always models; he was abreast of municipal developments and improvements in every particular that concerned his profession. He was an admitted authority on sewer systems, and the Connecticut Association of Civil Engineers and Surveyors acknowledged his ability by electing him its president. At the time of his death he was giving much of his time and attention to Waterbury's paving question. He thoroughly believed in the merits of asphalt for our city's streets, and visited many cities and collected a vast amount of data to defend his position, and to demonstrate the growing importance of this material for paving. Whatever the material eventually used, and however done, the absence of the experience and judgment of the late city engineer in these matters will be a great loss to the city.

The deceased leaves two daughters, aged respectively 12 and 14 years, and a mother and father. He was the last child, his brother dying several years ago. Both parents were with him at his death, but his father was the only one recognized by him in the interval of a long period of unconsciousness. He was insured in the Life Union, the New York Equitable and the Knights of Honor association.

Mr. Weld was made a Mason in Continental lodge of this city in 1884. He afterward became exalted to the Royal Arch in Eureka chapter, November 17, 1885. A friend says of him: "He has held an official position in the chapter during the past four years with great credit to himself and honor to the fraternity. His usefulness as an officer, and quiet demonstration of an intelligent and upright Mason, had won for him the esteem of all his brothers and companions."

Mr. Weld was a most efficient member of the city board of health. Always watching the health of others and so prominently connected with the establishment of the sewer system which plays so important a part in preserving the city's health, it seems particularly sad that he should fall a victim to this disease through impure milk from the Middlebury farm.

Alderman H. W. French on behalf of the aldermanic board extended the sympathy and offered the services of the members of the court of common council to the family.

Though a thorough business man, and devoted to his profession, Mr. Weld was a man of genial social qualities, and he had a special tact for "getting along" with the various people with whom he came in contact during his professional career, securing compliance with his plans without arousing aggression or unpleasant antagonism. With a reputation for strict integrity, he gained a high standing in his ingenuity, which was considerable, united with a sound common sense which characterized all his actions. He was quick and accurate in the performance of his duties, and the work which he executed will long be a silent witness to the thoroughness and painstaking effort which marked all his undertakings, for he neglected no detail of a work, however seemingly unimportant. His services were especially valuable in New Haven and Waterbury. Mr. Weld did not reap large pecuniary reward in his calling, but he leaves a name unspotted for integrity and honesty, and he was esteemed by all who knew him as a true friend and an upright man. On Dec. 15, 1874, Mr. Weld married Miss Mary V. Crockett, and they had two children, Mary Washburn and Fredericka Floyd, who have been reared by their grandmother, Mrs. Weld.

DAVID MERRIMAN HALL, an old and prominent farmer of the town of Wallingford, whose character exacts the veneration his years demand, was born in South Elm street, in that borough, May 27, 1818. John Hall, his remote progenitor, was an early settler of New England, and his sons, John, Thomas and Samuel, were among the first settlers of Wallingford.

Thomas Hall was born March 25, 1649, and came from New Haven, where he married Grace Watson June 5, 1673. She died May 1, 1731, and he on the 17th of the following November. Both were buried in Wallingford. He was a farmer by occupation. His family consisted of eleven children: (1) Abigail, born Jan. 7, 1674, married John Tyler; (2) Thomas, born July 17, 1676, married Abigail Atwater, daughter of John Atwater; (3) Mary was born Nov. 22, 1677; (4) Jonathan, born July 25, 1679, married Dinah Andrews May 12, 1703; (5) Joseph, born July 8, 1681, married Bertha Terrel; (6) Esther, born Feb. 23, 1683, married Benoni Atkins; (7) Benjamin, born April 19, 1684, married Mary Ives; (8) Peter was born Dec. 28, 1686; (9) Daniel was born Jan. 27, 1689; (10) Rebecca, born Jan. 6, 1691, married Daniel Holt; (11) Israel, born Oct. 8, 1696, married Abigail Palmer.

Peter Hall, noted above, was born in Wallingford, and was reared on the farm. Farming was his life occupation, and he became an extensive land owner. At the time of his death, which occurred in Wallingford, he had reached the age of ninety years. He was married, Oct. 19, 1732, to Rebecca Bartholomew, who died Oct. 31, 1798, and to their marriage came children as follows: (1) Susannah, born Feb. 26, 1734; (2) Hiel, May 6, 1735; (3) Abigail, May 15, 1737; (4) Rebecca, born July 3, 1740; (5) Eunice, Nov. 8, 1742; (6) Josiah, born July 3, 1745; (7) Peter, June 7, 1748; (8) Andrew, Sept. 12, 1750 (died Oct. 14, 1776); (9) Anna, March 30, 1753; (10) Keziah, June 16, 1755; (11) Lois, Sept. 25, 1757.

Hiel Hall was born in the town of Wallingford, and like his father was engaged in farming, and owned extensive tracts of land there. Catherine, his wife, died Jan. 4, 1788, at the age of forty-two years. She was the mother of the following named children: (1) Josiah, born in 1775, died Dec. 15, 1821; (2) Catherine was born Jan. 2, 1776; (3) Andrew, born in 1777, died Jan. 25, 1812; (4) Chauncey, born Sept. 8, 1778, married Marilla Hall; (5) Peter, born May 31, 1780, married Delight Kirkland; (6) Hiel, born Feb. 7, 1782, married Sarah Kirkland; (7) Rice was born May 2, 1784; (8) Justus was born Feb. 14, 1787.

Deacon Josiah Hall, the father of David Merriman Hall, was born in Wallingford, where he grew to manhood. In his mature years he had a large farm on Elm street, and he died while still in middle life, in Wallingford, at the age of nearly forty-seven years. In politics he was a Democrat, and in religion a member of the Congregational Church, in which he officiated as deacon. He is remembered as a useful citizen, a good husband and a kind father. Deacon Hall was married April 7, 1795, to Martha R. Hall, who was born Aug. 22, 1777, daughter of Giles Hall, of Wallingford, and granddaughter of John and Mary (Street) Hall. To them were born children as follows: (1) Thankful, born May 23, 1796, married Col. Thaddeus Cook; (2) Catherine, born May 18, 1798, died unmarried; (3) Eliza, born May 15, 1800, died young; (4) Eliza, born July 25, 1801, married James Reynolds; (5) Edward L., born May 15, 1804, married Mary K. Cook, daughter of Billious Cook; (6) George Chauncey was born April 19, 1806; (7) Martha R., born Oct. 19, 1808, married Col. Thaddeus Cook; (8) Josiah was born June 15, 1812; (9) Ogden, Sept. 13, 1815; (10) David Merriman, May 27, 1818; and (11) James, April 11, 1821. David M. is the only survivor. The mother died in Wallingford, and was buried in the Center street cemetery.

David M. Hall was very young when he lost his father. His education was begun in the district school of Wallingford, and later he attended the school at Cook Hill, where he went to live with his sister, Mrs. Thaddeus Cook, after his father's death. He was also a pupil in the academy at Berlin and the one at Middletown. Remaining in the hospitable home of his sister until he was sixteen years of age, he went to New Haven and learned the tin and sheet-iron trade. To do this properly and in the old-fashioned, thorough-going way, required his time until he was twenty-one years of age. Then he became a journeyman, and worked at his trade. A few years later he bought a farm on Cook Hill, where he lived until 1854, in that year settling on his present farm, which is part of the original Cook estate. For nearly half a century he has been engaged in farming and stock raising, and to-day he is known as one of the most successful farmers in Wallingford.

On Dec. 24, 1843, Mr. Hall married Catherine Maria Cook, who was born on Cook Hill, daughter of Col. Thaddeus and Sylvia (Hall) Cook, and sister of Mrs. William Francis, of North Farms. Mrs. Hall is a lady of innate refinement, and of kindly disposition, and all who know her speak well of her. She has been a good wife and a loving mother. Mr. and Mrs. Hall have had three children: (1) James Cook, born July 6, 1845, died at the age of seventeen years. (2) Edward Thaddeus, born Oct. 16, 1849, married Georgiana Pardee, and has one child, Sarah Edna, born July 8, 1897. (3) George David, born June 20, 1859, is now living on the homestead; he married, Oct. 23, 1884, Jennie Blakeslee Hough, daughter of Elijah Hough, and has three children—Louis Cook, born March 27, 1888; Almon Blakeslee, born Nov. 27, 1891; and Mabel Hough, born March 7, 1898.

David Merriman Hall is one of the thoughtful, leading men of his community. In his religious belief he is a consistent follower of the rules of the Episcopal Church. He is domestic in his tastes, and upright in his habits. In politics he is a Democrat, but puts the good of the community before any question of party expediency.

BLATCHLEY. There was a Thomas Blatchley who sailed for New England in 1635; was in Hartford in 1640; New Haven in 1643; Branford in 1645; and in Guilford in 1666. In the last named place he was admitted as a planter April 23, 1668. His business was that of a merchant, and he died in Boston in 1674. Some of his descendants are yet in Guilford.

There was a Samuel Blatchley who removed from Guilford in about 1653, where he was an early planter, to that part of the town which later became Madison.

Soon after 1725, the time of the permanent settlement of Madison, there was a Joshua Blatchley who settled in the south part of the town.

Few men have been more prominently identified with the growth of New Haven, through the past fifty years, than the family introducing this article. The extensive real estate firm of S. L. Blatchley & Sons was established in 1852 by the father, the late Samuel L. Blatchley, who, along in the late 'sixties, took his sons, Samuel R., the late Charles Carroll, and later Joel Blatchley, in the business with him, and, from the beginning, these men together, or in turn, have carried on extensive building operations and real estate transactions, and have been interested in public improvements which have materially aided in New Haven's growth.

The late Samuel L. Blatchley was born Feb. 13, 1804, in North Madison, Conn., a son of Joel and Ruth (Loper) Blatchley, of that town. Joel Blatchley was one of the prominent men of his day in the town, and at the first town meeting, in 1826, was chosen one of the selectmen. The name of Blatchley has been identified with the towns of Guilford and Madison from the early Colonial period, and the name is on record from that section in the war of the Revolution, in the professions, and a number of times as graduates of Yale College.

Samuel Loper Blatchley received his boyhood education in the common schools of his native town, and, by application as he advanced to manhood, succeeded in obtaining a good business education. His business career was commenced as an insurance agent in his town, and later he kept a country store there, in which the handling of clocks was a chief feature of the business. In those days it was no uncommon thing for a merchant to travel over the country, and especially in the South, selling goods and Yankee notions. Mr. Blatchley had some experience in this line, making his headquarters in Baltimore. In 1846 he removed to New Haven, Conn., and ever afterward made that city his home. Here he opened a co-operative grocery store on State street, and the "Commercial Union" is still remembered by the older people of the city.

In 1852 Mr. Blatchley engaged in the real estate business and his efforts were soon crowned with an assured success, and in time he built many business houses and dwellings, and bought and sold real estate quite extensively. Among the structures built by him were: The "Madison House," later called the "Selden House;" the building of the Daily Courier; the building on the corner of State and Court streets, and a number of brick buildings on State and St. John streets. In 1866 he purchased of the Maltby heirs and the Yale College corporation a large tract of land south of Grand street, in Fair Haven, and opened the avenue bearing his name, and at its junction with East Grand street erected the large brick house which thereafter was his place of residence. At the time of the opening of Blatchley avenue, there were few buildings in that part of the Eleventh ward. Just south of his residence he gave a lot to Grace Episcopal Church, on which a fine church edifice and parsonage were afterward erected, and in this enterprise he was largely interested. Mr. Blatchley sold many building lots on Exchange and Woolsey streets, which streets were opened by him, and he also purchased, at a cost of something like $40,000, some forty acres of land on Fair Haven Heights, which he subdivided and sold in building lots. Also he purchased some twelve acres of ground of Deacon John Farren at a cost of about $40,000, and opened up Farren avenue, selling the land in building lots; he purchased other building sites on Grand avenue and Bright street, from Grand avenue north.

In 1860 Mr. Blatchley associated in the business with him his sons, Charles C. and Samuel R., both young, active men, who were chiefly instrumental in building up and conducting the extensive real estate business of the firm of S. L. Blatchley & Sons. These gentlemen were largely instrumental in projecting and building the old State Street Horse Railway. They operated largely in the vicinity of Cedar Hill, and greatly developed the city eastward and northward. They also were prominent in advancing the projects resulting in the Quinipiac and Chapel street draw-bridges, and caused many streets to be opened, erecting many buildings, and were most potent factors in the progress of New Haven.

The senior Mr. Blatchley in early life was a member of the Masonic fraternity. While residing in the city proper he attended the North Congregational and Third Churches, and later Grace Episcopal Church, in Blatchley avenue. Of a genial and cheerful disposition, he had many friends; was of commanding personality, standing six feet three and one-half inches in height, and in his prime had an erect form and a fine carriage.

On Dec. 23, 1827, Mr. Blatchley married Mary A. Robinson, who was born July 20, 1805, daughter of Ebenezer Robinson, of Durham, Conn., and died Dec. 9, 1874. Mr. Blatchley survived her, passing away July 26, 1883. Of their nine children: (6) Samuel Robinson and (7) Charles Carroll are mentioned below. (1) Joel S., who died Jan. 8, 1874, was a graduate of Yale, class of 1850, and was a lawyer by profession, practicing at Dubuque, Iowa, and later at San Francisco. Losing his health, he returned to New Haven, where until his death he was a member of the firm of S. L. Blatchley & Sons. He married Marion Hall, who survives him, with two children, Louise and Margery; they reside in Denver, Colo. (2) Helen Lavinia is the wife of Rev. H. C. Hovey, of Newburyport, Mass. They are the parents of three children—Edmund Otis, one of the curators of the New York Museum of Natural History in Central Park; Helen Carter, wife of Rev. Henry F. Ellinwood, of Medina, N. Y.; and Clara, wife of Rev. Royal W. Raymond, of Stratford, Conn. (3) Mary J. is Mrs. William Ludden, of Brooklyn, N. Y.; they have had no children, but have an adopted daughter, Gertrude. (4) Ann Elizabeth, who died June 10, 1892, was the wife of Alexander Emery, of the firm of Steel & Emery, New Haven. They had several children—Jacob E., now deceased, who was in the employ of S. L. Blatchley & Sons; Mary C., deceased; Alice S.; Charles A., of Bridgeport; Louise and Elizabeth, twins, both deceased; Helen, deceased; Joel, deceased; and Samuel W., of New Haven. (5) Alice C., who died Nov. 15, 1877, unmarried, was a teacher in the Woodward high school, Cincinnati. (8) Sarah Louise, who died March 13, 1873, was a member and valedictorian of the first class graduated from Vassar. (9) Clara I. died unmarried Dec. 28, 1882.

CHARLES CARROLL BLATCHLEY, a son of Samuel L., and late of the firm of S. L. Blatchley & Sons, was born July 28, 1841, in North Madison, Conn. His parents having removed to New Haven when he was but a lad, he there passed his boyhood, attending the public schools, and was graduated from the high school. Then he entered Yale College, from which he was graduated in 1863, studied law in New York, and was admitted to the Bar in that city in December, 1864. In May, 1865, he opened an office in New Haven, but after several years' practice in that place he associated himself with his father and brother, Samuel R., in the real estate business, which engrossed his entire attention, and in which he was most successful. Mr. Blatchley was a director and large owner in the State Street Horse Railroad, and was a life member and secretary of the East Rock Park commission, and a director in the Young Men's Institute. About the middle of January, 1887, Mr. Blatchley became seriously ill with Bright's disease, and died at his home March 5, 1887, in his forty-sixth year.

On Nov. 27, 1893, Mr. Blatchley was married to Susannah, daughter of Jacob Emery, of Hogsburg, N. Y., who survives him with five children. Of their family Catherine E., a graduate of the Musical Department of Yale, is a music teacher and musical supervisor of the Westville schools. Mary Nancy graduated from high school, and is now an eighth grade teacher in the Strong school. Susan L. and Charles C. are deceased. Jacob Emery and Samuel L. were twins, and the latter is deceased; the former is a member of the firm of Blatchley & Shepard. Alice is deceased. William Joel is a sophomore in the Sheffield Scientific School. Charles Alexander is attending the Boardman Training School for Boys. Henry died in infancy. Charles C. Blatchley was a man of correct morals, and of the highest integrity, possessed good judgment, and was an excellent business man. He was straightforward and true in his friendships.

SAMUEL ROBINSON BLATCHLEY was born at North Madison Nov. 15, 1839, and spent his school days in New Haven and Cincinnati, attending the high schools in both cities, passed through the Hopkins grammar school in New Haven, and graduated at Yale in 1862. For five years he taught school in Cincinnati, and then returned to New Haven. Mr. Blatchley was president of the old Horse Railroad Company at the time of its sale to the syndicate, and his brother Charles had previously served in the same capacity. He now deals extensively in real estate, laying out lots, etc., having a large interest on Prospect street, where in company with Dr. Phillips he owns thirty-two acres. On June 23, 1864, he was married, in Cincinnati, to Miss Nancy McM. Evans, a daughter of Hugh Evans, of that city.

JARED A. BASSETT (deceased), an energetic and skillful agriculturist, who owned and operated a fine farm of forty acres on Dixwell avenue, Hamden, was born Nov. 1, 1832, a son of Jared and Eliza (Bradley) Bassett, and grandson of Timothy Bassett. His birth occurred in the same house in which he lived all his life, and in which he died Dec. 31, 1899.

Jared Bassett, the father, was also born upon the same farm, and throughout life successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits. He was a good sized man, being five feet, eleven inches in height and weighing 165 pounds. Being one of the leading and influential citizens of his community, he was called upon to serve his fellow citizens as selectman of Hamden, and member of the Legislature. In religious faith he was an Episcopalian and a member of the church of that denomination in Hamden. He died at the age of sixty-six years, and his wife at the age of fifty-five. In their family were three children, namely: Eunice, deceased wife of James T. Mix, of New Haven; Cornelia, who died at about the age of sixty years; and Jared A., our subject.

Upon the home farm Jared A. Bassett early became familiar with all the duties which fall to the lot of the agriculturist, and his literary education was obtained in the common schools of Hamden and Everest's private school of Centerville. He assisted in the operation of the farm until his father's death, and then took complete charge of the same. He engaged in general farming and the dairy business, and in his labors met with well-deserved success.

Mr. Bassett was married, Feb. 26, 1862, to Miss Elizabeth A. Percy, of Watertown, Conn., and to them was born a daughter, Annie E., who died at the age of twenty-one years. The Democratic party always found in Mr. Bassett a staunch supporter of its principles, and as a citizen he was ever ready to discharge any duty that devolved upon him.

LYMAN A. GRANNISS, a well-known and reliable contractor and builder at No. 116 Franklin street, New Haven, was born in the house where he now lives in East Haven, March 3, 1837, a son of Joseph Granniss, who was also born in East Haven, as was also his father, Samuel. The latter was probably a farmer, and died at a great age.

Joseph Granniss was one of a number of children, and was reared on a farm. His life was devoted to the cultivation of the soil, though for a number of years he was largely engaged in the oyster business, carrying oysters from New Haven to Albany, N. Y., by team, and later from Bridgeport to the same destination by boat. He lived in East Haven all his life, and died there at the advanced age of eighty-five years. His wife, Louisa Luddington, was born in East Haven, a daughter of one of the old families of that section. She became the mother of thirteen children, of whom three only are living: Daniel H., Collis B. and Lyman A., all of whom are now residing in New Haven. Mrs. Granniss died at the age of sixty-five years. Both she and her husband belonged to the Congregational Church. Politically he was a Republican.

Lyman A. Granniss spent his early years at home, where he had his education in the local schools. After the demise of his father, he bought out the other heirs, and still owns the old homestead. Under his energetic management the farm is well cultivated, and produces fine crops. About 1880 Mr. Granniss began a contract business, very largely in street work, laying macadam, setting telegraph poles, and doing similar work, in company with E. J. Upson. In 1890 he took up the ice business, and for ten years did both a large wholesale and retail business. He has been a director of the Hygienic Ice Co. since its organization, and he is also interested in the Swift Beef Co., of New Haven and Chicago.

Mr. Granniss was married, in April, 1862, to Antoinette Thompson, a native of East Haven, and a daughter of Elizer Thompson, for years the keeper of the New Haven Light House, and previous to that a groceryman. Mrs. Granniss was one of a family of nine children, and is herself the mother of two children, both of whom are dead. Mr. Granniss is a Republican, and was elected first selectman in 1868, a position he held until 1875, having been chosen to this on several subsequent occasions. In the General Assembly of 1871 he held a seat with credit. Mr. and Mrs. Granniss attend the Old Street Congregational Church of East Haven.

JOHN PINNEY PHELPS, until the spring of 1901, was one of Hamden's worthy citizens and prominent dairy farmers. He was born in the town of Winchester, Conn., Dec. 24, 1834, and is descended from one of the old and honored families of New England. His father, Ralzelmon Phelps, was a native of West Granville, Mass., and a son of John and Betsey (Bingham) Phelps, both of whom were born in Enfield, Conn., and at an early day removed from West Granville, Mass., to Ohio, locating in Granville, Licking county, where they spent their remaining days. The father of our subject was but two years old on the removal of the family to Ohio, and in Granville he grew to manhood and learned the carpenter's and joiner's trade. On attaining his majority he returned East and took up his residence in Colebrook, Litchfield Co., Conn., and after his marriage he located in the town of Winchester, Conn., where he continued to make his home throughout life. There he followed his trade and also conducted a hotel and store with marked success, and became the owner of property in that town. In his religious views he was a Universalist, and in political sentiment was a Democrat. He married Miss Emma Pinney, daughter of Asaph Pinney, and to them were born two children: Emeret E., who died at the age of twelve years; and John P., our subject. Both parents died in Winchester, and were laid to rest in the cemetery at Colebrook, Connecticut.

John P. Phelps received his education in the district schools of his native town, and began his business career as an employe in the factory of the Winsted Auger Co., of Winsted, Conn., where he remained until 1861. After the death of his father he located on the home farm, and engaged in its cultivation until 1885, when he came to the town of Hamden, New Haven county, where until April, 1901, he was extensively engaged in general farming, dairying and stock raising, owning and operating a fine farm of eighty-seven acres, which he placed under a high state of cultivation. When he left the farm in 1901 he moved to Centerville, and is now living retired.

On Nov. 21, 1854, in Hamden, Mr. Phelps was united in marriage with Miss Nancy Gorham, a native of that town and a daughter of William and Lucretia (Dorman) Gorham. For the past thirty years she has been an invalid, having lost the use of her limbs by locomotor ataxia, but she bears her suffering with great patience. Mr. and Mrs. Phelps had two children: (1) Cora E., born Dec. 21, 1857, was married on Jan. 6, 1876, to Luther C. Phelps, and they have one child, Emma Pinney, born June 3, 1888. Luther C. Phelps died Jan. 23, 1890, and his widow now lives at home with her parents. (2) Charles J., the younger child of our subject, was born Nov. 5, 1875, and died the same month.

Mr. Phelps is a supporter of the Democratic party, and has served as a member of the board of relief and as justice of the peace. He is a broad-minded man and liberal in his religious views, and he attends the Episcopal Church. Fraternally he is a member of Hamden Grange, and he gives an earnest support to every enterprise which he believes calculated to advance the moral, intellectual or material welfare of his town and county. He is therefore numbered among the useful and valued citizens, and is well and favorably known.

THEODORE BRISTOL, a well-known business man of Milford, New Haven county, was born in that town Feb. 18, 1837, son of Johnson and Elizabeth (Davidson) Bristol. His family has been identified with Milford from an early date, his grandfather, Jehial Bristol, who attained the advanced age of ninety-four years, having been a farmer and shoemaker there. This worthy pioneer married Miss Martha Beecher, a native of Orange, New Haven Co., Conn., for his first wife, and they had children as follows: Miranda, who married John Welch, of Milford; Clarinda, who died in childhood; Willis, who conducted a wholesale and retail shoe business in New Haven until his death, and was a prominent man in local politics as a member of the Whig and Republican parties; Johnson, our subject's father; and Martha C., who married William Thomas, of Fair Haven, an oyster dealer. By his second wife, Flavid, daughter of Dr. Austin, also of Milford, Jehial Bristol had two children: Hiram, a shoemaker by trade, who died in New Haven; and Lucia, who married Samuel Sanford, son of Capt. William Sanford, of Milford.

Johnson Bristol, our subject's father, was born in Milford Nov. 19, 1807, and died Dec. 16, 1891. For thirty years he conducted a grocery business in Milford, but his last years were spent in retirement. Politically he was a Democrat, and as a citizen was held in high esteem by his fellow townsmen. His wife, Elizabeth (Davidson), who died in Milford July 10, 1893, was a native of Milford, and daughter of Richard T. Davidson, a carpenter, who lived to the age of ninety-four years. Of their nine children, the eldest, Henry, is a grocer in Milford; the second and third died in infancy; Jane married Monson Hinman, of Bridgeport, Conn.; Theodore, our subject, is mentioned more fully below; Harriet died at the age of sixteen years; Charles is in the employ of our subject; Elizabeth married Edward Burleigh, of Milford; and Edson is a farmer in Milford.

Theodore Bristol was reared in Milford, and for twenty-three years was employed by N. A. Baldwin, a straw hat manufacturer in that town, but in 1872 he purchased his present livery business, in which he has met with decided success. He attends Plymouth Congregational Church, and is an active member of the Masonic fraternity, while politically he affiliates with the Democratic party. Mr. Bristol married for his first wife Caroline A. Merwin, daughter of Mark Merwin, of Milford; at her death she left one child, Julia E., now the wife of Walter M. Irving, contractor and builder, of Milford. By his second wife, Rachel C. Wright, of Clinton, Conn., Mr. Bristol has had two children: Grace L., who married George R. Clarke, a meat dealer in Milford; and Royal M., who died at the age of six years.

FRANK BRAZOS has carried on a thriving business as a contractor in New Haven for the past six years, and his success has been commensurate to that enjoyed by the other members of this well known family.

Antoine Brazos, his father, the senior member and founder of the firm of Brazos & Sons, Middletown, is probably one of the best examples of a self-made man that Middletown can present at the present time. When all the circumstances of his history are considered, his early life and lack of educational advantages, and his beginning life afresh in a new country, it is doubtful if a parallel case can be found in all Connecticut. A man's success in life ought not to be determined by the heights to which he has climbed, but by the depths from which he arose.

Mr. Brazos was born at Pico, Azore Islands, Aug. 15, 1826. His parents, Joseph and Rosa Brazos, were both natives of the Islands, and his father was a farmer. It was in that far away corner of the earth that Antoine spent the first nineteen years of his life. Instead of common schools for all the people, as is the rule in this country, he had never seen an institution of that character until he came to the United States. His education has been gained entirely in the great school of experience. When nineteen years of age Mr. Brazos came to the United States, where his brother had already preceded him, and had attained a good position as mate of the schooner "Smith D. Bellows," plying between the Connecticut river and the coast points. Antoine made the voyage across the ocean on the bark "Azore," bound for Boston. He landed in that city, expecting to find his brother Manuel. A shipwreck delayed his arrival, and Antoine was a stranger in the city, not able to speak one word of English. His predicament was anything but pleasant. He secured work, however, on a vessel, and began a career as a sailor which lasted some seven or eight years, and was an eventful period in his history. He had many narrow escapes, and more than once was saved with but a few of the crew. One ship on which he was a sailor was wrecked on the extreme lower coast of Florida, and he with two companions were all that escaped death out of a crew of twelve men. At another time his ship was blown far out to sea, and badly damaged, and for seven weeks the crew were without food, and suffered greatly from lack of water.

Communication with his brother Manuel had long been established, and that gentleman finally persuaded his brother to give up a sea-faring life and come to Middletown. Manuel Brazos was one of the founders of the Hartford and New York Transportation Co., and was its general manager for a number of years. He died in Hartford. Frank Brazos, another older brother of Antoine, also came to the United States, and died in Hartford when about forty years old.

Mr. Brazos began business in Middletown in 1854, and his beginning was a very modest one. He bought out Philo Clark in a stevedore business, and had three horses as his principal working force. In 1872 his business had so increased that he resolved to make still farther extension and took all kinds of contracting, such as raising sunken vessels, general trucking, railroad building and sewer construction, not only in Middletown, but anywhere in the United States. He gave up the stevedore business a number of years ago, and as his sons became old enough he took them into business. At the present time the firm of Brazos & Sons is composed of the father and five sons, Joseph, Manuel A., Louis, John and George. Brazos & Sons have a department in their business devoted to ice in Middletown, which requires six wagons in season. In Middletown they have constructed twenty-seven houses from start to finish, a magnificent record for the firm. Many thousands of dollars have passed through their hands as wages for their employes. At the present time their pay roll is about $3,000 a month. The senior member of the firm has been particularly fortunate in the ability possessed by all his sons, and their devotion to the business.

Antoine Brazos was married, in 1855, to Miss Ann Neale, a native of County Carlow, Ireland, and a daughter of James Neale. They are the parents of a numerous family: Eunice J. married W. W. Hulse, a real estate man of Amityville, Long Island. Julia A. graduated from Wesleyan University, and is now a teacher in the Middletown high school. Joseph is a member of the firm mentioned above. Mary is a teacher in Middletown, where she was educated in the high school. Frank is our subject. Manuel A. is a member of the firm. Annie E. is a trained nurse at Hartford. Alice R. graduated from the Middletown high school in 1889. Louis belongs to the firm as do also John and George. Mr. Brazos has a beautiful home at the corner of High and Loveland streets, which was built in 1890. He is a Republican politically, and he attends the Episcopal Church.

Frank Brazos was born in Middletown April 8, 1864, and spent his early years in his native town, where he received his education. At the age of eleven years he began working for his father. For five years he was with the Clichester estate, in the real estate business in New York City. He then became a member of the firm of Brazos & Sons, and so continued until May, 1895, since which time he has engaged in general contracting business, independently. He enjoys a large patronage, employing an average force of one hundred men. He has resided in New Haven for seventeen years. Mr. Brazos is a Republican politically, and a member of the Union League and the Young Men's Republican Clubs. He was married, in New Haven, to Miss Ida Englehart, of that city, and they reside at No. 808 Elm street, where he built a home in 1894.

PORTER GAY AND HENRY ADELBERT HULL, worthy representatives of an old and honorable New England family, are great-grandsons of Benjamin Hull.

Benjamin Hull was born about 1725, was a farmer by occupation, and resided on the old Hull homestead, which lies about one-eighth of a mile southwest of the present home. It is related that the said Benjamin and a son were one day at work in the fields, during the Revolutionary war, when three British soldiers came by on horseback, and that they captured both Benjamin and his son, who were never seen or heard of again. Benjamin Hull married Amy Hill, who was born July 6, 1726, and died Dec. 1, 1820. The fourth son in their family of seven children was Benjamin, who married Hannah Humiston, the records telling of her baptism in St. John's Church in 1781, and of her death in 1845. Benjamin Hull was a farmer, and passed his life on the homestead. He left a family of nine children, the seventh being Jarvis, father of the gentleman whose name opens this article.

Jarvis Hull was born June 15, 1800, on the home farm, and had only the limited educational advantages obtained in the primitive schools of the locality. Selecting the trade of shoemaker, he soon became an expert, and, as the custom was in those days, would go with his bag of tools from house to house, remaining until the whole family had been shod. Later he established a shop on his own farm, engaging in cultivating his land during the summers and in the winter time attending to his shoe-making. One of his specialties was the making of wedding gear, and he successfully manufactured neat and dressy boots and shoes from leather, gaining considerable reputation in the vicinity. Mr. Hull died June 25, 1872, and was buried in North Haven. In politics he had always been a staunch Democrat. He reared his whole family in the faith of the Episcopal Church. Mr. Hull married Eliza Gay, who was born in 1800, in Meredith, Delaware Co., N. Y., daughter of Lucian Gay, a farmer there. She died April 8, 1874, a member of the Episcopal Church. The children born to this union were: Julia A. is the widow of Charles Hine, and now resides in Northford; Porter Gay is mentioned below; Jane E. married Smith Tyler; Celia E. married Jasper E. Higbie, of Meriden, and both are deceased; Henry Adelbert is mentioned below; and Harriet A. resides in North Haven.

Porter Gay Hull was born Sept. 5, 1832, and enjoyed the educational advantages of the district schools. While still a young man he engaged in business with his uncle, Orrin Hull, at City Point, at which time City Point had but three houses from the Bridge down to the Sound. Ten years later he returned to North Haven and was employed by Sharon Bassett, who had a shop on the farm now owned by George Morgan, where he engaged in the making of wagon bolts, by horse power. After two years at this place Mr. Hull removed to Birmingham, Mr. Bassett changing his location to that place, and continued with him in the same business. An opportunity offering, he left Mr. Bassett to enter upon the trade of machinist with the Hamden Iron Co., one year later going to Waterbury, Conn. There he engaged in the manufacture of cotton gins, but his career here was interrupted, the company going out of business, and he was then employed by Blake Bros., of Westville, manufacturers of hardware, with whom he remained eight years. He was thus employed when Fort Sumter was fired upon, the works closing down on that day. By this time Mr. Hull was a skilled mechanic, and easily secured employment with Eli Whitney, of Whitneyville, with whom he remained some four years, in the manufacture of guns, pistols and other fire arms for which there was great demand on account of the progress of the Civil war. While engaged in these works he was called upon to assist in guarding the factory, as fears were entertained that attempt might be made to burn or loot it. Leaving this factory, Mr. Hull went to New Haven, where he accepted a position in the restaurant and ice cream parlors of C. F. Lockland (who was located where Hemblein & Co. now are), remaining there until 1864, when he became head clerk for the "Tontine Hotel." This situation he held efficiently for the following twenty-seven years, retiring in May, 1897.

In 1897 Mr. Hull came to his present home, the people of the "Tontine" regretting his departure, as he had been a very popular adjunct of the house. The traveling public have many pleasant recollections of Mr. Hull, whose genial personality made him admirably qualified for the position he filled. His present residence is a comfortable one, his busy life having earned him a competency. Politically Mr. Hull is a Republican, although all the other members of his family are Democrats. Socially he is connected with Hiram Lodge, No. 36, I. O. O. F., and Franklin Chapter, No. 2, R. A. M., all of New Haven.

Henry Adelbert Hull was born Nov. 16, 1844, and attended the district schools, returning to agricultural work after his school days were ended, part of the time on the home farm, the remainder on farms in the vicinity. Until he purchased his present farm of sixty-five acres he remained on the home place, and is now engaged in the successful operation of his own estate. As an active member of the Democratic party he has been called upon to hold many of the local offices, and is socially connected with the New Haven Grange, and Quinnipiac Lodge, No. 62, O. U. A. M. He is a member of North Haven Co-operative Feed Co., an organization of the substantial men of this locality. Both the Hull brothers are among the representative citizens of North Haven.

JAMES M. EMERSON, who for the past quarter of a century, has been editor and proprietor of the Ansonia Sentinel, the first newspaper of that place, is a native of Maryland. His birth occurred in December, 1845, in Denton, the county seat of Caroline county, that State. His early education was received at the public schools of that town, and at the age of fourteen he became a student in the preparatory department of Washington College, Chestertown, Md., from which he was graduated four years later, taking the second honors of his class.

Mr. Emerson's active career as a newspaper man began not long after he attained his majority, when he succeeded his father, John H. Emerson (now deceased), in the publication of the American Union, the Republican organ of Caroline county. He remained in charge of this paper as editor until July, 1871, when he accepted a call to the editorial staff of the Wilmington (Del.) Daily Commercial. He sustained this relation until his removal to Ansonia, in August, 1876. In July of that year he and W. H. Cramer (who came from Wilmington) purchased the Sentinel from Rev. Edward M. Jerome, the senior member of the firm of Jerome & Carpenter, by whom the journal was founded in November, 1871. When Mr. Carpenter withdrew Mr. Jerome engaged as foreman F. M. Rider, until recently business manager of the New Haven Leader. After a couple of years Mr. Cramer sold out to Mr. Emerson and returned to Wilmington, and the latter has since been sole proprietor.

The Sentinel has risen to its present prestige from humble beginnings. The first office was on the main floor of the Gardner block (opposite the post-office), where a space 16x40 feet in dimensions was fenced off for its use. When Mr. Emerson took charge there were but 935 subscribers, and the outlook at first was none too encouraging, for, while he lost no ground, he apparently gained none. But when the growth set in it proved strong and steady. The job department had considerable business, and in 1879, when Mr. Gardner built a large addition to his factory, the Sentinel sought better accommodations in the new portion of the building. From this time the business of the paper began to increase. New machinery was introduced, and the second story of a small frame building which stood on the present site of the Y. M. C. A. building, was used for a composition room. In 1881 Mr. Emerson, feeling himself justified in securing a permanent location, bought the present site of the Sentinel building, of the W. & L. Hotchkiss Co. He erected a three-story building, the presses being established on the lower floor, and the composing room, etc., on the upper story. The second story was for a time rented out for offices, but one after another was found necessary as the Sentinel continued to grow, until the entire building was needed to carry on the business of the paper. Another story was finally added, where, to the present, the composition and job work have been carried on. When the linotype machines were put in and new floor space was required, the top floor of the building next door was leased, for editorial purposes. Then the sidewalk at the north end of the building was dug out to give storage room for the paper, which is received by the car-load, and thus every foot of available space has been utilized. Further extension will require a new site, which would have been selected long ago, had any suitable location been found.

On Jan. 1, 1884, appeared the first issue of the Evening Sentinel, and the paper has been published daily ever since. But 600 copies of the daily were sold at first, and the subscription list remained stationary for some time, but various local circumstances combined to demonstrate its importance to the public, and, as before, the progress made has been sure and substantial. The patronage has increased until the present ratio is one subscription for every six inhabitants in the field it covers—a record unequalled by any paper in the State. There is no doubt that this happy condition of affairs is due for the most part to Mr. Emerson's public spirit, which he has shown in numerous ways since his settlement in Ansonia. It is an undisputed fact that the Sentinel as a business enterprise ranks as of first importance in Ansonia, the mere statement that $20,000 is paid annually, all in the locality, for work on the paper and in the job printing department, carrying some idea of its commercial value. The business has not lacked rivals, but they have come and gone without appreciable effect on its popularity or influence, except, perhaps, the healthy stimulus of opposition. The New Haven papers at one time enjoyed a large circulation in the valley, and it was the need of a local daily thus plainly demonstrated that Mr. Emerson attempted to fill when he made the important change in 1884, thus bringing to Ansonia a revenue and an industry that were rapidly being monopolized by outsiders. The name was changed to the Ansonia Sentinel when the borough was made a town by action of the Legislature in May, 1888.

The mechanical outfit of the Sentinel is worthy of special mention. A Potter drum cylinder press, a small Gordon jobber and type enough for immediate needs were all the office boasted when the business was started. At the present day there is hardly a city of the size of Ansonia which has a newspaper equipment so up to date and complete. The setting of type by hand was discontinued several years ago, and three Mergenthaler linotype machines installed. These have since been increased to five. New presses have been purchased from time to time, each an improvement on its predecessor, and the Hoe two-deck Straight-Line Rotary now in use has a capacity of 20,000 4 or 8-page papers, or 10,000 10, 12 or 16-page papers per hour. The facilities for obtaining news are on a par with the equipment. The Sentinel is served by the Associated Press, and receives the news direct in the editorial rooms by private wire.

ANDREW FOOTE AUSTIN is one of the best known and most influential citizens of North Haven, his public life having covered many years. His family ranked among the oldest settlers in the State. John Austin married Prudence Roys, and testified to the birth of their son, Joshua, in Wallingford, Conn., in 1708. Joshua Austin married Mercy Hall, and their son, Abner, was born in Wallingford Nov. 17, 1734. Abner Austin married Ann Beers, and their son, Joseph, became the grandfather of the subject of this review.

Joseph Austin followed agricultural pursuits in Wallingford, where he married Bethia Page. They had three sons, Abner, Caleb and Joseph. He died in North Haven.

Joseph Austin was born April 23, 1803, and in 1825 came to North Haven, locating on the land now owned and occupied by his son, following the occupation of farming and butchering until his death, which occurred Oct. 14, 1854. He married Celia, daughter of Rufus and Elizabeth (Harrison) Foote; the three children born to this union were: Andrew Foote; Abner E., who married Ruth B. Coe, and after her death wedded Mary Gilbert; Charles R., who died in August, 1851.

Andrew F. Austin was born March 26, 1834, on the farm he now owns. His primary education was received in the district schools, and was supplemented in the State Normal School, his natural ability placing him in the rank of teachers when but eighteen years old. For fifteen years he was engaged in teaching in the winters and farming in the summers. When he reached his twenty-fifth year he was appointed a justice of the peace, which position he has held for forty-three years, being a trial justice, and still holds the office. His decisions are of such an impartial character, and show so much wisdom, that his fellow citizens have been justified in reposing their confidence in him for so long a period. Mr. Austin has held for many years the office of school visitor, the duties of which he has faithfully performed. In 1880 he was made census enumerator, in the taking of the tenth census of the 102d district, which then included his native town. In 1882 he had the honor of representing his town in the Legislature, serving on the committee on Claims. In 1862 he was made a selectman, and served for fourteen years in that capacity as town agent. For many years he was a trusted and valued employee of the Marvin Safe Co., of New York, and traveled in the sale of burglar proof safes, severing this connection when the company entered the combine; he was similarly engaged with the firm of Bradley & Co., of Syracuse, N. Y., leaving them only when the firm went out of business.

Although the owner of a fine farm, Mr. Austin does little farming himself, his time being occupied with his business in the community, and with that of the Mutual Life Insurance Co., of New York, of which he is the agent. Mr. Austin settles up estates where the intricacies of the law make difficult and long continued litigation, and his methods of honest and fearless justice have caused his advice to be sought and acted upon. Had Mr. Austin entered the legal profession, it is the opinion of his acquaintances that he would have made his mark; his judgments are almost always sustained by the higher courts.

On Nov. 26, 1857, Mr. Austin married Charlotte P. Stiles, a native of North Haven, and a daughter of Horace and Lois P. Stiles, the former a brick manufacturer of North Haven. Mr. Stiles was a son of Isaac Clark Stiles, and a grandson of Isaac Stiles, who was a brother of Ezra Stiles, president of Yale College. Isaac Stiles was born in Windsor. His father, Isaac Stiles, came to North Haven in 1724, and was a Congregational minister there until 1760. Isaac was a son of John Stiles, who was born in Windsor, in 1607, a son of Francis Stiles, who came with seven others of the name to America on the ship "Christian" in 1634, landing in Boston, and going to Windsor with the Rev. Warham expedition.

To Mr. and Mrs. Austin were given two sons. The younger, Gardener E., died in February, 1895. The elder, Frederick W., married Juline Rebecca Barnes, and two children have been born to them, Clarence A. and Esther Louise. He resides in New Haven, where he is employed in the office of the Merwin Provision Co. In politics our subject has always been a staunch Republican and has been a useful and active worker for his party. All the family are identified with the North Haven Congregational Church, and they enjoy the esteem of the community.

BENJAMIN HALL, dairy farmer of East Wallingford, warden of the Episcopal Church, and one of the leading spirits of his community, was born on the farm which is now his home Oct. 30, 1830. A descendant of one of the old families of New Haven county, he has worthily sustained the family honor by a clean and upright life.

John Hall was the first of this family to settle in New Haven county. Coming from England to Boston prior to 1650, with his family, he located in this region. In 1660 his three sons, with others, came to Wallingford, and were signers of the Plantation Covenant. On this interesting document John Hall's name appears in 1672. In 1675 he was chosen selectman of the town, as was also his son John, and here the remainder of his life was spent; he died in 1676, at the age of seventy-one years. He and his wife, Jane (Woolen), had seven children: (1) John, baptized Aug. 9, 1646, died Sept. 2, 1721; (2) Richard was born July 11, 1645; (3) Samuel, born May 21, 1646, died March 5, 1725; (4) Sarah was baptized Aug. 9, 1646; (5) Thomas was born March 25, 1649; (6) Jonathan was born April 5, 1651; (7) David, born March 18, 1652, died July 17, 1727.

John Hall (2), the eldest in the family of John, was one of the first settlers of Wallingford, where he was postmaster and a man of influence, and where he died. On Dec. 6, 1666, he was married to Mary, daughter of Edward Parker, and she died Sept. 22, 1725, the mother of the following children: (1) Elizabeth, born Aug. 11, 1670; (2) Daniel, born July 26, 1672, who married Thankful Lyman; (3) Mary, born June 23, 1675; (4) Nathaniel, born Feb. 8, 1677, who married Elizabeth Curtiss; (5) John, born March 14, 1681; (6) Lydia, born Jan. 21, 1683; (7) Samuel, born Dec. 24, 1686, who died Nov. 1, 1689; (8) Esther, born Aug. 30, 1693; (9) Caleb, born Sept. 14, 1697.

John Hall (3), whose name appears in the foregoing list, was born in Wallingford, and was married June 28, 1707, to Elizabeth Royce, who died Sept. 2, 1755, at the age of sixty-six years. He lived to be eighty-five years old, passing away April 27, 1760. A land owner and a practical and successful farmer, he spent his entire life in Wallingford. He had a numerous family, whose names and dates of birth are as follows: (1) Isaac and (2) Peter, twins, July 22, 1709; (3) John, Dec. 28, 1712; (4) Asahel, Jan. 10, 1717; (5) Royce, Dec. 20, 1718 (graduated from Yale, 1737, and died May 20, 1752); (6) Abigail, March 7, 1723; (7) Elizabeth, July 9, 1725; (8) Benjamin, April 4, 1728 (married Phebe Hall, and died Dec. 11, 1806); (9) Elisha, Sept. 15, 1730; (10) Sarah, Aug. 25,

Benjamin Hall

1752; and (11) Abel, the date of whose birth is now unknown.

John Hall (4), son of John (3), born Dec. 28, 1712, was a lifelong farmer in his native town of Wallingford, where he died May 13, 1795; he was buried in Guilford. Abigail Russell became his wife June 11, 1739, and they had the following children: (1) Elias, born March 10, 1740; (2) Jared, July 19, 1741; (3) Abigail, Oct. 16, 1743; (4) John, Dec. 6, 1744; (5) Elizabeth, Sept. 28, 1745; (6) William, June 15, 1747; (7) Mary, Jan. 23, 1749; (8) Eunice, July 6, 1751; (9) Anna C., Aug. 15, 1755; (10) Benjamin, July 2, 1757.

Benjamin Hall, the grandfather of our subject proper, was born as noted above in the town of Wallingford, and like his father was an extensive land owner and farmer. He owned and cultivated the farm where his grandson now lives, and the handsome house which is the home of the Hall family was built by him. In politics he was a Whig, and in religion a member of the Congregational Church. Mr. Hall married Lydia Cook, and they had four children: (1) Lyman was born March 20, 1798; (2) Mary, born June 12, 1799, married Joel Curtis; (3) Eline married Miner Harrison; (4) Orrin was born March 2, 1803.

Orrin Hall, father of Benjamin, lost his father by death while he was still very young, and obtained only a district-school education. From an early age he was engaged in farm labor. When he was twenty-eight years old he settled on the old homestead, where he became engaged in farming and stock raising, and he remained on the farm all his life, dying there at the ripe age of seventy-two years. His remains rest in the Center street cemetery at Wallingford. In religion he was a member of the Congregational Church, and in politics a Whig in early life, and in later years a Democrat. Abstemious and temperate in his habits, and a hard-working man, he was a good citizen and a kind father. Orrin Hall and Mary Todd were married in Wallingford, where she was born, in the Society of Northford, daughter of Thelas Todd. Four children came to this union: (1) Benjamin is mentioned below; (2) Glosion is living retired in New Haven; (3) Mary is the widow of Ransom Baldwin; (4) Elbert resides in western Missouri. The mother died in Meriden, at the home of her daughter, and was buried in the Center street cemetery, Wallingford. A member of the Episcopal Church, she was a good Christian woman, and was highly respected in every relation of life.

Benjamin Hall began life as a poor boy, and had only the advantages of a common-school education. He worked at farm labor from a very early age, and continued thus until his marriage, when he settled down to farming on his own account, and has ever since been engaged in general agriculture and stock raising. To-day he is one of the most extensive dairymen of Wallingford, keeping a herd of sixty cows. Many improvements have been wrought on the farm since it passed into his hands, and he is one of the largest land owners in the town of Wallingford, accumulating this extensive property very largely through his own efforts. A genial and affable man, he is pronounced a good neighbor, and a kindly-hearted and upright member of the community by all that know him. He resides on the old homestead where five generations of Halls have lived. Twice appointed postmaster at East Wallingford during the McKinley administration, he filled that position until the office was abandoned for the rural delivery.

Benjamin Hall was married, in 1857, in East Haven, to Miss Martha Todd, daughter of Jonah H. Todd. She died in 1862 in East Wallingford, and was buried in the Center street cemetery. A member of the Episcopal Church, she was an exemplary woman in every respect. For his second wife Mr. Hall married, on April 11, 1866, Clarissa C. Porter, who was born in Farmington, Conn., a daughter of William S. Porter. Two children were born to the first marriage: (1) Jane Elizabeth, who married Alson B. Bartholomew, of Wallingford, and died April 23, 1892; and (2) Martha Todd, who married Hon. Henry C. Wooding, of Yalesville, a dairy farmer. Mr. Hall is now serving his sixth year as senior warden of the Episcopal Church, of which he has been a vestryman for many years. He is also a member of the Wallingford Grange, and is highly respected in the community. Domestic in his habits, he has led a clean and wholesome life, and believes that the noblest ideals may be largely carried out in our daily acts. He is singularly free from the petty vices that mar social life, has never used tobacco, and has never been under the influence of intoxicants; he has never taken a drink at a bar.

RICHARD MANSFIELD EVERIT, a retired merchant, formerly of the old firm of Hotchkiss Bros. & Co., of New Haven, but more recently of the firm of Burdett & Everit, of New York, who were extensively engaged in foreign trade with Europe, the West Indies and South America, has long been one of New Haven's leading citizens.

Born April 9, 1824, in the old Mansfield homestead—the home of his maternal ancestors, which stood in Grand avenue, a little east of the Mill river bridge and which was purchased by his father—Mr. Everit is the son of the late Capt. Richard and Sarah (Mansfield) Everit. The former was a son of William Everit, a soldier of the Revolution and a descendant of one of the earliest settlers of Long Island, while the latter was descended from one of New Haven's early planters.

William Everit, seeing the British land on Long Island, immediately went with two others to the house of the commanding officer, Capt. Woodhull, to notify him of the landing. While they were in the house it was surrounded by British troops, and the captain of the British demanded the surrender of Capt. Woodhull; the latter gave up his sword to the British officer, who thereupon ran him through with it. During the excitement William Everit and his companions escaped through the window and hid under the floor of the barn. They were located by the British and made prisoners of war, being confined where the old post-office was in Nassau street, New York. Mr. Everit made his escape from the prison through the aid of his wife, who was in the habit of bringing him provisions each week. The day of his escape she brought him a suit of clothes instead of provisions, and after donning them he mingled with the visitors, and so escaped, rejoining the Colonists.

Capt. Richard Everit was born in New York City Dec. 23, 1772. He became a ship master, commanding packet ships trading between New York and Holland, London and Bristol, England, and also made voyages to other European ports, the West Indies and South America. The second American vessel which visited Rio Grande do Sul, Brazil, now a great hide exporting place, was commanded by him. Capt. Everit's life in some respects was remarkable. He began going to sea at the age of eleven years, and followed a sea-faring life until he was fifty, when he retired to New Haven and lived there for forty years. During his whole life he never drank a glass of rum, gin or brandy, a remarkable circumstance considering his occupation and the habits and customs of his class and the times. Being of a kindly and genial disposition, he had many friends, and few, if any, enemies. He died March 4, 1803, in New Haven.

On March 31, 1811, Capt. Everit was married to Elizabeth Mansfield, who was born Jan. 27, 1780, daughter of William Mansfield, of New Haven. She died March 28, 1818, and Capt. Everit married, Feb. 6, 1820, her sister Sarah, who was born April 4, 1791. Mrs. Sarah Everit died July 23, 1875. One son came to the first marriage, Phineas, born Dec. 7, 1812, who died unmarried Sept. 18, 1854, in New York. The children of the second marriage were: Elizabeth, born Jan. 15, 1822, died July 7, 1822; Richard Mansfield is mentioned below; William Lyon, born Oct. 21, 1826, married July 28, 1853, Adelaide Prescott Frink; Mary Mercein, born Feb. 7, 1829, married, Aug. 4, 1851, John H. Coley, who for many years was a leading dry-goods merchant in New Haven.

Richard Mansfield Everit was educated in the schools of New Haven and vicinity, attending the John E. Lovell Lancasterian School, the school kept by S. A. Thomas, and the old Fair Haven Academy, an excellent institution, then kept by Joshua Pearl. Young Everit prepared for college, but sickness at the time prevented him from commencing a college course, and he entered upon his business career, beginning Feb. 1, 1841, as a clerk under the late Charles H. Oaks. After remaining with Mr. Oaks a little less than five years, and going, during the latter part of his stay, on business for the first time to the West Indies, he became the agent of the Peck Bros.—Nathan, Wyllys and Henry E.—of New Haven, for three years. After this experience he associated with J. A. Bishop, and entered upon his first business venture on his own account. For seven years he spent a large part of his time in the West Indies, where nearly all the New Haven trade was then concentrated. In 1851 he became associated with Russel, Henry O. and Edward Hotchkiss, who were the successors of their father on Long Wharf. Early in that year he embarked for Brazil on a business inspecting tour, to ascertain what might be done in a business line. At Para, on the Amazon, a place then but little known to Americans, he remained some eighteen months, and there established a good trade. This enterprise was the means of introducing into that region many articles of American growth and production, which were before wholly unknown. On returning from Brazil, Mr. Everit became a partner in the house of Hotchkiss Bros. & Co., which relations he continued until 1860. Desiring a larger field of operation than New Haven afforded, and for other reasons, he went to New York City, and there with Charles P. Burdett formed a partnership under the title of Burdett & Everit, which continued for nine or ten years, the firm building up a large and profitable business with Brazil, the West Indies and Europe.

In 1869 in the very prime of life and in the full tide of prosperity, Mr. Everit, at the early age of forty-five, retired from business, solely in consequence of ill health. Returning to New Haven, he established for himself a beautiful and charming home, located on a level plateau, on the east side of Whitney avenue, only half a mile distant and in full and grand view of the precipitous front of East Rock, the park itself extending nearly to his grounds. Here he is enjoying with his family the fruits of a well-spent life, and dispenses a generous hospitality to his many friends. Mr. Everit is enterprising and public-spirited, as is evidenced in the appearance of his commodious grounds and residence, which add great beauty to the "City of Elms." In 1869 he purchased a large farm about twenty-two miles west from Boston, in what is now the flourishing town of South Framingham. This land is laid out for the building of a city, and Mr. Everit has spent a great amount of money and time on the property.

On Feb. 5, 1861, Mr. Everit was married to Miss Mary Talman Lawrence, daughter of Watson E. Lawrence, of New York, and Augusta Maria (Nicol) Lawrence, of New Haven, and children as follows have been born to them: Richard Lawrence, of South Framingham, Mass.; Emma Augusta, deceased; Arthur Mansfield, of Buffalo, N. Y.; Annie Coley, wife of Dr. L. S. De Forest; and Edward Hotchkiss, at this writing superintendent of Equipment of the Southern New England Telephone Co.

On his mother's side Richard Mansfield Everit is in the seventh generation from Richard Mansfield, who came from Exeter, Devonshire, England, and settled in Quinnipiac (now New Haven). From this settler our subject's lineage is through Major Moses, Jonathan, Lieut. Nathan, William and Sarah (Mansfield) Everit. William Mansfield, son of Lieut. Nathan, was born April 1, 1750, at the old Mansfield home on the present site of the Sheffield North College, and married (first) Dec. 25, 1770, Elizabeth Lyon, daughter of William and Elizabeth (Maltby) Lyon.

EDWARD IVES (deceased) was for many years one of the best known citizens and prominent farmers of Cheshire. He was a native of New Haven county, born in Meriden, Oct. 14, 1836, and was a great-grandson of Zachariah Ives, one of the first settlers of Cheshire, where he followed farming. Jesse Ives, son of Zachariah, followed farming in Meriden, where he died Feb. 12, 1836, leaving his wife, Marilla (Johnson), a native of Southington, Conn., and four children, Jotham, Lyman, Rosetta and Almon, all now deceased.

Jotham Ives, father of our subject, was born in Meriden Sept. 7, 1808, and was there reared and educated. He wedded Mary Rice Way, who was born in Meriden Sept. 10, 1807, and died Aug. 31, 1878. His death occurred May 18, 1864. Of their five children Edward was the eldest; Amos was mayor of Meriden in 1897-98-99; Betsey is the wife of Robert Hallam, of South Meriden; Julius Isaac is a resident of Meriden; and Almon J. makes his home in Tracy, a town of Wallingford.

Edward Ives passed his boyhood and youth in Meriden, and attended school there. In 1862 he purchased a farm in Cheshire, to which he moved in May of that year, and on which he continued to make his home until called from this life March 25, 1880. As a public-spirited and progressive citizen he gave his support to every worthy enterprise for the public good, and in his death the community realized that it had lost a valuable and useful citizen. He was widely and favorably known and had a host of warm personal friends, who esteemed him highly for his sterling worth.

On April 25, 1862, in Middletown, Conn., Mr. Ives married Miss Lois Lucelia Smith, and to them were born two children: (1) Howard Edward, who is engaged in general farming on the home place, was married, Oct. 25, 1899, in Cheshire, to Miss Cornelia Matilda Atwater; they have a son, Edward Atwater, born Sept. 16, 1901. (2) Henrietta, who married, Aug. 30, 1888, John C. Rapson, of South Meriden, and has two children, Hazel Lucelia and Lilian Gertrude.

Mrs. Ives is a native of Cheshire, and belongs to quite an old and prominent Connecticut family. Her paternal great-grandparents were David and Abigail (Lewis) Smith, natives of Southington, Conn., and the former a son of David Smith and grandson of Gideon Smith. Mrs. Ives' grandparents were Gideon Lewis and Lois (Barnes) Smith, also natives of Southington, who in 1823 moved to Cheshire, where the grandfather followed farming throughout the remainder of his life, dying there Jan. 20, 1850. His wife died July 31, 1846. Their children were Elizabeth, wife of Sherman Hart, of Berlin, Conn.; Rhoda, wife of John Hall, of Kennington; Abigail, wife of Seth Pratt, of Southington; Sylvia, wife of David Beach, of Southington; Loyal, the father of Mrs. Ives; Rollin, who died in Cheshire; Lois, who married Asabel Warner, and died in Auburn, New York; and Lola, wife of Burrill Parker, of Southington.

Loyal Smith, Mrs. Ives' father, was born in Southington, July 14, 1807, and died Oct. 31, 1870. He was sixteen years of age when the family removed to Cheshire, where he afterward engaged in farming throughout life. He was quite a prominent and influential citizen of his community, and was a member of the State Legislature from Cheshire in 1856 and again in 1867. In that town he was married, Oct. 29, 1829, to Miss Henrietta Dickerman, who was born in Hamden Nov. 26, 1807, and died June 10, 1864, a daughter of Samuel and Lois (Peck) Dickerman, also natives of Hamden, where her mother died Nov. 12, 1822. Her father died in Cheshire June 30, 1840. To Mr. and Mrs. Smith were born eight children, as follows: Sereno D., a resident of Meriden; Lois, who died at the age of six years; Eliza, who died in Cheshire in 1848, at the age of eleven years; Lois Lucelia, now Mrs. Ives; Rhoda, wife of Amos Ives, of Meriden; Loyal B., of Cheshire; Samuel D., of Wallingford; and Franklin Pierce, a farmer of Cheshire.

EDWIN AUGUSTUS HOTCHKISS, who passed away Dec. 16, 1883, ranked among the leading business men and citizens of New Haven in his day, and no man enjoyed to a greater extent the esteem of all with whom he was associated.

Mr. Hotchkiss was born in New Haven Dec. 4, 1835, and was a son of Isaac Thompson Hotchkiss, also a native of that city, where he was long engaged in the coal business, becoming a prominent figure in the mercantile circles of the city. He died in 1870. Edwin A. Hotchkiss attended the New Haven schools, also Major Russell's Military Academy—the school in which many of the leading citizens of New Haven have finished their literary training. After reaching his mature years he was associated with his father in the coal business, which after the death of that honored gentleman he carried on with his brother, David T. Hotchkiss, until his death. He was one of the largest dealers in coal in the city, and took a high position in mercantile circles by reason of his force and strength of character, backed by executive ability, good judgment and the strictest integrity.

On Nov. 23, 1858, Mr. Hotchkiss was united in marriage with Miss Caroline Mulford Parker, who was born Feb. 6, 1838, and they had three children, two of whom are living: (1) Edwin A., born Sept. 28, 1859, is engaged with his uncle in the blotting paper business, and is a very fine young business man. He and his brother are both esteemed for their genuine and unaffected manliness, and have a host of friends. Edwin A. Hotchkiss is a member of the Union League Club, and like all the family attends Trinity Church. (2) Caroline M., born July 31, 1866, died Dec. 18, 1868. (3) Howard Parker, born April 1, 1870, a graduate of Sheffield Scientific School, is now in the employ of the Security Insurance Co. On June 14, 1900, he married A. Mabel Lee, of Athol, Mass., daughter of Joseph Lee, now deceased, and they have one child, Howard Parker, Jr., born Aug. 27, 1901. All of the family enjoy a reputation for superior character, kindness and general intelligence of a high order, and their fine qualities, cordial spirit, general progressiveness and wide-awake ideas, are fully appreciated by their many friends. The comfortable and attractive home, which Mrs. Hotchkiss now occupies, at No. 1226 Chapel street, was erected by her father, Col. Joseph Parker, and is one of the most imposing in this city of elegant homes. Edwin A. Hotchkiss, the father, was a man far above the average in qualities of both head and heart. Though an able business man and inflexible in the discharge of his duties, he was kindness itself to all with whom he came in contact in any of the relations of life, and especially in his own home, where he was ever regarded as the model husband and father. In his death New Haven suffered the loss of a worthy citizen, the commercial world a man of fine business talent, and society a gentleman whose presence was ever welcome among the ranks of the most cultured.

Col. Joseph Parker, father of Mrs. Hotchkiss, was the inventor of blotting paper, and was one of the largest manufacturers of paper in the country. He was born in Litchfield county, Conn., son of Dr. Joseph Parker, practicing physician in that county all his life. Col. Joseph Parker married Caroline Mulford, who was born in New Haven, daughter of Hervey Mulford, one of the old residents of that city. Hervey Mulford was a graduate of Yale College, and was a lifelong merchant. To Col. and Mrs. Parker were born six children, two of whom are now living: Joseph, who is still carrying on his father's business, and Mrs. Edwin A. Hotchkiss.

WILLIS C. HALL, proprietor of a leading grocery in Waterbury, is a native of Connecticut, born March 16, 1833, in Cheshire, and comes of good old Connecticut stock, of English ancestry.

John Hall (1), the great-great-great-great-great-grandfather of our subject, came to these shores from England about the year 1638, first locating in Boston, then in New Haven, Conn., and later settling in Wallingford, where he died. His son John (2), and grandson John (3), were born in England, and his great-grandson John (4) was born in Wallingford. Jared Hall, great-great-grandson of the emigrant, and the great-grandfather of our subject, was born July 19, 1741, in Wallingford. He married Lucy Hall.

Amos Hall, son of Jared, and the grandfather of our subject, was born May 21, 1773, in Cheshire, Conn. He married Elizabeth Bontecou, a lineal descendant of Pierre Bontecou, merchant, who was a French Huguenot refugee from La Rochelle, France, and landed in New York in 1689. He was a prominent member of the French Huguenot Episcopal Church in New York, in which he held prominent offices. Amos and Elizabeth (Bontecou) Hall settled on a farm in Wallingford, now in Cheshire, where they reared a family of children as follows: (1) Eliza, born Sept. 21, 1804, married William Prichard, son of David and Ann (Hitchcock) Prichard, and they then settled in Brunswick, Ohio, where he was a farmer and drover; he died in Jefferson, Iowa. (2) Charles is the father of our subject. (3) Nancy, born in November, 1808, died May 4, 1873; she married Hiram Bradley, of Cheshire, Conn., born Oct. 3, 1809, and they settled in Southington, Conn., where he followed the business of carriage and wagonmaker. (4) Amos, born Feb. 18, 1811, married Aspatia Doolittle, and for some time they lived in Cheshire, later removing to Brunswick, Ohio, where he followed farming. He returned to Cheshire, and died there Aug. 16, 1861. She is also deceased, and they are buried at Cheshire. (5) George A., born Jan. 31, 1814, married Sarah Merriams, of Prospect, Conn., a daughter of Rufus and Mary (Hotchkiss) Merriams; he was a farmer, and now lives in the town of Waterbury. (6) Susan S., born Oct. 13, 1817, married Henry Livingston, of Brunswick, Ohio, a son of Henry G. Livingston; they both died in Brunswick, she on May 5, 1885. (7) Henrietta E., born April 30, 1821, married Edward Terrell, of Waterbury, Conn., and died there Feb. 5, 1870.

Charles Hall, father of our subject, was born in Cheshire, Conn., Oct. 12, 1806. On Sept. 30, 1830, he married Amy Moss, daughter of Asahel and Amy Andrews (Hitchcock) Moss, and a lineal descendant from John Moss, one of the first settlers of Wallingford, who died at the patriarchal age of one hundred and three years. Some time after their marriage our subject's parents moved to Brunswick, Ohio, settling on a wild tract of farm land. In 1843 he returned to Cheshire, where he died on his farm; his wife passed away Aug. 13, 1875. In religious faith they were identified with the Congregational Church, he being a Sunday-school teacher in same. In politics he was first a Whig, later a Republican. In 1832 he was commissioned, by Gov. Peters of Connecticut, as captain of the 32d Regiment of Militia. A family of nine children were born to Charles Hall and his wife: (1) Celia E. died at the age of four years. (2) Willis C. is our subject. (3) Ellen M., born Jan. 12, 1835, married Seth Eleada Frost, who was born in Wolcott Feb. 24, 1832, and is a farmer in Southington, Conn. (4) Emma, born Aug. 11, 1837, was married, Dec. 25, 1860, by Rev. John S. C. Abbott, to Elmer William Hitchcock, and they settled on a farm in Cheshire. (5) Gardner M., born in Brunswick, Ohio, Jan. 11, 1841, died Oct. 13, 1880; he was a member of the firm of the Hall & Upson Ice Co., also president of the Naugatuck Valley Co., of Bridgeport, Conn. On May 10, 1870, he married Georgiana Elizabeth Mullings, daughter of John and Elizabeth (Brooks) Mullings. (6) Franklin Amos, born in Brunswick, Ohio, Aug. 1, 1843, enlisted in Company H, 20th Conn. V. I., during the Civil war, was captured and confined in Libby prison. On his return home he became a traveling salesman, and later proprietor of the "Earle House," Waterbury. On Oct. 9, 1867, he married Adelaide Ulissa Munger, daughter of Daniel and Eliza (Russell) Munger, of Waterbury. He died Feb. 20, 1879. (7) Denison Asahel, born Jan. 18, 1847, died unmarried Dec. 2, 1875. (8) Adelaide Eliza, born Sept. 17, 1849, was married, June 14, 1871, to George B. Lawton, of Waterbury; he is a diesinker in Waterbury, and lives in Cheshire. (9) Warren L., born May 21, 1856, is a merchant in Waterbury; he married, Dec. 14, 1881, Etta Louise Andrews, of Naugatuck.

Willis C. Hall, the subject proper of these lines, passed his boyhood in his native place, Cheshire, with the exception of the five years he lived in Ohio, and he received a liberal education at the district schools. For a time he worked on a farm, and later clerked for Samuel Hitchcock, in Cheshire, some four years, after which for two years he conducted a dry-goods and grocery business. His store being destroyed by fire, he returned to the old farm for a time, or until 1862, in that year taking up his residence in Waterbury, where he worked for the Scovill Manufacturing Co. for some time, and then clerked for B. S. Hotchkiss eight years, after which he and I. A. Spencer conducted a grocery store in Waterbury seven years. Mr. Hall then opened a grocery on Bank street, which he continued one year, at the end of which time he and his brother, Warren L., went into a fruit and commission business, the copartnership existing four years. In the fall of 1890 he opened his present grocery business at No. 11 Cherry street, in which he is meeting with desirable success.

On May 26, 1857, Mr. Hall married Elizabeth Heatly, daughter of William Heatly, of England, whose ancestors fought under William the Conqueror; she died Nov. 20, 1873, the mother of three children: Charles Edward, Walter (deceased) and Gardner Irving. On June 13, 1876, Mr. Hall married (second) Orinda Daniels, who was born in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., daughter of Joseph B. and Eleanor (Miller) Daniels, and two children came of this union, Joseph and Alfred, both of whom died at the age of five years. Mr. and Mrs. Hall are members of the Episcopal Church at Waterbury. In politics he is a Republican, and he cast his first presidential vote for Fremont. He is a prominent member of the community in which he lives, a supporter of all matters of public concern that are calculated to advance the public welfare, and all who know him hold him in high regard.

BENJAMIN BREWSTER BROWN was a deacon of the Congregational Church of Prospect for several years, and the oldest living resident of that town. He was born in Windsor, N. Y., Sept. 24, 1815, a son of Daniel and Charlotte (Roe) Brown, both natives of Long Island. His maternal grandfather was Capt. Roe, who served as an officer in the Revolutionary war. The father followed farming both on Long Island and in Windsor, N. Y., and both he and his wife died at the latter place. They were earnest and consistent members of the Presbyterian Church, and he was a Democrat in politics.

Our subject attended the public schools and also a select school of his native town, but the greater part of his education was acquired through his own unaided efforts. He assisted his father in the operation of the farm until sixteen years of age and then learned the tailor's trade, which he continued to follow until 1845. It was during that year that he came to Prospect, and located on the farm which he owned and occupied until his death. Through the summer months he engaged in agricultural pursuits, while during the winter he successfully engaged in teaching school for fifteen years, being employed in the district schools of Prospect and Cheshire, and at that time he was one of the most popular educators of the community. He continued to actively engage in farming until old age compelled his retirement.

In Prospect Mr. Brown married Miss Emily B. Hotchkiss, a native of that town and a daughter of David M. and Zeruah (Stevens) Hotchkiss, and granddaughter of Frederick Hotchkiss. By this union were born two children: (1) Clarence Henry, a resident of Wallingford, Conn., and deacon of the Baptist Church there, married Nettie F. Mansfield, and has two children, Emily Adeline and Edna Louise. (2) Frederick Hotchkiss, who is engaged in the furniture business in New Haven, and is deacon of the Congregational Church there; he married Kate E. Woodward, of Bethany. The wife and mother, who was a good Christian woman and an active member of the Congregational Church, died April 1, 1887.

In 1864 Mr. Brown was elected on the Republican ticket to the State Legislature, and was called upon to fill other offices, having served as a member of the school committee, as selectman of Prospect, and justice of the peace for several years. On attaining his majority he became identified with the Whig party; later was a staunch Republican, and still later, on account of his views on the temperance question, he cast his ballot with the Prohibition party. For many years he was an active and prominent member of the Congregational Church, and served as teacher in, and superintendent of the Sunday-school, and for the long period of forty years filled the office of deacon. His long and well-spent life justly entitled him to the high regard in which he was held, and no citizen in Prospect was more honored or esteemed. Over his life record there falls no shadow of wrong, his public service was most exemplary, and his private life was marked by the utmost fidelity to duty. He died at his home, which he loved so well, July 31, 1900, and was laid to rest beside his wife in the Prospect cemetery.

LEWIS ROSSITER ELIOT (deceased), in his lifetime one of Guilford's best known and most highly respected citizens, descended from one of the oldest families of Connecticut. Tradition traces the ancestry of the Eliots of England to the time of the landing of William the Conqueror on the shores of that country in 1066. In the early history of England the name was variously spelled Eliot, Elliot, Elyot, Elyotte, etc.

John Eliot, commonly called the "apostle to the Indians," was the American ancestor of the Elliots and Eliots, of which family our subject is a worthy member. That great and good man was born in England, Dec. 20, 1604, in—as authorities claim—Nasing, County of Essex, though both the counties of Devon and Cornwall lay claim to his birthplace, and there is a record of his baptism in the register of the church at Widford, Herefordshire. Nothing is related of his parents except that they gave him a liberal education and were exemplary for their piety, to which fact Mr. Eliot himself bore testimony, when, in after years, he wrote thus: "I do see that it was a great favor of God unto me to season my first years with the fear of God, the word, and prayer." He was educated at Jesus College, University of Cambridge, where he became distinguished for his love of the languages, especially Greek and Hebrew, of which he acquired a sound, thorough and discriminating knowledge. He became well versed in the general course of liberal studies, and was particularly learned in theology. After leaving the university he was employed as usher in the grammar school of Rev. Thomas Hooker, at Little Baddow, County of Essex. Mr. Hooker subsequently was one of the most eminent of the worthies of New England. He exerted a salutary influence on the formation of Mr. Eliot's character and principles, and decided him in pursuing the profession of a Christian minister. When Mr. Hooker was driven from England, Mr. Eliot followed him to the New World, making the voyage in the ship "Lion," and arriving at Boston Nov. 3, 1631, in company with his brothers Jacob and Philip, Gov. Winthrop's wife and children and about sixty others. He was immediately placed in charge of the First Church of Boston, the pastor, Mr. Wilson, having gone to England temporarily, on business. His betrothed, Annie Mountfort, who was born Sept. 16, 1603, followed him to New England, and they were married in October, 1632. Mr. Eliot continued in charge of the Boston congregation until his removal to Roxbury, where he was ordained Nov. 5, 1632. He was the first minister in that place, and continued as teacher of the church there until his death, a period of nearly sixty years, preaching as long as his strength lasted. His meeting house was on the hill where the present meeting house of the First (Unitarian) Church of Roxbury now stands.

At that time there were many Indians within the limits of the English plantations, and to Christianize and improve them became the ruling motive of Mr. Eliot's life, his work among them commencing Oct. 28, 1646, at Nonantum, in Newton. He devoted his great intellect to learning their language, and made several translations of Holy Writ, the most noted being that known as the "Indian Bible." The New Testament was published at Cambridge in September, 1661, and was followed by the Old, and thus the entire Bible, with a catechism and the Psalms of David in metre, was given to the Indians in their own tongue within forty years after the settlement of the country. This work was of such magnitude, requiring such deep and exhaustive learning, that it yet excites the wonder of philologists. Eliot's labors were far greater than those of any of the translators in Germany, England and France, for they had the facilities afforded by copies of the Bible in Latin, which was the conventional language of the priests and students of Europe, while his work was in an unwritten and unknown language, which he was first obliged to learn; and, after his Bible was published, he had to establish schools and prepare a grammar and other books for instructing the savages to read it. In all these arduous duties he had no assistant but an Indian boy. Thus a humble and modest, yet faithful and zealous, pastor of a small Christian community, on the shores of a vast continent which was then almost a wilderness, alone achieved a work which excited the wonder and admiration of both continents, and has rendered his name memorable forever in the annals of literature and piety. With such holy ardor and untiring perseverance did he prosecute his great and commendable labors as to richly deserve his exalted title of "apostle to the Indians." His manner of preaching was very plain, yet powerful; his delivery graceful. The old oak at South Natick beneath which he preached to the Indians in 1690 is still standing. Mr. Eliot's death occurred May 20, 1690, in the eighty-sixth year of his age, and he was laid to rest in what was called the minister's tomb, in the First burying ground. His wife died March 22, 1687. Their children were: Ann, born Sept. 17, 1633, was a daughter of excellent character, and remained with her parents as long as they lived;

she was the wife of Habakkuk Glover. John, born Aug. 31, 1636, died Oct. 11, 1698. Joseph, born Dec. 20, 1638, is mentioned below. Samuel, born June 22, 1641, died in 1664. Aaron, born Feb. 19, 1644, died Nov. 18, 1655. Benjamin, born Jan. 29, 1647, died Oct. 15, 1687.

(II) Joseph Eliot, first of the name in Guilford, born Dec. 20, 1638, died May 24, 1694, at Guilford, where he was settled as a minister. He owned the home and ground occupied all his lifetime by the subject of this sketch, and which is now the residence of Mrs. Eliot and her son Edward. He was graduated from Harvard in 1658. On Nov. 23, 1662, the people of Northampton unanimously expressed their desire to settle Mr. Eliot as a teacher, and fixed his salary at fifty pounds. In 1664 he was settled at Guilford receiving ordination Dec. 23, of that year. It is said that he delivered an annual sermon before the General Assembly, and he received a grant of land from that body, probably in acknowledgment of these services. He continued to discharge his pastoral duties at Guilford until his death. Joseph Eliot first married Sarah, daughter of Hon. William Brenton, governor of Rhode Island, and after her death he married Mary, daughter of Hon. Samuel Wyllys, of Hartford. She died Oct. 11, 1729, at the age of seventy-three years. His children, four by each wife, were as follows: (1) Mehitabel, born Oct. 4, 1676, married William Wilson, of Guilford, and died April 14, 1723, without issue. (2) Ann, born Dec. 12, 1677, married Dec. 20, 1698, Hon. Jonathan Law, of Milford, governor of Connecticut, and died Nov. 16, 1703. (3) Jemima, born in 1678, married Rev. John Woodbridge, of West Springfield, Mass., and died June 10, 1718. (4) Barshua, married Augustus Lucas, of Fairfield, a French refugee. (5) Jared, born Nov. 7, 1685, died April 22, 1763. (6) Abiel is mentioned below. (7) Mary, born in 1688, married in 1734, Hawkins Hart, of Wallingford, and had a large family. (8) Rebecca, born in 1690, married John Trowbridge, sheriff of New Haven, and after his death became the wife of Ebenezer Fisk; for her third husband she married Capt. William Dudley.

(III) Abiel Eliot, son of Rev. Joseph, was a farmer in Guilford, and died Oct. 28, 1776. He married Mary Leete, daughter of John Leete, of Guilford, and great-granddaughter of William Leete, governor of Connecticut. Their children were: (1) Nathaniel, mentioned below; (2) Wyllys, born Feb. 9, 1731, who died Sept. 20, 1777; (3) Rebecca, born Sept. 8, 1733, who married Nathaniel Graves, of Guilford, and died July 7, 1820; (4) Timothy, born Oct. 23, 1736, who died April 17, 1809; (5) Levi, born Nov. 1, 1739, who died March 21, 1765; (6) Margery, born March 19, 1742, who married Theophilus Merriman, of Wallingford, and died May 15, 1823.

(IV) Nathaniel Eliot, son of Abiel, was born Aug. 15, 1728, and died April 24, 1804. He was a farmer and land owner in Guilford. On Jan. 3, 1754, he married Beulah Parmelee, born in Guilford Aug. 30, 1732, a daughter of Joseph Parmelee; she died Sept. 16, 1818. Their children were: William (sketch of whom follows); and Mary. The daughter, born May 1, 1762, died Sept. 10, 1819. On Sept. 30, 1787, she married Israel Halleck, of Dutchess county, N. Y., who died March 7, 1839. They had three children: Maria, born July 19, 1788, resided in Guilford; Fritz Greene, poet and writer, born July 8, 1790, was also a resident of Guilford; Nathaniel E., born in 1792, died Sept. 29, 1793.

(V) William Eliot (grandfather of Lewis R.) was born Feb. 10, 1755, in Guilford, where he was a lifetime farmer, dying there Feb. 14, 1833; he was buried in Alderbrook cemetery. He married Nov. 26, 1780, Ruth Rossiter, born in North Guilford April 17, 1757, daughter of Nathaniel and Deborah (Fowler) Rossiter. She died July 19, 1814, the mother of three children: (1) William Horace, Sept. 13, 1781, married to Mary Law; (2) Charles, sketch of whom follows; and (3) George Augustus, born June 6, 1792, married Sarah Brown, and settled in Erie, Pennsylvania.

(VI) Charles Eliot (father of Lewis R.), born July 20, 1787, in Guilford, spent all his life there in farming pursuits, dying in 1870. In Guilford, Oct. 15, 1815, he married Chloe Pardee, born April 5, 1785, a daughter of James Pardee, of East Haven, and six children were born to them: (1) Adeline, born June 28, 1816, married May 12, 1839, Josiah Griswold, of Guilford; he died Dec. 22, 1842, and she married (second) Leveret C. Stone; (2) Lewis Rossiter, sketch of whom follows; (3) Edward, born March 25, 1820, became a merchant in Detroit, Mich.; (4) Sarah Ann, born Nov. 3, 1821, married Dec. 31, 1843, Henry Reeves Spencer, of Guilford; (5) Charles Morgan, born Dec. 8, 1824, resident in Meriden; (6) Ruth, born Nov. 23, 1829, married April 23, 1848, Samuel Augustus Wilcox, of Guilford.

(VII) Lewis Rossiter Eliot, the subject proper of this memoir, was born Jan. 23, 1819, in Guilford, where he followed agricultural pursuits all his life, being a large land owner, and successful in all his operations. As a Democrat, he took a lively interest in the affairs of his party, of which he was one of the leaders in his town. For several years he served as assessor, and filled other offices of trust with marked ability and characteristic fidelity; was a director, and at one time president, of the Guilford Savings Bank. In church matters he always took a lively interest as member of the Episcopal Church, of which he was a vestryman for several years; taken all in all, he was a good, loyal citizen, respected and esteemed. In his domestic relations he was especially happy as a loving husband and kind, indulgent father. Well-read, and possessed of good executive ability, he was often appealed to in intricate matters of business, and at various times called upon to settle estates. He died June 9, 1893, and was laid to rest in Alderbrook cemetery.

The late Lewis R. Eliot was twice married, first time Dec. 5, 1847, to Fanny Griswold, born in Guilford, Oct. 27, 1823, died Dec. 24, 1856, and one child, Fanny Maria, born March 26, 1853, graced this union. For his second wife Mr. Eliot wedded Nov. 17, 1858, Catherine Graves, a native of Guilford and daughter of Sherman and Ann (Griswold) Graves, to which union came two children: Miss Elizabeth, who was educated in part in Guilford, in part at Mount Holyoke Seminary, Mass.; and Edward, sketch of whom follows. The mother of these, a lady of culture and refinement, is yet living in Guilford.

(VIII) EDWARD ELIOT, only son of the late Lewis R. Eliot, was born in Guilford, Oct. 14, 1861, and received a liberal education at the public and high schools of the locality. He was reared on the home farm of 150 acres, and has ever since operated same, raising tomatoes chiefly, and conducting a dairy.

On Oct. 16, 1889, Edward Eliot married Maud A. Lee, born in Berlin, Wis., a daughter of William W. and Elizabeth (Vedder) Lee, both of whom died in Guilford. Three children have been born to this union, viz.: Elizabeth Maud, July 14, 1890; Lewis R., April 2, 1892; and Catherine Graves, Sept. 5, 1894.

In politics Mr. Eliot is a Democrat; for five years served on the board of burgesses of Guilford; in 1898 was elected warden of the borough; is a member of the school committee; and a director of the Guilford Savings Bank. Socially, he is affiliated with the New England Order of Protection. In religious faith he is a member and vestryman of the Episcopal Church in Guilford.

GRAVES FAMILY. (I) George Graves, the ancestor of Mrs. L. R. Eliot, and the first of the name in Connecticut, was a native of England, whence he came to this country, settling in Hartford, Conn., where he died in 1673. He had three children: George, sketch of whom follows; John, and a daughter.

(II) George Graves, died in Hartford, Dec. 3, 1692. He married, April 2, 1651, Elizabeth Ventnor, and had six children: George; Elizabeth; John, sketch of whom follows; Ruth, wife of John Webb; Mehitabel, wife of James Harrison; and Mercy.

Children: Elizabeth, wife of Ebenezer Dudley; John, sketch of whom follows; Sarah, born Sept. 25, 1698, wife of James Munger; and four other daughters.

(IV) John Graves, born March 3, 1695, in Hartford, moved to East Guilford, and died there April, 1759. He married (first) Phebe Hand March 19, 1719, and (second) Keziah Norton, Aug. 1, 1723. She was born Dec. 21, 1700, and died Oct. 8, 1771. Children: George, born May 30, 1724; Phebe, Jan. 29, 1726, married Enos Hall; Samuel, born Aug. 3, 1728, died Nov. 25, 1730; Joanna, born Oct. 8, 1730; Sarah, born Jan. 23, 1733; John, sketch of whom follows; Submit, Jan. 13, 1738; Keziah, born June 27, 1743, died Oct. 8, 1775; Samuel (2), June 11, 1746; and Rufus, born Sept. 27, 1749, married Elizabeth Benton.

(V) John Graves, born Oct. 9, 1735, in East Guilford, died April 13, 1791. He married Dec. 20, 1760, Elizabeth Graves, born Sept. 24, 1736, died April 17, 1767, a daughter of Ebenezer and Mary (Isbell) Graves. He married (second) Sarah Dudley, born March 14, 1744, and died Nov. 17, 1797. Children: John, sketch of whom follows; Merriman, wife of Joseph Bartlett, died Sept. 23, 1791; Titus, married to Rachel Dudley, died in 1814; George died without issue.

(VI) John Graves, born at East Guilford Oct. 16, 1761, died Sept. 28, 1819; married January, 1787, Hannah Crane, born 1764, died Jan. 16, 1852. Children: Henry Crane, born June 12, 1788, married Clarissa Crompton, and died in 1846; Elizabeth Amelia, born Feb. 17, 1791, married Phineas Dudley; Nancy Merriam, born Sept. 10, 1793, died March 16, 1849; Sherman, sketch of whom follows; Rebecca, born March 4, 1798, married W. W. Dowd, and died Oct. 28, 1873; and John Adams, born Sept. 1, 1805, married Amelia Bailey, and died in 1837.

(VII) Sherman Graves, born Sept. 20, 1795, died Sept. 12, 1875; married Nov. 4, 1819, Ann Griswold, daughter of John and Hannah (Dudley) Griswold. Children: Elizabeth, born Sept. 18, 1820, died Sept. 20, 1849; John, born Feb. 17, 1822, married Nancy Landon, and died Nov. 4, 1883; Catherine born May 16, 1824, now the widow of Lewis R. Eliot; and Harriet, born Sept. 26, 1825, died May 18, 1849.

HON. RICHARD R. HEPBURN, judge of probate and clerk of the town of Milford, was born in Milford May 23, 1847, son of Richard and Maria Hepburn, and comes of an excellent line. The Hepburns were of the family famous in Scottish history. Judge Hepburn is a great-grandson of Capt. Peter (born in Stratford) and Mary (Cobb) Hepburn, of Taunton, Mass. Peter was a sea captain previous to the American Revolution, and sailed between the Colonies and Europe. Afterward he had extensive rope walks reaching from River to High street, and his homestead was on the corner of Broad and River streets, where the Taylor Library now stands. In winter he taught navigation, and his nephew, who afterward became celebrated as Commodore Isaac Hull, was among his pupils.

Richard Hepburn (1), youngest son of Capt. Peter, and grandfather of Hon. Richard R., was a sea-faring man in early manhood, but afterward engaged in the draying business in New York City. He died in Brooklyn in the year 1865, at the age of eighty-eight, and was buried in Milford. This worthy citizen married Harriet Miles, of Milford, and had seven children, as follows: (1) Thomas was connected with the police force in New York City, and also with the custom house in the same place for a time. He was prominent in the Masonic fraternity. He died in New York, but was buried in Milford. (2) Richard, our subject's father, is mentioned more fully below. (3) Henry, who died in San Francisco, was a shipmaster and commanded vessels running between New York, Liverpool and China. He, too, was identified with the Masonic fraternity. (4) Jane (deceased) married Nathaniel C. L'Hommiedieu, who in early life was in the United States navy, and for many years in the employ of the government at the Brooklyn navy yard. (5) Elizabeth (deceased) married John C. O'Connor, who entered the United States navy early in life, and later became a merchant and ship owner, and the possessor of valuable realty in New York City. (6) Harriet married Samuel Bryan, a copper-plate printer in New York, afterward a trusted employe of the government at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, at Washington, D. C. (7) Sarah resides in Milford, Connecticut.

Richard Hepburn (2), our subject's father, was reared in New York City, spending some years of his boyhood as a clerk in a ship chandler's store on South street. He afterward followed the sea, and at the age of twenty-one years was placed in command of a vessel. Much of his time in later years was passed in Milford. During the trouble between this country and Mexico he commanded a troop ship carrying a New York regiment to Matamoros, with our subject on board. When the Rebellion broke out he enlisted in the navy, with the rank of acting ensign, and served as such on board the monitor "Passaic," and other vessels, until the close of the war. A notable incident in his career was the successful voyage to the Canary Islands in the bark "Grapeshot," for the capture of Lu Baker, the man who shot Bill Poole in a theatre in New York City, which event gave Capt. Hepburn a National reputation for rapid passages. He died at Staten Island Jan. 2, 1891. He married Maria J. Curry, who died Sept. 17, 1873. She was a native of Peekskill, N. Y., and her father was a farmer of that town. Two children were born of this union: Richard R. and Fannie, of whom the latter died Aug. 26, 1877, unmarried.

Richard R. Hepburn, the third of the name and the subject of this sketch, attended the schools of Milford when a boy, and completed his course of study in Brooklyn, but he did not go to school after he reached the age of twelve years, the best part of his education having come from contact with the world. During boyhood he made several trips across the Atlantic with his father. For eighteen or twenty years he was employed by Nathan A. Baldwin, of Milford, the manufacturer of straw hats, but his public duties have since occupied much of his time.

On July 17, 1884, Judge Hepburn married Miss Ella V. Clements, a native of Milford, and an adopted daughter of John F. Clements. One child, Fanny, has blessed this union.

In politics Judge Hepburn is a Republican, and his popularity is shown by the fact that he now holds several public offices, within the gift of his fellow citizens, having served as Town Clerk and Registrar of Vital Statistics since January, 1895. Judge of Probate since January, 1897, and Judge of the Milford Town Court since July, 1901; he is vice-president of the Milford Savings Bank. Socially he is prominent and belongs to the following fraternal organizations: William Fowler Council, No. 64, Order United American Mechanics, of which lodge he has been recording secretary since its organization; Wepowage Lodge, No. 14, I. O. O. F., with which he united in 1881; and Volunteer Council, No. 819, Royal Arcanum, of which he became a member in 1897. He has recently accepted the secretaryship of the Milford Cemetery Association, and is at the present time clerk and treasurer of the Plymouth Congregational Church of Milford, and a member of the Society's committee.

PROF. WILLIAM H. WILLIAMS is one of the well-known and most highly esteemed citizens of Wallingford, where during his long residence he has won a high place in the regard of the community. His talent and skill as a violinist have brought him considerable renown.

Prof. Williams was born June 18, 1849, on the old Williams homestead, and was reared on the farm. He early displayed remarkable talent for music, and at the age of nine years had mastered the principles of violin playing. His teachers have been among the most distinguished of the world, one the celebrated Prof. Frantz Milcke. For a number of years he has played violin solos in public, charming his audiences, and receiving many expressions of pleasure from them. For several years he conducted the Williams Orchestra, which, during its existence, was one of the best in the State, and he has figured in almost all the prominent concerts and musical gatherings of his section, at one time playing with the well-known Theodore Fleisher. He has written a number of orchestral compositions. Some of the pupils of Prof. Williams have become celebrated, and his name is known far beyond local boundaries. He owns one of the finest old violins in existence. Prof. Williams is interested in several enterprises in the locality of Wallingford. He is the owner of the race track and fair ground site, very valuable land, which he has leased to the Agricultural Society, and to the Wallingford Cycling & Trotting Association. As a lover and fine judge of good horses, Prof. Williams has become the owner of some fine specimens, and his trotting stock is well known through the State.

Prof. Williams was married, in January, 1878, in Wallingford, to Miss Mary E. Jones, daughter of Charles N. Jones, a merchant of Wallingford, a lady of refinement and culture, who holds an enviable position in the social circles of the city. Seven children have come to this union: Charles Leslie, born in 1878; Robert Cook, in 1881; Sarah Emma, in 1883 (a graduate of the high school, now a bookkeeper); Elsie L., in 1886; Florence, in 1888; Herman, in 1890; and William, in 1895. Prof. Williams is a member and supporter of the Republican party, but is no office seeker. The religious connection of the family is with the Episcopal Church, and they are highly esteemed in Church circles.

Charles Nicholas Jones, father of Mrs. Williams, was born on the old Jones homestead, Sept. 18, 1830, son of Street Jones and a grandson of Nicholas Jones, old settlers of New Haven county. Street Jones was a man of education, became a large land owner, at one time owning 10,000 acres, dealt extensively in cattle and raised many horses. He died at the age of eighty-four. He took an active interest in the welfare of the Democratic party, and served as a member of the State Legislature, as selectman, and in other local offices, taking also an active interest in educational matters. Through his influence school houses were built, charitable institutions were planned, and religious work in the Congregational Church carried on. Street Jones was married in North Haven to Mary Pierpont Eastman, a daughter of Benjamin Eastman, and to this union were born ten children, of whom we have record of the following: Benjamin Trumbull, Peter Eastman, Charles N., Mary P. (who married Charles D. Childs, of Wallingford, Vt.), Sarah, one that died in infancy, Julia (who married and removed to Albany, N. Y.), and Samuel (who became a stock dealer in Kansas).

Charles N. Jones received excellent educational advantages, attending the district school in youth, and later the Connecticut Literary Institute, at Suffield. His home continued to be on the farm until 1870, and he engaged in farming a part of the Cook homestead. In the year mentioned he removed to Wallingford, where he started a grain and feed business, in connection with a grocery, and has been thus engaged for over thirty years. Mr. Jones also owns and operates a farm at Cook's Hill, on which he has a productive peach orchard. Mr. Jones married Ellen Cook, of Cook's Hill, a daughter of John and Mary (Munson) Cook, and a member of an old and representative family. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Jones: Mary E., the wife of Prof. Williams; Emma, who married William Hodgkinson, of Wallingford; Sarah Cook, who married William Talcott, of Wallingford; and Florence Bertha, now Mrs. Samuel Chulce. Mrs. Jones died in 1879. In 1889, Mr. Jones married Abbie Bristol, daughter of Uriah Bristol, of Cheshire. Mr. Jones is a prominent member of the Congregational Church. He has served his fellow citizens as selectman, and for six years has been chairman of the board, and is treasurer of the borough. The family is held in high esteem in Wallingford, where Mr. Jones has long been regarded as one of the representative citizens.

EDWARD PAYSON BRETT, one of the oldest builders in New Haven, and a man of stability of character, who possesses the esteem of the community, is a descendant, in the seventh generation, of one of the pioneer settlers of Massachusetts.

William Brett and Margaret, his wife, came from England, in 1645, and with Miles Standish and others, became early settlers of the town of Bridgewater, Mass. He was an elder in the church, and often took the pastor's place.

Nathaniel Brett, son of William and Margaret, married Sarah, daughter of John Hayward.

Seth Brett, son of Nathaniel and Sarah, married Sarah Alden, daughter of Isaac Alden.

Samuel Brett, son of Seth and Sarah, married Hannah, daughter of David Packard.

William Brett, son of Samuel and Hannah, married Molly, daughter of Ezra Allen.

Cyrus Brett, son of William and Molly, the father of the subject of this sketch, was born Oct. 18, 1789, in North Bridgewater, Mass. He married Mary Winchester, who was born in 1802 in Boston, Mass. From 1836 to 1856, Mr. Brett was a successful dealer, in Baltimore, Md., in the line of gent's' furnishing goods, but coming troubles warned him of business disturbance, and he wisely closed out his interests, and returned North, dying in New Haven, Dec. 30, 1864, his wife having passed away but little more than one month previously, on Nov. 9.

Edward Payson Brett was born Sept. 12, 1837, at Baltimore, Md., where he spent his early school days. In March, 1855, he came to New Haven and began work, as an apprentice, with Bristol & Merwin, builders, on Artisan street, working for them until 1863, when he formed a partnership with Horace Hubbell. They continued in business together until 1867, when the partnership was dissolved. In 1869 Mr. Brett entered into partnership with Charles E. Brown, and they continued together until 1880. From 1882 to 1884 Mr. Brett had as a partner C. M. Manning, but for the past seventeen years has been alone. Mr. Brett has built many of the dwelling houses in New Haven, and was entrusted with the work for the Winchester factory. He is one of the most extensive jobbers in New Haven. For the past ten years he has also engaged in the manufacture of boxes. He is noted for his industry and activity, as well as for his high sense of honor in business dealings. On Dec. 24, 1866, Mr. Brett was married to Harriet J. Crossley, who was born Dec. 25, 1842, at Tariffville, Conn., daughter of Thomas Crossley, of Middletown, Conn. Mr. and Mrs. Brett have had children as follows: Mary and Hattie, who died in infancy; Lulu, who is a graduate of the Connecticut State Normal School, at New Haven, and is a teacher in that city; Edna P., a graduate of Hillhouse High School, at New Haven; Thomas C., a graduate of Sheffield Scientific School, class of 1896, and now secretary of the Yale Safe and Iron Co., of New Haven; and William W., also of that city. Since the spring of 1881 the family home has been in Gilbert avenue. Mr. Brett is a Mason, holding membership in Wooster Lodge No. 70, and is a member of the United Congregational Church, of New Haven. In politics he is a Republican, and his first Presidential vote was cast for Lincoln.

ELLSWORTH B. COOPER, the well-known and popular town clerk and treasurer of Hamden, is a native of that town, born in Centerville, Sept. 25, 1838.

Charles Cooper, his father, was born in the town of Hamden, Jan. 29, 1798, a son of Ezra Cooper, and during his youth learned the blacksmith's trade, which he followed in New Haven for some time. Going subsequently to Whitneyville he was employed in the gun factory there until about 1836 or '37, and, after leaving the gun factory, built a blacksmith shop at Centerville, where he followed his trade for twelve or fifteen years. He resided at Centerville for many years before his death, which occurred Feb. 11, 1872. He married Laura Cadwell, who was born Oct. 8, 1807, on the Pardee homestead in Centerville, in the same house where our subject's birth occurred. She was a daughter of Elizur and Esther (Pardee) Cadwell (the latter a daughter of Joseph and Esther Pardee), and died Feb. 6, 1879, and was buried in Centerville cemetery, where her husband also rests. Elizur Cadwell came from Durham, Conn., to Centerville, where he followed his trade, that of blacksmith. In the family of Charles and Laura Cooper were five children of whom two grew to adult age. Charles Whitney, the eldest, was born in 1836, and served one year as a soldier in the Civil war, having enlisted in 1861, in Company K, 6th Conn. V. I.; he has never married and is now a resident of Centerville. Charles Cooper was a Democrat in political faith, and took a deep interest in his party's success, but he was in no sense a politician. Mrs. Cooper was a member of the Episcopal Church.

Ellsworth B. Cooper acquired his primary education in the district schools of Hamden, which he attended until 1851, and then entered a select school conducted by Miss Elizabeth H. Dickerman, where he remained two years (this school was at the present location of Mt. Carmel Children's Home). Subsequently he was a student in the North Haven Academy under Miss Eunice Linsley, and later attended Stiles French's boarding school in Wall street in New Haven. In 1858 he commenced teaching, and successfully followed that profession for several years, in the public schools of North Branford, North Haven and Hamden. In 1867 he was assistant teacher in Rev. H. H. Noble's boarding school, of Brookfield, Litchfield Co., Conn., and the following year taught at Mt. Carmel. In 1871 Mr. Cooper commenced clerking in the store of Eneas Warner, of Centerville, and remained with him until 1877. In 1876 he was elected town clerk and treasurer of Hamden, which offices he most creditably and satisfactorily filled until November, 1900, when he resigned the position of treasurer, but he still continues to serve as town clerk.

Mr. Cooper was married Oct. 9, 1889, to Miss Julia A. Culver, of North Haven, a daughter of Samuel Culver, and a successful teacher in North Haven and Wallingford, Conn. In December, 1874, our subject joined Day Spring Lodge, No. 30, F. & A. M. Politically he is independent. As a citizen he ever stands ready to discharge all duties devolving upon him, and the best years of his life have been devoted to the interests of his town and county. A most courteous, obliging official whose competency and efficiency may be judged from the length of his service in town office, few men are better known throughout the community, or have more warm friends than Ellsworth B. Cooper.

KENDRICK HARVEY SIMONS, the well known contractor and builder of Waterbury, Conn., was born in Sandisfield, Berkshire Co., Mass., March 11, 1838.

Sylvanus Simons, his grandfather, was a farmer in Massachusetts, where several of the Simons brothers had settled at a point then called "Simons Pond," and there he reared a family of seven children, of whom we have the following record: Solomon was a farmer, and reared a large family, most of whom went to Ohio, in which State he, too, passed the latter years of his life; Harvey was the father of our subject; Hiram was a farmer; Daniel and Philip also followed the same calling; Mary was the next in order of birth; and Eunice was the youngest.

Harvey Simons, his father, was a native of Sandisfield, Mass. (just over the Connecticut line), born June 13, 1795, and his death occurred Dec. 4, 1877. He was reared a farmer. His wife, who was Dianthy Bailey, a daughter of Andrew Bailey, a Massachusetts farmer, died at the age of fifty-two years, the mother of four children, viz.: Darwin, who was a soldier of the Civil war, and is now a mechanic in Waterbury; Juliette, widow of Hiram Andrews, late of Norfolk, Conn.; Andrew B. and Kendrick H., both mentioned below.

Andrew B. Simons was born in Goshen, Conn., April 2, 1833, and like his younger brother, Kendrick H., is a carpenter and builder. He lived on his father's farm in Massachusetts until seventeen years of age, and then came to Connecticut, where under Joseph Bunnell at Winsted, Litchfield Co., he learned the carpenter's trade. He remained with Mr. Bunnell two or three years, and then worked in Torrington, Ansonia, Bridgeport, and other places until 1852, when he came to Waterbury, where he has since been actively engaged as a contractor and builder, with the exception of two years passed in the Pennsylvania oil regions. During this period of over half a century he erected, for three or four years, 150 houses per year, many of them at a cost of $15,000 each. In 1865 he moved to his present place in the southern part of Waterbury, which, in his honor, is now called Simonsville, he having been the principal factor in developing that part of the city. In 1854, Andrew B. Simons married Julia Ann Taylor, who was born in Willimantic, Conn., a daughter of John Taylor. Two children have blessed this union: Charles H., a carpenter; and Ida, who is married to George E. Shay, of Woodbury. In politics Mr. Simons was formerly a Democrat, as was his father, but after the Civil war he became an ardent Republican. Although he has been foreman of Fire Company No. 1, and also first assistant of the fire department, he has not escaped the devastation of the fiery fiend, and within two months lost twenty tenements through its malevolence. Mr. Simons is a member of Harmony Lodge, No. 42, F. & A. M., of Waterbury. With his family he attends the Methodist Episcopal Church, by the members of which they are all most highly esteemed, as well as by society at large. Mr. Simons is a public-spirited man in the broad sense of the word.

Kendrick H. Simons was reared on the Sandisfield homestead until sixteen years of age, then came to Connecticut and for two years worked in a cutlery factory at Winsted. In 1857 he came to Waterbury and learned the carpenter's trade with his brother Andrew B. Simons. At this trade he worked as a journeyman about fifteen years. He spent the year 1865 in Titusville, Pa., at that time the principal center of petroleum oil, and began then to contract and build on his personal account. Being artistic and skillful, he has met with unusual success, and many of the more elegant, as well as the ordinary, buildings that dot the streets of Waterbury and its suburbs, attest his mastership of his trade.

On Jan. 3, 1866, Kendrick H. Simons married Maria Antoinette Neal, a native of Burlington, Hartford county, Conn., and a daughter of Ira T. Neal, of Winsted, Conn. Two children were born of this union: Herbert A., who died at the age of four years; and Irving N., who passed away at the age of twenty-six, when he had nearly completed his studies in the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania. The latter had married Aug. 15, 1895, Miss Emma Michaux, who with one child, Mildred N., survives him. In politics Mr. Simons is a Republican, and in religious belief both he and his wife are members of the Advent Church.

Ira T. Neal was of Scotch extraction, and his occupation was that of a mechanic. He married Rachel M. Bradley, who bore him three children: George W., deceased; Jane M., wife of Charles C. Lathrop, of Bridgeport; and Maria Antoinette, wife of Kendrick H. Simons. Mr. Neal passed away June 14, 1880, and his wife survived until June 17, 1893, when she, too, entered into rest.

EDWIN SOMERS PARMELEE, one of the progressive business men of Wallingford, New Haven Co., Conn., and Thomasville, N. C., was born April 16, 1834, in Southbury, New Haven county.

Walter Parmelee, his father, was born Nov. 12, 1808, in Newtown, Conn., and died Dec. 7, 1886, in the city of Wallingford. He was a wagonmaker, and followed that occupation throughout life. In 1881 he retired from active life and came to Wallingford, to spend his remaining years with his sons. Previous to his coming to this city he had a little wagon shop in Southbury, and always had been a very active and industrious man. In 1828 Mr. Parmelee married Miss Harriet Dikeman, of Newtown. Both were members of the Episcopal Church, and in later years attended the Methodist Chapel at Southville. A Democrat, and very well informed in current questions, Mr. Parmelee was, however, too much pressed with business cares to take much interest in the machinery of the party organization. Mr. and Mrs. Parmelee were the parents of two children, Edwin S. and Bruce Leavenworth, the latter at present living in Wallingford.

Amos Parmelee, the father of Walter Parmelee, was a wagonmaker; he married Mary Somers, and lived in Newtown, Conn. Noah Parmelee, father of Amos, came from England, and was a manufacturer of saddle trees. He married a Scotch woman. The Parmelees have always been woodworkers.

Edwin Somers Parmelee acquired his education in the common schools of his native town, and on leaving school went into his father's shop to learn wagonmaking. When he was twenty-three he left home, and went to Naugatuck to take the position of foreman in the factory of the Naugatuck Wheel Co. There he remained until 1860, when he purchased a piece of timber land in Southbury, and began to make heavy wagons and carts. In 1864 he bought a wheel factory, and a farm in Woodbury, where he was busily employed until 1872, in which year the factory was destroyed by fire. Shortly after this catastrophe Mr. Parmelee, in company with his brother-in-law, Bryant A. Treat, purchased the Naugatuck Wheel Co., and became president thereof. They conducted the plant very successfully until 1878, when it was removed to Wallingford in connection with the Wallingford Wheel Co., which they had purchased some two years before. On May 30, 1888, the Wallingford factory was struck by lightning, and entirely destroyed by fire. Mr. Parmelee sold his interest to the American Wheel Co., and retired from the business before it was resumed. The same year he bought the Thomas-ville (N. C.) Spoke Works, and the next year the Newton (N. C.) Spoke & Handle Works. He conducted both until 1808, when they were consolidated at Thomasville, where he is still engaged in business. About seventy-five men are employed in the works at Thomasville. Mr. Parmelee is also largely interested in native lumber, and in this line gives employment to quite a number.

On Sept. 14, 1859, Mr. Parmelee was married to Miss Mary A. Treat, of Oxford, a daughter of Atwater Treat, and a direct descendant of Gov. Treat. Their children are as follows: (1) Jennie M., born Aug. 4, 1862, was married Oct. 6, 1880, to Seymour G. Baldwin, a wholesale lumber dealer of Wallingford, son of the late Dr. Vincent Baldwin, of Wallingford. They have had the following children—Mary E., born Sept. 30, 1884; Walter P., born June 13, 1889; Elizabeth G., born Aug. 26, 1892; and Edwin Seymour, born July 21, 1881 (died Oct. 28, 1881). (2) Hattie Elizabeth, born June 2, 1865, married Aug. 30, 1893, Robert C. Canby, a native of Philadelphia. Mr. Canby is a metallurgist, and has charge of a smelter in San-Luis-Potosi, Mexico, the largest in that country. (3) Mary Rebecca, born June 22, 1868, is now bookkeeper in the office of her father's spoke works at Thomasville. (4) Eva Treat, born Nov. 11, 1874, is at home. (5) Sarah Edwina, born Aug. 30, 1881, is at present taking a finishing course in German and French in Coburg, Germany. Mr. Parmelee was born and bred a Democrat, but he is unalterably opposed to the ratio of 16 to 1. The entire family are members of St. Paul's Episcopal Church.

JUDGE JAMES R. CAMPBELL is one of the most favorably known citizens of the town of Wallingford, where he holds the position of Deputy Judge of Wallingford Police Court. He was born in Windham, N. H., Nov. 14, 1829, and belongs to the celebrated Scotch Campbells. For hundreds of years the various generations of this family have been conspicuous in Scotland. Among the stoutest followers of Oliver Cromwell, they were given a tract of land in Derry, Ireland, which they abandoned after the restoration of Charles II, and came to New Hampshire, where many of their descendants may still be found. Some have penetrated into other parts of the United States, and wherever they have gone, their upright, honorable and industrious lives have done credit to the New Hampshire Campbells.

Henry Campbell, born in Ireland, located in the Derry colony in New Hampshire, and took an active part in the French and Indian war. He became the father of five children: (1) Daniel, born in Windham, N. H., in 1737, became a land owner, and there died. (2) John, born 1747, served in the Revolution, and died in 1823. He married Molly Campbell. (3) Jane Hylands. (4) Sophia L. (5) David.

David Campbell, born in Windham, N. H., in 1757, died March 11, 1830. He was a farmer and mill owner, and erected the first carding mill in that part of the State. A soldier in the Continental army, he served at the battles of Bunker Hill, Long Island and Bennington, being twice wounded at Bunker Hill, and also in the Cherry Valley campaign. Elizabeth Dickey, his wife, became the mother of the following children: (1) Rachel, who died single; (2) Mary; (3) Martha, who married and lived in Francetown, N. H.; (4) David, who was twice married, first to Mary Marden, and second to Mehitabel Marden; (5) James; (6) Hannah, who married James Clark Cloyd; (7) John.

John Campbell was born July 17, 1803, was educated in the common schools, and was reared a farmer boy. Much success attended his labors and he spent his last years in Nashua. An active and devoted Methodist, he was a trustee of the church and a faithful worker for its advancement. Mr. Campbell was also deeply interested in school matters, and was a strong advocate of public education. In politics he was a Whig. On May 29, 1828, John Campbell was married to Hannah Pierson, who was born in Nashua, a daughter of Captain Joshua Pierson. To this union were born four children: James R., born Nov. 14, 1829; Charles; Caroline; John.

James R. Campbell attended the public schools of Nashua, and for two and a half years was a student in the engineering department of the West Point Military Academy, but was compelled by his ill health to give up the course. In 1852 Mr. Campbell removed to Yonkers, N. Y., where he engaged in the contracting business in company with Deboise & Hendrick, dock and bridge builders, remaining with them until 1865. That year, again consulting his health, which had failed him, he came to Wallingford, and bought the farm on which his home is now made. For a number of years he was engaged in manufacturing, and in 1878 became interested in a brown-stone quarry, to which he gave his attention for sixteen years, when he retired from every kind of business interests except his farm.

Judge Campbell is a man well known in Wallingford for his upright character and genial manner. He is much respected in the community, and has been a leader in every kind of forward movement. To the schools especially does he give a willing service, serving on the Central District Committee, and on the building committees of the Colony Street School and the High School.

Judge Campbell was married Nov. 28, 1852, to Jane Barnes, who was born in Litchfield, N. H., a daughter of Reuben and Rebecca (Martin) Barnes, and a granddaughter of Joseph Barnes (who was a physician and surgeon in the war of the Revolution), and of Dr. Amos Martin (who served in the war of 1812). To this union were born the following children: (1) Charles, born in March, 1855, died April 3, 1879. (2) Ida E., born July 20, 1857, married Dec. 27, 1877, Rev. L. E. Rockwell, a Methodist minister, of Portland, Oregon, and has one son, Foster, born in September, 1880. (3) Jennie, born May 29, 1869, was educated in the Wallingford schools and at Smith College, graduating from the latter in June, 1893; she also studied one year in the graduate school at Yale College, giving special attention to the classics. At the present time she is teaching Greek and Latin in the Wallingford High School, and her work there is highly appreciated. Mrs. Rockwell was also a teacher before her marriage.

Mrs. Campbell taught school when a young woman, and is a lady of education and refinement. Much devoted to her husband and family, she is a consistent Christian woman. Mr. Campbell is a Republican, and a staunch party man, but has never had a hunger for political position. He was elected Deputy Judge in 1897. For twenty years he has been a trustee of the Yalesville Methodist Church, to which his wife and daughters also belong. Since 1851 Judge Campbell has been a member of the Odd Fellows.

HON. GROVE J. TUTTLE, who, for a quarter of a century and more, has been a member of the New Haven County Bar, and a useful citizen in his community, has descended from one of the Colony who settled New Haven, in 1639.

William Tuttle, the emigrant ancestor of Grove J. Tuttle, with his wife Elizabeth and three children, sailed in the ship "Planter" from London, England, to New England, in 1630, landing at Boston, and later were of the colony which settled New Haven, in 1639. From this William Tuttle, our subject, is a descendant in the seventh generation, his line being through Jonathan, Nathaniel, Nathaniel (2), Jesse and Jesse Tuttle (2).

Jonathan Tuttle, son of William, the emigrant, baptized in Charlestown, Mass., in 1637, married Rebecca, a daughter of Lieut. Francis Bell, of Stamford. Mr. Tuttle began a settlement near the Quinnipiac river in what is now the southern part of the town of North Haven, in about 1670, and built a bridge over the river which was long known as Tuttle's bridge. He died in 1705.

Nathaniel Tuttle, son of Jonathan, born in 1676, married Esther Blakeslee, and died in 1728. Nathaniel Tuttle (2), son of Nathaniel, born in 1714, married first in 1737, Mary, a daughter of Josiah Todd, who died in 1742; and second he married Abigail Ingham.

Jesse Tuttle, son of Nathaniel (2), born in 1750, married first Lucy, daughter of Samuel and Mary (Alling) Dickerman, of Hamden, and second, Eunice Gilbert. Mr. Tuttle was chosen tythingman of Hamden for the year 1794; grand juror in 1798; one of the surveyors of highways, in 1803; and a selectman, in 1805, 1806, 1807 and 1808; and as representative in General Assembly for several terms. He died in Hamden, in 1849.

Jesse Tuttle (2), son of Jesse, of Hamden, and the father of Hon. Grove J. Tuttle, of New Haven, was born Aug. 18, 1802, and first married Dec. 29, 1825, Dencey R., daughter of John B. Johnson, of Wallingford. She died in 1840, and his second marriage took place May 1, 1842, to Lucinda, daughter of Willoughby Williams, of Wallingford. To the first marriage were born John, Lucy and Charles R., and to the second marriage, Dwight W. and Grove J.

Grove J. Tuttle was born in the town of Wallingford, Conn., April 2, 1851. His early education was acquired in the public schools of New Haven, and in the High school of that city and then he entered upon the study of law, under the direction of Charles H. Fowler, and was admitted to the bar in New Haven, in 1874, and has since been actively engaged in the practice of his profession in that city, meeting with deserved success.

Mr. Tuttle has held various local offices in a manner creditable to himself, and satisfactory to his fellow-citizens. A number of times (1879, 1886 and 1893) he has ably represented his town in the General Assembly of the State. For twenty-five years, Mr. Tuttle has been an efficient member of the school board of which he has been president for ten years; for twenty-five years also has been justice of the peace; three terms he has served as grand juror; and was appointed county auditor for 1893-1894. He held the office of prosecuting agent for New Haven County for two years, from 1893 until 1895. In 1898 he was the Democratic candidate for State Senator from the Seventh district, and though defeated reduced the Republican majority from 2621 in 1896, to 880 in 1898.

On June 8, 1887, Mr. Tuttle was married to Miss Emma J., daughter of Eber and Almira Downs, of New Haven, the former of whom was formerly a farmer of Woodbridge, and died at the age of fifty years; the mother died in 1901, aged eighty years. Mrs. Tuttle has one sister, now the wife of L. W. Hotchkiss, of Shelton. Socially he is popular in Adelphi Lodge, F. & A. M., and is considered one of the leading men in New Haven.

CAPT. OLIVER N. BROOKS, one of the oldest and most respected citizens of the town of Guilford, and a member of the Legislature, was born in West Brook, Conn., Feb. 7, 1822, a son of Nathan Brooks. Simeon Brooks, an uncle of the Captain, was a prominent manufacturer in the town of Chester.

Nathan Brooks was a stone-cutter by trade. He married Nancy A. Clark, a daughter of Joseph Clark, a farmer in Chester, who was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, and a man of much character and ability. After marriage Nathan Brooks was located for a time at Westbrook, but afterward removed to Killingworth, where he followed his trade for many years. In 1839 he located at Guilford, where he made his home until his death at the ripe age of eighty-eight years, and was buried in the Guilford cemetery. He was a Democrat in early life, but in his last years was a Republican. Mrs. Nathan Brooks also died in Guilford and was buried in the same cemetery. The few who are alive to remember her speak well of her as a woman of high character and religious faith. She was the mother of thirteen children, three of whom died in infancy. Those who lived to maturity are the following: (1) Julius died in 1849. (2) Zera C. resides in Derby, Conn., at the age of eighty-one years. (3) Roxanna M., the widow of George H. Chapman, of Saybrook, for many years a merchant in Boston, is living in Winchester, Mass. (4) Capt. Oliver N. (5) Eliza F. is the widow of James H. Prince, of Winchester, Mass. (6) Laura A. married Frederick H. Fowler, and both are deceased. (7) John G. was drowned in Nebraska in 1859, while on his way to California. (8) Julia A. married Richard H. Woodward, a real-estate man in Long Branch, N. J. (9) Cynthia E. married Erastus H. Cusby. (10) Frances E. married R. H. Chipman, a coal dealer in New York, who has his home in Philadelphia.

Capt. Oliver N. Brooks removed with his parents to Clinton when he was four years old, and there attended the public school and the academy. When thirteen years of age he went out as a cabin boy with Capt. Eldikin, on board the schooner "Planet," making a short voyage from Clinton to Philadelphia to take on a coal cargo for New Haven. From this humble beginning he worked himself up in rank to a position as commander and master, when he was only nineteen years old. At that early age he was perfectly competent to command a vessel, and the first in his charge was the sloop "Ostrich." For eleven years he commanded different vessels in the Atlantic coast-wise trade. In 1851 Capt. Brooks was appointed keeper of the Faulkners Island Lighthouse, receiving his appointment from Thomas Corwin, Secretary of the Treasury, and for thirty-one years he was always at his post of duty, and rendered valiant service in the rescue and service of those imperilled by wind and water. During his long term of activity over one hundred vessels were stranded near the Island; in seventy-one of these disasters, eight of which were total wrecks, Capt. Brooks rendered valuable assistance in an open boat, often at the great peril of his life. One noble rescue he effected was that of the crew of the schooner "Moses F. Webb," which went ashore on Goose Island on Nov. 23, 1858. Single handed and alone he rescued the crew, and his daring efforts won the applause of the whole country. Many valuable and touching letters and testimonials were sent him, and are now preserved as valuable mementoes of a noble deed.

From the Life Saving Benevolent Association of New York he received a letter of ardent appreciation, accompanying the bestowal of a gold medal, only bestowed where "Life has been exposed in saving life," which was signed by Daniel Lord, the vice-president of the association. The medal bears this inscription: "Presented to Oliver N. Brooks, keeper of the Faulkners Island Light, for rescuing with great courage and humanity four lives from the wreck of the schooner Moses F. Webb, on the 23rd of November, A. D. 1858." The value of this medal was fifty dollars, and its weight forty dollars.

From the citizens of New Haven he received the following letter, bearing date Dec. 6, 1858:

"Impressed by the account of your bravery on the 23rd of November, 1858, in rescuing five persons from the wreck of the schooner Moses F. Webb, at the hazard of your own life, we have procured the accompanying testimonial of our admiration of your courage and your humanity. We present your wife the salver and tea set, your children the cups and napkin rings, and yourself the purse containing $126, in the hope that your example may encourage others to succor the imperilled. That your life may long be spared and your health and prosperity be continued is the earnest wish of yours respectfully, Washington Webb. In behalf of Thos. R. Trowbridge; Hotchkiss Bros. & Co.; L. W. & P. Armstrong; E. C. Scranton; James W. Brester; Canfield & Spencer; D. M. Welch; English, Atwater & White; George D. English; C. L. English; Minott A. Osborn; D. S. Graves; S. W. King; C. T. Glenney; Isaac Thompson; W. T. Bradley & Co.; Isaac Anderson; Bushnell & Co.; L. Treadway & Co.; D. Trowbridge; Solomon Collis; John Walker; H. J. Norton; M. R. Shepard; S. G. Peck; John W. Russell; C. S. Chaplain; E. Arnold & Co.; Benjamin Noyes; C. H. Tuttle; E. Marble; Cowles & Leete; Strong & Hall; E. E. Hall; R. P. Cowles; Joel Ives; D. Killam & Co.; F. L. Bostwick; C. O. Crosby; S. R. Spencer; S. S. Rowland; S. E. Stone; Saml. Rowland; Edw. Bromley; D. S. Stout; J. H. Benham; N. D. Sperry; Alfred Blackman; W. T. Eustis, Jun.; G. S. Sheffield; and W. Bristol."

The original documents are in script, executed by D. Stanton, beautifully done, and could not be duplicated for less than thirty dollars. The salver bears the following inscription: "Presented to Mrs. Mary M. Brooks, by the citizens of New Haven, in honor of the noble conduct of her husband, Capt. Oliver N. Brooks, who at the peril of his own, saved the lives of five persons from a wrecked vessel during a storm in Long Island Sound, on the 23d of November, in 1858." The salver alone is worth $80. At this time the citizens of Guilford presented him with a membership in the Masonic lodge.

During Capt. Brooks' term of service in the lighthouse many improvements were made, such as the introduction of kerosene oil. He had three assistants from 1866 to 1882, in which latter year he retired from the service, with a record of which any man might be proud. Locating on the old homestead in Guilford, he became interested in real estate at Sachem's Head, where he built a number of summer cottages. In 1887 he went to California, and located in Arch Beach, where he was in business, and where he spent three years. During this time he was appointed postmaster, and visited many places of interest in the southern part of the State. In 1890 Capt. Brooks came back to his Guilford home, and has since lived retired from active business. The Captain is a keen observer, and a fine conversationalist, being a well-read man and widely informed on all current topics. Capt. Brooks was elected to the Legislature in 1892, though he is a Democrat, and was a member of the Committee on Temperance. In 1898 he was again elected by a good majority.

On Jan. 4, 1846, Capt. Brooks was married to Mary M., who was born in Guilford, a daughter of John and Betsy (Field) Hart; she was a lady of a charming personality, with fine artistic tastes, and was highly esteemed by those who had the privilege of her acquaintance. In her home are many creations of her artistic skill, especially noticeable being preparations of rare and beautiful sea shells, which evidence her love of nature. Mrs. Brooks died Oct. 28, 1899, and was buried in Guilford cemetery. The Captain and Mrs. Brooks were the parents of three children: (1) Oliver N., Jr., who died in infancy; (2) Mary E., who married Henry I. Thrall, formerly of Guilford, now of Cuba, has two children, Allison Irwin and Edith Amelia, both born in Riverside, Cal.; (3) Nancy Amelia, who married Edwin G. Hewsted, a nephew of Prof. Cyrus Northrop, president of the University of Minnesota, and has two children, Oliver Brooks and Edwin G. Capt. Brooks is a skilled taxidermist, and has a valuable collection of animals and birds. Mrs. Thrall, his daughter, has much ability in music and art.

HARVEY W. BEACH, late of Branford, where in his lifetime he was a successful and popular business man, was born May 1, 1834, in that borough, a son of Timothy and Esther (Cook) Beach. The father, a native of Branford, and a farmer all his life, was a son of Andrew Beach. The maternal grandfather of Harvey W. Beach was Joseph Cook, a resident of Branford for many years, who married a Miss Wheadon. He served as a private in the war of the Revolution.

Harvey W. Beach grew to manhood in Branford, where he obtained his education in the common schools. A miller by trade, he owned and operated a combined grist and sawmill. For many years he was in the ice business. During the Civil war Mr. Beach was a member of Company B, 27th Conn. V. I., enlisting Aug. 22, 1862. He participated in the battles of Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville, was taken prisoner May 3, 1863, incarcerated in Libby prison six days later, and paroled on the 21st of the same month. Mr. Beach was honorably discharged at New Haven after nine months' service. For some five years after his return from the war he was a member of the State militia, in which he rose to the rank of captain.

On coming home Mr. Beach resumed his business of milling, and carried it on until his death, May 3, 1881. He was married, Nov. 16, 1859, to Cornelia Hubbard, daughter of Richard and Rhoda (Andrews) Hubbard, of Durham, Conn., and to them were born nine children: (1) Willys E., born Dec. 27, 1857, married Frederica Miller, and has one son, Lewis, born March 8, 1880. (2) Anzonitta, born Dec. 20, 1858, died Dec. 12, 1863. (3) Isaac P., born March 20, 1860, married Grace Wheeler; they had no children. (4) Harvey E., born Aug. 14, 1861, died Aug. 30, 1862. (5) Cornelia A., born Jan. 20, 1863, married Walter Boynton, and has two children—Nellie May, born May 15, 1885, and Clarence N., born April 29, 1888. (6) Fred A. M., born Feb. 28, 1868, died April 11, 1899. (7) Clara L., born Jan. 4, 1871, died Oct. 2, 1891. (8) Edna L., born Sept. 15, 1873, died Jan. 3, 1874. (9) Ada V. was born Nov. 8, 1877.

Mr. Beach was a member of the Baptist Church, with which his widow also unites. He was enrolled in Widows' Sons Lodge, No. 66, F. & A. M. In politics he was a Republican.

RUFUS M. GILLETTE, an honored and highly respected citizen of Naugatuck, who is now living a retired life, was born in Prospect, this county, March 30, 1829, and is of French descent. His paternal grandfather, Benjamin Gillette, was born in France, and on his emigration to America located on a farm in Milford, New Haven Co., Conn., where he spent the remainder of his life. He had only two children: Garret, father of our subject; and Benjamin, who never married and was engaged throughout life in farming in Milford.

Garret Gillette was born and reared in Milford, and there he was married, Oct. 23, 1804, to Nancy Platt, of the same town, but shortly after his marriage he removed to Prospect and located upon a farm, where he spent the remainder of his life, dying there April 16, 1874. His wife passed away May 6, 1841. To them were born eleven children, as follows: Abigail, born Jan. 1, 1810, married Lucius Talmadge, a farmer of Prospect, now deceased, and she died in March, 1892; George S.,

Harvey W Beach

born March 26, 1811, was a mechanic, and died in Seymour; Martha, born June 19, 1813, died Oct. 22, 1835; Nancy, born Nov. 4, 1815, died Aug. 29, 1836; Jonathan, born June 19, 1817, was a carpenter of Prospect and died in 1880; Mary, born Sept. 18, 1819, married Harry Smith, a manufacturer of Prospect, and died Jan. 1, 1877; William, born Nov. 12, 1821, was a farmer of Milford, and died in 1878; Sarah Ann, born Jan. 8, 1824, is the widow of Harry Morse, a farmer of Prospect; Bennett, born Sept. 5, 1826, was a carpenter of Prospect, and died in 1876; Rufus M., our subject, is next in order of birth; and Garret, born Feb. 4, 1831, was a farmer of Prospect, and died Dec. 8, 1878.

The boyhood and youth of Rufus M. Gillette were passed in Prospect, and his education was acquired in its district schools. In early life he learned the carpenter's trade with his brother, and continued to follow the same throughout his active business life, but for the last three years he has lived retired. On April 1, 1896, he removed from Prospect to Naugatuck, where he owns a beautiful home and is surrounded by all the comforts which make life worth the living.

Mr. Gillette was married, May 20, 1854, to Miss Abigail Payne, also a native of Prospect and a daughter of Stephen and Abigail (Doolittle) Payne, who were born in the same town. Her maternal grandfather was Joseph Doolittle, a farmer of Prospect. In early life her father was a speculator and manufacturer of buttons, but later engaged in the hotel business in Naugatuck, Waterbury and Milford. He died in 1892, and her mother departed this life in 1854. To our subject and his wife were born three children, namely: Rubie, who died at the age of twenty-one years; Mary, wife of George W. Andrew, of Naugatuck; and Joseph, an electrician of New London, Connecticut.

Politically Mr. Gillette is identified with the Republican party, and in 1888 he represented his town in the State Legislature. He and his family are influential members of the Congregational Church, and he has always taken an active part in church work. He has championed every movement designed to promote the general welfare, has supported every enterprise for the public good, and has materially aided in the advancement of all social, educational and moral interests. After a useful and honorable career he can well afford to lay aside all business cares and live in ease and retirement at his elegant home in Naugatuck, which, in its appointments, evinces the refinement and culture of the inmates.

JOSEPH T. BEARD. The Beard family is one of the oldest and most prominent in the town of Milford, and the old homestead, now occupied by the subject of this sketch, has been held by the family since 1639—the only tract of land in town which can show a title running unchanged in one family since the first settlement. The Fowler property, with which the Beard homestead formerly divided that honor, has changed hands, being sold first to George Gunn, and by him to the New Haven Water Company.

Joseph T. Beard traces his descent from Capt. John Beard, the pioneer, through Benjamin, son of Capt. John; Joseph; Benjamin, who married Abigail Clark; Andrew; and Joseph Beard, his father.

Andrew Beard, our subject's grandfather, was born March 3, 1752, on his farm in Milford. During the Revolutionary war he served as a soldier. He married Susan Rogers (who was born in Milford) Nov. 30, 1779, and eleven children came of this union: Sally, 1781; Andrew, 1784; Andrew (2), 1786; Benjamin, 1788; Susan, 1790; Abigail, 1793; Abigail (2), 1794; Mariah, 1796; David, 1798; Joseph, 1800 (father of our subject); and Minerva, 1802.

Joseph Beard was born in Milford in May, 1800, and, like his ancestors, carried on farming as an occupation. Politically he was a Whig, and later a Republican. His death occurred Oct. 4, 1870, from an accident on a railway. He married Mary Ann Baldwin, daughter of Hezekiah Baldwin, of Milford, and she lived to the good old age of ninety-two, dying Feb. 17, 1892.

Joseph T. Beard was born in Milford April 19, 1840, and, as the only child, inherited the homestead. He attended the district schools near his home and the high school at Milford, and on leaving school at the age of nineteen gave his attention to farming as a business. He is a general farmer, and is noted for his excellent management. At present the farm comprises 200 acres, a portion of his inheritance at the site of Naugatuck Junction having been sold to the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Company.

Politically Mr. Beard is a Republican, and he and his family are members of the Congregational Church. In 1872 he married Miss Alice A. Davis, of Seymour, Conn., and they have had five children: Nellie is a school teacher in Milford; Ernest T., a farmer in Milford, married Fannie W. Booth, of Shelton; Alice married Fred M. Smith, of Milford; Warren is a machinist of Bridgeport, Conn.; and Harold is at home.

Mrs. Alice A. (Davis) Beard is of Welsh descent in the paternal line, and her family is well known in Seymour, where her grandfather, Dr. James W. Davis, practiced medicine at an early day. Her father, Henry P. Davis, was born in Smithtown, Montgomery Co., N. Y., May 16, 1818, and spent the greater portion of his life in Seymour. His death occurred there March 31, 1885. By occupation he was an axmaker and later a farmer. He married for his second wife Almira Steele Holcomb, who was born in Seymour Feb. 22, 1810, and died March 20, 1885. Of their three children, George S. is a mechanic in Waterbury, Conn.; Burr S. is a miner in California; and Alice A. married our subject. The Steele family is one of the oldest in Seymour, and Mrs. Beard's maternal grandfather, Deacon Bradford Steele, served for about eight months in the Revolutionary army, enlisting about July 10, 1777, as a lad of sixteen. His wife, Ruth Wheeler, was born Sept. 17, 1705, a daughter of Simeon Wheeler, and died Feb. 20, 1856. Her mother, Sarah Baldwin, who was born April 11, 1746, and died May 13, 1826, married first a Mr. Wheeler, and second Capt. Bradford Steele. In this line Mrs. Beard is a descendant of Sylvester Baldwin, the pioneer, the line being traced as follows: Sylvanius, son of the pioneer; Richard; Timothy; and Capt. Timothy Baldwin, father of Sarah Baldwin Wheeler.

WEBSTER. This well known and numerous family of New England traces its line of descent to John Webster, fifth Colonial governor of Connecticut, who landed in Massachusetts Sept. 4, 1635. He and his wife Agnes left Warwickshire, England, in the spring, and settled first in Cambridge, Mass. During that year a company of one hundred persons was organized to form a Colony on the banks of the Connecticut river, and in June, 1636, a well ordered band set forth. Gentlemen of fortune and rank and delicately bred ladies were there, and bravely endured the hardships of that journey over mountains, through swamps, across rivers, and drove their flocks and herds before them.

In Benjamin Trumbull's "History of Connecticut" we find the following: "For twenty years Mr. John Webster had been annually chosen into the magistracy of Connecticut, being elected Governor in 1656. At the election in Hartford, May 17, 1655, Thomas Wells was elected Governor, and John Webster Deputy Governor. At the election in 1656 John Webster was elected Governor, and Thomas Wells Deputy Governor. At the election in 1657 John Winthrop was elected Governor, Thomas Wells Deputy Governor, and John Webster Chief Magistrate. Mr. Webster removed to Hadley, Mass., in 1659." During this entire period he was active in the administration of public affairs, and the records show him to have acted in nearly every important movement. In 1639 he was one of a committee appointed to confer with a like committee from New Haven concerning the best way to treat with the Indians regarding their murderous attacks at Middletown. In 1640 he acted on another committee, which in this day and generation seems extremely curious if not futile, "to consult with the elders of both plantations" to prepare instructions for the punishment of lying, "which begins to be practiced by many people in the commonwealth." In 1645 we find him as one of a committee appointed by the General Court to arrange "all particulars and several charges of the late war and for the support of Uncas"—the "late war" referring to trouble with the Narragansett Indians, and a little later, when Long Island was threatened by the Dutch and Ninigrate, he was appointed with others to secure a frigate of some ten guns for the necessary defense. In 1649 the New England Congress employed him to levy on the towns for the necessary men and ammunition for the Indian troubles. Besides all these various duties it is found that he surveyed highways, administered justice, looked after the impost duties, and the exportation of provisions in times of scarcity, and he assisted in drawing up legal papers and petitions. During the time he was a member of the New England Congress he was one of the authorities on Indian troubles, both as regards protection from them, and as regards the Indians' conversion to Christianity and his education at Cambridge. The fact that the papers and correspondence on these topics were written in Latin speaks well for the educational standing of the men in the Colony.

During his administration as governor there seems to have been a period of comparative quiet. The term of office was for but one year, and not until 1660 could the same person be elected governor more than once in two years. The duties of governor were varied, and for a long time no compensation was received, but in 1647, owing to the many expenses, the sum of thirty pounds was granted.

For some time there had been an increasing difference on the subject of religion, the disputed points being chiefly baptism, and various rules in church government. Gov. Webster and many other prominent members of the Colony advocated the strictest construction of doctrines, denying baptism to any but the children of members in full communion. He was firm in his belief, and in the debates that occurred he took an active part, and when after all other ways had been tried it was decided to found a new Colony at Hadley, in Massachusetts, he signed the agreement, dated April 18, 1659. After locating at Hadley he seems to have had much to do with the laying out of the town, but shortly after became ill, and in 1661 passed to his last rest. He had a family of four sons and three daughters. The eldest, Robert, ultimately located in Hartford in the old homestead, with his wife Susannah. Dr. Noah Webster, of New Haven, was a lineal descendant of Gov. Webster, through Robert. The children mentioned in Gov. Webster's will are: Robert; Thomas, who married Abigail Alexander, of Northampton, Mass., where he settled, and where he died in 1686, leaving several children; William, who, with Thomas, inherited the estate at Hadley, married Mary Reeves in 1671, and died in Hadley in 1687 or 1688; Matthew, who settled in Farmington, and died there leaving a son, John; Anne, who married John Marsh, of Hadley; Elizabeth, who married William Markham, of Hadley; and Mary, who married a Mr. Hunt, by whom she had a daughter, Mary, who married John Ingersoll, of Westfield, and their descendants are now the Ingersolls of Connecticut.

(II) Robert Webster, eldest son of Gov. John

Webster, married Susannah Treat, daughter of Richard Treat, of Wethersfield, Conn. They made their home in Middletown, Conn., and in 1651 Robert Webster became the first recorder of the town. In 1660 they removed to Hartford, where he died in 1676, and his wife in 1705. Their children were: John, born Nov. 10, 1653; Sarah, born June 30, 1655; Jonathan, born Jan. 9, 1657; Susannah, born Oct. 25, 1659; Samuel, Joseph, William and Mary. There is no record other than the names of the four children last mentioned.

(III) Jonathan Webster, son of Robert, was twice married. His first wife was Dorcas Hopkins, of Hartford, where he, too, made his home, and by her he had five children: Jonathan, born March 18, 1682; Susannah, born April 25, 1686; Mary, born Sept. 29, 1688; Mehitable, born March 8, 1691; and Stephen, born Jan. 21, 1693. His second wife was, in her maidenhood, Mary Judd, daughter of Thomas Judd, of Farmington, Conn., and she bore him but one child, Benjamin, born Aug. 9, 1698.

(IV) Benjamin Webster, son of Jonathan, appears on the records as "Deacon Webster," and he made his home in Litchfield, Conn., where he married Elizabeth Peck, daughter of Deacon Paul Peck, and died July 10, 1755. He was the father of seven children: James, born June 2, 1734; Elijah, born Dec. 28, 1732; Benjamin, born Dec. 8, 1736; Stephen, born in Litchfield May 21, 1739; Elizabeth, born Jan. 23, 1741; Charles, born March 9, 1743; and John, born April 3, 1747.

(V) Stephen Webster, son of Benjamin, married Hanor Kilbourn, daughter of James Kilbourn, by whom he had three children: Sarah, born Sept. 8, 1765; Truman, born Jan. 12, 1770; and Orange, born Dec. 28, 1780.

(VI) Truman Webster, son of Stephen, was born in Litchfield, and settled there, engaging in farming. He married Diadema Sanford, daughter of Stephen Sanford, of Northfield, Conn., their marriage taking place Oct. 8, 1795. In 1799 they went to Northfield on a visit, and there their two boys were taken ill and died, and were buried in Northfield, whither Mr. Webster then removed, and where their other six children were born: David Sanford, born May 30, 1800; Sophia, born May 10, 1802, married Titus Turner; Lyman, born Nov. 7, 1805, married Elizabeth Smith; Abigail, born July 10, 1808, married Tertius Turner; Annie, born April 12, 1811, married Abner G. Fox; and Sally, born April 11, 1814, married Aaron W. Fox. The father of these children died Sept. 17, 1844, aged seventy-four years, and the mother on Aug. 10, 1839, when over seventy. They were devout members of the Presbyterian Church.

(VII) David Sanford Webster, son of Truman, was born in Litchfield, and followed farming until within ten years of his death, which occurred in Virginia in 1867. He married Clarissa Wattles, daughter of Joseph and Lydia (Dean) Wattles, of Bethlehem, Conn., the former a well-known bridge builder of the town, who died aged eighty-two years. Mrs. Lydia (Dean) Wattles, who was born in Oxford, died at the age of seventy-seven. David Webster and his wife settled in Bethlehem, where two children were born that died in infancy. In 1837 Mr. Webster purchased a large farm in Pleasant Valley, Conn., and there lived until 1850, when he removed to Waterbury. Both he and his wife were members of the Presbyterian Church, and took a keen interest in all that pertained to the welfare of the town. Mrs. Clarissa (Wattles) Webster was born in Hebron, Conn., May 11, 1800, and died in Waterbury Jan. 15, 1873. Of their children, four grew to maturity, as follows: (1) Henrietta Louise, born June 11, 1830, was married, Oct. 9, 1848, to Rev. Apollos Phelps Viets, and previous to locating in their present home in Waterbury they lived in Canton and Milford, Conn., and Hancock, Mass., respectively. They have had six children, namely: Elsworth Phelps, born Nov. 12, 1850, was drowned at Ansonia, Conn., July 28, 1867; Wordsworth B., born Nov. 18, 1854; John C., born Nov. 18, 1856; Mary Louise, born June 16, 1858, married William L. Horton, July 3, 1884; Beulah Ruth, born June 11, 1861, died Sept. 22, 1861; and Henrietta C., born Nov. 28, 1863. (2) Truman Monroe, born March 13, 1833, learned the trade of a mason, and located at Waterbury, Conn. In 1866 he wounded his foot by stepping on a nail, and his death occurred from lockjaw Nov. 23, 1866. His marriage to Miss Sarah White, of Durham, Conn., had occurred Oct. 15, 1855, and at his death he left three children, as follows: Eugene A., born July 16, 1856, now a druggist of Springfield, Mass., married Miss Nora Mead, of New Haven, Conn.; Arthur T., born Aug. 15, 1858, now a druggist of Waterbury, married Miss Addie Talmadge, of Middletown, N. Y., Sept. 2, 1880, and has one daughter; Carrie B., born March 14, 1860, married E. Darwin Ketcham, Jan. 10, 1882, and has three children. (3) Erwin Wattles, mention of whom will be made below. (4) Albert William, born Jan. 21, 1838, learned the machinist trade, and worked at this in Waterbury and New York, until his location in Ansonia in 1864, when he began the manufacture of metal goods, which he continued for four years, and then sold out to enter the dry goods trade. In 1873 he disposed of his dry goods store, and entered into partnership with Plummer & Galpin, dealers in clothing, dry goods, boots, shoes, etc., which continued for three years, when Mr. Plummer withdrew, and the business was continued under the name of Galpin & Webster for the next decade, when it was sold to W. A. Fellows & Co. Two years later Mr. Webster moved to New Haven, Conn., where he started the Elm City Shoe Store, which he still continues. He has been twice married, first on June 13, 1805, to Eliza Mardenbrough Peck, daughter of Eleazer and Louise M. Peck, of Ansonia, who died Aug. 10, 1882, leaving three children: Louise Mardenbrough, born March 5, 1866, married John Disosway, of Staten Island, and has one daughter; William Wattles and Susie (twins), born March 16, 1869, the former of whom died in Brooklyn, N. Y., April 10, 1896, and the latter in infancy. For his second wife Mr. Webster married on Nov. 14, 1887, Miss Jennie P. Horton, daughter of Joseph S. and Annie Eliza Horton, of Port Ewen, N. Y., and they have two children: Albert Raymond, born Sept. 29, 1889; and Annie Clarissa, born Feb. 21, 1894.

(VIII) ERWIN WATTLES WEBSTER, son of David Sanford Webster, was born in Bethlehem, Conn., April 9, 1836, and his common school course was supplemented by one term at the select school in Watertown, Conn. In 1853, when seventeen years old, he left home to make his way in the world, taking a place in the ticket office of the Naugatuck Railway Company, at Waterbury, and in 1857 he removed to Ansonia, to assume the duties of his present position as general freight agent of the Naugatuck division of the N. Y., N. H. & H. R. R. He has charge of all the freight and passenger traffic and of the telegraph office, the entire working force being under his direction. When he took charge he had but one man as assistant, but at present the station has seven clerks, being the second largest of the twenty-seven stations on the line of sixty-five miles of railway, all manufacturing towns. He has now been connected with this company for forty-eight years, and, with the exception of the superintendent, has been in their service longer than any other man. In 1863 he formed a partnership with his brother, Albert W., and for four years they operated a factory at Ansonia, making fancy metal goods. Politically Mr. Webster has been a Democrat all his life, but his breadth of view and liberality of opinion have won him friends in both parties. His public spirit has been shown in many ways, notably in official life, to which he has frequently been called by his fellow citizens. He has served many years on the town committee and as delegate to State and county conventions, and as selectman and town agent of Derby and Ansonia he gained the approval of the best element in both parties. He was first elected in the old town of Derby in 1877, and in the following year was made town agent. This position he held seven years, and when Ansonia was organized he became the first town agent there. In 1893, when a candidate for the State Legislature, he had a handsome majority, and his re-election in 1895 was a well-deserved tribute to his faithfulness and efficiency as a member of that body. When nominated for mayor of Ansonia, in 1895, he defeated one of the strongest candidates in the Republican party, and in 1896 he was again chosen for the position. He has been actively interested in educational affairs, and served as a member of the school board for a number of years, part of the time as chairman. He has also been burgess of the borough, register of vital statistics, and grand juror, and has filled other positions of a public nature, giving to the duties of each the sound judgment and executive ability which have characterized his business career. Specially he is identified with George Washington Lodge, No. 82, F. & A. M.; Mount Vernon Chapter, R. A. M., and the Council, and his thirty years' membership make him one of the oldest Masons in the locality. He and his wife are members of the Episcopal Church, of which for three years he was junior warden.

Mr. Webster has been twice married, first to Miss Jane Miller, of Avon, Conn., who died Aug. 15, 1858. On Jan. 1, 1861, he married Miss Sarah Rogers, who was born in Millerton, N. Y., daughter of Orlando and Thirza (Fuller) Rogers. One child was born of this union—Aline Virginia, who married Frank G. Hotchkiss, April 25, 1887, and died at the age of twenty-five, Nov. 7, 1889, leaving one daughter, Aline Webster, born Jan. 4, 1889, who resides with her grandparents. Mrs. Webster's ancestors were early settlers on Long Island, and her great-grandfather, Isaac Rogers, and his wife, Annie Wilcox, removed from there to Fishkill-on-the-Hudson, and in 1773 to Millerton, then called Northeast. Joel Rogers, son of Isaac Rogers, was born at Fishkill-on-the-Hudson, and later made his home, with his wife, Annie Hedger, on a farm near "Boston Corners," where he died at the age of eighty years, leaving a large family. His wife died at the age of eighty-one. Orlando Rogers, father of Mrs. Webster, was a son of Joel, and was born and reared on the old homestead, following farming in that vicinity for many years, and dying at the age of sixty-one. Both he and his wife, Thirza Fuller, were devout members of the Methodist Church, in which faith she died at the age of sixty-three. Thirza (Fuller) Rogers was a daughter of Nathaniel Fuller, a farmer of North East, and his wife, Dorcas, and his father, also Nathaniel by name, was a soldier in the Revolutionary army. Orlando Rogers and wife had eight children, of whom two sons and three daughters are living: Hilan, station agent at Torrington, and a prominent man there; Henry; Harriet Ellen, who married the late Nathaniel Lewis; Sarah, Mrs. Webster; Mary, widow of Walter Gilbert. Mrs. Webster is a member of the Daughters of the American Revolution, through her great-grandfather, Isaac Rogers, mentioned above.

EDMUND GOODRICH, one of the active, prominent and enterprising citizens of East Haven, is now devoting his time and attention to dairy farming and the wood business. He owns and operates a well-improved and valuable farm of 125 acres, and, being a man of keen discrimination, sound judgment and good business ability, he is meeting with most gratifying success in his undertakings.

A native of New Haven county, Mr. Goodrich was born Aug. 7, 1828, on the old homestead in the town of Branford, son of William and Mary A. (Whiting) Goodrich, and grandson of Bartholomew Goodrich, a lifelong farmer, who died at the ripe old age of eighty-six years. The father was born on the same farm as our subject, and died at the age of fifty-three. In his family were eight children, namely: John, who died at the age of nineteen years; Edmund, our subject; Sarah, now the widow of N. S. Hallenbeck; Jennette, widow of George Baldwin; Miles and Grace, both deceased; Horace, who lives on the old homestead in Branford; and one who died in infancy.

The subject of this review remained on the home farm in his native town until fifteen years of age, and then went to New Haven, where he served a five years' apprenticeship to the carriagemaker's trade with David Wilcoxon, receiving $25 per year and his board. He continued to work at his trade until 1861, when he removed to Seymour and engaged in farming for three years, after which he again followed carriagemaking in New Haven for two years. In 1865 he located upon the farm in East Haven where he still makes his home, and to its cultivation and improvement has since devoted his energies with marked success.

On Oct. 6, 1852, Mr. Goodrich married Miss Mary A. Chandler, who was born July 7, 1829, in Elizabeth, N. J., and when a child was brought to New Haven. She died Dec. 30, 1900. Edmund C., the only child of this union, born May 18, 1857, is engaged in farming with his father. He married Miss Mary A. Hall, who was born in North Branford, daughter of Samuel L. and Anna (Leete) Hall, the former of whom served as a private in the Civil war, was wounded, and received an honorable discharge. Six children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Edmund C. Goodrich, viz.: Emma E., Dec. 21, 1880; Lyman H., March 15, 1884; Merton A., Aug. 26, 1887; Grace C., April 10, 1892; Carrie M., July 17, 1896; William E., May 23, 1898.

Politically our subject is identified with the Republican party, and religiously he is a member of the Congregational Church. As a public-spirited citizen he has manifested a deep interest in the progress of his town and county, and has ever taken his part in support of those measures calculated to prove of public good.

JAMES McDERMOTT, a retired stone mason and highly esteemed citizen of Union City, Conn., was born in County Kildare, Ireland, in 1827. His father, John McDermott, was also a stone mason by trade, and spent his entire life on the Emerald Isle. He married Ellen Dunn, a native of Kings County, Ireland, and to them were born eleven children, all of whom lived and died in Ireland with the exception of our subject. He grew to manhood in his native land, was educated in the national schools, and there learned the stone mason's trade.

Mr. McDermott was married in Ireland to Miss

Margaret Brennan, a sister of Andrew and P. J. Brennan, of Naugatuck, Conn., and they became the parents of the following children: James, who has now retired from business and is living on the income derived from his property; William, a Catholic priest now located at Danville, Ohio; John, a farmer of Naugatuck; Andrew, a grocer of Union City, Conn.; Mary A., wife of Joseph Le Roy, of Naugatuck; Patrick, foreman for E. E. Stevens, a lumber dealer of Naugatuck; Julia, wife of James Hagerty, of Brooklyn, N. Y.; Margaret, wife of Joseph Doran, of Naugatuck; and Thomas and Nellie, who died in infancy.

In 1871 Mr. McDermott, with his family, emigrated to America, and took up his residence in Naugatuck, New Haven Co., Conn., where he worked at his trade for many years, but is now living a retired life in Union City, enjoying a well-earned rest. He is a faithful member of St. Francis Catholic Church, and is a Democrat in politics.

GEORGE FRANKLIN TYLER, a prominent and influential citizen of Cheshire, was born in the town of Prospect, Nov. 23, 1833, a son of Spencer and Sally (Ferrell) Tyler, also natives of Prospect, where they spent their entire lives. The father, who was a son of Ichabod and Elizabeth (Stearns) Tyler, natives of Cheshire, died in 1856, the mother in 1857. Our subject is the fourth in order of birth in a family of six children, the others being as follows: Mary, who first wedded Stephen Beecher, and second a Mr. Day, and died in Forestville, Conn.; Luke, a merchant of Short Beach; Charlotte, wife of Henry Mix, of Bristol; Sarah, who married Henry Russell, and died in Wallingford in 1894; and Fannie, wife of William Berkley, of Waterbury, Connecticut.

The early life of George F. Tyler was passed in his native town, where he attended school and learned the matchmaker's trade, which he followed for some time. Later he worked at brazing in a hoe and fork factory before and after the Civil war. During that conflict he laid aside all personal interests and offered his services to the government, enlisting at Prospect, in July, 1862, in Company A, 20th Conn. V. I., for three years. The regiment was mustered in at New Haven and assigned to the Army of the Potomac. While stationed at Arlington Heights, Mr. Tyler was taken ill and was honorably discharged Dec. 4, 1862. He continued to make his home in Prospect until 1893, when he removed to Cheshire, where he now lives.

In his native town Mr. Tyler was married, in 1853, to Miss Emily A. Mix, who was born in Wallingford, a daughter of Elias and Maria (Judd) Mix, also natives of New Haven county. The father was a spoonmaker at Wallingford, and from there moved to Wolcott, thence to Cheshire; he died in Prospect April 11, 1861, aged fifty-six years, and his wife died in the same town July 28, 1894, at the age of eighty-three years. To our subject and his wife was born one daughter, Emma G., who married Edgar B. Jeralds, and died in Prospect in February, 1876.

Mr. Tyler was for two years commander of Edward A. Doolittle Post, No. 5, G. A. R., of Cheshire, and is an active and prominent member of the Congregational Church, of which he is one of the deacons. His political support is always given to the men and measures of the Republican party, and he has been honored by his fellow citizens with several important official positions. He was a member of the State Legislature from Prospect in 1870 and in 1882; was doorkeeper of the House in 1887, 1889 and 1894; and doorkeeper of the Senate in 1897. He also served as selectman, justice of the peace, and in various other local offices in Prospect, and since coming to Cheshire was elected justice of the peace, but resigned. His public and private life are alike above reproach, and wherever known he is held in high regard.

FRANK HARVEY THOMAS, a representative and prominent citizen of Woodbridge, traces his ancestry back to more than one honored old family of that town. On the paternal side his great-grandfather was Amos Thomas, and the great-grandfather, John Thomas. The grandfather, who also bore the name of Amos Thomas, was probably a native of Woodbridge, where he grew to manhood and married Lucretia Baldwin, a native of that town and a granddaughter of Thomas Baldwin, who was born there. Her great-grandfather, Barnabus Baldwin, the first of the family in this locality of whom we have any definite knowledge, was a farmer of Woodbridge and Milford, and was probably born in the latter place. Our subject's grandfather, Amos Thomas, was a carriagemaker by trade, and engaged in that business in New Haven, where he also conducted a grocery store for a time. He owned property on Whalley avenue. A man of fine physical appearance, he was commissioned general in the State Militia, was captain of the police force of New Haven, a member of the fire department of that city, and foreman of No. 2 for a time. In politics he was a staunch Democrat.

John Thomas, the father of our subject, was born in Woodbridge in 1810, and was educated in the schools of that town. He lived in New Haven, Conn., and Newark, N. J., in both of which cities he engaged in carriage building—a trade he had learned from his father—and for many years was a resident of Derby, where he engaged in the grocery business. His political support was also given the Democratic party. In Oxford he married Miss Eunice Johnson, a daughter of Harvey and Nancy (Riggs) Johnson. She was born Sept. 28, 1822, and died April 27, 1897, while he died Jan. 8, 1865. Their children were Charles (1), Charles (2), John, Adelia and Lottie, all deceased; Frank Harvey, our subject; and Charles, a piano tuner of Derby, Connecticut.

Frank H. Thomas was born in New Haven Sept. 17, 1844, and was five years of age at the time of the removal of the family to Derby, where he attended school. At the age of eighteen he began life for himself as a mechanic in the Colt rifle shops at Hartford, Conn., and also clerked in his father's store. For three years he was engaged in the livery business in Derby, and embarked in the manufacture of corsets there, but later the plant was moved to New Haven, where business was carried on under the firm name of I. Newman & Co., and where employment was furnished 400 hands. Mr. Thomas owned a third interest in this business, but owing to poor health sold out at the end of eight years. In March, 1880, he returned to Woodbridge, where he purchased a farm of fifty acres, and has since successfully engaged in farming, making a specialty of vegetables and fruits.

At Derby, Dec. 25, 1866, Mr. Thomas was married by Rev. Stephen L. Mershon to Miss Jane Miller, a daughter of Samuel and Barbara (Smith) Miller and granddaughter of Samuel Miller. The father was born, reared and married in England, where he worked at carriage painting for some years, and then emigrated to America, locating in New Haven, Conn., where he died at a comparatively early age. After his death the family moved to Derby, where the mother died at the age of seventy-five years. She, too, was born in England, and was a daughter of Arthur Smith. Henry Gratton, a relative of the Smith family, and a man of some literary note, is buried in Westminster. Mrs. Thomas was born Feb. 13, 1848, and is one of a large family of children, the others being as follows: David, deceased, who was in the carriage business in New Haven; Eleanor, wife of George Smith, of Shelton, Conn., upon whose land the home for working girls now stands; Elizabeth, deceased wife of James Buckley, of Derby; Arthur, an officer of the British army in active service, who first enlisted as one of the Queen's Own Guard, and when last heard from was about to embark for India; Mary, wife of William Tyther, of Shelton, Conn.; Samuel, also a resident of Shelton, who was a soldier in the Union army during the war of the Rebellion, and was severely wounded and taken prisoner while in the service; Martha, deceased; Martha (2), deceased; Jane and Sarah, twins, the former the wife of our subject, the latter deceased; and Richard, deceased.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas have five children: Martha Eva, born June 14, 1868, is a milliner of New Haven. John Amos, born Jan. 30, 1870, married Lillian Truella, of Derby, by whom he has one daughter; he is a carpenter of Shelton. Dwight Samuel, born Sept. 6, 1871, is a mason of Hartford. Arthur Frank, born March 21, 1876, married Carrie Hills, and has one child, Franklin Arthur; he is a machinist of Shelton, Conn. Lillian Barbara, born Jan. 4, 1885, is at home. Both our subject and his wife are consistent members of the Congregational Church, and while in business Mr. Thomas also affiliated with the Knights of Pythias. He is a staunch Republican, but has never been an office seeker. He is a man of recognized ability, and, with his estimable wife, stands high in the community where they make their home. Those who know them best are numbered among their warmest friends.

WILLIAM SMITH, a highly esteemed citizen of East Haven, who for many years has been identified with its agricultural interests, was born in that town on the farm where John Thompson now lives, Dec. 28, 1822. It was also the birthplace of his grandfather, Samuel Smith, a son of Daniel Smith. Our subject's father, Asahel Smith, was born there Dec. 10, 1787. He married Eunice Miner, and to them were born eight children, namely: Mary, Lester, Henry, William, Harriett, Lucius, Harvey and Elizabeth. He died at the advanced age of ninety-one years, and his wife at the age of seventy-six. He was a soldier of the war of 1812, and his father was a member of the Continental army in the Revolutionary war.

William Smith remained upon the old homestead, aiding his father in its operation until the spring of 1849, when a company of seventy-five men purchased the bark, "J. Walls," and made preparations to go to the gold fields of California. They sailed from New Haven on June 4, rounded Cape Horn, and after a voyage of seven months and five days landed in San Francisco. Mr. Smith went to Sutters Mills and was engaged in prospecting and mining on the south fork of the American river for some time, starting back east in November, 1850. On his return to East Haven he resided on the old homestead until his marriage.

On April 25, 1852, Mr. Smith married Miss Sarah J. Thompson, who was born June 10, 1827, a daughter of John and Julia A. (Foote) Thompson, the latter born Dec. 19, 1802. Her father was born Aug. 12, 1802, and was a son of John Thompson, Sr., a soldier of the Revolutionary war. The latter was a son of Timothy Thompson, a resident of the town of East Haven, where many of his descendants still make their home. Mrs. Smith is the third in order of birth in a family of six children, the others being Elizabeth A., John H., William S., Jerah F. and Isaac B. Jerah F. Thompson was a soldier in the war of the Rebellion, enlisting first at Trenton, N. J., in August, 1862, for nine months, in Company B, 21st Regiment, and second in 1863; he served until the close of the war, and died in 1885, aged forty-eight years. Isaac B. Thompson enlisted in Company B, 15th Conn. V. I., in August, 1862, and was killed by a shell in front of Fredericksburg, Va., Dec. 12, 1862, aged twenty-one years.

After his marriage Mr. Smith purchased the old Samuel Chidsey farm in the Foxon District of East Haven, where he lived for a year and a half, and then went to New Jersey, locating near Jersey City, where he made his home for four years. Returning to East Haven at the end of that time, he bought the place now occupied by Edward Eld, and after living there two years purchased the farm on which he now resides. Here he has since engaged in farming with fair success. He is a staunch supporter of the Republican party, and takes a deep and commendable interest in public affairs. He never withholds his support from any enterprise which he believes calculated to advance the welfare of his town and county, and justly merits the high regard in which he is held. His estimable wife is a member of the Congregational Church.

AMOS HENRY ALLING (deceased) was for forty years one of Derby's most influential and honored citizens. He was descended from Roger Alling, one of a party who emigrated from England in 1636, and who, after passing a winter in Boston, settled at New Haven in the spring of 1637, making the journey from Boston by vessel, the voyage occupying three weeks. Roger Alling married Mary, a daughter of Thomas Nash, of New Haven, and became the father of seven children: Mary, Samuel, John, Sarah, Eliza, Susan and James.

Samuel Alling, eldest son of Roger, was one of the proprietors of the Colony in 1685. He died in 1707. He was twice married, and was the father of eight sons and three daughters, of which large family ten were living in 1709. His first wife was Eliza, daughter of John Winston, who bore him seven sons: Samuel, John, James, Roger, Roger (2), Theophilus and Daniel. His second marriage was to Sarah Chedsey, and the children of this union were Caleb, Sarah, Elizabeth and Esther. The line of descent to the late Amos H. Alling comes through Daniel Alling, the seventh son of Samuel, who became the father of Timothy, Silas and Daniel (2). Silas Alling, the great-grandfather of Amos H. Alling, married Dorcas Baldwin, of Woodbridge. Their children were Amos, Edward, Silas, Lewis, Asa, Anna and Rebecca. Amos Alling, the first born, married Millie Beecher, by whom he was the father of six children: Rebecca, Charles W., Asa, Sheldon, Bela and Alfred.

Charles Wyllis Alling, son of Amos, and father of Amos H., married Lucy Booth, of Woodbridge. They were the parents of seven children: The eldest, Mary, who is yet living, married Reilly Davis, of Oxford, Conn. Amos H., the subject of the present memoir, was the second child and eldest son. Charles B., a sketch of whose life appears elsewhere, is a successful and wealthy woolen manufacturer of Derby. Sheldon, the fourth in order of birth, died in infancy. Lucy married Nathan Treat, of New Haven county. Leonidas, whose biography may be found elsewhere, was the sixth child. John W., the seventh, is an attorney at law in New Haven. Charles W. Alling, the father of this large family, for many years conducted the business of carding wool and weaving cloth, his principal trade being with the farmers of the neighborhood. His home and factory were in Orange, where he died April 6, 1868. His widow survived until Dec. 9, 1866. Long before his death Mr. Alling leased his factory to his sons, Amos H. and Charles B., under whose skillful management the business developed until they took up the manufacturing of hosiery and underwear, the plant being removed to Derby in 1858. A more detailed description of the growth of this enterprise may be found in the biographical sketch of Charles B. Alling.

Amos H. Alling was born in Orange Jan. 3, 1823. In his boyhood and youth he worked in his father's mill, and in 1845 formed a co-partnership with his brother, Charles B., to lease and operate the same as has been already said. The business connection between the brothers continued until the death of Amos H., which occurred Feb. 6, 1868. In 1847 Mr. Alling married Sarah E. Prudden, of Orange, a direct descendant of Rev. Peter Prudden, the first minister and founder of the church in Milford. They had three daughters, two of whom, Louisa Maria and Carolyn Elizabeth, survive. Mary died in 1862. In 1874 Louisa M. married Dr. George Lucius Beardsley, of Milford, and they have two children, Alling Prudden and Elizabeth Coley. In 1882 Mr. Alling married, for his second wife, Mrs. Harriet E. Griffin, who survives him.

Mr. Alling was not only a successful man of business, but also a public-spirited citizen, one whose manly character, liberality and upright life gained for him the esteem of the entire community. He was one of the original proprietors and incorporators of the Housatonic Water Co. in 1866, and one of the board of directors of same until his death. Fraternally he was a member of the I. O. O. F. In politics he was a staunch Republican, and the temperance cause found in him a true supporter. Early in life he joined the Methodist Church, of which he was always a strong pillar. His religion was more than a form—it was active Christianity, governing his daily life, and entering into every dealing with his fellows. His benefactions, though liberal, were unostentatious. He will long be remembered as a man of Christian vigor, and one always active in causes to advance the kingdom of his Master on the earth, and to help lift the world to a higher plane.

WILLIAM W. HUGHES has in his career illustrated most forcibly the possibilities that are open to the young man who possesses sterling business qualifications. It proves that neither wealth nor social position, nor the assistance of influential friends at the outset of his career, are necessary to place him on the road to success. It also proves that ambition, perseverance, steadfast purpose and indefatigable industry, combined with sound business principles, will be rewarded, and that true success follows individual effort only.

Mr. Hughes, who is now engaged in farming in Oxford, was born in Southbury, New Haven county, Dec. 22, 1823, son of Reuben Hughes, also a native of Southbury, and a soldier of the war of 1812. The paternal grandfather, William Hughes, was born in Wales, and as a soldier of the Revolutionary war aided the colonies in gaining their independence. He was with Washington's army during the dreadful winter at Valley Forge.

Our subject is a self-educated as well as a self-made man. He was only twelve years of age when his father died, and he at once began work on a farm in his native town for his board and clothes. At the age of nineteen he went to New Haven, where he learned house painting, which he followed for twenty years, several years of this time being spent in Naugatuck, the remainder in New Haven.

On Jan. 1, 1862, Mr. Hughes enlisted, at Naugatuck, becoming a private in Company F, 59th N. Y. V. I., and was detailed as a musician, having previously been a member of the 2d Regiment State Band for several years. During most of his service he was in and around Washington, D. C., and was discharged May 27, 1862. Returning to Naugatuck, he followed painting for two years, and then went to New Haven with the firm of W. & E. T. Fitch, a wholesale hardware firm, with whom he had a contract for the manufacture of harness hooks which he had patented. He received a royalty and interest in the business, and continued his connection with the firm for fifteen years. Giving up his contract in 1877, he came to Oxford, where he has since lived. He purchased property and turned his attention to fruit growing, and now has upon his place 300 plum trees, including six Japanese varieties, several hundred pear trees and currant bushes, besides other small fruits of all kinds, all in a good healthy condition. His place, which is known as the Oxford Valley Fruit Farm, is one of the most desirable in the town.

Mr. Hughes has been twice married. His first wife, who died in 1871, was Miss Martha Nettleton, of Prospect, Conn., by whom he had three children: Kate and Agnes, both deceased; and Harry N., proprietor of a shoe store in New Haven. Mr. Hughes' second wife was Miss Emily McEwen, of Oxford, Connecticut.

Progressive and public spirited, Mr. Hughes takes a deep interest in everything calculated to advance the moral, intellectual and material welfare of his town and county, and his home has become headquarters for literary, musical and other entertainments in Oxford. He was instrumental in organizing the Oxford Town Library, and volunteered his services as librarian free of charge. This library has been in his house ever since it was organized, and now contains nearly 900 volumes. Socially Mr. Hughes is a member of Delphi Lodge, F. & A. M., of New Haven; and Upson Post, No. 40.

William W Hughes

G. A. R., of Seymour; and politically he is a staunch supporter of the Republican party. He has been called upon to serve in several local offices of honor and trust, having been tax collector one year; grand juror and trial justice for several years each; and first selectman of Oxford. He is widely and favorably known throughout the county, and merits the high regard in which he is uniformly held.

JOSEPH F. GILPIN, whose widow now resides in her pleasant and attractive home at No. 114 South Cliff street, Ansonia, was a native of Manchester, England, born July 18, 1837, a son of James Gilpin, a native of Fairfield, England. James Gilpin was a carpenter, and followed that trade up to the time of his death, at the age of fifty-five years. He married Sarah Hitchen, who was born in Norwich, England, and they became the parents of thirteen children, three of whom are still living: (1) Hannah, Mrs. Sacheler, in New Zealand. (2) Luzetta, widow of Alfred J. Swick, living in Ansonia. (3) John E., who lives in Hartford. Alice, Mrs. Fielding, who resided in Lock street, Ansonia, died Feb. 10, 1900. Joseph F. was the second child and eldest son. The mother reached the age of eighty-two years. Both parents were members of the Moravian Church, in which they were faithful workers.

Joseph F. Gilpin learned the machinist's trade when a young man, and followed it until he came to the United States. In 1864 and 1865 he worked in New York, and then coming to Ansonia worked with the Ansonia Brass & Copper Co. as a machinist. He was faithful and industrious, possessed of unusual executive force, and soon became foreman of a room. He continued to advance, and presently became master mechanic and general superintendent of the water and steam power work of the four mills. Mr. Gilpin designed and built the beautiful copper mill, one of the largest of all the structures, and greatly admired by all who see it. The works have continually increased in size, and Mr. Gilpin directed the labor of one hundred men. He was highly respected by all who knew him, commanding the confidence of his employers and the good will and friendship of those whose work he directed. For twenty-five years he was with the A. B. C. Company, and was one of the oldest men in the shops of the city; all the latest designing in machinery, and all the new and novel designs of custom work were done by him, as he was confessedly the best mechanic in the shop. He died Jan. 11, 1892, at the age of fifty-four.

Mr. Gilpin was married in 1858 to Sarah Simpson, who was born in Oldham, England, one of the six children of Samuel and Anna (Blackburn) Simpson, and a granddaughter of James Simpson, the latter a wholesale butcher in England, who lived to be ninety-nine years old. Samuel Simpson was a grocer, and died at Manchester, England, at the early age of thirty-eight years. He married

Anna Blackburn, who was born in Oldham, England, one of the fourteen children of Anna Tarren, a native of Yorkshire. Of the six children born of this marriage, there are yet living Mrs. Gilpin, who is the oldest in the family; Ann Ogden, of England; John, in Oldham, England; and Samuel, in Southport, England. Mrs. Anna (Blackburn) Simpson died at the age of forty-four. Both she and her husband were members of the Episcopal Church.

To Joseph F. and Sarah Gilpin were born six children, of whom three are living: (1) Charles J., a master mechanic in the A. B. C. Co., who married Carrie Colling, and has three children, Frederick J., Bertha and Charles J. (2) Emma L. married William Roberts, a tube drawer in the Bridgeport Brass Co., and has two children, Clara Louisa and Emma E. (3) Sarah married Edward Harteniz, a cigarmaker in Ansonia, and is the mother of two children, Lillian G. and Flora Louisa. (4) Frederick had learned the trade of wire-drawing, and was twenty-two years old at the time of his death. (5) Clara died when seven years old. (6) One died in infancy.

Mr. Gilpin was a Mason, and held different positions in the local lodge; was a working member of the I. O. O. F., where he had passed the various chairs; and he also belonged to the Knights of Pythias, in which he had filled several important positions. In politics he was a Republican, and was deeply interested in public affairs. He bought the pretty home in which his widow is now living, and found keen delight in its care and improvement. Mr. and Mrs. Gilpin were both members of the Episcopal Church. They were highly respected and popular in the social circles in which they moved. She is still a great reader, and is an intelligent and thoughtful lady, thoroughly familiar with her fine library.

GEORGE COOK, an honored and venerable resident of Yalesville, and one of the older settlers of the town of Wallingford, was born in Plymouth Hollow, Litchfield Co., Conn., Oct. 10, 1823, a son of Sylvester Cook, who was a native of Litchfield county, where his boyhood and youth were spent.

On reaching adult years Sylvester Cook became a farmer in Plymouth Hollow, where he remained until 1824, when he removed to Middlesex county, and located in Middletown. There he continued farming, and lived until his death in 1874, at the ripe age of eighty-five years. His remains rest in Westfield cemetery. He was a Democrat in politics, but had little love for the intricacies of party machinery. In religion he was a Universalist, and lived a clean and upright life. Mr. Cook was married to Miss Marietta Hall, who was born in Meriden, a daughter of David Hall, and died in New Haven at the age of seventy-eight. Her remains were buried in the New Haven cemetery. To this union was born a family of eight children:

Elvah, who died young; Marvin; George; Lucy; Ruth, who married George Higly; Sarah, who married C. Finkam, of New Haven; Sylvester, a soldier in the Civil war; Josephine, who became Mrs. Lincoln. All these are dead except Sarah and the gentleman whose career forms the subject of this article.

George Cook was an infant when his parents came to Middletown, and there he grew to manhood under the parental roof. A common-school education was afforded him, and his was the life of the farmer lads of his day. From a very early age he worked at farm labor, and while still a young man spent some seven years in the employ of Comfort Hall, a farmer. For two years he worked for William J. Ives, and then bought a small farm in Prospect, which he afterward sold, and was then for five years on a farm which he had bought in Westfield, Middlesex county. Selling this at the expiration of that period, he came to Yalesville and entered the box shop of the Charles Parker Manufacturing Co., where he spent the ensuing forty years of his life, the greater part of this time being assistant foreman and foreman of his department. In 1898 he gave up active work and is now living a retired life. To-day he is one of the best known and most universally respected men of the community. His long years of honorable labor, his high character and his genial disposition command the confidence and retain the respect of the people with whom he has lived a full generation of years.

George Cook was married in 1846, in Westfield, to Miss Cornelia P. Anthony, a daughter of Ab-salom Anthony, and to this union have come eight children: (1) George, a resident of Wallingford; (2) Maryette, who married Charles Schrader; (3) Lorenzo, a dry goods merchant in Wallingford; (4) Charles, foreman of the Hallenbeck shop at Wallingford; (5) Frank, who lives in Indiana; (6) Lillie, who married Samuel Barnes, of Southington; (7) Cora, who married Charles Doolittle; (8) William C., who is a bookkeeper for the International Silver Co., of Meriden, and who married Nellie L. Tyler, of Wallingford. Mrs. Cook died in 1887, and was buried in Wallingford. She was a good woman, a faithful member of the Methodist Church, and had many warm and devoted friends. Mr. Cook was selectman of the town for two years, constable for ten years, justice of the peace for many years, and served as postmaster during Cleveland's first administration. A member of the Board of Relief, and the Board of Education, he has rendered his community lasting services. He is a Democrat in politics, and was once nominated by his party for representative in the State Legislature, but failed to be elected. One of the organizers of the Methodist Church in Yalesville, his name is associated with the history of its growth and progress; he was one of its first trustees and steward, and is still continued in the last named position, chairman of the official board, class leader and assistant superintendent of the Sunday-school. From the time of his union with the church he has been zealous in its behalf. Mr. Cook has many friends, who admire not only his upright character, his long and useful life, but also his warm and sympathetic heart.

FITCH SMITH (deceased), through years of his identification with Derby, enjoyed the highest respect of his fellow townsmen by reason of his strict integrity, true manhood and progressive spirit. He was a gentleman of refinement and culture, a sincere, honest man, true to his word, his friends and his convictions. His devotion to the public welfare made him a valued factor in public life, and by his death the community was deprived of one of her best citizens.

Mr. Smith was born in Derby Jan. 28, 1806, a son of Abijah Smith, who came here from Norwalk, Conn., where he was born. For some time he was engaged in the coal business in Pennsylvania, and is believed to have been the first in the United States to mine coal. He married Eunice Chatfield, a native of Derby, daughter of Ebenezer Chatfield, and sister of Caleb Chatfield, who was killed in the battle of Brandywine, in 1777, during the Revolutionary war. After their marriage they located in Derby. Thirteen children blessed their union.

Fitch Smith was twelfth in the order of birth in the family. When a young man he went to Newark, N. J., where he married Miss Jane H. Bouton, who was born in Salem, N. Y., a daughter of John M. Bouton, of French ancestry. To this union were born five children, Wilhelmina, Fitch W., Wilson H., Estelle and Helen. Fitch W. is a resident of New York; Wilson H. is deceased; and the daughters reside in Derby in the old home left them by their parents.

While a resident of Newark, Mr. Smith was a member of the firm of Smith & Wright, extensive leather manufacturers, doing business in the South, and he spent his winters mostly in Charleston, S. C. After several years devoted to the leather business he retired in April, 1843, and returned to Derby—Birmingham (now Derby) being his place of residence—where he was extensively interested in real estate, owning the greater portion of the small village, then in its earliest days. He was president of the Naugatuck Transportation Co. during its existence, a large owner in steamboats, was possessor of many sloops, and did an extensive carrying business. He was also a stockholder in many other enterprises, but shortly after the close of the Civil war he retired from active business life, giving his attention principally to his real estate interests. He opened up streets in Derby, named them, and made many other improvements in the property, which is now covered with beautiful homes. Mr. Smith was a man of high intelligence and a typical gentleman of the old school.

Mr. Smith died Jan. 10, 1894, his wife passing away on the 1st of the same month. They were active members of the Episcopal Church, and he gave the land on which the rectory and other buildings of the church have been erected. He was first a Whig and later a Republican, but took no active part in political affairs. He was very generous, extremely public-spirited, and took an active part in everything pertaining to the upbuilding of Derby, especially during its infancy, being a liberal contributor to the enterprises which insured its progress. It is to such men that the community owes its prosperity and advancement, and to them it owes a debt of gratitude which can never be repaid.

MRS. ALMIRA E. TURNER, of Woodbridge, is a worthy representative of an old and highly esteemed family of New Haven county, which was founded here by Richard Sperry, who came from England about 1660. Her paternal grandfather, Ebenezer Sperry, was a native of Woodbridge, born July 27, 1773, on what is known as the Sperry farm, and is still owned by the Sperry family. The house standing thereon was built when he was a child of five years. He wedded Mary Newton Booth, also a native of Woodbridge and a daughter of Walter and Mary (Newton) Booth. He died Oct. 26, 1850, and she departed this life Feb. 2, 1865, at the age of eighty-two years. They had two children, of whom Calvin, the father of our subject, was the youngest. Eunice married Edward Hine, of Woodbridge, and to them were born three children: Catherine Mary, who married the late Riley Peck, of Woodbridge, and died Nov. 5, 1901, aged seventy-four years; Sarah Antoinette, widow of Birdsey Bradley, of Hamden; and Velina, wife of Lewis Hitchcock, of Woodbridge.

Calvin Sperry was born on the old homestead Dec. 11, 1807, and there spent his entire life engaged in agricultural pursuits. In addition to general farming, he was also engaged in the milk business for a time, and in his undertakings met with fair success. He was a staunch supporter of the Republican party and its principles, and was a consistent member of the Congregational Church of Woodbridge. After an honorable and useful career he died May 28, 1871, in his sixty-fourth year.

Mr. Sperry was married three times, his first wife being Sarah A. Carrington, a daughter of Liverus and Lowly Carrington. She died Jan. 23, 1853, at the age of forty-four years, and he next married Cynthia Riggs, by whom he had one daughter, Eleanor, now deceased. The third wife was Perentha Baldwin. There were three children by the first marriage, namely: (1) Elizur L., born Feb. 5, 1831, married Sarah L. Williams, and spent the greater part of his latter years in Florida; he died Aug. 16, 1901, aged seventy years. (2) Almira E., our subject, was born in Woodbridge March 28, 1837, and has been twice married, her first husband being Charles Baldwin, son of Newton and Esther Baldwin. After his death she married George Turner, son of Orib and Nancy (Comstock) Turner. She makes her home in Woodbridge and is highly respected by all who know her. (3) Sarah Angeline, born Aug. 28, 1839, died April 19, 1849.

CHARLES H. STOWE. The first account we have of the Stowes was during the time of the Norman invasion. Whether they were in England before this time we are unable to ascertain. Several of the name are now living in Germany. It is a Saxon name meaning "place," and is written indifferently with or without the final "e," more commonly with it.

About the year 1500 there was dwelling in St. Michael's parish, London, Thomas Stowe, who is the first known ancestor. His will is recorded among the births in the London Register. His son, Thomas Stowe, Jr., was the historian and annalist, well known in history; he was Duke of Devonshire and Buckingham. From the Heralds' College it appears that there is a coat of arms, with the title of Duke, belonging to Thomas, Jr. Previous to their emigration to America a number of Stowes had lived in London, England, during several centuries. Their principal residence was in Leadenhall street, and they owned the beautiful place now occupied by the Duke of Buckingham, and known as "Stow Park." The name is also very common in Scotland.

John Stowe, Jr., the first Stowe to arrive in America, was born in England about 1595, and landed at Boston April 12, 1635, coming over in the ship "Elizabeth," Capt. Stagg, master. From there he moved to Roxbury, Mass., and he gave three acres of land for the grammar school of Roxbury. He died in September, 1663. From him Charles H. Stowe traces his ancestry through Thomas, Sr., Thomas, Jr., Samuel, Stephen, Jedediah, Sr., Jedediah, Jr., and Alvin.

Stephen Stowe, the tenth child of Deacon Samuel, was born May 22, 1726. He married Free-love Baldwin, of Milford, and the local Daughters of the American Revolution have honored her memory by naming their chapter for her. During the Revolutionary war a British ship had on board a large number of American prisoners afflicted with a contagious disease, whom they landed one cold winter's night near the Stowe home. He kept them during the night, and as no one could be found to care for them he volunteered to do so. Feeling that it meant to sacrifice his life, he made his will the next morning. In two weeks time he contracted the disease and died. He is termed a martyr to his country.

The Stowe family has been represented in the State from pioneer times, and Jedediah Stowe, the grandfather of Charles H., was born in New Haven county. For many years his occupation was farming, and his death occurred in Milford. He married Martha Camp, and they had eight children, two of whom died in childhood. Jerry, a carpenter by trade, resided in Milford many years, but died in Bridgeport. Alvin is mentioned more fully below. Mary married Charles Baldwin, a grocer of Milford. Caroline married Samuel B. Gunn. Harriet married Hezekiah Baldwin. Martha married Isaac Woodruff, of Milford.

Alvin Stowe, our subject's father, was born in Milford May 8, 1802, and died March 21, 1889. He was a farmer by occupation, owning a farm of one hundred acres. He was prominent in local affairs, being one of the organizers of the Democratic party in the town, served several times as assessor, and three years as selectman. As a member of the Congregational Church he was active in religious work. He married Sarah Peck, of Milford, and had four children, namely: Urban C., born Nov. 2, 1838; Treat P., born April 22, 1841, died April 22, 1842; John N., born March 9, 1846, died Jan. 17, 1892; Charles H., born Nov. 22, 1848.

Charles H. Stowe, the subject proper of this sketch, a highly respected citizen of Milford, was born Nov. 22, 1848. After securing a district and high school education he learned the machinist's trade. Later he entered the employ of Baldwin, Rice & Read, as machinist, having charge of all the machines used by them in the manufacture of straw hats. Although the personnel of the firm has changed several times, he occupies the same position. He owns a small farm, but does not give his personal attention to its cultivation. As a prominent and influential member of the Democratic party he has held several public offices, having served two terms as assessor and four years as selectman. He is a member of the Royal Arcanum and of the Masonic fraternity. He and his family are identified with the First Congregational Church in Milford.

On Nov. 3, 1875, Mr. Stowe married Susan E. Smith, of Orrington, Maine, and four children have blessed their union: Mabel W., born Oct. 31, 1876, wife of Arthur Whitcomb, of Paterson, N. J.; Walter P., born Oct. 18, 1878, a graduate of the New York College of Pharmacy, now located in Brooklyn as a pharmacist; Stella L. C., born May 2, 1883; and Albert P., born Aug. 16, 1892.

DEACON SAMUEL HULL, one of the well-known and much respected citizens of Wallingford, is a deacon of the Baptist Church, and a leading agriculturist of that town. Born Feb. 5, 1824, on the Hull homestead in the North Farms District of the town, he is a descendant of two of the oldest and most prominent families in this part of the State. He has led a long and useful life, acting from high principles and seeking a noble ideal.

The Hull family came from Derbyshire, England, and George Hull, its first representative in America, settled at Windsor, Conn., in 1036. He was a surveyor. He married Elizabeth Loomis, Richard and Andrew Hull, whose relationship to George is not known, were at New Haven the year that gentleman was married, 1639.

Dr. John Hull, an ancestor of Deacon Hull, was admitted a planter in 1661. Seven years later he removed to Derby, where he remained until 1687, in that year coming to Wallingford to spend the rest of his life. He died in 1711. Dr. Hull was the first of the name in the town. He exchanged the Hull homestead at Stratford for the Benjamin Lewis property at Wallingford. On Oct. 17, 1671, he married, for his second wife, Mary Jones, and after her death Rebecca Turner became his wife, Sept. 20, 1699. To him were born the following children: John, born March 14, 1661; Samuel, born Feb. 4, 1663; Mary, born Oct. 31, 1666; Joseph, born in 1668 (married Mary Nichols, of Derby); Benjamin, M. D., born Oct. 7, 1672 (married Elizabeth Andrews); Ebenezer, born in 1673 (married Lydia Mix); Richard, born in 1674; Dr. Jeremiah, born in 1679; and Asher.

Dr. Jeremiah Hull was a physician of more than ordinary skill and reputation, and was the proprietor of a considerable tract of land in Wallingford, where he died May 14, 1736. On May 24, 1711, he married Hannah Cook, daughter of Samuel and Hope Cook. She died Dec. 11, 1741. To this union came the following children: John, born Nov. 13, 1712, who married Mary Andrews; Moses, born Dec. 21, 1714, who died June 3, 1736; Tabitha, born March 3, 1717; Hannah, born March 18, 1720; Anna; Jeremiah, born Jan. 5, 1729, mentioned below; Joseph, born March 24, 1733, who married Hannah Corbitt; Patience, born Oct. 20, 1735; and Keturah.

Jeremiah Hull, noted above, was a prominent farmer and land owner in Wallingford, where his life was spent. He died Aug. 24, 1790, and was buried in Wallingford. On Jan. 18, 1753, he married Mary Merriman, who died Aug. 22, 1774. They had the following children: Caleb, born Dec. 1, 1753; Jeremiah; Samuel; and Ann, who married Jacob Rice. To his second marriage were born: Benjamin; Levi; Hannah, who married a Mr. Heath, of Wallingford; and Eunice, who married a Mr. Pratt, of Essex, Connecticut.

Samuel Hull, son of Jeremiah, and grandfather of Deacon Hull, served as a soldier throughout the Revolutionary war. He was born in Wallingford, married Lois Peck, and settled on the Hull homestead, on which he made extensive improvements, being one of the most enterprising farmers of his day in that section. He was a lifelong agriculturist, and he and his wife died on the farm. Mrs. Hull was a woman of much character and cultivation. Her father's home was in Deerfield, and when that town was burned by the Indians, in 1704, Mrs. Hull's mother or grandmother (with the lapse of years some uncertainty has arisen), then a girl, secreted herself, with the town records and Bible, in the cellar of the only house left standing. The Bible is now in the possession of Deacon Samuel Hull, our subject. Samuel and Lois (Peck) Hull had three children: William; Sylvester, who married Delilah, daughter of Benajah Morse; and Lois, who married Miles Ives.

William Hull, the father of Deacon Hull, for the most part educated himself, and was one of the best-known citizens of the town. He owned and operated a tract of 100 acres in the North Farms District of Wallingford, on which he made many substantial improvements, and gave much attention to stock raising. He did considerable business in getting out staves and other timber, and was a prosperous and fore-handed man. In politics he was a Democrat, and in religion a member of the Baptist Church. He died on his farm in 1849, and was buried in the Center Street cemetery. William Hull married Alma Hall, who was born on the Wallingford farm now occupied by her son, Col. Henry Hull. Her father, Reuben Hall, was one of the large land owners and farmers of Wallingford. Her mother was a Miller, and thus our subject is descended on the maternal side from Benjamin Miller, of Middlefield, one of the first settlers there. Benjamin Miller had several sons, and our subject's wife, Mrs. Susan A. (Miller) Hull, is descended from one of these on her father's side, and from another on her mother's side. Through a third son the line descends to our subject. The families were first united in the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. William Hull, and with the union of Samuel Hull and Susan A. Miller they are now doubly united. To Mr. and Mrs. William Hull came four children: (1) Col. Henry married Elnora Humiston. (2) Elizabeth first married Dr. O. Doolittle, and later Horace Smith. (3) Samuel is the subject proper of this article. (4) William Dexter died at the age of seventeen years.

Deacon Samuel Hull attended the North Farms schools, and also a select school at Meriden. He remained at home with his parents until he reached the age of twenty years, when he went West to Illinois, then very largely a wilderness. After spending two years in the West he then came back to his Connecticut home, but soon returned to Illinois, where he engaged in farming. The poor health of his father very soon called him home again to cultivate the family farm, which passed into his possession after the death of his parents, and for the past fifty years he has been engaged in cultivating this very desirable tract, which has been the home of his father, grandfather and great-grandfather. He was one of the first farmers to engage in tobacco culture. Mr. Hull is now enjoying the fruits of a long and useful life.

Mr. Hull was married Jan. 31, 1855, at Middlefield, Conn., to Miss Susan A. Miller, who was born there, daughter of Ira Miller, an old resident of that community. Mrs. Hull was educated in the public school of Middlefield and in a select school, and was a very capable and successful teacher before her marriage. To this union have come two children: (1) Alida was educated in the district school, a select school in Meriden, and the State Normal at New Britain, and taught school in Wallingford three terms; she married Horace H. Williams, a dairy farmer, of East Wallingford. (2) Anna, who was educated at the district school and in the Grammar School at Boston, married Julius Williams, a farmer.

Deacon Hull is a Republican, but has no thirst for office. He and his wife belong to the Baptist Church, where for eight years he has officiated as deacon. They are both highly respected people, and have many warm friends throughout the community.

THE MILLER FAMILY, of Middlefield, is traced to Thomas Miller, of Birmingham, England, who came to Rowley, Mass., was made a freeman in 1639, and was a carpenter there in 1651, according to the records. Thence he moved to Middletown, Conn., where lands were recorded in his name in 1654, and where he was admitted to the church through letter, from Rowley. He built the first gristmill in that town, and it stood on Miller's brook, where one of the factories of the Russell Manufacturing Co. now stands, at the "Farms." By his first wife, Isabel, he was the father of one child, Ann, who married in 1653 Nathaniel Bacon. His second marriage, at the age of fifty-six years, was to Sarah Nettleton, daughter of Samuel Nettleton, of Branford. To this union came eight children, viz.: Thomas, born May 6, 1666, married Elizabeth Turner, for his first wife, and for his second spouse chose Mary Rowell; Samuel, born April 1, 1668, married Mary Eggleston; Joseph, born Aug. 21, 1670, married Rebecca Johnson, in 1701; Benjamin, born July 20, 1672, married Mary Johnson, and (second) Mercy Bassett; John, born March 10, 1674, married Mary Bevin in 1700; Margaret married Isaac Johnson; Sarah; Mehitabel, born March 28, 1681, was married to George Hubbard. Thomas Miller, the emigrant, father of this family, died Aug. 14, 1680, and his widow passed away March 20, 1727.

Benjamin Miller, the fourth of the above family, was one of the first three settlers of Middlefield town. He located in the southern part, on the east side of the Coginehaug or West river, not far from the Durham line. Tradition has it that the title of "governor" was conferred upon him, partly because of his influence with the Indians, partly on account of his being a large land owner, and partly on account of his dominant disposition. He was not, however, exempt from the action of the law, as will be seen. He was greatly annoyed at the frequent loss of his pigs, and suspected that they were devoured by bears; he accordingly kept watch, and one Sunday morning caught Bruin in the act, and shot and killed the animal. For this he was arrested on the charge of desecrating the Sabbath.

Benjamin Miller first married, Sept. 18, 1696,

Mary Johnson, who was born in 1676, a daughter of Nathaniel and Mary (Smith) Johnson. They had eight children, namely: Rebecca married David Robinson, of Durham; Mary married a Spencer, of Haddam; Benjamin, born Oct. 2, 1700, married Hannah, daughter of David Robinson; Sarah, born Oct. 5, 1702, became the wife of Joseph Hickox, of Durham; Hannah, born June 1, 1704, was married to Ephraim Coe; Isaac, born May 2, 1706, died unmarried; Mehitabel, born Feb. 5, 1707, was married to A. Barnes; and Ichabod, born Dec. 15, 1709, married Elizabeth Cromwell, daughter of Capt. Joseph Cromwell. Mrs. Mary Miller, mother of the above named children, died Dec. 15, 1709, and Benjamin Miller, for his second wife, married Mercy Bassett, who was born in New Haven in 1677. To this union came seven children, namely: Lydia married Eliakim Snow; Amos, born June 1, 1713, married Abigail Cromwell; Ebenezer, born Aug. 20, 1714, died unmarried; Martha, born Dec. 8, 1715, married Thomas Atkins; Rhoda, born March 8, 1717, was married to Benjamin Bacon; David, born Oct. 3, 1718, married Elizabeth Brainerd; Thankful died unmarried. Benjamin Miller, the father, who was a man of fine physique, and very powerful, died Nov. 22, 1747, and Mercy, his widow, died Feb. 9, 1756. The remains of both were interred in the old cemetery at Middlefield.

Amos Miller, the second child born to the second marriage of "Governor" Miller, was a farmer in the East District of Middlefield. He married Abigail, daughter of Joseph Cromwell, to which union were born six children, namely: Ebenezer, Amos, Abigail, Daniel, Elisha and Joseph.

Elisha Miller, fifth child of Amos, was largely engaged in farming and fruit growing in the East District of Middlefield, and sold much of his fruit in Middletown; but, being a liberal, kind-hearted man, he gave a great deal of his fruit away, and in fruit season was always followed about the streets of Middletown by a crowd of small boys, whom he supplied liberally with his luscious products. He married Elizabeth Miller, and to them were born eleven children, viz.: Abel settled in Ohio, where he married and passed the remainder of his life; Abigail also went to Ohio, where she was married and where she died; Elizabeth died unmarried, in Middlefield; Jerusha and Mary also died unmarried, in Middlefield; Esther went to Ohio, was married to a Mr. Bingham, and died there; Elisha married Rhoda Parsons, of Durham; Eunice died young; Ira became the father of Mrs. Hull; George R., a farmer, married Martina Rice; Amos first married Miranda Miller, and afterward Arabella Miller, of Granville, Mass. (he was a colonel in the Stoddard militia).

Ira Miller, the ninth of the above family, was born July 21, 1792, on the farm now occupied by Frank A. Coe, in Middlefield. He received a plain district-school education, but was a very bright scholar, and for seventeen winters was a successful school teacher in Middlefield and vicinity; in the summer he worked for his father on the farm, which he inherited. He went to Ohio, but remained a short time only, and then returned home, and for a time engaged in peddling Yankee notions throughout Long Island and in the South. On his final return home he followed fruit growing besides farming, was the principal grower to introduce new fruit varieties, and was quite successful in grafting. In early life he was a Democrat, as was his father, but later voted with the Republican party, and was the only one of his family to do so. He never held an office. Mr. Miller was a quiet, self-contained man. He died Aug. 1, 1867, respected by all who knew him.

To the marriage of Ira Miller and Lecta Miller, who was born July 3, 1796, daughter of Ichabod and Sarah (Birdsey) Miller, were born seven children, namely: (1) Emma married Joseph Congdon, lived for a time in Michigan, then in New York State, and finally in Westfield, Conn., where she died. (2) George W. (3) Marietta, the widow of Rufus B. Sage, died in Cromwell March 23, 1900. (4) Margaret E. is the widow of Joseph E. Tryon, of South Farms, and resides with her brother George W. (5) Charles Ira married Delia Clark, for his second wife Lydia F. Moulton, of Great Falls, N. H., and for his third wife Mrs. Lucy Jane (Miller) Hall, widow of Walter P. Hall. (6) Susan A. is the wife of Samuel Hull. (7) Amos H. married Louisa Cooper, and for his second wife Rose Parks, of Prince Edward Island. He is a wool waste manufacturer in Boston, Mass., and resides in Brookline, an aristocratic suburb of the city. Mrs. Lecta Miller, mother of the above family, died Jan. 16, 1890, at the venerable age of ninety-three.

ICHABOD E. ALLING, a well-known liveryman and prominent citizen of Derby, Conn., who is now representing the first ward in the city council, was born in the town of Hamden, Oct. 17, 1826, a son of Michael Alling, a native of the same place. There the grandfather, Ichabod Alling, spent his entire life as a farmer. In his family were six children, namely: Lyman, who was a farmer and butcher of Westville, and a man of prominence in that locality; Russell and Timothy, who were contractors and builders in New Haven; Michael, father of our subject; Elizabeth, who died unmarried; and Ezra, who engaged in farming on the old homestead throughout life.

Michael Alling became a boss mason in New Haven and continued to follow that occupation until his death, which occurred in Seymour. He married Miss Wealthy Sperry, of Bethany, a daughter of Ezra Sperry, a farmer by occupation. She is also deceased. To the parents of our subject were born four children: Eliza, who married Henry Pomeroy, of Seymour, Conn., and moved West; Ichabod E., who was next in order of birth; Henry, who in early life followed the machinist's trade, but later conducted a store in Bath, N. Y., where he died in 1898; and Fannie, widow of Capt. John Neil, of Chicago, Illinois.

The early boyhood of Ichabod E. Alling was passed on the home farm, and from there he removed with the family to the city of New Haven, where he attended school, and later to Seymour, this county. During his youth he learned the auger-maker's trade, which he followed for about thirty years in Seymour, Deep River, Troy, N. Y., and other places, but has always considered Derby his home.

Mr. Alling was united in marriage with Miss Laura Smith, of Seymour, a daughter of Russell Smith, a jobber and speculator of that place. By this union was born a daughter, Emma, now the widow of Charles Tracey, and a resident of Meriden, Conn. The wife and mother died in 1881, and Mr. Alling was again married, in 1882, his second union being with Miss Sarah Jane Jacques, of Providence, R. I., her family being an old one of that State.

Mr. Alling's father and other relatives were soldiers of the war of 1812, and he manifested his patriotism during the Civil war by enlisting in 1862 in Company H, 20th Conn. V. I. At the close of the war, in 1865, he was honorably discharged and returned to Derby, where he has since successfully engaged in the livery business. Fraternally he is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, and politically is a Democrat, but at local elections endeavors to vote for the man best qualified to fill the office, regardless of party affiliations. For a number of years he was a member of the police force of Derby, and in December, 1898, was elected alderman from the first ward, which position he is now filling in an able and satisfactory manner.

ELIZUR ZERAH CLINTON is one of the successful and prominent fruit growers and dairy farmers of Clintonville, near the line of North Haven, in the town of Wallingford. Mr. Clinton was born on the old Clinton homestead Sept. 18, 1847, a son of Jesse (Jr.) and Rosanna (Bassett) Clinton. [For genealogy of the Clinton family see sketch of Edwin Jesse Clinton elsewhere.]

Elizur Z. Clinton was educated in the district schools of Clintonville, and also attended North Haven Academy, after which he engaged in work for David Clinton & Son, in the Agricultural Manufacturing Co., and when he had mastered the business in all its branches he returned to the farm. The homestead consisted of seventy-five acres, well suited for general farming, dairying and fruit growing, and, as he has so very successfully pursued it, Mr. Clinton seems to have made a wise choice when he resumed agricultural lines. His peach orchards have been exceedingly productive and profitable, and, as a side line, he has engaged in the manufacture of a superior article of cider.

In 1869 Mr. Clinton was married, in North Haven, to Miss Julia A. Bishop, a native of North Haven, born May 1, 1850, a daughter of Erus and Charlotte (Thorpe) Bishop. She died of consumption soon after marriage. On Dec. 3, 1873, Mr. Clinton wedded Ella J. Palmer, a daughter of Timothy and Sybil (Barnes) Palmer, and five children have been born of this union: Robert J., Bessie E., Lovell E., Dora P. and Jennie F.

For a number of years our subject was a member of the State militia; he was a justice of the peace for several terms. He is past master of North Haven Grange, and belongs to Corinthian Lodge, No. 103, F. & A. M., of Northford, in which he has been secretary and treasurer and steward. In his political views he is a Democrat. Mr. Clinton is one of the most esteemed and respected citizens of his part of New Haven county.

EDSON L. BRYANT, deputy collector of internal revenue, was born Feb. 7, 1842, at Sheffield, Mass. His father, Socrates Bryant, was a native of Sheffield, where he spent the active life of a farmer, taking also a prominent part in public affairs. Mr. Bryant's ancestors were among the earliest settlers at Plymouth, and at Plympton, Mass., and of them are mentioned Lieut. John Bryant, Stephen Bryant (the lineal ancestor of William Cullen Bryant), John Shaw, and Augustine Pearce; the last named came to this country in the ship "Confidence" in the year 1638.

On Nov. 9, 1826, Socrates Bryant married Jerusha Terrell, of Naugatuck, Conn. She was a descendant of Roger Terrell and Joseph Northrup, early settlers at Milford, Conn.; Francis Norton, of Wethersfield, Conn.; William Hoadley, of Branford, Conn. Josiah Terrell, the grandfather of Jerusha Terrell, was a captain in the Revolutionary army. Five children were born to Socrates Bryant: Clark B., now of New Haven; Alfred T., deceased; Ellen B., wife of Thomas Wallace, formerly of Ansonia; Jane A., widow of Hiram Holabird; and Edson L., the subject of this sketch. The parents were devout members of the Congregational Church and brought up their children in the same faith.

Edson L. Bryant was educated in the public schools of Ansonia and Sheffield, and in the private school of Prof. Phillips at Sheffield. At the age of sixteen he came to Ansonia, making his home for a time with his sister, Mrs. Wallace. He left the high school at Ansonia to enter the employ of Wallace & Sons, a large manufacturing concern. In 1862 he enlisted in Company F, 23d Conn. V. I., for service in the Civil war, and was made first sergeant of that company. The military operations of this regiment were mainly in the far Southwest, forming part of the army under Gen. Banks. Mr. Bryant was at Ship Island, New Orleans, and Brashear City, now known as Morgan City. After a year of service he returned home, being discharged on account of the expiration of his term, and resumed work with Wallace & Sons. He became superintendent of the novelty department of the works, and continued with this concern until the sale of its plant to the Coe Brass Co. While so engaged he secured several patents for new devices and improvements. After leaving Wallace & Sons Mr. Bryant spent several years in the insurance business, and in June, 1808, he was appointed to his present position, that of deputy collector of internal revenue, with headquarters at New Haven. Mr. Bryant is a Republican in politics, and has always been an active worker in the interests of his party. He served as a member of the board of burgesses, under the old borough government of Ansonia; also on the board of education. He is known as a wide-awake, progressive citizen, and his influence and co-operation are always expected for every forward movement. He is a member of the local post of the Grand Army of the Republic, and is junior warden of Christ Church parish, where for thirty years he has been a vestryman.

On June 14, 1806, Mr. Bryant married Miss Mary Elizabeth Clark, daughter of Merritt and Mary (Hodge) Clark. The Clark history will be found elsewhere, under the name of George B. Clark. Mr. and Mrs. Bryant have had three children, of whom two are now living: (1) Annie E. married Theodore W. Bassett, of Derby, secretary of the Birmingham Iron Foundry. (2) George Clark graduated at Yale College in 1895, and at the Yale Law School in 1897. He was admitted to the Bar in June, 1897, and from July of that year until Oct. 1, 1901, was associated with the firm of Williams & Gager, in Derby. He is now judge of the City Court in Ansonia, which office he has held since July, 1899. In December, 1898, he was married to Florence Adele Farrel, daughter of Franklin Farrel, a sketch of whose life will be found elsewhere.

MARCUS EBENEZER COOKE, one of the oldest and best-known citizens of Wallingford, where he is engaged in farming, and has filled the office of selectman for several years with credit to himself and satisfaction to the community, is a descendant of one of the earliest and most prominent families of New Haven county.

The first of the name and family in America was Henry Cooke, a native of Kent, England, who was at Plymouth, Mass., before 1640, and there spent the remainder of his life. He was the father of four sons: Isaac, who remained at Plymouth; John, who settled in Middletown; and Henry and Samuel, both of whom made their home in New Haven county.

Samuel Cooke, the youngest of the above named four sons, was born in Plymouth, Mass., and in 1663 came to New Haven, where he married Hope Parker, daughter of Edward Parker, May 2, 1666. In 1670 they came to Wallingford, and were among the first settlers of the town, locating in what is now called Cooke Hill. He became the owner of considerable land, and followed the trade of shoemaker and tanner. Filling many public offices, he left a name for honor and ability. He was active in church affairs, and one of the organizers of the First Church in Wallingford. He died in 1702, and Mary (Roberts), his second wife, married Jeremiah Howe April 9, 1705. Mr. Cooke was father to the following children: Samuel, born March 3, 1667; John, Dec. 3, 1669; Hannah, March 3, 1671; Isaac, March 10, 1673 (died April 7, 1673); Mary, April 23, 1675 (married Nathaniel Ives); Elizabeth, Aug. 22, 1677 (died young); Judith, Feb. 29, 1679 (married Jeremiah Howe, April 20, 1704, and died the same day); Isaac, Jan. 10, 1681; Joseph, Feb. 25, 1683; Hope, Sept. 27, 1686 (married Joseph Benham, Dec. 18, 1706, and died Jan. 30, 1731). These were born to the first marriage. By his second wife Mr. Cooke was the father to the following: Israel, born May 8, 1692; Mabel, June 30, 1694; Benjamin, April 8, 1697 (died in 1717); Ephraim, April 19, 1699; Elizabeth, Sept. 10, 1701 (married Adam Mott Aug. 28, 1717).

Samuel Cooke (2), the eldest son of Samuel, was born in New Haven, and moved with his parents while still a child to Wallingford, where he followed farming all his life. He died on his farm Sept. 18, 1725, at the age of fifty-eight, and was buried in Wallingford. Mr. Cooke was twice married, first on March 3, 1692, by 'Squire John Moss, to Hannah Ives, daughter of William Ives. Mrs. Cooke died May 20, 1714. Elizabeth Bedel, of Stratford, became his second wife, and after his death she married Capt. Daniel Harris, of Middletown, Conn. Mr. Cooke was a farmer in the western part of the township, near the line which now divides Cheshire from Wallingford, and some of his descendants still occupy that land. Samuel Cooke (2) was father to the following children: By the first marriage—(1) Hannah, born May 28, 1693, married Jeremiah Hull, and died Nov. 22, 1735; (2) Samuel was born March 5, 1695; (3) Aaron was born Dec. 28, 1696; (4) Lydia, born Jan. 13, 1699, married Oct. 12, 1738, Daniel Dutton; (5) Moses, born Jan. 4, 1700, died Dec. 25, 1711; (6) Miriam, born Nov. 4, 1703, married Benjamin Curtis Dec. 12, 1727; (7) Thankful, born Dec. 24, 1705, died Aug. 19, 1714; (8) Esther, born March 8, 1707, married Abel Yale July 22, 1730; (9) Eunice was born Feb. 25, 1709; (10) Susannah, born Sept. 5, 1711, married Joseph Cole Dec. 1, 1735. By the second marriage—(11) Moses was born Nov. 6, 1716; (12) Thankful, born Nov. 14, 1718, married Stephen Hotchkiss Dec. 31, 1742; (13) Asaph was born June 25, 1720; (14) Hannah, born Nov. 4, 1721, married Zephaniah Hull, of Cheshire; (15) Hope died Sept. 18, 1728.

Aaron Cooke, noted in the foregoing paragraph, was born on the Cooke Hill farm. He was a prosperous and highly respected farmer, and a land holder in the southeastern part of Wallingford,

Marcus E. Cooke

Northford survey, where he settled; he died there Oct. 14, 1756, aged sixty years, and is buried in Wallingford. Three times married, Aaron Cooke was father to a numerous progeny. On Nov. 14, 1723, he married Sarah Benham, daughter of James Benham. Sarah Hitchcock, his second wife, died Aug. 11, 1735. Ruth Burrage, of Stratford, became his third wife, on Feb. 7, 1736. By his first marriage Mr. Cooke was father to the following children: Samuel, born Sept. 25, 1725; Stephen, Dec. 28, 1727; Titus, Feb. 25, 1730; Abel, Feb. 23, 1732. To the second marriage came one child, Sarah, born June 2, 1735. By his third marriage Mr. Cooke was father to the following children: Lydia, born in 1736, married Uriah Collins, and died Jan. 9, 1793; Ruth, born Sept. 7, 1738, married William Collins, and died June 9, 1790; Esther was born May 14, 1740; Elizabeth, born March 16, 1741, died when ten years old; Aaron was born June 5, 1744; Miriam, born June 30, 1746, died Dec. 1, 1750; Lucy, born Sept. 20, 1748, died April 29, 1760; Elizabeth, born June 7, 1751, died Oct. 19, 1762.

Abel Cooke, whose name appears fourth in the above named list of children, was born on the Cooke homestead in the southeastern part of Wallingford, where he grew to manhood. He was a farmer all his life, and died on his farm Aug. 10, 1776. This homestead is still owned by a direct descendant, Levi M. Cooke. On Nov. 16, 1757, Abel Cooke married Mary Atwater, who was born in Wallingford Dec. 30, 1735, and died Jan. 13, 1774; her parents were Benjamin and Elizabeth P. Atwater. Mr. Cooke was a soldier, a patriot of the first water, and served with distinction in the war of the Revolution. His children were: Atwater, born Nov. 3, 1758; Porter, July 27, 1760; Elizabeth, March 13, 1763; Abel, March 27, 1765; Chester, Aug. 13, 1767 (died young); David M., Feb. 16, 1770; Mary, April 2, 1773 (married Col. Eliakim Hull, and died Dec. 1, 1839); Chester (2), Oct. 6, 1775.

Chester Cooke, the grandfather of Marcus E. Cooke, was born in Wallingford, on the Aaron Cooke homestead, and grew to manhood in that locality. In 1792 he purchased the homestead where Marcus E. Cooke now resides. He was a lifelong farmer, and also a shoemaker. A leading Democrat, he represented the town in the State Legislature, and was a highly respected and upright citizen. He died Aug. 13, 1864. He was twice married, first to Thankful Hall, daughter of Hezekiah and Elizabeth (Merriman) Hall. Polly Norton was his second wife. Mr. Cooke was the father of three children: Caroline, born Sept. 5, 1801, married Orrin Andrews; Marilda, born Nov. 17, 1803, married Sherlock Avery, of Wallingford; Hiram was born April 23, 1805.

Hiram Cooke, the father of Marcus E., was born on the farm now owned by that gentleman, and made farming his life work. He was a man of affairs, highly respected, and filled many public offices, representing his town in the State Legislature, and was the first judge of the borough court of Wallingford. An ardent Democrat, he was active in the party organization. He was twice married. His first wife, Anna M. Marks, was born June 27, 1808, and died September 30, 1855. She was a daughter of Col. William Marks, a prominent citizen, who was appointed delegate from Wallingford to the State Constitutional Convention in 1818. He was one of the first manufacturers of woolen cloth in this country. On March 18, 1850, Mr. Cooke married Margaret A. Todd, who was born Jan. 1, 1833, and died Dec. 30, 1891. Mr. Cooke died Nov. 7, 1873, and is buried in the Center Street cemetery. To the first marriage came the following children: (1) Chester William, born Dec. 14, 1830, married Mary Merwin May 20, 1855. In 1859 they moved from Hardenburg, N. Y., to Momence, Ill., later to Manteno, Ill., and thence to Frankfort, S. Dak., their present residence. They have six children, Julia Anna, Marcus Eber, Urban Hiram, Nelson Samuel, Harriet and Maude. (2) Hiram D. was born Oct. 18, 1832. (3) Aurelius Baxter, born Oct. 21, 1834, died May 6, 1842. (4) Martin Van Buren was born June 20, 1839. (5) Jane Anna was born Nov. 4, 1843. (6) Marcus E. was born Nov. 2, 1849. The children of Hiram Cooke's second marriage were: (7) Thankful Estella, born May 10, 1857; and (8) Waldo D., born Dec. 31, 1860.

Marcus E. Cooke was born in Hardenburg, N. Y., and in December, 1857, removed to the Cooke homestead, in which he now resides. He received his literary training in the district school, but his education is very largely self-acquired, and to a great extent he has made his own way in the world. On the farm which has come into his possession he has made many substantial improvements, and he carries on a system of general farming, making a specialty of dairy interests and peach growing. He is a representative of one of the largest farm implement manufacturers in the county, and keeps on hand a full line of implements. In 1870 he was appointed overseer and builder of the town roads, and held that position for several years. He has invented and patented several valuable pieces of road machinery. A public-spirited and progressive man, he is always willing to lend a helping hand to every worthy cause. He is president of the Wallingford Agricultural Society, and was one of the organizers of the Wallingford Grange, of which he was master for two years. A leading Democrat, he represented the town in the State Legislature in 1883, and has been selectman several terms. Mr. Cooke is a director of the Dime Savings Bank of Wallingford, one of the growing financial institutions of the town, and is president of the Wallingford Creamery Co. Our subject served nine years—from 1871 to 1880—in the Connecticut National Guard, as a member of Company K, 2d Regiment, C. N. G., of Wallingford.

Mr. Cooke and Miss Clara E. Potts, of South Egremont, Berkshire Co., Mass., were married Feb. 12, 1884. She is a lady of culture and refinement, and has made a good wife and mother. They have had four children: Lillian A., born May 19, 1886, who died Oct. 6, 1888; Chester Herman, born April 19, 1888; Mabel Anna, born March 30, 1892; and Florence Marks, born Sept. 6, 1894.

HENRY BEADLE, a well-known and prominent citizen of Cheshire, was for many years one of the active and progressive business men of the town, as well as one of its most reliable and honored citizens, and now, in his declining years, he is enjoying a well-earned rest, free from the cares and responsibilities of business life. Throughout the county he is widely and favorably known.

The Beadle family is of French descent, and the first to come to America settled in Salem, Mass., but on account of religious persecution and the burning of the witches they afterward came to Connecticut, and their descendants are now numbered among its best citizens. (I) Nathaniel Beadle, the first of the name in New Haven county, removed to Wallingford early in the eighteenth century and located on a farm on the west side of the river near the Cheshire line, where he spent the remainder of his life in agricultural pursuits, and where his death occurred about 1764. His wife, Elizabeth, also died in Wallingford. Their children were Nathaniel, born Dec. 15, 1703; Mary, born Sept. 18, 1708; Josiah, born Aug. 3, 1711; and Samuel Sharp, who was graduated from Yale in 1757, and died Jan. 5, 1762.

(II) Nathaniel Beadle, son of Nathaniel, Sr., was reared on the home farm, and throughout life engaged in farming in Wallingford, of which town he was a well-known and honored citizen. He was also captain in the militia. He died Feb. 10, 1762, two years before his father, and was buried in the old cemetery. On Nov. 10, 1726, he married Elizabeth Hitchcock, and to them were born eight children, namely: Elizabeth and Susanna, twins, born Sept. 17, 1727; John; Hannah; Sarah; Lois, wife of John Hull; Mehitable; and Nathaniel, who died March 4, 1763.

(III) John Beadle, son of Nathaniel, Jr., was born and reared on the old homestead in Wallingford, and spent his entire life in that town. He was a member of the militia, and was captain of a company which he recruited, in the 5th Conn. Light Horse, in the Continental army, during the Revolutionary war. He married Miss Baker, daughter of John Baker, of Wallingford, and in their family were John, Henry, Joseph, Alfred and others, many of whom removed to New York.

(IV) Alfred Beadle, son of John and grandfather of our subject, was born in Wallingford, where he grew to manhood and learned wagon making and general repairing. When a young man he came to the town of Cheshire and established himself in business, being one of the first wagonmakers of this locality. Many of his wagons were used by the peddlers in traveling and selling their wares through the South. He bought a house on the site of our subject's present home, and made many improvements upon the place. He died in Cheshire at the ripe old age of eighty-six years, and was buried in the old cemetery. In politics he was a Democrat, and in religious faith a Congregationalist. He married Polly (or Mary) Doncomb, who died in Cheshire and was buried in the same cemetery. They had five children: Philander, Henry, Benajah, James and a daughter who died young.

(V) Benajah Beadle, father of our subject, was born in Cheshire, and educated in its district school and the Cheshire Episcopal Academy. With his father he learned the wagonmaker's trade and made that business his life occupation, being in partnership with his brother Philander for several years, but finally the brother removed to Syracuse, N. Y., and spent the remainder of his life in that city. After that Benajah Beadle was alone in business, and was very successful. He was one of the highly respected and worthy citizens of Cheshire, where he died Oct. 4, 1890, aged seventy-five years, and was buried in Cheshire cemetery. He was a member of the Episcopal Church, in politics was first a Whig and later a Republican, and served as selectman of the town and held other local offices. He married Julia Hitchcock, who was also born in Cheshire of good old Revolutionary stock, and died April 18, 1890, aged seventy-five years. She, too, was a faithful member of the Episcopal Church. In their family were three children: William, who was a soldier of Company A, 20th Conn. V. L., during the Civil war, and died from the effects of his army life; Henry, our subject; and Edgar, also a resident of Cheshire.

(VI) Henry Beadle was born on the present site of the high school, at Cheshire Center, Jan. 22, 1844, and pursued his studies in the district school and the Cheshire Episcopal Academy. In early life he learned the wagonmaker's trade with his father and remained with him until 1869, when he went to Wallingford as foreman of the works of the Carriage Wheel Manufacturing Co., with which he was connected for five years. After his return to Cheshire he was engaged in the painting and paper hanging business until 1890, when appointed postmaster of Cheshire under President Harrison's administration, and held that office until the Democrats came into power in 1893. Since then he has practically lived a retired life, spending his winters in Florida, where he has an orange orchard in which he takes a great interest. He has a beautiful home, supplied with all modern conveniences, which has been built upon the foundation of his grandfather's old home. He has quite an interesting collection of relics, which he has gathered during his travels, and is, himself, somewhat of an artist in the carving of animals from wood.

In 1875, in New Haven, Mr. Beadle was married to Miss Ella Hawes, a native of Wallingford and a daughter of Alonzo and Laura (Merriman) Hawes. She is a lady of culture and refinement, and is an active member of the Congregational Church, and of Crescent Chapter, O. E. S. Julia L., the only child born to our subject and his wife, died in 1886, at the age of seven years. Socially Mr. Beadle is a member of Temple Lodge, A. F. & A. M., of Cheshire. For a quarter of a century he has been prominently identified with public affairs, and in 1884 represented Cheshire in the State Legislature, where he served as clerk of the committee on claims. He was constable of the town for over twenty years; deputy sheriff seven years; postmaster three years; justice of the peace several years; and chairman of the town committee of the Republican party for twenty-five years. His public and private life are alike above reproach, and he is held in high regard by all who know him.

FRANK OBADIAH BADGER was born March 4, 1841, in Burlington, Mass., a son of Obadiah and Harriet (Cutler) Badger. Of the seven children in this family, five are yet living.

Frank O. Badger was but seven years old when his father died, and he was taken to the home of a paternal aunt in Plymouth, Mass., where he lived until he was twelve years old, receiving the school privileges of that town. At that age he entered a store in Lowell as a clerk, with the agreement that he was to attend school a part of each year. He remained in the store until he was seventeen years of age, when he went to California, where he had a claim on the American river. Mr. Badger traveled through California and Mexico quite extensively, and after a residence of two years on the Pacific coast returned to Boston, and was a clerk in a store in that city for a few months. Returning to Lowell he entered the Lowell Locomotive works, and was engaged as a machinist for thirteen months, and then transferred himself to the Springfield Armory, where he was put on government work. For six years he was in the armory, and at the expiration of this time went to New Britain to do contract work, making bank locks with Frederick North, in which he employed about twenty-five men. For four years he worked in connection with Mr. North, and was then proprietor and manager of the Union Hall Hotel at Hartford for a year, after which he went to Kansas City, Mo., where he was engaged in selling farming implements and in buying farm produce. The state of his wife's health, however, compelled a quick return to the East, and he started a plant at Greenport, Long Island, for the manufacture of wire goods, in which he was quite successful. After the lapse of four years he sold out, and coming to New Britain, was made general manager of the National Wire Mattress Co., a position he held for four years, when he gave it up and went to New York City, where he spent a year as general manager of the mattress and spring bed departments for the Hall & Stevens Co. Following this he was proprietor and manager of a spring bed factory, in which he employed some twenty men. After three quite successful years of this work he sold out to the Brooklyn Spring Bed Co. For seven months Mr. Badger was with the R. Hoe Printing Press Co., and then he engaged with H. L. Judd & Co. as a contractor in their brass bed department, and when the plant was removed to Wallingford Mr. Badger came with it, April 30, 1891. He still holds his contract with the company, and is employing about fifteen hands.

Mr. Badger is a Mason, and is connected with Keystone Chapter at Meriden. He is a Republican in politics, but he has always been too busy to give much attention to political affairs. With his family he attends the First Congregational Church, where they are members.

In 1872 Mr. Badger was married to Miss Emma A. Bailey, of Hartford, a daughter of Solomon Bailey. To Mr. and Mrs. Badger were born the following children: Ella May, born May 8, 1873, married Walter Hill, superintendent of the New York Insulated Wire Co., of Wallingford, and has two children, May Elizabeth and Esther B.; Robert E., born June 27, 1874, married Miss Maude Miller, of Mount Carmel, and is engaged in the stationery and laundry business in Wallingford; Emma Elizabeth is at home; Grace Alma is at home; and Frank died when seven years old.

ALBERT BEAUMONT was born in the Beaumont homestead June 19, 1844, a son of the late John and Ann (Tyler) Beaumont. His education was obtained in the district schools, and growing up on the homestead, he was thoroughly trained in the best agricultural methods of the time. When his father died, young Albert and his brother George operated the home farm until 1898, in which year he sold out his interest in the home place, and bought the Wooding Farm on East Main Street. Here he made his home for about two years, but he lately sold it, buying instead the Threadway Farm, a place of thirty acres, but large enough for market gardening, which he intends making his business. Mr. Beaumont is a hard worker, and as he carefully plans his labor, and seeks to accomplish something practical and timely, he is bound to succeed. An honest and straightforward man, his word is held good to any amount, and what he says is accepted as the statement of a man of truth.

On Oct. 6, 1892, Mr. Beaumont was married, in Wallingford, by the Rev. C. H. Dickerson, to Miss Emily Seard, who was born in Newport, South Wales, England, a daughter of George Seard, one of the leading dairymen of Wallingford. To this marriage has come one child, Albert John, born May 31, 1898. Mr. Beaumont belongs to the Wallingford Grange; and politically is a Republican, but not an office seeker. In his church connection he is a Congregationalist, and both he and his wife are highly esteemed in the community, as most excellent people, kind neighbors, and honest and industrious in their daily lives.

GEORGE E. TERRY, a well-known citizen of Prospect, New Haven Co., Conn., was born in Sag Harbor, Long Island, Nov. 1, 1856, a son of Emanuel and Emma Terry, both of whom died on Long Island. During his boyhood our subject attended the schools of New York City, and began life for himself as a clerk in a dry goods store there. After following that occupation for two years, he became a sailor in the coasting trade and spent the following three years in that manner, after which he learned the cigar-maker's trade in Brooklyn, N. Y., and clerked in a cigar store for some time. He was next employed as clerk in a hotel at New London, Conn., and from there removed to New Haven, where he was employed in dye works for two years. In 1881 he went to Waterbury, where he worked in the watch factory until coming to Prospect in 1892, when he took up his residence on the John Swartz farm, which is the property of his wife. He is engaged through the winter months at his trade in Waterbury.

In 1880, in Philadelphia, Penn., Mr. Terry married Miss Emelie Adaline Kyser, a native of St. Louis, Mo., and a daughter of the late Charles F. Kyser, who was born in Germany and was a well-known translator of the German, French and Latin languages. To Mr. and Mrs. Terry were born five children, namely: Lotta, Vera, Emily and Harold, all living; and Robert, who died in infancy. Mr. Terry is a member of the K. of L., and is identified with the Democratic party.

PERRY CHAUNCEY MORRIS, ex-first selectman and ex-town treasurer of Waterbury, was born Aug. 12, 1847, in that part of the town now known as Waterville, a son of Miles Morris, who was born in the town of Canaan, Litchfield Co., Conn., and is now living in Waterbury.

Russell Morris, father of Miles, was of English extraction, and was born in Danbury, Conn. By occupation he was a farmer. He married Harriet Holcomb, and settled on his farm in Canaan, where he reared a family of twelve children, named, in the order of their birth, Miles, Theodore, Samuel, Edmund, Sidney, Chauncey, David, Amanda, Julia, Susan, Elizabeth and Mary. Of this family, Miles, the eldest, is the father of our subject; Theodore was an employe of the Housatonic Railway Co. at Falls Village, and there met his death by accident; Samuel, who was also a railroad man, died in Chicago; Edmund lives in the town of South Lee, Mass., where he is employed on a railroad; Sidney is a farmer in Falls Village; Chauncey lives in retirement in Bridgeport; David died at the age of eighteen years; Amanda is deceased; Julia, deceased, was the wife of Robert Ross; Susan, who was a school teacher, has also entered into rest; Elizabeth has been twice married, first to a Mr. Reed, and later to Charles Phillips, a railroad conductor; Mary is the wife of John Sturges, of Bridgeport.

Miles Morris came to Waterbury in 1840, and has since been in the employ of the Waterville Knife Co., and Brown & Bros. He married Jane M. Forrest, who was born in Waterbury, a daughter of Samuel Forrest, who came from Birmingham, England. To this union were born two children: Perry Chauncey and Frederick M., the latter born in Bridgeport, and now a machinist in Waterbury. The wife and mother passed away July 25, 1887, and was buried in Waterville.

Perry Chauncey Morris was educated in the local schools of Waterbury and Waterville, after leaving which he entered the brass works of Brown & Bros., with whom he remained about twenty-five years. He then engaged in the grocery business on the Watertown road, which he continued with much success until his removal to Waterbury. Always taking a keen interest in public affairs, he has been active in the work of his chosen political party—the Democratic—and was honored by election to the office of town treasurer for the term of two years. So satisfactorily did he fill the duties of the office of treasurer that immediately after the expiration of his term he was, in 1894, elected first selectman, which office occupied all his attention up to 1900. Since that time he has been obliged to devote his time to his personal affairs, his property interests demanding considerable attention. He is popular with all parties, and as People's candidate received the support of both Democrats and Republicans, the entire population having the most implicit confidence in his unflinching honesty.

On Aug. 4, 1870, Mr. Morris married Miss Matilda E. Slade, of Waterbury, daughter of George and Matilda (Stevens) Slade, natives of England. To this marriage has been born one child, Frances E. Fraternally Mr. Morris is a member of Harmony Lodge, No. 42, F. & A. M., at Waterbury, of the Knights Templars, and is also a Mystic Shriner. In religious connection he belongs to Trinity Episcopal Church. He is one of the most progressive men of Waterbury, and is identified with every project designed to promote the public interest.

JAMES W. CONE, one of the leading druggists of Waterbury, has a fine establishment and caters to the best people of the city.

Mr. Cone was born May 30, 1848, in Winsted, Conn., son of John Cone, who was born in Norfolk, this State, in 1817. Deacon Samuel Cone, the grandfather of James W., was born in Winchester, Conn., a son of Daniel H. Cone, who was a soldier in the Revolutionary war. Samuel was a sevice maker, who followed that business in Norfolk; there he married Clarissa Munger, of Norfolk, Conn., and they reared a family of thirteen children, all of whom are deceased but John, the father of James W.

Perry C. Brown

John Cone grew to manhood in Norfolk, where he married Harriet A. Watson, a daughter of Abijah and Margaret Watson, farming people of Norfolk. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Cone settled in the village of Winsted, Conn., where he carried on his business, and where he is now living retired. Mrs. Cone died May 20, 1880. Three children were born to them: James, who died at the age of five years; James W.; and Maria E., who died April 13, 1901.

James W. Cone grew up in Winsted, where he attended the public school, and later was a student in the Eastman Business College, at Poughkeepsie, N. Y. As an apprentice to the druggist's business, he spent four years with David Fuller, at Waterbury, and for six years after leaving Mr. Fuller was engaged in various places. During four years of this time he was in business for himself at Winsted. In 1884 he came back to Waterbury, and purchased the drug store of Dr. J. J. Jacques, at No. 11 West Main street, and continued for ten years at the old location, moving in 1896 to his present quarters, corner of West Main and Bank Streets. Here he carries a fine stock, and appeals to the most fastidious as well as to the great public, offering the best of goods at a modest price, and treating all who come with equal courtesy and fairness.

Mr. Cone and Miss Caroline Woodward were married Nov. 24, 1873. Mrs. Cone was a daughter of Andrew Woodward, and a native of Thomaston, Conn., where her father has been engaged in the tannery business many years. She died Dec. 17, 1888, leaving three children: Emma L., who is the wife of Dr. C. H. Rust, of Cleveland, Ohio; John S., who died July 26, 1899, at the age of twenty years; and Harriet A., a student in the Waterbury schools. On Sept. 24, 1890, Mr. Cone married Miss Minnie Manwaring, who was born in Waterford, Conn., daughter of Ansel Manwaring, for many years town treasurer. She is a capable and well educated lady, and was a school teacher before her marriage. Mr. Cone is a Republican and a prominent Mason, having reached the Shrine. The family attend the Second Congregational Church, of which they are all members.

RICHARD CHRISTOPHER WILCOX, senior member of the widely known firm of R. C. Wilcox & Sons, dairy farmers and stock raisers, Guilford, is a native of Connecticut, born June 22, 1846, in the town of Guilford, New Haven county.

The Wilcox family are old settlers of the New England States, and the name has been spelled in various ways—Wilcox, Wilcocks, Wilcoxson and Willcox. (1) William Wilcox (or Wilcoxson), the first of the name in Connecticut, was born in 1601 at St. Albans, Hertfordshire, England, whence in 1635 he came to America in the ship "Planter," having a certificate from the minister of his native city. Landing at Boston, he there became a freeman in 1636; three years later (1639) he came to Connecticut, locating at Stratford, Fairfield county, where he passed the rest of his days, dying in 1652. In 1647 he was a representative at Hartford. He and his wife, Margaret, had six children, as follows: (1) John, born in 1633; (2) Joseph, who died in 1703; (3) Samuel, deceased March 12, 1713; (4) Sarah, Mrs. John Meigs, who died Nov. 24, 1691; (5) Obadiah, sketch of whom follows; and (6) Timothy, deceased June 13, 1713.

(II) Obadiah Wilcox, son of (I) William, was born in 1641 in the town of Stratford, Conn., whence in early manhood he came to Guilford, settling in the eastern part of the town, now known as Madison, and following farming. In 1672 he was made a freeman. He died in 1713, and was buried in Madison. Mr. Wilcox was twice married, and by his first wife, Mary, had thirteen children, as follows: (1) Mary, born Dec. 11, 1676, married Thomas Munson, of New Haven; (2) Lydia, born Oct. 14, 1678, died Nov. 4, 1698; (3) Obadiah was born Dec. 14, 1679; (4) Ebenezer was born Sept. 20, 1682; (5) Ephraim; (6) Mindwell was married April 20, 1714, to Daniel Hill, and died Feb. 3, 1770; (7) Timothy was born Nov. 15, 1690; (8) Silence; (9) John, sketch of whom follows; (10) Joseph, born in 1694, married Hannah Goodale, and died July 15, 1770; (11) Isaac settled in Middletown; (12) Jemima was born Oct. 30, 1699; (13) Experience. By his second wife, Silence, Mr. Wilcox had one child, (14) Thankful, born April 4, 1702, who was married Sept. 6, 1722, to Samuel Norton.

(III) John Wilcox, son of (II) Obadiah, was born Nov. 9, 1692, in East Guilford, where he passed all his days in agricultural pursuits, dying May 1, 1753. On Jan. 11, 1719, he married Deborah Parmelee, born in 1699, who died in 1792. Their children: (1) Obadiah, born April 15, 1720, married Lydia Wilcox, and died in 1771; (2) Sarah was born Nov. 10, 1723; (3) John, born Aug. 17, 1726, married Martha Coe; (4) Ezra, sketch of whom follows; (5) Mary, born Dec. 1, 1731, married in November, 1753, Enos French, and died Sept. 28, 1777; (6) Asabel was born Dec. 9, 1735.

(IV) Ezra Wilcox, son of (III) John, born Oct. 20, 1728, passed all his days in East Guilford, dying there March 14, 1805. He married Nov. 9, 1757, Esther Meigs, who was born March 10, 1734, a daughter of Janna and Elizabeth (Dudley) Meigs, and died Sept. 8, 1809. Children as follows were born to them: (1) Lavinia, born July 17, 1758, married Bela Dudley; (2) Ezra, born in 1762, married Rebecca Brown, and died May 1, 1836; (3) Esther, married John Williams; (4) Elzah, born March 8, 1765, married Lois Field, and died Feb. 24, 1828; (5) Julius; (6) Elizabeth, married John Spencer; (7) Return, sketch of whom follows.

(V) Return Wilcox, son of (IV) Ezra, and the grandfather of Richard C. Wilcox, was born in 1771, in what is now the town of Madison, New Haven county, and died there Nov. 28, 1846. He was a lifelong farmer. By his wife, Abigail, born May 23, 1780, died May 31, 1845, he had seven children, as follows: (1) Alva Orrin, born Aug. 22, 1799, died July 10, 1887; (2) Polly Maria, born Aug. 2, 1801, married Ebenezer Merrill, of Clinton, Conn.; (3) Elizabeth, born Sept. 8, 1803, married Sept. 4, 1828, Edward F. Kelsey, of Madison, and died March 15, 1888; (4) Jerusha, born in July, 1806, married in August, 1824, Samuel K. Dowd, and died June 3, 1841; (5) Almon Orrill, sketch of whom follows; (6) Susan Abigail, born in 1815, married Sept. 19, 1838, Achilles Dowd, of Madison; (7) Samuel Augustus, born July 19, 1819, died Dec. 13, 1870.

(VI) Almon Orrill Wilcox, son of (V) Return, and the father of Richard C., was born April 24, 1808, in the town of Madison, New Haven county, there attended the district school, and worked on a farm until he was twenty-five years old, when he came to Guilford. Here his first employment was as a farm laborer at $5 per month. Later he purchased a small farm, where he continued agricultural pursuits the rest of his life, dying Sept. 16, 1874; his remains were interred in Nut Plains cemetery. Noted for his industry and honesty, he was highly respected in the community in which he lived. In politics he was first a Whig, later a Republican, and in religious faith he was a consistent member of the Congregational Church.

In Guilford, Oct. 6, 1830, Almon O. Wilcox was married to Ruth D. Kennedy, who was born May 3, 1812, and died Jan. 28, 1875. She was a daughter of Anson Kennedy, of Guilford. Their children: (1) Sarah Dorcas, born Nov. 2, 1833, married Jan. 13, 1855, Charles M. Wilcox, and died March 26, 1857; (2) Charlotte Abigail, born Nov. 25, 1836, is the widow of Andrew Ward Foote, late of Guilford (he was born April 27, 1833, and died Dec. 16, 1880); (3) Helen Sophia, born July 21, 1844, died March 14, 1865; (4) Richard Christopher, a sketch of whom follows; (5) George Howard, born March 21, 1849, married Mary E. Bishop, and died Nov. 14, 1888; (6) Walter Wesley, born Dec. 14, 1851, married Lucy M. Evarts.

(VII) Richard C. Wilcox, whose name opens this memoir, received his education in part at the district schools of Nut Plains, in part at Guilford Academy, where he attended four terms. He worked at home until of age, when with aid from his father, he bought the farm on which he now lives, known as "Cloverdale Dairy Farm," a tract of fifty-six acres formerly owned by Justin Dudley, and which was then a wilderness. Here he built a home in 1870, and since then has erected barns, outhouses and a dairy ice house, etc., costing in all over $12,000. His home and surroundings are among the finest in Guilford. Until 1894 he carried on general farming, and then embarked in dairying, butter-making a specialty, and from time to time has increased the capacity of his business until he now owns the largest dairy farm on the shore line. He manufactures and sells over $1,700 worth of butter per annum, and sells $1,000 worth of milk and cream in the same period. Since his first purchase of land he has bought another farm of 100 acres near the homestead, and has leased several other farms. He has now (1901) a herd of thirty-six Jerseys and grade Jersey cows, and a fine Jersey bull of his own raising. The following sketch of "Cloverdale Dairy Farm" appeared in the report of the Dairy Commissioner for 1898:

"The Cloverdale Dairy Farm originated about six years ago with four cows. The cream from the milk of those cows was sold to the Guilford Creamery for about five months, when it was decided to make butter in a small way. The butter for the first year was sold for two cents below the wholesale creamery price, because the grocers could not pay the creamery prices. The last year nearly the entire make has been sold to families at thirty cents per pound the year around, and in fact, it has been so the last four years. Mr. Wilcox is now selling cream, new milk, skim milk and buttermilk, one of his sons running a wagon daily in the town. He uses a DeLaval cream separator, which enables him to have sweet skim milk every day. His herd consists of twenty-eight Jerseys and grade Jerseys, feeding hay and dry food, not having a silo. Mr. Wilcox manufactured over three tons of butter in 1897, which was nearly all disposed of at prices above mentioned."

Mr. Wilcox is a man of enterprise and progress, and takes a leading part all things pertaining to farming and dairying, and to the town in general. He is one of the most active members of the State Creamery Association and of the State Dairy Association. Being a well-read man, he is well posted on all the leading events of the day, and has made a success of life entirely by his own efforts, perseverance and good management. Though a staunch Republican in politics, he is no party man; in religious faith he is a member of the First Congregational Church. Socially he is affiliated with the Royal Arcanum and New England Order of Protection.

In Branford, Conn., Oct. 5, 1870, Richard C. Wilcox was married to Lucy Caroline Page, a native of that town, and a daughter of Edgar and Jane G. (Robinson) Page. Four children, all sons, have blessed this union, their names and dates of birth being as follows: Lewis Cornelius, Feb. 6, 1872; Elmer Ellsworth, Sept. 8, 1874; Edgar Almon, Aug. 18, 1877; and Richard Lester, April 28, 1879. All are well educated, and all excepting Richard L. are engaged in their father's dairying and stock-raising business, proving themselves to be worthy sons of worthy parents, as well as progressive and advanced farmers. Mrs. Wilcox is a lady of refinement, a devoted helpmeet to her husband, a loving mother, and kind, hospitable neighbor.

JOSEPH P. COLWELL, one of the leading business men of Derby, was born in Hartford, April 26, 1845, and grew to manhood there. His early educational advantages were of a very limited sort, necessity compelling him to begin work at an early age. While yet a young boy he found employment in the carpet factory, and the outbreak of the Civil War found him a servant in the household of Dr. M. T. Newton. Being too young to enlist, yet desirous of going to the front, he accompanied the Doctor in the same capacity, and was thus able to serve three years. On his return from the army he went to work for the Colt Arms Co., with whom he remained for about two years. In 1866 he removed to Derby, which city, as has been said, is still his home. Here, too, his life for many years was one of hard and constant toil. In 1887 he entered the employ of Mr. Thomas Finn, an undertaker, and in 1891 embarked in the same line of business for himself, having as a partner Peter Reilly, and the firm name being Colwell & Reilly. The partnership was dissolved after three years, and since 1894 Mr. Colwell has carried on the business alone. Under his judicious management it has prospered greatly, and he is now reaping the well earned reward of a life of patient industry and unflinching integrity.

In 1873 Mr. Colwell was married to Miss Mary Ann Kellely, of Derby, whose father, Matthew Kellely, was born in Ireland. His married life lasted but twelve years, Mrs. Colwell dying in 1885. Of their union there are three children living. Henry, Joseph and Mary. Mr. Colwell is a Democrat in politics, and in religious faith a Catholic, being a communicant at St. Mary's Church. For thirty years he has been a member of the Storm Hose Company, of Derby, and has risen from the ranks to hold the position of chief engineer. He is of a genial, generous nature, and social in his proclivities and mode of life, and is an influential and honored member of various societies. Among these organizations are the Knights of Columbus (of which order he is a past master), the Foresters of America, the Knights of Maccabees, and the Catholic Benevolent Legion of America.

MRS. CLARA A. BOND, of Woodbridge, belongs to an old and honored New Haven county family, which was founded here by one Richard Sperry, who came from England about 1660. Her paternal great-grandfather, Ebenezer Sperry, was a native of Woodbridge, born July 27, 1773, on what is known as the Sperry farm and is still owned by the Sperry family. The house standing thereon was built when he was a child of five years. He wedded Mary Newton Booth, also a native of Woodbridge and a daughter of Walter and Mary (Newton) Booth. He died Oct. 26, 1855, and she departed this life Feb. 2, 1865, at the age of eighty-two years. They had two children, of whom Calvin, the grandfather of our subject, was the youngest. Eunice married Edward Hine, of Woodbridge, and to them were born three children: Catherine Mary, who wedded the late Riley Peck, of New Haven, and died Nov. 5, 1901, aged seventy-four years; Sarah Antoinette, widow of Birdsey Bradley, of Hamden; and Velina, wife of Lewis Hitchcock, of Woodbridge.

Calvin Sperry was born on the old homestead, in December, 1807, and there spent his entire life engaged in agricultural pursuits. In addition to general farming he was also engaged in the milk business for a time, and in his undertakings met with fair success. He was a staunch supporter of the Republican party and its principles, and was a consistent member of the Congregational Church of Woodbridge. After an honorable and useful career, he died May 28, 1871, in his sixty-fourth year. He was three times married, his first wife being Sarah A. Carrington, daughter of Liverus and Lowly Carrington. She died Jan. 23, 1853, at the age of forty-four years, and he next married Cynthia Riggs, by whom he had one daughter, Eleanor, now deceased. The third wife was Parentha Baldwin. There were three children by the first marriage, namely: Elizur L., father of our subject; Almira E., now Mrs. George Turner, of Woodbridge; and Sarah Angeline, who died April 19, 1849, at the age of ten years.

Elizur L. Sperry was born Feb. 5, 1831, on the old homestead in the town of Woodbridge, where Mrs. Bond now lives, and he was given the best educational advantages, being a graduate of Yale. On Jan. 16, 1856, he was married in Dudley, Mass., to Miss Sarah Loretta Williams, who was born April 10, 1831, and soon after his marriage he moved to Vandalia, Ill., where he was engaged in farming for several years—an occupation he thoroughly understood, having been trained to it on the home farm. From Illinois, he returned to Woodbridge, and here engaged in general farming. In 1890 he visited a son in Florida, and being pleased with the climate and State, he decided to make it his winter home. Accordingly, the following year he bought an orange grove of twenty-five acres, and spent the great part of the time in Florida until his death Aug. 16, 1901, at the age of seventy years. Politically he was a staunch Republican, and as one of the prominent and influential men of his community, he was called upon to fill many of the town offices, such as selectman, member of the school board, and for many years justice of the peace. In his family were four children: (1) William L., born June 16, 1857, died June 22, 1857. (2) Clara A., our subject, is mentioned below. (3) Calvin Waldo, born Oct. 20, 1863, married H. Louie Keys, and they have three children: Sarah L., born April 10, 1890; Marion K., born Aug. 28, 1892; and Carlton, born April 22, 1895. (4) Sarah Adeline, born May 6, 1867, died Dec. 26, 1884.

Mrs. Bond was born Feb. 4, 1801, and was married Aug. 15, 1883, to Charles Bond, a native of Oxford, Mass., by whom she has two children: Herbert L., born Sept. 28, 1884; and Mabel Sperry, born July 31, 1890. Mr. Bond is an extensive and successful farmer of Woodbridge, cultivating the flats long known as the Sperry farm, and also operates a cider and sawmill. He is a wide-awake, energetic business man, of progressive ideas, and is quite prominent in the community where he resides. In politics he is a Republican.

Dr. EMELINE ROBERTS JONES, of New Haven, has the distinction of being the pioneer woman dentist—the first woman to open independently an office and offer her services to the public as a competent dentist.

Dr. Jones was born July 26, 1836, in Winchester, Conn., daughter of John Eno and Deborah Hungerford (Blakeslee) Roberts, and is descended in both paternal and maternal lines from honorable New England ancestry. Samuel Roberts, her earliest ancestor of that name on American soil, came from England about 1636 and settled in New Haven. His son, (II) Samuel Roberts, married Catherine ———. His son, (III) Samuel Roberts, married Sept. 22, 1691, Mary Blake. His son, (IV) Samuel Roberts, married March 22, 1716-17, Rachel Webb. His son, (V) Joel Roberts, married Esther Loomis. His son, (VI) Judah Roberts, married Mercy Eno. His son, (VII) John Eno Roberts, married Deborah Hungerford Blakeslee, and they were the parents of Dr. Emeline R. Jones.

(I) Samuel Blakeslee, Dr. Jones' first American ancestor in the maternal line, came from England in 1636. His son, (II) Samuel Blakeslee married Sarah Kimberly. His son, (III) Samuel Blakeslee, married Eleanor Lane. His son, (IV) Deacon Samuel Blakeslee, married Ruth ———. His son, (V) Deacon Samuel Blakeslee, married Lydia Woodford. His son, (VI) Deacon Samuel Blakeslee, married Silence Church. His daughter, (VII) Deborah Hungerford, married John Eno Roberts, and they became the parents of Dr. Emeline R. Jones. The Doctor is descended from William the Conqueror through the Plantagenets, in the Drake line. Five of her ancestors fought on the American side in the Revolution, and a number were prominent in the trying times dating from the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers through the Colonial period, loyal and patriotic to the core.

In 1854 Emeline Roberts was united in marriage with Dr. Daniel Albion Jones, born March 2, 1833, in Barkhamsted, Litchfield Co., Conn., son of Orville and Rhoda (Woodruff) Jones. He was descended from William Jones, a lawyer of London, England, who came to New England in 1660, in the same ship with Goffe and Whalley, the regicides, arriving in Boston July 27. It is said that his father, David Jones, was one of the judges executed by King Charles II, and William Jones is reputed to have secreted and fed the regicides a month in his house. From Boston he came to New Haven, where he was an important man throughout the remainder of his life. He was magistrate of New Haven Colony from 1662 to 1664, and was re-elected annually until 1692, when he was elected deputy governor, in which incumbency he was retained until his death, in 1706. His son, (II) Nathaniel Jones, born in England, died in New Haven Aug. 21, 1691. On Oct. 7, 1684, he married Abigail Atwater. His son, (III) Theophilus Jones, born March 18, 1690, married Dec. 26, 1711, Hannah Mix. His son, (IV) Nathaniel Jones, born March 3, 1717, married June 8, 1743, Sarah Merriam. His son, (V) Benjamin Jones, born Feb. 5, 1757, at Wallingford, married Esther Woodruff. His son, (VI) Orville Jones, married Rhoda Woodruff, and they were the parents of (VII) Daniel Albion Jones, who married Emeline Roberts. Dr. Daniel A. Jones was also descended from William the Conqueror through the Plantagenets, twice in the Drake line and once in the Alsop line.

Dr. Daniel Albion Jones was a dentist of exceptional skill, and a man of ability in various lines. He was widely known and beloved outside his profession, especially as a philanthropist, and his untimely death, in 1864, deprived the profession of a worthy member, the community of a citizen who from early manhood had, in his large-hearted benevolence, the good of his fellow men at heart, and his family of a kind and loving father. Mrs. Jones had commenced the study of dentistry with her husband in 1855, and for a time received instruction from Dr. R. B. Curtis, of Winsted, Conn. Her husband had built up a large practice in Danielsonville (now Danielson), and, having assisted him until his death, she continued the establishment there successfully until 1876, in which year she moved to New Haven in order to give her son better educational opportunities. She was no less successful in her new field, and has taken high rank among the ablest members of the dental profession in Connecticut; she is a member of the State Dental Society.

Inheriting independence of thought and action, together with the New England virtues of thrift, executive ability and thoroughness, Dr. Jones has been exceptionally successful in her business career. The resolution she displayed in taking up the work her husband began is a typical characteristic of this noble woman, who has shown herself capable in other fields besides that of her life work. As the pioneer woman in her profession she enjoys a distinction not lightly reckoned in these days, when women are receiving the recognition due them for their achievements. Other women may have assisted in dental offices prior to 1855, but so far as known she is the first to open an office on her own account. To her natural mental acquisitiveness is added clear and quick perception, and a corresponding fullness of the reasoning faculties. Nor is she deficient in such social graces and qualities of affection as are needed to constitute her the best of mothers and the most serviceable of friends. Her active and wide-reaching benevolence has been exercised quietly, and many and timely have been her benefactions. Dr. Jones is an honored member of Mary Clap Wooster Chapter, D. A. R.

Two children were born to Daniel A. and Emeline (Roberts) Jones: Eveline, who was six years of age at the time of her father's death; and Daniel Albion, who was three and a half years old at that time. The daughter is now the wife of Frederick B. Street, a prominent business man of New Haven, and has two daughters, Emeline A., now (1901) aged sixteen, who is attending Vassar; and Grace H., aged eleven, who is a pupil in Mrs. Johnstone's private school. Mrs. Sweet is a member of the Daughters of the American Revolution, in the work of which she has taken a very active part, and her children belong to the Children of the American Revolution, of which Emeline has served as registrar. Like her mother, Mrs. Street is an energetic woman, doing with a will whatever she undertakes, and she has a kind and lovable disposition which endears her to a large circle of friends. Well read on a very large variety of subjects, keen and observing, with the quick perceptive faculties characteristic of the family, and endowed with a ready wit, she is a most interesting conversationalist and a pleasant companion. She is also a fine musician, having taken a course in music at the New England Conservatory of Music.

Daniel Albion Jones graduated at the Yale Academic School in 1884, and studied dentistry three years with his mother before entering the Harvard Dental School, from which he received the degree of D. D. S. in 1889. In 1890 he received the degree of M. D. from Yale Medical School. At Yale he was a member of the Glee Club and for four years was on the base-ball team. He has been successfully engaged in the practice of dentistry for the past fourteen years, and is a prominent member of the State Dental Society, of which he has now been treasurer for ten years. Fraternally Dr. Jones unites with the Masons, the Yale University Club and other organizations. He is welcomed in social circles in the city for his many pleasing qualities, notably his attainments as a musician; he has received fine musical training, and has a number of pupils. Dr. Jones married Miss Emma Beadle, daughter of Joseph Blakeslee Beadle, of Montclair, New Jersey.

CHARLES A. DAVIS, one of the active, prominent and enterprising citizens of the town of Oxford, New Haven county, has, throughout his entire business career, been identified with the agricultural interests of that town. He was born at Quaker Farms, this county, June 13, 1858, a son of Anson R. and Mary A. (Alling) Davis. The father, who followed farming throughout his life, was born in Seymour, this county, and died in Oxford, May 5, 1885, at the age of sixty-seven years. The mother, however, is still living, at the age of eighty-one years. In their family were seven children, as follows: Mary E., wife of W. T. Andrews, of Orange, Conn.; Ellen L., wife of W. F. Osborne, of Ansonia; Laura B., wife of John M. Hubbard, of West Haven; Emma E.; Charles A.; Stella L., wife of F. A. Bailey, of Springfield, Mass.; and Eveline A.

Charles A. Davis was reared in much the usual manner of farmer boys of his day, and early acquired an excellent knowledge of all the duties which fall to the lot of the agriculturist. He assisted in the operation of the home farm until his father's death. Mr. Davis now owns and resides upon a place of 200 acres, known as the old Mallett homestead, which he purchased in the spring of 1899, and is quite extensively engaged in the dairy business and general farming.

On Oct. 20, 1886, Mr. Davis was united in marriage with Mrs. Mary Lum, widow of H. A. Lum, and daughter of M. D. Northrop. To them has been born one child, Ralph E. Politically Mr. Davis is identified with the Republican party, and religiously he is a member of the Episcopal Church. He is one of the most enterprising and successful dairymen and farmers of Oxford, and as a citizen stands deservedly high in the esteem of his fellow men. His strict integrity and honorable dealing in business commend him to the confidence of all; his pleasant manner wins him friends, and he is one of the popular and honored citizens of his community.

CHARLES O'CONNOR, prominent as a contractor and builder in Waterbury, Conn., was born in Ireland, Dec. 25, 1848, one of the two children of Timothy and Mary (Lynch) O'Connor, the other being Johanna, who died when a little girl in the old country. The mother also died in Ireland. On coming to America the father married for his second wife Johanna Kelleher, to which union were born six children, viz. Thomas, who is a laborer in Manchester, Conn.; Daniel, a fireman on a railroad in Pittsburg, Penn.; Michael, assistant pastor of St. Mary's Church in New Britain, Conn.; Timothy, employed in a mill in Manchester, Conn.; Mary and Ellen, unmarried and residing in Manchester. Timothy, the father of this family, was educated for the priesthood in Ireland, but did not follow the profession and came to America and here passed the remainder of his days.

Charles O'Connor was but a child when brought to America. His father located in Providence, R. I., and there our subject attended school until twelve years of age. He then worked on a farm for one dollar per month and board and night schooling for about three years, then returned to Providence, where he began to learn the carpenter's trade under George Brown. He worked for three years for $90, or $30 per year, and had a hard time of it. After finishing his apprenticeship he worked as a journeyman for two years in Providence, and then went to Boston, worked one year then for nine months again in Providence, then one year in Fall River, Mass., again two years in Providence, and next for six months in Savannah, Ga., in which city he shipped for six months as carpenter on board the side wheel steamer "General Barnes," running South. He then returned to the North, and for two and a half years worked for Cheney Bros., in Hartford.

In 1875 Mr. O'Connor began business for himself at contracting and building in Manchester, Conn., where he remained about four and a half years, and then went to Denver and other places in Colorado, following his trade about fourteen months. Upon his return to Connecticut he settled in Waterbury, and has since been one of the most extensive and successful contractors and builders of the city. Among some of the more conspicuous buildings erected by him are the new almshouse at a cost of $100,000, the new high school, $80,000, Notre Dame $35,000, St. Mary's school, St. Mary's convent, St. Patrick's Hall, St. Patrick's rectory, St. Thomas' Church, and many imposing stores and elegant dwellings. During all this time Mr. O'Connor has been so straightforward and upright in his transactions that he has never yet been sued, nor has he had occasion to sue any man.

Mr. O'Connor wedded Joanna O'Reiley, who was born in Ireland, but reared in the United States, and this marriage has been blessed with five children, namely: Minnie, who is a teacher in the Clay street school; Julia, deceased; Alice, who is a teacher in Washington school; Charles S., attending the high school; and Margaret, also in high school. In politics Mr. O'Connor is independent, as, being unusually intelligent, he is fully capable of judging for himself. Fraternally he is a member of the Knights of Columbus and of the Independent Order of Foresters. He and family are devout members of the Church of the Immaculate Conception, to the support of which they are among the most liberal contributors.

GEORGE HENRY FURMAN, superintendent of the straw hat factory at Milford, was born in that town Dec. 14, 1847, son of Henry Furman and grandson of William Furman.

The family is of English origin, and our subject's great-grandfather was one of three brothers—George, James and William—who came to America at an early day. William Furman, our subject's grandfather, may have been born in England. He became a farmer in Morris, Otsego Co., N. Y., where he died. His wife Rhoda (Thorp) was a native of North Haven, Conn., and their family comprised nine children: Henry, our subject's father, is mentioned below; James, a painter by trade, died in Milford; Charles, formerly a farmer, is now a resident of Millington, Mich.; Chauncey (deceased) was a farmer in Michigan; Lucinda married John Soden; Louisa married a Mr. Wanzer, of West Laurens, N. Y.; Mary became the second wife of John Soden; Emeline married Erie Tucker, of West Laurens, N. Y.; and Maria married Harvey Wing, of Morris, New York.

Henry Furman, our subject's father, was born in Morris, N. Y., Jan. 12, 1823, and removed to Milford when twenty-three years old. He married Charlotte Glenney, of Milford, who was born there June 14, 1822, and is a descendant of one of the oldest pioneer families in the State, her ancestors coming originally from England. Her grandfather, William Glenney, fought in the war of the Revolution. The homestead of her grandfather, Abraham Clark, in the western part of the town, now known as the "Wilson Home," though over two hundred years old, is habitable and in a good state of preservation. The Glenneys were sea-faring men for generations. William Glenney, her grandfather, was a sea-captain and died at sea. His sons were all sea captains, some of them in the West India trade. Captain William Glenney, Mrs. Furman's father, married Amy Clark, of Milford, and they had the following children: William, a shoemaker in Milford; Isaac D., employed in the straw hat factory in Milford; Daniel S., who died in New Haven, where he was engaged in mercantile business for many years; Maria, wife of Ralph Augur, of Pittsfield, Mass.; Charlotte, our subject's mother; Sarah, who married George Beard, of St. Louis, Mo.; and Susan, who married Henry Tibballs, of Milford. To Mr. and Mrs. Furman were born four children: George Henry, our subject; Mary F., wife of Samuel N. Oviatt, of Milford; Susan G. (deceased), who married Frank H. Woodruff, of Milford; and Sarah, wife of George W. Smith, of Milford. The father died Jan. 1, 1885, and the mother is still living.

George H. Furman was reared in his native town, acquiring a common-school education, and at the age of sixteen entered the straw hat factory then known as the N. A. Baldwin & Co.'s works. His ability soon won him promotion, and for many years he has held the position of superintendent. On May 21, 1868, he married Elizabeth Mitchell, and two children have blessed the union: (1) Henry M., born March 5, 1872, married Oct. 26, 1892, Jessie S. Smith, who died July 15, 1895. In November, 1898, he married Hannah Woodbury, of Round Pond, Me. He is now a clerk with S. N. Oviatt, of Milford. (2) Charlotte E., born June 24, 1879, is at home. The family are much esteemed socially. They are identified with the Plymouth Congregational Church, and Mr. Furman is also a member of the Order of United Workmen, Golden Hill Lodge, No. 35, A. O. U. W., of Bridgeport, and the Royal Arcanum, Volunteer Council, No. 819, of Milford. In politics he is a Democrat.

Mrs. Elizabeth Furman was born Feb. 19, 1845, in Glasgow, Scotland, daughter of Robert and Ellen (Vance) Mitchell, both natives and lifelong residents of Scotland. The family consisted of four children, of whom Mrs. Furman was the youngest; John died in Southbury, Mass.; Robert is a baker in Dublin, Ireland; and Maggie, who was married in Scotland, died there in 1893.

ALPHONSE GENDRON was born March 28, 1846, in Vergeres, Canada. Antoine Gendron, his father, was a farmer in Canada for a number of years, and married Eliza Savaria, who bore him a family of five boys and five girls, of whom Alphonse is the only one now living.

Alphonse Gendron worked on the Canadian farm until he was seventeen years of age, when he came to Woonsocket, R. I., and secured a position in a woolen mill, where he presently became foreman, remaining there altogether for about five years. Quitting his place in Woonsocket he went to New Bedford, Mass., and for the sake of an out-of-door life, became a carpenter, working at the trade for about three years. For about a year and a half, at New Britain, Conn., he was in the employ of John Pinches. At Meriden he was a grocer for thirteen years, and then, selling his store, he resumed his trade, working for wages two years, and then doing a contracting and building business for three years. At the expiration of this time, Mr. Gendron came to Wallingford, where, since October, 1896, he has been extensively engaged in contracting and building, and is well known as a man of industry and integrity. Among his construction operations are several fine residences, and it was his business push and enterprise that opened up Randolph Avenue, and Orchard Street south of Ward Street, as well as Kelley Street.

Mr. Gendron is a member of Holy Trinity Church in Wallingford. Independent in politics, he seeks to bring the best men and the most desirable measures together. Doing his own thinking, and well informed as to the political issues of the day, he decides for himself as reason and good sense may seem to dictate.

On July 29, 1872, Mr. Gendron was married to Miss Louisa Pager, of Canada, and to them were born the following children: Alicia Marie, born June 15, 1880, in New Britain; Alveric, born Sept. 4, 1886, in Meriden; Cora, born Jan. 1, 1889, in Meriden; and Umalda, born July 8, 1891, in Meriden. Seven other children died when young. Mr. Gendron built a fine home for his family on South Orchard Street in 1898.

CHARLES BROOKSBY SANDERSON, proprietor of the up-to-date meat and provision store at the corner of North Main and Grove Streets, Waterbury, was born in Ephratah, Fulton county, N. Y., April 26, 1855.

John Sanderson, grandfather of Charles B., was an Episcopal clergyman in England. By his marriage he became the father of nine children, all of whom were conspicuous in various professions.

George A. Sanderson, the father of subject, was born at Darfield, England, Oct. 9, 1809, and was the only member of his family to come to America. He had a good college education and was possessed of considerable cash. He first located in Albany, N. Y., where he conducted a hotel five years, and then removed to Ephratah, where he operated a tannery twenty years. He married Margaret Brooksby, who was born in Scotland, Nov. 5, 1825, and was about ten years of age when brought to America by her parents. Her father, James Brooksby, was a nurseryman, and was associated with a Mr. Wilson, who introduced the famous Wilson strawberry to the epicurean world. Of the nine children born to Mr. and Mrs. Sanderson, eight reached, or nearly reached, maturity, as follows: Jane married to D. W. Duesler, of Ephratah; William died when sixteen years old; Aymour R. is a merchant in Providence, R. I.; Charles B. is the subject of this sketch; Wilson A. is a contractor in Ephratah; Luella M. married to Peter I. Saltsman, of Waterbury, Conn.; Carrie W. is the wife of Charles L. Rogers, also of Waterbury; and Henry B. is the proprietor of the Valley View Meat Market, Waterbury.

Charles B. Sanderson attended school in Ephratah until fifteen years of age, and then passed three years with his grandmother in Hudson, N. Y.; he then returned to Ephratah, and remained until twenty-one years old, when he went thence to Woonsocket, R. I., and clerked in a gents' furnishing store. In 1876 he came to Waterbury, Conn., but in 1878 returned to Woonsocket, where in connection with his brother, A. R., he bought the store in which he had formerly clerked. Returning to Waterbury, Mr. Sanderson opened his present meat and provision store in 1881, and he is enjoying a most lucrative trade in his line of business.

On Sept. 29, 1882, Mr. Sanderson was married to Miss Nettie L. Bronson, a daughter of O. H. Bronson, of Waterbury, and this marriage was graced with two children, Harry B. and Nettie B. Mr. Sanderson was bereft of his wife July 27, 1885. On Nov. 23, 1893, he married Miss Rachel Bush Wright, daughter of George A. and Nancy (Bush) Wright, the former a native of Winsted, Conn., where his ancestors have lived for several generations (the family is of English origin, and early settled in Connecticut). Mrs. Nancy (Bush) Wright traces her ancestry through her mother, Cornelia (Depew) Bush (who was born in Fallsburg, Sullivan Co., N. Y.) in a direct line to Gen. Hardenburg, who was the owner of thousands of acres of land, known as the Hardenburg Patent, in Sullivan county, N. Y. This land was granted him by Queen Anne for distinguished service in her army. Gen. Hardenburg took possession of this land in the early part of the eighteenth century, and his descendants still live there.

Mr. Sanderson is thoroughly Republican in his political sentiments, but takes no part in party affairs, and although he keeps his dues paid up as a member of the I. O. O. F., the Red Men, the Good Fellows, the Heptasophs and other fraternities, he does not attend their meetings. In business he is a "hustler," and his interest in this, coupled with his devotion to his family, constitutes the chief joy of his life.

ROBERT McCORMACK, proprietor of a coal and wood yard, Waterbury, is a native of Ireland, born March 15, 1840, in County Longford.

James McCormack, father of our subject, was a farmer in Ireland, where he passed his entire life, dying in 1855; his wife Ann (Cook) also died there, in 1892. They had a family of nine children: John is a farmer in the town of Wolcott, New Haven county; William, deceased, was a farmer in Ireland; Bessie is the widow of Thomas Elliot, a farmer in Ireland; James, deceased, was a farmer in Ireland; Ann is the widow of John Hall, who was a farmer in Ireland; Robert is the subject of this sketch; Jane is the deceased wife of John Gibson, a minister in Minnesota; Samuel is living retired in Waterbury; Mary married William Scott, and they make their home in Ireland.

Robert McCormack received his education in Ireland, at the same time assisting his parents on the farm. At the age of eighteen years he emigrated from his native Erin to the United States, landing at New York, in which city he made his home some eight years, working in shipyards two years, afterward for the American Tract Society some six years, and then came to Waterbury, where he has ever since resided. Here he first, for a short time, worked for the Scovill Mfg. Co., later for Holmes, Booth & Haydens, after which he returned to the Scovill Mfg. Co., for four years, where he worked at Japanning, and then engaged in the Japan business on North Main Street, in which he remained until 1898, in that year embarking in his present coal and wood business.

On October 6, 1881, Mr. McCormack was married to Fannie Bridgeman, who was born in Cheshire, New Haven county, a daughter of Samuel Butler, an old settler in Connecticut. Three children have graced this union: Fannie, Grace and Samuel. Mr. and Mrs. McCormack are members of the M. E. Church; in politics he is a Republican.

ELMER F. CULVER. It is now more than a hundred years since the family to which this well-known citizen belongs became identified with New Haven county, and its various members have won for the name an enviable distinction by their intelligence and worth. This high reputation is in no ways diminished in this generation, and our subject, who is counted among the leading agriculturists of East Haven, displays in a marked degree the admirable characteristics which the name suggests.

Mr. Culver was born on the farm where he now resides, Jan. 12, 1861, and is a descendant of Joshua Culver, one of the first planters of Wallingford. His son, Samuel Culver, the grandfather of our subject, was a native of that town. The father, Isaac Culver, was born in North Haven, Jan. 23, 1820, and continued his residence there until 1854, when he moved to the farm in New Haven where our subject now resides. Here he was engaged in the manufacture of bricks until 1866, and then followed farming and fruit growing, meeting with excellent success in all his undertakings. He was an active member of the Congregational Church, and a very strong Democrat in politics. He died March 26, 1889, honored and respected by all who knew him. On Oct. 28, 1853, he was united in marriage with Miss Sarah A. Forbes, who was born in East Haven, in 1828, and they had two children: Elmer F., our subject; and one who died in infancy.

Elmer F. Culver acquired a good practical education in the Woolsey Graded School and Hillhouse High School of New Haven, and graduated from Yale Business College in 1879, and also graduated from Cogswell School of Phonography in 1882. He obtained a thorough knowledge of every department of farm work, and has never left the parental roof. Since reaching manhood he has successfully engaged in the dairy, fruit growing and nursery business on the old homestead. For the last two years Mr. Culver has been erecting houses on the old farm, and has sold one house and two building lots therefrom. With the trolley cars, city water and gas mains passing the place, this land has rapidly risen in value. At one time Mr. Culver was connected with the firm known as the Demme, Culver & Co., manufacturers of saddlery hardware, but eleven years ago they sold out to the Suffolk Co., of Boston, Mass. Socially he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. On Feb. 6, 1887, Mr. Culver was united in marriage with Miss Alice J. Clark, a daughter of Capt. John Clark, of Milford, Conn., and to them have been born five children, namely: Harold; Albert F.; Roy J., deceased; Olive J.; and Paul Elmer.

GEORGE A. BOUGHTON, retired factory superintendent, and also a retired musician of the volunteer and regular military service during the Civil war, was born Nov. 7, 1835, in Waterbury, New Haven county, and is still a resident of the town.

Jonas Boughton, his grandfather, came from Norwalk. When a young man he was bound out to a blacksmith, and learned the trade, which he followed for a time, later in life changing his vocation to that of a farmer. He married Lydia Hine, from the town of Orange, New Haven county, and the young couple at once settled on a farm where Derby now stands, but later removed to one in the western part of the town of Waterbury. To their marriage were born nine children, two of whom died young, the survivors being Charles, who was a farmer in Middlebury; Jonas, who went to Ohio and there died; Isaac, of whom further mention will be made; George, who was also a farmer in Ohio; John, who followed blacksmithing in Woodbury, Conn.; Lydia, who married Lewis Smith, of Milford; and Louisa, who wedded William Orton, of Wallingford, and later moved West.

Isaac Boughton was born in Waterbury in 1808, and died in 1891. He was reared to farming but for years was employed in the Benedict & Burham button factory, and also for others; however, the failure of his health induced him to resume farming to some extent. He married Caroline Upson, a daughter of Obed and Sibyl (Howe) Upson, of Waterbury, and this union was blessed with five children, of whom George A., the subject of this sketch, is the eldest; Susan A. is the widow of Robert Pryor, Henry I. is foreman on the road at Waterbury, under the selectmen; Isabelle is the wife of H. S. Peck, of Waterbury; Caroline E. is unmarried.

George A. Boughton was educated in the local schools of Waterbury, after which he worked in various factories with his father, commanding good wages when seventeen years of age. He continued thus until the breaking out of the Civil war, when he enlisted, in the 1st Conn. V. I., and went to the front, taking part in the battle of Bull Run. He was next detailed as musician, and at the expiration of his first short term of service enlisted as musician in the 14th United States Regular Infantry, was appointed sergeant of the band, and as such served all through the war, and also after its termination, for about two and a half years on the Pacific coast. Returning home, he served as chief of police for six months, and next became superintendent for Barnard, Son & Co., a position his executive ability retained for him twelve years, since when he has been living in retirement, looking after his real estate.

In politics Mr. Boughton is a Republican, and is now serving his sixth term as selectman, and he has been a member of the board of public works. He is a member of Wadhams Post, G. A. R., and the Knights of Pythias. Religiously he was reared a Congregationalist. Socially, as a genial, charitable gentleman, he is held in the highest esteem wherever known. He is unmarried.

WILLIAM B. HALL was born May 13, 1854, in the same house in which he is now living, in Wallingford, son of Horace Hall, who was born May 25, 1804, in Wallingford, and was a jeweler by trade.

For a number of years Horace Hall conducted a store in that city, and the latter part of his life was spent in farming. A Democrat, he never took a particularly active interest in politics, though he served as tax collector a number of years. He was an Episcopalian in religion. A zealous Freemason, and an energetic man, he was one of those who were instrumental in reviving the Masonic fraternity in Wallingford after it had been abandoned a number of years. On Sept. 29, 1825, he married Miss Euretta Johnson, and on July 2, 1848, he married for his second wife Miss Ann L. Buell. A daughter of Luther Buell, she was born July 31, 1816, and died Jan. 20, 1898. Horace Hall died June 18, 1877. To the first union were born the following children: Horatio G. died March 14, 1874, having been shot by an insane man. Emily J. married Henry M. Jones, of Meriden. Lana O. married O. B. Warner, of Meriden. Mary U. married George H. Newton, and died Aug. 17, 1877. Abbey E. married W. W. Pinks, of New Britain. Two children died in infancy. To the second marriage was born one child, William B., whose career forms the subject of this writing.

Horatio Gates Hall, the grandfather of William B., was born Jan. 17, 1778, in Wallingford, and was married to Miss Polly Byington, of Branford, in 1798. Mrs. Hall died April 12, 1852. Mr. Hall on Oct. 30, 1819. Their children were: Augustus, Lyman, Horace, Mary, Josiah H. and Abigail.

Caleb Hall, father of Horatio G., was born Aug. 29, 1731, and died Sept. 21, 1783. He married Prudence Holt, and was the father of the following children: Caleb, Jr., Augustus, Abigail, Eunice, Benjamin H., Damaris, Horatio G. and George.

Caleb Hall, Sr., the father of Caleb Hall, Jr., was born Sept. 14, 1697, and died July 27, 1749. He married Damaris Atwater, and their children were: Damaris, Stephen, Timothy, Ruth, Caleb, Jeremiah and Lydia.

John Hall, father of Caleb, Sr., was born Dec. 23, 1670, and died April 29, 1730. He married Mary Lyman, and their children were: John, Samuel, Caleb, Eunice, Nancy, Benjamin, Sarah, Eliakim and Elihu.

Samuel Hall, father of John, was born May 21, 1648, and died March 5, 1725. He married Hannah Walker, and was the father of the following children: John, Hannah, Sarah, Samuel, Theophilus and Elizabeth. John Hall, his father, was the emigrant ancestor of the family.

William B. Hall was born in Wallingford, and grew up in his native village, securing his education from the public schools, and at the Yale Business College, New Haven. Leaving school at the age of seventeen, he clerked for Philip J. Talcott, in his dry-goods store, for a year or more, and was then a clerk in the postoffice for several years. As assistant postmaster, under L. M. Hubbard, he had an extensive experience in the administration of postal affairs, which was put to good account when he was appointed postmaster under the first administration of Grover Cleveland. Mr. Hall was postmaster five years, and then went to Northampton, Mass., where he was engaged for a time as a representative of the Quimpiac Fertilizer Co. Coming back to Wallingford, he secured a position with the R. Wallace & Sons Manufacturing Co., where he was bookkeeper for five years, in 1895 becoming their purchasing agent, which position he is holding at the present time.

William B. Hall is a Democrat, and has served on the Democratic town committee for several years, and was chairman for one year. He has served as borough and town treasurer some three years. A member of the Masonic fraternity, he has taken much interest in the workings of that society, and has been master of Compass Lodge, No. 9, at Wallingford, for five years, holding that office at present; he is also one of the trustees of the lodge. As a member of the board of managers of the Masonic home since its establishment, in 1894, he has rendered that institution vast service. In religion he is associated with St. Paul's Episcopal Church.

Mr. Hall was married, Sept. 17, 1878, to Miss Arabella Bates, who was born in New Haven, a daughter of William Bates. On July 29, 1896, Mr. Hall married for his second wife Miss Ella M. Lacore, of Northampton, Mass., daughter of Solomon Lacore. To the first marriage came three children: Annie Bates, born June 25, 1879; Clara Elizabeth, born Sept. 27, 1882; and Horace W., born April 29, 1885. Mina Ella, born July 8, 1897, is the only child of the second marriage.

WILLIAM L. WARD, prominent in the business circles of Seymour, was born in the town of Naugatuck, New Haven county, Oct. 31, 1858, and comes of good old English ancestry.

The Arms of the Wards, Gorleston, County of Suffolk, England, granted in 1593, were: Az., a cross between four eagles, displayed Ar. Crest: On a mount vert a hind couchant, Ar. Andrew Ward, fifth son of Richard Ward, of Gorleston, County of Suffolk, England, came to America about 1632. He was appointed by the General Court of Massachusetts, with Roger Ludlow and six others, to govern the Colony of Connecticut for one year. He was one of the first judges in the first legislative body in Connecticut, which met at Hartford April 26, 1636, soon after removing to New Haven, and for several years was a member of the General Court. He afterward settled in Fairfield, and was one of the most influential men of that place. He died in 1663, Esther Ward, his widow, in 1665. Their children were: Edmund lived in Westchester, N. Y.; William (Dr.), born 1645, was killed in the Narragansett war; Mary married John Burr, of Fairfield; Andrew, born in 1647, died in Killingworth in 1691; Samuel, born in 1649, died before 1693; Abigail; Anna married Caleb Nichols; John; Sarah married Nathaniel Burr.

Andrew Ward (2), son of Andrew and Esther Ward, settled in Killingworth in 1668. He married Trial Meigs, daughter of John Meigs, of Guilford, and their children were: Andrew (3), born in 1666 (died in August, 1756); John, March 16, 1671; Abigail, Sept. 15, 1672; Sarah, Nov. 15, 1674; Peter, Oct. 14, 1676; William, Oct. 18, 1678 (died Dec. 14, 1769); Samuel Sept. 24, 1680 (died in 1681); Esther, May 2, 1684 (died the next month); and Mary Ann (the youngest in the family), who was an ancestor of Henry Ward Beecher.

William Ward, son of Andrew (2) and Trial Ward, married Lettis, daughter of John Beach, of Wallingford, and resided in Wallingford. Their children were: Meacock, born July 17, 1702; William, Jan. 7, 1705; Mary (date unknown); Amy, 1707; Ambrose, March 6, 1709; Lettis, July 7, 1711; John, 1714; Royal, June 20, 1716; Archibald, July 5, 1718; Zenas, Sept. 17, 1720 (settled in Woodbury); Titus, April 27, 1723.

John Ward, son of William and Lettis Ward, married Elizabeth Abernathy May 11, 1736. He was a druggist, and lived in Wallingford. Their children were: Thilus, born April 24, 1737, enlisted Nov. 14, 1781, in Capt. Vial's Company of Guards, stationed at Guilford for the defense of the sea coast; Abel, born July 1, 1740, lived in Woodbridge, and died Nov. 20, 1759; Titus was born March 18, 1742; Martha was born July 17, 1746; John, born May 24, 1748, died in infancy; and John (2) was born Nov. 19, 1751.

Titus Ward, son of John and Elizabeth Ward, married Amy Smith Jan. 7, 1763. He died near New York City, and his property was on a vessel which was captured by the British in the Revolutionary war. His children were: Silva, born Aug. 8, 1764, married Isaac Plumb, of Milford; Abel was born May 24, 1766; Titus, born March 30, 1768, married Sarah Smith, of Milford; Betsey, born March 22, 1770, married Samuel Beach, of Milford; Nancy was born June 10, 1773; John, born May 13, 1774, died young; Sarah, born May 26, 1776, married Elijah Prindle; William, born Jan. 5, 1780, died young; and Statica, born July 16, 1782, married Billions Wright.

Abel Ward, son of Titus and Amy Ward, married Rachel Hotchkiss, of Woodbridge, in what is now Bethany. She died in 1787, and for his second wife he married Anna Wheeler. He had two children: Richard, born Sept. 21, 1787, died in Naugatuck, March 2, 1851; Rachel, born Jan. 23, 1792, married Jervis Sommers, and two of their children, Jervis and Mary, are now living in Southford.

Richard Ward, son of Abel and Rachel Ward, married Dec. 15, 1811, Roxanna, daughter of Culpepper Hoadly (a soldier of the Revolution) and his wife Molly Lewis, of Salem Bridge (now Naugatuck). Mrs. Ward died Feb. 6, 1805. Their children were: Lewis, born Sept. 27, 1812; Lawren, born Dec. 27, 1814; Maria, born Feb. 11, 1819, who married Ralph Smith, of Bridgeport; Mary, born Feb. 17, 1823, who married Ganan Potter, and died Aug. 2, 1842; and William, born March 7, 1825, who married Elizabeth A. Hine, and resided in Naugatuck.

Lewis Ward, son of Richard and Roxanna Ward, was married April 9, 1835, to Mary Ann Curtis, of Huntington, who was born April 15, 1812, and died Dec. 12, 1895, aged eighty-three years and seven months. Their son, James B., was born Oct. 8, 1836, in Naugatuck, and was the father of the subject proper of this sketch.

James B. Ward was a carpenter by trade. He married Jane E. Hotchkiss, a daughter of Eber and Thurza Hotchkiss, of Bethany, and had two children, both sons: William L., our subject; and Elmer J., born Feb. 21, 1863, who is with the G. I. R. Glove Co., at Naugatuck. The father of these died in December, 1862, when a young man. He was a Republican in politics. He attended the Congregational Church.

William L. Ward, whose name introduces this sketch, received his education at the winter schools of Naugatuck, and early in life commenced earning a livelihood, as he was but four years old when his father died. His first employment was with the G. I. R. Glove Co., with which he remained twelve years; then for nine years he was in the employ of F. W. Tolles, furniture dealer and undertaker, also in Naugatuck. On Aug. 1, 1898, he removed to Seymour and bought out E. F. Bassett, who had been in the furniture and undertaking business there some forty-two years. Mr. Ward was the prime mover in the establishment of the Valley National Bank, of Seymour, which was organized June 14, 1900, and of which he has since been president. Our subject is now serving as treasurer of the town of Seymour.

On July 10, 1868, William L. Ward was united in marriage with Lulu L. Tolles, daughter of Isaac B. and Maria W. Tolles, the former of whom was born in Bethany, the latter in Middlebury, Conn. Mr. and Mrs. Ward attend the services of the Congregational Church. Socially he is a member of the F. & A. M., belonging to Morning Star Lodge, No. 47, Allerton Chapter, of Naugatuck, and the New Haven Commandery. He is also affiliated with the I. O. O. F., Mechanics Lodge, Seymour. Mr. Ward's political support is given to the Republican party.

JOHN J. McLARNEY. Among the self-made business men whose intelligence and enterprise have helped to develop the thriving little city of Ansonia, the subject of this sketch holds a prominent place, and the following brief account of his career will be of interest. He was born in that city, May 17, 1851, and is descended in both paternal and maternal lines from the Irish race which has furnished so many valued citizens to America.

John McLarney, his grandfather, passed his life in Ireland as a farmer, dying at the age of eighty-seven years, and his wife, Catherine Cook, also a native of Ireland, attained the age of ninety-six years. In religion they were devout Catholics, and their descendants adhere to the same faith. They had a large family of children, of whom but few are now living.

Patrick McLarney, our subject's father, was born and reared in Acklemore Parish, County Cavan, Ireland, and learned the shoemaker's trade in his youth. On coming to America he entered the employ of Mr. McWilliams, a railroad contractor for whom he made shoes and harness, and in 1848 he went to Ansonia to work for Harvey Reamer, for whom he made the first pair of "pegged" boots ever finished in the town. Later he was employed by Wallace & Sons, and the A. B. C. Co., but for a few years before his death, which occurred at the age of seventy-six, he lived in retirement. His wife, Mary McIntyre, also lived to the age of seventy-six, was a native of Scotland, and one of the two daughters of Thomas McIntyre, a farmer, who died aged seventy-six. Her mother, whose maiden name was Alice Gillis, died aged seventy-one. Our subject was one of a family of seven children and is the oldest of the three now living; Hugh resides in New Haven, and James in Ansonia.

The early years of John J. McLarney were spent within sight of Ansonia, and his education was secured in the public schools of that city. Together with his brothers he learned the trade of clock-maker, which he followed for a number of years, and he then learned the horseshoers' trade and worked for a time as a journeyman in that business. Later he joined in the firm of Terry & McLarney, and engaged in the manufacture of carts and business wagons at the corner of Canal and Bridge streets, making a specialty of heavy business wagons. On retiring from this business in 1896, our subject spent some time in repairing his houses, of which he owns several, and then took a position as a journeyman horseshoer. The death of his brother, Thomas F., on May 22, 1898, led to his taking charge of the undertaking establishment left by the deceased, and in this venture he has met with success, his knowledge of the business having been first gained while working as a journeyman. He graduated from the Massachusetts College of Embalming in September, 1899. He also conducts a livery stable at No. 30 Green Street, keeping a number of horses and a fine line of hacks, coaches and carriages ready for any call. In politics he is a Democrat, and he served as constable and grand juror when the town included Derby. He is an active member of the Young Men's Temperance Association, having served as its vice-president, treasurer and secretary, and he is also connected with the Catholic Legion, in which he is now trustee, the Mutual Reserve of New York City, an insurance association, and the Hartford Life Insurance Co., of Hartford, and the Royal Arcanum.

On April 25, 1888, he married Miss Ellen E. Coleman, and four children have blessed this union, of whom two are living: John J. and Alice E. Mrs. McLarney is a native of Ansonia, and a daughter of James and Bridget (Mulligan) Coleman. Her father, now deceased, was a well known agriculturist and prominent citizen, whose influence was recognized in church and township affairs. Mrs. McLarney was educated in the public schools of Derby, and is a graduate of the Derby High School. On leaving the high school she began teaching, continuing fourteen years, and in this work she was very successful; for three years previous to her marriage she was principal of the Factory street school in Ansonia. Both Mr. and Mrs. McLarney are highly esteemed socially, and are leading members of the Catholic Church of Ansonia.

EDWARD WALTER LEETE. The Leete family in Connecticut was established here more than two hundred and fifty years ago by Gov. Leete, an old-time worthy and an important figure in early Colonial affairs, who came to America with the Henry Whitfield expedition.

Gov. William Leete was born in 1612 in Doddington, England. Thomas Leete, his grandfather, married Maria Slade, and their son John Leete married Ann Shute; William Leete, who afterward played such a prominent part in the Colonies, was their son. William Leete was bred a lawyer, and was clerk of the Bishops' Court at Cambridge, where the oppression of the Puritans turned him to a study of their tenets and finally led him to the adoption of their faith. He arrived in Connecticut July 10, 1639, and he was one of six selected to purchase from the Indians the land wanted for a new settlement. A tract of 250 acres, three miles from Guilford, now known as Leete's Island, came to him. He took a leading part in the development of the rising Colony and was one of its most trusted members. In 1658 he was made deputy governor of New Haven Colony, and in 1661 was made governor, holding this office until its union with the Colony of Connecticut. He was deputy governor of Connecticut from 1666 to 1676, when he was chosen governor, and served in that capacity until his death, in 1683, in Hartford. Gov. Leete was married in England, in 1638, to Anna Paine, who died Sept. 1, 1668. On April 7, 1670, he married Mrs. Sarah Rutherford, who died Feb. 10, 1673. His third wife, Mary, had also been married twice before, to Gov. Francis Newman and Rev. Nicholas Street, respectively. She died in 1683. Gov. Leete was the father of nine children.

John Leete, eldest son of the Governor, was born in 1639, in Guilford, and is said to have been the first white child born in that town. In 1670 he married Mary, daughter of William and Joanna (Sheafe) Chittenden. To this union were born eight children. Mrs. Leete was born in 1647, and died March 9, 1712. John Leete died Nov. 25, 1692.

Pelatiah Leete, fifth child of John, was born March 26, 1681, and on July 1, 1705, married Abigail, daughter of Abraham and Elizabeth (Bartlett) Fowler. They became the parents of five children. Mrs. Leete died Oct. 22, 1769. Soon after their marriage they moved to Leete's Island, which afterward became a flourishing settlement. Some of the land allotted to Gov. Leete after the purchase of the property from the Indians has never been held by any but those of the family name. On these ancestral acres seven generations of Leetes have resided, engaged as farmers. Deacon Pelatiah Leete was a successful farmer, and did "not consider a hundred bushels of shelled corn to the acre more than an average yield." He had a hundred cattle. In 1705 he erected a large house, on a commanding spot overlooking the Sound, in which he lived until his death, Oct. 13, 1768. This house sheltered several generations of the family. Pelatiah Leete was a deacon in the Fourth Church of Guilford. He served as a representative of the town in the General Court.

Deacon Daniel Leete, eldest son of Deacon Pelatiah, was born Oct. 14, 1709, was a farmer and stock raiser, and died on his farm Oct. 1, 1772. He was a deacon in the Fourth Church of Guilford. On June 14, 1738, he married Rhoda Stone, who was born Nov. 2, 1719, daughter of Caleb and Sarah (Meigs) Stone, of Guilford, and died Dec. 23, 1769. Both Mr. and Mrs. Leete are buried in the old cemetery on Guilford Green. They had five children. Daniel Leete's home stood where Calvin M. Leete's house now stands, and was noted during the Revolution.

Deacon Ambrose Leete, the third son of Deacon Daniel, was born Jan. 19, 1748. He was a deacon in the Fourth Church, to which office he was chosen in 1780, and also held the same office in the First Church, having been chosen in 1801. On Nov. 10, 1773, he married Miranda, a daughter of William and Rachel (White) Chittenden, and they became the parents of five children. Ambrose Leete died Feb. 14, 1809. His widow survived until Sept. 10, 1838. Mr. and Mrs. Leete were buried in the then new cemetery at Leete's Island.

Miner Leete, the third child of Ambrose, was born June 30, 1779, on the farm where he spent his life, dying at the early age of forty-seven years, Nov. 7, 1826. On Nov. 17, 1807, he married Lucinda Norton, who was born Nov. 18, 1780, in Guilford, a daughter of Col. Rufus and Hannah (Cook) Norton. She died Aug. 28, 1848, and was buried in the family cemetery. They had five children: (1) Edward Lorenzo is mentioned below. (2) Rufus Norton was the second of the family. (3) Theodore Adgate, who died April 28, 1886, graduated from Yale College and the Theological Department. He married Mary C. White, of Longmeadow, Mass., and had three children, Ella Louise, Rev. William White and Theodore Woolsey. (4) Calvin Miner married Lucy Maria Leete. (5) Louisa Maria died, unmarried, July 29, 1855.

Edward Lorenzo Leete was born June 28, 1810, at Leete's Island, in the town of Guilford. He attended the district school but little, being largely self-educated, and was an unusually well-informed man. For more than thirty years he was accustomed to teach school during the winter season, working his farm during the summer. Always deeply interested in educational matters, and public-spirited in every way, he was regarded in his time as one of the most useful citizens of the town, awake to all matters of local importance. In public life he was active and conspicuous, both for his unswerving honor and conspicuous ability. In 1854 he represented the town in the State Legislature, to which he was again elected in 1865. In politics he was originally a Whig, later becoming a Republican. In church matters Mr. Leete was a leader, and on Nov. 14, 1852, was elected a deacon of the First Congregational Church, serving in that capacity for almost thirty-two years. Mr. Leete built a substantial house on the old Leete homestead, where he made many other improvements. There he spent most of his life, dying May 3, 1884, and was buried in Leete's Island cemetery. He was especially interested in the preparation of a genealogy of the Leete family, which has been published since his death, and is now in the libraries of the state.

Edward Lorenzo Leete was married, in North Guilford, April 20, 1833, to Sylvia Fowler, daughter of Daniel and Lucy (Chittenden) Fowler, and they had two children: Edward Walter, mentioned below; and Lucy Louisa. The latter married Dwight Rogers, of Cornwall, Conn., and became the mother of five children: Dwight Leete, Nellie Lucretia, Harriet Fowler, Miner Pratt and Sylvia Abbie. Mrs. Sylvia Leete died on the home farm Nov. 13, 1895, and was buried in Leete's Island cemetery. She was a member of the Congregational Church. Mr. Leete was trustee for a number of years of the Guilford Institute.

Edward Walter Leete was born on the home place May 28, 1834, and attended the district school, a private school in Windsor, Conn., and the Normal School at New Britain. For six years he taught school during the winter season in Guilford. As he was the only son the care of the farm and the support of the aged parents naturally fell to him. Mr. Leete is engaged in general farming and stock raising.

On Oct. 10, 1861, our subject married Harriet Rogers, of Cornwall, a daughter of Daniel Leete and Harriet (Pratt) Rogers, and a granddaughter of Noah and Lydia (Cornwall) Rogers and of Miner Pratt. They are the parents of five children: (1) Abbie Louisa, born Oct. 20, 1862, was married June 10, 1896, becoming the second wife of Edward E. Griswold, of Clapboard Hill, Guilford. They have two children—Harriet Rogers, born Jan. 15, 1899, and John Leete, born April 30, 1901. (2) Edward Rogers, born Dec. 17, 1864, was educated in the district school, Guilford Institute and Yale Business College, taught school, and was connected with the Deaf and Dumb Asylum at Hartford. He died Dec. 6, 1891, and was buried in the Leete's Island cemetery. (3) William Smith, born Oct. 22, 1867, married Angeline Brewer, daughter of Alvah

G. and H. Alice (Palmer) Brewer, of Guilford, and is living on the family homestead. (4) Sarah Talcott, born Oct. 25, 1871, died Oct. 25, 1891, and was buried in Leete's Island cemetery. She was a graduate of the Guilford Institute. (5) Walter, born July 15, 1874, died in infancy.

Mr. Leete was elected deacon of the First Congregational Church in Guilford, Nov. 25, 1883, and is still acting in that capacity. From his youth he has been connected in different capacities with the Sunday-school of that church. In politics he is a Republican. For twelve years or more he has been a member of the school board, and he has also held the offices of assessor, tax collector and justice of the peace. In 1884 he was elected trustee of the Guilford Institute. He is a trustee of the Guilford Savings Bank, and a stockholder and director of the National Bank, which he helped to organize. Mr. Leete, as conservator, appraiser, or administrator, has been connected with numerous estates.

ELISAPH H. BUTLER, president of the Guilford Savings Bank, and dealer in general hardware, stoves, tinware, etc., Guilford, is a native of Connecticut, born June 27, 1848, in Norfolk, Litchfield county.

Mr. Butler is a descendant of one of the old settlers of Connecticut. Elisaph Butler, his grandfather, was born in North Branford (known as Northford), where he followed farming pursuits and was a land owner of prominence. From there he moved to Norfolk, Litchfield county, where he passed the rest of his days.

Levi Butler, father of Elisaph H., was born in 1820, in Northford, town of Branford, moved with his father to Norfolk, and there followed farming until 1854, in which year he moved with his family to Guilford, and bought a farm near Leete Island, where he continued to live up to his death, in 1873. In politics he was a Whig, later a Republican, and he was a member of the Advent Church. Levi Butler married (first) Clarissa Roberts, of Colebrook, Conn. His second marriage was to Clarinda E. Sanford, who was born in Sandisfield, Berkshire Co., Mass., daughter of Lyman Sanford, and six children were born to them: Elisaph H., our subject; Frederick, a farmer of Leete Island, Guilford, Conn.; Clara, wife of Robert Bartholomew, of Branford; Fanny, who died in young womanhood; Mary, deceased; and Anna, deceased. The mother of these children is yet living, and in the enjoyment of excellent health.

Elisaph H. Butler was a six-year-old lad when he came to Guilford, and here, on Leete Island, he attended the district school, and grew up on the home farm, remaining there until he was twenty years old, at which time he removed to Meriden. In that city he worked in a screw factory for a short time, and then, returning to Guilford, secured a position in Griswold & Co.'s grocery store, where he remained some eighteen months. In 1870 he and S. Robinson bought out Chester Beckley's hardware store, and conducted the same under the name of S. Robinson & Co. In 1888 Mr. Butler bought out the interest of Mr. Robinson, and has since conducted the business alone, now having one of the most complete stores in the county. Mr. Butler is president of the Guilford Savings Bank, also a director thereof, and is one of the stockholders in, and directors of, the First National Bank of Guilford. In politics he is a Republican, and has filled the office of Burgess of Guilford several terms, serving also as justice of the peace. Socially he is a member of the F & A. M., affiliating with St. Alban's Lodge, No. 38, and with the Eastern Star, of which he is past patron, and of which his wife is a member. He belongs to Nennecatuck Lodge, No. 62, I. O. O. F., in which he is a member of the board of trustees, a past grand, and has been treasurer since July, 1884; he was also secretary one term. He has served as delegate to the Grand Lodge of the State. He and his wife are both charter members of the Daughters of Rebekah, and he is united with Hollis Encampment, No. 34. Mr. Butler is a member of the N. E. O. P., of Guilford, of which he has been chairman of the board of trustees since its organization; and was identified with the Woodmen of the World.

On Oct. 20, 1870, in Guilford, Conn., Elisaph H. Butler married Fanny E. Robinson, and nine children have come to them: (1) William S., born July 25, 1871, is head salesman in his father's store; he married Ida May Hill, daughter of Capt. William P. Hill. (2) Frank died in infancy. (3) Burton L. died at the age of four years. (4) Jennie C., born Sept. 19, 1880, is the wife of Louis C. Coulter, of Guilford. (5) Harriet M. ("Hattie") was born July 14, 1882. (6) Robert was born Aug. 31, 1885. (7) Arthur and (8) Ernest, twins, died young. (9) Paul Levi was born May 29, 1896.

THE ROBINSON FAMILY, of whom Mrs. Elisaph H. Butler is a member, were old settlers of Guilford, and (1) Thomas Robinson, the first of the name in New England, located first in Hartford, Connecticut. In 1661 he moved to Guilford, where he passed the remainder of his days, dying in 1680. His wife Mary died in Guilford in 1668, and children as follows were born to them: (1) Thomas, born 1650, married Sarah Crittenden, and died July 2, 1712; (2) Ann, born 1652, married Joseph Dudley; (3) Mary, born 1654, married John Latimer; (4) Saint, born 1656, married B. Latimer; (5) Jonathan, born 1659, died April, 1684; (6) David, sketch of whom follows; (7) Elizabeth, born 1662, married Benjamin Gould, and died September 30, 1745.

(II) David Robinson, born in Hartford in 1660, settled in Durham, Middlesex Co., Conn., and died June 1, 1747. He married Abigail Kirby, daughter of John Kirby, of Middletown; she died in 1694. Mary, second wife of David Robinson, was born 1603, died Oct. 17, 1746. Mr. Robinson's children: (1) Abigail, born April 3, 1690, died July 6, 1775, married Joseph Coe; (2) Ann, born June 6, 1692; (3) David, sketch of whom follows; (4) Thomas, born 1698, died March 4, 1774; (5) Ebenezer, born 1701, died Oct. 10, 1789; (6) Ruth, born 1703; (7) Mary married Timothy Parsons; (8) Hannah married Benjamin Miller.

(III) David Robinson, born in Durham, Conn., in 1694, and died there Feb. 9, 1780, married Jan. 26, 1720, Rebecca Miller, born 1697, died Sept. 18, 1786. Children: (1) Ann, born Dec. 5, 1720, and died in 1817, married Gideon Canfield; (2) David, born March 4, 1722, died Oct. 15, 1807; (3) John, born June 22, 1723; (4) Dan, born May 2, 1725, and died 1810, married Abigail Curtis; (5) Rebecca, born Dec. 5, 1726, and died Nov. 5, 1815, married David Parson; (6) Timothy, born April 29, 1728, and died April 1, 1805, married Catharine Ross; (7) Phinnis, born July 24, 1729, died July 31, 1784, married Susannah Fenn; (8) James, born June 10, 1731, and died April 3, 1806, married Amy Sellman; (9) Joel, born March 31, 1733, died 1750; (10) Mary, born Dec. 7, 1734, married Reynold M. Morse; (11) Noah, born May 17, 1736, and died Aug. 12, 1800, married Hannah Parmelee; (12) Abigail, born March 9, 1738, married James Hinman; (13) Asher, sketch of whom follows.

(IV) Asher Robinson, born May 4, 1740, in Durham, Conn., died there in 1808. He married (first) June 11, 1761, Mary Butcher, and for his second wife wedded a Miss Hull. His children: (1) Rachel, born April 16, 1762, married Seth Strong, and died Feb. 10, 1850; (2) Stephen, sketch of whom follows; (3) Asher, born Nov. 21, 1765, died young; (4) Seth, born June 23, 1768; (5) Samuel, born July 29, 1770; (6) Mary; (7) Sally married John White; (8) Betsey married Henry Canfield; (9) Asher married Emily Parmelee.

(V) Stephen Robinson, born in Durham, Conn., Jan. 14, 1764, died there July 2, 1825. He married Mary Tibbatt, who died in August, 1825. Children: (1) Dennis, sketch of whom follows; (2) Hannah, born 1793; (3) David; (4) Noah, born February, 1798, married Fanny Willard; (5) Phebe, born July 17, 1800, married B. (VI) Dennis Robinson, born in 1791, moved to Guilford, and there passed the rest of his days, dying June 8, 1847. He married, May 3, 1815, Fanny Stone, born Aug. 5, 1795, and died April 21, 1824. For his second wife he wedded May 4, 1825, Elizabeth Wilkinson, born May 5, 1796, died Feb. 29, 1864. His children: (1) Jane Maria, born July 2, 1810, married Selden Benton; (2) Mary Ann, born Sept. 15, 1810, died July 31, 1820; (3) Stephen, sketch of whom follows; (4) George Baldwin married Rosalind D. Field, and died Dec. 5, 1861; (5) John, born October, 1828, died Oct. 18, 1829; (6) John Wilkinson, born Sept. 18, 1830; (7) Fanny, born January, 1833, died February, 1833; (8) Franklin Browning, born Feb. 18, 1837, died Nov. 16, 1853.

(VII) Stephen Robinson, father of Mrs. Elisaph H. Butler, was born in Guilford March 23, 1824, and passed his entire life there conducting a general hardware store until 1888, after which he carried on a truck farm. He married Ann Bartlett, daughter of Timothy Bartlett, and of the children born to them three are living as follows: Fanny E., wife of E. H. Butler; Mary, wife of George W. Dudley; and Ida, wife of Dwight W. Potter, all of Guilford.

CHARLES D. WARNER, superintendent of the Ansonia Telephone Co., of Ansonia, is a leading representative of the business interests of that locality. His thoroughly American spirit, his sound judgment and untiring energy have enabled him to carry forward successfully a number of important enterprises and the record of his life furnishes a useful lesson.

Mr. Warner was born March 24, 1853, at Chicopee Falls, Mass., and is descended from good New England ancestry. His great-grandfather, Eli Warner, was a resident of West Suffield, Conn. Eli Warner (2), our subject's grandfather, was born in West Suffield, and passed his life there, engaged in farming. His wife, Lydia (Taylor), was also a native of Suffield, and their two sons settled upon the old homestead, dividing it into two separate farms. Both the grandparents were highly respected in the community for their estimable lives.

Henry F. Warner, our subject's father, was born in West Suffield, and received a common-school education. He died at the homestead March 25, 1900, at the age of seventy-four years. He married Mary L. Munger, who died aged sixty-nine years, was a native of Chicopee Falls, and a daughter of Hiram Munger, a well-known Adventist preacher there. Her mother, whose maiden name was Lucinda Hancock, was a direct descendant of a brother of Gov. John Hancock, of Massachusetts. Mrs. Munger died at the age of eighty years, leaving three children: Marv L., Mrs. Warner; Alfred S., a resident of Ozone Park, L. I.; and Lucy, wife of J. H. Hendrick, of Springfield, Mass. Our subject is the eldest of a family of three living children. One child died at an early age. Eugene H. has taken up farming at the old homestead. Jessie F. married T. C. Baum, of Philadelphia.

Charles D. Warner was educated in the common schools of Suffield, and when sixteen years of age began to learn the trade of watchmaker and jeweler. About 1872 he engaged in business in Windsor, and in 1878 he removed to Ansonia, purchasing from Charles Tucker a store in Main Street, opposite the First National Bank. In 1887 he sold the business to James B. Keene and joined in the organization of a company for the manufacture of standard electrical clocks, for which he owned the patents. He became manager of the enterprise, and later was made treasurer, the business being carried on first in New Haven and then in Waterbury. On Dec. 31, 1895, he retired from the company and started in business in Ansonia as an electrical engineer, and soon afterward, as a matter of personal convenience, he organized a small telephone exchange, with less than fifty subscribers. This proved a great success, and later he founded the Ansonia Telephone Co. with Dana Bartholomew, the stock being placed at $15,000, which was increased from time to time, to $25,000. Early in 1901 great pressure was brought on certain stockholders (after the death of Dana Bartholomew) to sell out to the Bell Telephone interests, and this was finally accomplished, in April, 1901. They had lines to Seymour, Derby and Shelton, and connected subscribers with points in Woodbury and surrounding towns, doing a profitable business, three operators being required to manipulate the "switch board." Mr. Warner owns a number of electrical patents, five being on clocks and clock systems, known as the "Warner System," and the latter have increased in value as time has proved their efficiency. They were first tested in Ansonia in 1884, and then on the Consolidated Railroad, where they still remain in service, after fifteen years. Politically Mr. Warner is independent and he has served one term as burgess of the borough. He belongs to the New England Order of Protection, and he and his family are active workers in the Congregational Church of Ansonia, in which he has held various offices, including membership on the Society's committee and the Prudential committee. He also served some time as superintendent of the Sunday-school and president of the Christian Endeavor Society.

In 1875 Mr. Warner married Miss Clara F. Hodge, who was born in Suffield in 1856, daughter of Buel D. Hodge, a prominent farmer there, and for many years a leading member of the Congregational Church of that locality. He and his wife, Mariette (Cartter), had four children: Clara F.; Emma E., who married F. L. Ashley, of Windsor Locks; Nellie, who married E. S. Cook, of Hartford; Lucy B., wife of Lawrence Hens, of Ansonia. Mr. and Mrs. Warner have two children: (1) Albert F., born in 1876, was educated in the public schools of Ansonia and the Maine State College, at Orono, Maine, and completed a special course in navigation in the Nautical School in New York City. He is now in the employ of the Southern New England Telephone Co., and for some time previous was doing valuable work for the Ansonia Telephone Co., being an expert in electrical science. (2) Edith Mariette was born in Ansonia Feb. 25, 1885, and is now taking a course in the High School in Ansonia.

STEPHEN M. PECK, a leading citizen of Woodbridge, New Haven county, has demonstrated the true meaning of the word success as the full accomplishment of an honorable purpose. Energy, close application, perseverance and good management—these are the elements which have entered into his business career and crowned his efforts with prosperity.

Mr. Peck is a representative of quite an old and prominent family of Woodbridge, of which town his paternal grandparents, Silas and Electa (Carrington) Peck, were both natives. There the former owned seventy acres of land and successfully engaged in farming. He lived to a ripe old age. He was a man highly esteemed by all who knew him, and was a Whig in politics, though not an active worker in party affairs. His children, all now deceased, were as follows: Ansel, a cooper by trade, lived for many years in Vermont, and died in Bethany, Conn.; Electa married Gilbert Thomas, of Woodbridge, and died shortly after her marriage; Amyra married Simeon Sperry, and died in Woodbridge; Lauren, a shoemaker by trade, lived in Bethany, Conn., New York and Vermont, and died in New York; Lewis, father of our subject, was next in order of birth; Garry was a farmer of Woodbridge; Mary was the second wife of Gilbert Thomas, of Woodbridge; Seabury was a carpenter and joiner of Westville, Conn.; Amanda was the wife of James Perkins, of Woodbridge; Eunice was the wife of Eli O. Clark, of Woodbridge; and Namon was a farmer of Seymour.

Lewis Peck, father of our subject, was born in Woodbridge, June 6, 1796, and died at the age of sixty-one years. He grew to manhood in his native town, and had but limited educational advantages. He became owner of the old homestead of seventy acres in the northeastern part of Woodbridge, and also owned other land to the extent of seventy acres. He was an active worker in the Whig party, was a school officer, road surveyor, and filled other official positions. In Woodbridge he married Elizabeth Ann Beecher, a native of that town, daughter of Ephraim and Sarah (Dorrance) Beecher, and granddaughter of Reuben and Sarah Beecher. Her father and grandfather were also born in Woodbridge, and there the former died at the age of eighty-six years. His children were: Pattie, wife of Moses Gilbert, of Southington, Conn.; Bela, who died unmarried in Woodbridge; Reuben Minot, who was born May 31, 1791, wedded Mary Baldwin, and died April 4, 1874; Melinda, wife of Munson Sperry, of Woodbridge; Deman, who married Eunice Smith, and followed farming in Milton, Conn.; David, who died at the age of twenty-one years; Riley, who died when a young man; Sally, wife of Novee Bradley, who lived in different places in Connecticut, but was born in Woodbridge, and is buried there; Lydia, who married Freeman Hotchkiss, and subsequently became the wife of Stephen Dickerman, of Westville, where she died; and Elizabeth Ann, mother of our subject. Mrs. Peck was born in 1802, and died in Woodbridge at the ripe old age of eighty-two years. She and her husband had seven children, namely: Ephraim R., the eldest, is mentioned below; Eliza Ann is the widow of John M. Merwin, of Woodbridge; Irven B., a carpenter and joiner of California, went West in 1855, and married Ann Crow; Minerva P. is the wife of Isaac S. Dickerman, of Westville, Conn.; Silas E. married Emily Talmage, of New York, and is now a homeopathic physician of Pomona, Fla.; Henry died in Woodbridge, Dec. 25, 1856, at the age of twenty-one years; and Stephen M., our subject, completes the family. Ephraim R. Peck, the eldest of this family, wedded Mary C. Hine, and followed farming in Woodbridge, where he died Aug. 15, 1898; he left no children. He received a common-school education, and taking up farming, made a decided success in that line, being also a fine judge of stock. With the exception of seven years, during which he was engaged as a farm hand in one place, he always lived in Woodbridge, where he was respected as one of the most estimable self-made men of his day. He was a Republican, but took no active part in politics, and never held any office.

Stephen M. Peck was born in Woodbridge Sept. 18, 1837, and began his education in the district school one mile from his boyhood home, while during the winter of 1857-58 he attended the Connecticut Literary Institute, under Prof. Pratt. At that time the teacher of mathematics was Henry Smith, who later became principal of the Institute. On attaining his majority Mr. Peck came into possession of the old homestead and began farming for himself, which occupation he has since followed, with marked success. He resided there until 1897, when he removed to his present farm, in the same town, a place of 134 acres willed him by a deceased brother, and he is now one of the most extensive farmers in Woodbridge. He is interested in the dairy business, keeping for that purpose from twenty-five to thirty cows, and raises fruit and vegetables on a large scale, finding a splendid market for his produce in New Haven, Ansonia and Seymour. In the fall of 1899 he gathered 600 barrels of apples from his orchards, from not more than one-half of the trees that were formerly bearing. Mr. Peck is also engaged in the milling business, owning and operating saw, cider and grist mills, and grinding feed, bone for fertilizing, etc. Although he has always lived in Woodbridge, he has not confined his business interests to his native town. He is the owner of an orange grove of fifty acres in Florida, which was almost destroyed by the severe frosts, but with care he hopes to build it up again.

On Dec. 10, 1868, in Bethany, Conn., Mr. Peck married Ida Frances Neal, a daughter of Martin H. and Martha M. (Hitchcock) Neal, of Southington, Conn., where her father was engaged in the blacksmith and cooperage business. She was born in Plainville, Conn., Jan. 15, 1849, the second in order of birth in a family of four children: (1) Eleanor M. (deceased) became the wife of Henry Buckingham, of Seymour, and they had six children, Ida (deceased), Minnie, Albert, William, Roy and Lewis. (2) Eva A., born July 26, 1853, is the wife of Jesse Russell, and they have one son, Carlton Martin, of Plainville. (3) Henry Martin, a physician of Upper Lehigh, Pa., married Ada Leisenring, and has four children, Maylon, Cameron, Joseph Hawley and Gertrude. Mr. and Mrs. Peck have had four children: (1) Ermon N., born July 26, 1870, a civil engineer, resides in West Hartford, where he is in the employ of the Hartford Water Co.; he graduated from the Connecticut Literary Institute in 1891, and entered the Scientific Department of Yale, but owing to ill health was unable to continue his studies. He married Emma Newton, of Westville, Conn., and they have one son, Ermon Newton. (2) Irving B., born June 19, 1872, married Hattie Clark, of Southington, and is now a mechanic of Forestville. (3) Elizabeth I. and (4) Lewis E., twins, were born May 27, 1875. Lewis E. died Aug. 31, 1875. Elizabeth taught school for one year in Bethany, Connecticut.

Ida F. Peck

Stephen M. Peck

Politically Mr. Peck classes himself with the Republicans, but believes that something should be done to stop the liquor traffic. Although he has never been an office seeker, he has accepted local positions of honor and trust, serving as member of the school board, grand juror, assessor, member of the board of relief, etc. He is a member of the Woodbridge Grange, of which he is treasurer, and was worthy chief of the Good Templars Society when that organization was in a flourishing condition. As a business man and citizen he is widely and favorably known, and no one in the town is more honored or highly respected.

WILLIS BRADLEY, a well-known citizen of Branford, was born there Oct. 20, 1848, son of Gurdon and Anna Maria (Spinks) Bradley. Timothy Bradley, his paternal grandfather, married Irene, a daughter of Capt. Alexander Gordon, of Branford. The great-grandfather, Timothy Bradley, an early settler of Branford, married Sarah Goodsell. The maternal grandfather of Willis Bradley was Samuel Spinks, of Branford, who married Esther Tyler.

Willis Bradley passed his boyhood and youth in Branford, where he attended the public school, and when he was "older grown" served an apprenticeship of three years to the blacksmith trade, which he followed ten years in Branford and Meriden. In maturer life he was made superintendent of the Cherry Hill farm of J. W. Nichols, and filled that position four years in a perfectly satisfactory manner to his employer. In 1883 Mr. Bradley began work as a carpenter for his brother Richard, and this has been his occupation to the present time. He has had some very extensive dealings in the building line in the past years, and has established an enviable character for business ability, fair dealing and upright treatment of his patrons.

Willis Bradley was united in marriage Aug. 20, 1872, with Isabelle Eliza, a daughter of Charles R. and Frances Louise (Dudley) Lane, of Guilford. Her paternal grandparents were Noah and Betsey (Stevens) Lane, and her maternal grandparents were Jonathan and Eliza (Holmes) Dudley, of Guilford. Mr. and Mrs. Willis Bradley are the parents of three daughters: Maria Louise; Hattie Isabel, who is deceased; and Helen Elizabeth. Mr. Bradley and his family are members of Trinity Episcopal Church, where they are much respected for their sterling worth and genuine character. Mr. Bradley is a member of Widows' Sons Lodge, No. 66, F. & A. M., and of the New England Order of Protection, where he is a welcome presence. In politics he is a Democrat, and in all things an honorable and reliable citizen.

Mrs. Bradley has two brothers, Charles Holmes Lane, of Branford, and Herbert Eugene Lane, of New Haven, both of whom stand well in their respective communities, and are widely known as honorable and trustworthy men in all their dealings.

GEORGE PREBBEL ROLF is ranked among the successful and well-established business citizens of Guilford. Since 1881 he has conducted a livery business in that locality, also dealing in horses.

Mr. Rolf was born in Folster, County of Kent, England, June 12, 1849, a son of Henry Rolf, who was born in 1823 in Folster, which is eighty miles from London. Henry Rolf married Sarah Jane Cox, a native of Elhain, England, and they came to this country with their family in the spring of 1850, landing in New York. From that city they came to New Haven, Conn., and thence by stage coach to Madison, where they located for a time. Several years later they removed to Guilford, where Mr. Rolf still resides, highly respected by his friends and neighbors in the community. He was a skilled workman at his trade, that of mason, which he followed until his retirement.

Our subject was scarcely one year old when he was brought to this country, and he attended the public schools of Madison. Adopting his father's trade, he pursued that both in Madison and Guilford, and in 1881 started in his present line, purchasing the interest of George S. Davis, who, in partnership with E. B. Redfield, conducted a livery business. In 1891 our subject bought the interest of Mr. Redfield, and since that time has most successfully managed a constantly growing business. He has secured the contract for the carrying of the mails, greatly increasing his responsibilities. Mr. Rolf knows a good horse when he sees it, and is one of the largest dealers along the shore line, having stables in New London as well as in Guilford. Seeking to please his patrons, Mr. Rolf is popular with every one, and is well and favorably known to a large class of citizens. His honesty in dealing has gained for him the confidence of those who wish to purchase, and many excellent specimens of the best breeds of horses have passed through his hands to the public.

On March 21, 1872, Mr. Rolf married Mary Storer, a daughter of William Storer, and one child has blessed this union, Fred, born in January, 1877, who received his education in Guilford, and is one of the progressing and rising young men of the town. As a pioneer in the canning of corn and tomatoes in Guilford young Mr. Rolf is the head of what is known as the Sachem's Head Canning Co., and also deals largely in feed, grain and fertilizers. Both Mr. Rolf and his son are Republicans, and our subject has served as warden of the borough three years; burgess several times; selectman, one term; and chairman of the town committee. Frederick Rolf is recognized as one of the progressive and rising young men of the community, and will probably make his mark in both commercial and political life. The family attend the Third Congregational Church. George P. Rolf is a member of the I. O. O. F., Mennuntuck Lodge, No. 62, Guilford, and of the N. E. O. P., Sachem Lodge, Guilford.

JOHN WINFIELD NORTON, one of Wolcott's most prosperous and highly esteemed citizens, was born in Wolcott Centre, March 27, 1854, and is a worthy representative of one of the best and oldest families of the State. In 1639, Thomas Norton emigrated from Ockley, County of Surrey, England, to the New World, and took up his residence in Guilford, New Haven Co., Conn. About 1625 he married Grace Wells, and to them were born the following children: Anne, born in 1625, married John Warner, of Saybrook, Conn.; Grace, born in 1627, was married April 2, 1651, to William Seward, of New Haven and Guilford, and died May 29, 1687; Mary B., born in 1635, was married, April 9, 1660, to Samuel Rockman, a son of William Rockman, of Windsor, Conn.; John, born in 1640, is mentioned below; Abigail, born in 1642, was married, Aug. 6, 1667, to Anamas Tryon, of Killingworth; and Thomas, born in 1646, was married May 8, 1671, to Elizabeth Mason.

John Norton, son of Thomas, spent his entire life in Guilford, where he followed the miller's trade, and died May 5, 1704. He first married Hannah Stone, and for his second wife married Elizabeth Hubbard. In his family were six children: John, who was born Nov. 18, 1666, and died Jan. 10, 1667; John, who is mentioned below; Susannah, who was born Oct. 4, 1672; Thomas, who was born May 4, 1675; Hannah, who was born Feb. 4, 1677, and was married, Jan. 16, 1702, to Ebenezer Stone; and Mary, who was born in 1680.

John Norton (2nd), a son of John, was born May 20, 1668, and was a land owner and farmer of Guilford. He was married, Nov. 14, 1694, to Hannah Buck, of Wethersfield, Conn., daughter of Emanuel Buck, the first of that name in Wethersfield. Mr. Norton died March 15, 1711, his wife, Oct. 22, 1739. Their children were Anna, who was born Oct. 16, 1695, and died in October, 1721; Mary, born Dec. 6, 1697; John, born Dec. 23, 1699; Sarah, born Feb. 26, 1702; Joseph, born Oct. 10, 1704; Elizabeth, who was born Oct. 6, 1706, was married, Aug. 8, 1728, to David Benton, and died Aug. 25, 1756; and Hannah, who was born March 4, 1710, and died in 1724.

Joseph Norton, son of John (2nd), spent his entire life as a farmer in Guilford, where he died May 9, 1781. On April 11, 1728, he wedded Mary Champion, of Lyme, Conn., who lived for a time in Wolcott, but died in Guilford, July 13, 1800, at the extreme old age of 110 years. She was a good Christian woman and the mother of the following children: Simeon, born May 3, 1729, died Dec. 22, 1772; David, born Oct. 21, 1730, is mentioned below; William, born Jan. 22, 1732, died June 17, 1760; Hannah, born Oct. 1, 1734, died in 1736; Philemon, born June 24, 1736, died in October of the same year; Noah, born Jan. 27, 1740, died May 31, 1763; and Beniah, born in 1742, died Nov. 10, 1843.

David Norton, son of Joseph, came to Wolcott at an early day and purchased land near Wolcott Centre, upon which he spent the remainder of his life. He was a well-known citizen of that locality, was a consistent Christian, and highly respected. On Nov. 11, 1752, he married Submit Benton, who died in 1755, and for his second wife he married Suza Bishop. He was the father of the following children: Ozias, who was born Feb. 10, 1754, and is mentioned below; Cyrus, who was born Jan. 14, 1755, married Jerusha Johnson, of Wolcott, and lived in New York; Ziba, who was born in 1757, and was married, Nov. 26, 1778, to Ruth Hopkins; Suza, who was baptized June 12, 1759; Zebul, who was baptized Sept. 22, 1761, and married Rhoda Norton; and Noah U., who was baptized July 3, 1764, was married April 18, 1784, to Rachel Gillet, of Wolcott, and lived in New York.

Ozias Norton, son of David, made his home in Wolcott, where he owned property and engaged in farming until his death, which occurred Feb. 6, 1840, his remains being interred there. He married Maria Frisbie, and to them were born nine children, namely: David; Keziah, wife of Daniel Lane, of Wolcott; Susan and Elizabeth, twins, the former the wife of Daniel Byington, the latter the wife of Thomas Cook, of Ohio; Moses Frisbie married Percy Barber and lived in Ohio; Jonathan Frisbie, who married Polly Smith and died in Wolcott; Ziba, grandfather of our subject; Jedediah Harmon, born May 11, 1788; and Simeon Newton, born March 28, 1791.

Ziba Norton was born in Wolcott, and followed the trade of shoemaker. About 1830 he removed to Truxton, N. Y., where he died. He married Abigail Atkins, of Wolcott, and the children born to them were as follows: Ada, born June 23, 1803, first married a Mr. Doolittle, and second George W. Royce; Talcott, born Sept. 19, 1807, married Belinda Hall, of Plymouth, Conn.; Lenora, born March 12, 1805, married Harley Downs; Phoebe, born in December, 1809, married George W. Winchell; Minerva, born in March, 1812, married Everett Norton; Hendrick, born in December, 1817; Rufus, father of our subject, was next in order of birth; Manville, born June 8, 1821; and Rufinus, born in September, 1824.

Rufus Norton was born Feb. 18, 1819, and received a common school education, which was later in life greatly supplemented by extensive reading, giving particular attention to the study of the Bible, Shakespeare, historical and political works. He was a tanner and currier by trade, and followed that occupation for a number of years, but later engaged in farming first on the Hall farm, later on the Beecher farm, and then, after operating several different places in Wolcott, he returned to the Beecher farm, where he passed the remainder of his life, dying there Dec. 1, 1897. His remains were interred in the Wolcott Centre cemetery. He was an excellent judge of horses and cattle, and in connection with farming, also dealt in stock and wood. He first married Harriet Smith, and for his second wife wedded her half sister, Ellen Beecher, a daughter of John and Vina Beecher. She is a most estimable lady, a member of the Congregational Church, and is still living on the old homestead. In politics the father was first a Whig and later a Democrat, and he took quite an active interest in local affairs, filling several town offices, including those of selectman and assessor, holding the latter position for ten years. Although not a member of any church, he endeavored to follow the Golden Rule, and was widely and favorably known.

John W. Norton, whose name introduces this review, received only a district school education, and at the early age of fourteen years started out in life for himself, working in the shops at Bristol, Conn., for one year, at $1.50 per day. After that he spent about two years on a farm in Bethany, and then returned to Bristol, where he was employed for two years at $1.75 per day. At the end of that time he bought a tract of woodland and an ox team, and commenced cutting the timber and selling the wood. This he continued until locating on the old Leonard Beecher homestead in Wolcott, where he is now extensively engaged in general farming, the wood and dairy business. He is one of the largest land owners in the town, and besides his farm here, he had property in Bristol and Southington, Conn., aggregating 575 acres.

In Harwinton, Litchfield Co., Conn., Mr. Norton married Miss Nettie M. Coy, of that place, a daughter of Silas and Lorinda Coy. Of the two children born to them, one died in infancy, and John F. is at home. Politically he is a Republican, and since 1893 Mr. Norton has served as tax collector of Wolcott, and he also filled the office of assessor for two years. He is liberal in his religious views. Since the age of fourteen years he has been dependent upon his own resources, and to-day he enjoys the reward of his painstaking and conscientious work. By his energy, perseverance and fine business ability he has been enabled to secure a handsome competence. Systematic and methodical, his sagacity, keen discrimination and sound judgment have made him one of the most prosperous citizens of Wolcott.

FRANKLIN PIERCE SMITH, a representative farmer and highly esteemed citizen of Cheshire, was born in that town Aug. 10, 1851, and belongs to an old and prominent Connecticut family. His paternal great-grandparents, David and Abigail (Lewis) Smith, were natives of Southington, Conn., and the former was a son of David Smith, Sr., and a grandson of Gideon Smith. Our subject's grandparents, Gideon Lewis and Lois (Barnes) Smith, were also natives of Southington, and in 1823 moved to Cheshire, where he followed farming throughout the remainder of his life, dying there in 1850. His wife died in 1846. Their children were Elizabeth, wife of Sherman Hart, of Berlin, Conn.; Rhoda, wife of John Hall, of Kensington; Abigail, wife of Seth Pratt, of Southington; Sylvia, wife of David Beach, of Southington; Loyal, father of our subject; Rollin, who died in Cheshire; Lois, who married Asahel Warner, and died in Auburn, N. Y.; and Lola, wife of Burritt Parker, of Southington.

Loyal Smith, our subject's father, was born in July, 1807, and was sixteen years of age when the family removed to Cheshire, where he afterward engaged in farming to the close of his life. He was quite a prominent and influential citizen of his community, and was a member of the State Legislature from Cheshire in 1856 and again in 1867. In that town he was married, Oct. 20, 1829, to Miss Henrietta Dickerman, who was born in Hamden Nov. 26, 1807, a daughter of Samuel and Lois (Peck) Dickerman, also natives of Hamden, where her mother died. Her father died in Cheshire, in 1839. To Mr. and Mrs. Smith were born eight children, as follows: Sereno D., a resident of Meriden; Lois, who died at the age of six years; Eliza, who died in Cheshire in 1848, at the age of eleven years; Lois Lucelia, widow of Edward Ives, and a resident of Cheshire; Rhoda, wife of Amos Ives, of Meriden; Loyal Barnes, of Cheshire; Samuel D.; and Franklin Pierce, our subject.

Franklin P. Smith was reared and educated in much the usual manner of farmers' sons of his day, attending the local schools and aiding in the labors of the farm, and since attaining to man's estate has successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits. In 1882 he was united in marriage with Miss Emma E. Miles, a native of Meriden, and a daughter of John and Abigail (Sanderson) Miles, who were born in Cheshire. Her father died in 1804, her mother in 1800. Mr. and Mrs. Smith have one son, Eugene C. The Democratic party finds in our subject a staunch supporter of its principles, and he takes quite an active interest in public affairs. He was one of the selectmen of Cheshire in 1883, and has been a member of the grand jury.

FREDERICK E. COLBURN, one of Ansonia's leading citizens, is a worthy representative of an old and honored pioneer family, being a descendant of Daniel Colburn, who settled in Stafford and passed his remaining years there as a farmer, dying at a good old age.

Daniel Colburn, our subject's grandfather, was a native of Stafford, and followed agricultural pursuits there for many years. His wife, Elizabeth Moulton, who died at the age of seventy, was born in Stafford, daughter of Bounds Moulton, a prominent farmer. They had twelve children, none of whom are now living, and of their nine grandchildren only five are living. Among the deceased grandchildren was Col. Colburn of the Union army.

Sylvester Colburn, our subject's father, was born in Stafford Dec. 7, 1806, and was reared upon the farm, obtaining his education in the district schools. At sixteen he went to New Haven with his twin brother, Sullivan M., to work in the store of an elder brother, John Colburn, and later they started a small foundry, which they operated a few years. Their next venture was the founding of the Bassett foundry, and on disposing of it, in 1847, they located in Ansonia, our subject's father taking the present homestead, at No. 121 Howard avenue. They became interested to some extent in the Farrell foundry and the Wallace factory, and operated a cotton-mill in the building now occupied by Arthur H. Bartholomew, while for some time they were connected with Robert Bassett's enterprise in Derby. They owned valuable real estate, and built two houses on the lots adjoining the present homestead. They also held stock in the Birmingham Pin Co., which is retained by the family, and they purchased the first improved machine used by that company for the manufacture of pins. In fact, they were more or less closely identified with every enterprise started in their locality, and both continued their active interest in public affairs until their retirement from business. All the shade trees in West Ansonia were set out by them, and they assisted generously in building and maintaining Christ Church in Ansonia, one-fourth of the running expenses having been paid by them for many years. Sylvester Colburn died July 23, 1870, aged sixty-four years, and his brother Sullivan died May 1, 1876, aged seventy. Another brother, Dr. Josiah Colburn, who was born in 1799, was closely associated with them in business for some time. He practiced medicine in Orange and Derby for a number of years, but retired in 1852 and joined in the management of the Bassett foundry, then known as the Birmingham foundry. On selling his interest he located in Ansonia and started an axe factory, but a few years later he sold this and invested in a foundry in Bridgeport, continuing, however, to reside in Ansonia, where he died March 11, 1882, aged eighty-three years.

Sylvester Colburn married Elizabeth Hull, a native of New Haven, and a daughter of Thomas Hull, one of the wealthiest citizens of Westville, where he owned a farm a mile square and had a residence upon one of the finest streets. For many years he was interested in butchering and farming, and as a citizen he was much esteemed for his sterling qualities of character. His wife, Annah (Thomas), who died in 1826, aged forty-six years, was born in West Haven, and they had six children, of whom none are living. Our subject's mother was the last to pass away, dying Nov. 30, 1900, aged ninety years. She was a devout Episcopalian, and her family has been identified with that church for generations. Of her four children only one is living, Frederick E. Another son, Arthur, with his daughters Annette and Eda, the captain and one sailor, were drowned by the upsetting of his yacht in Long Island Sound, on July 18, 1901; his watch stopped at three minutes past four. His daughter Madaline and one sailor were saved by hanging on to an overturned rowboat for two hours, and were picked up by a passing tugboat.

Frederick E. Colburn was born in Westville Sept. 6, 1832, and was educated in the district schools of that section and in New Haven. For some years he was interested in the manufacture of guano and phosphates, but since 1884 his attention has been devoted to real-estate business. Politically he affiliates with the Republican party, although he has refused all offers of official positions, and he is one of the prominent Masons of this section, having been a member of George Washington Lodge, No. 82, of Ansonia, for thirty-one years, and also belonging to Mt. Vernon Chapter, Ansonia. In 1859 he married Miss Flora A. Smith, and they have had five children, of whom four are living. (1) Ruby W. married Dr. Baldwin, now of Rome, Italy, and they have six children, Frederick W., Kenneth P. S., John P., Charles L., Cornelia F. and Margaret. (2) Fairchild S. married Miss Minnie Busher, and settled on his grandfather's farm in Ohio. (3) Elizabeth H. married Rev. E. T. Mathison, an Episcopal clergyman, and has two children, Flora and Catherine. (4) Sylvester G. married Miss Ruth Sperry, and has two children, Elizabeth and Frederick S.

Mrs. Flora A. Smith Colburn, whose mental gifts and culture make her a social leader, is a member of the D. A. R., Sarah Humphrey Chapter, of Derby, and is eligible to membership in the Society of the Colonial Dames. She was born in Lake county, Ohio, and is of good old Connecticut stock in the paternal line. Her maternal great-grandfather, Joseph White, came from France and served seven years in the Revolutionary army under Gen.

F. E. Colburn

LaFayette. Her great-great-grandfather, Giles Smith, a native of South Norwalk, settled in Derby at an early date, and Abraham Smith, her great-grandfather, passed his life there as a farmer. Prospect street now runs through the site of his old homestead. Abraham Smith married Sarah French, granddaughter of John Bowers, a graduate of Harvard College and one of the preachers at Guilford and Derby. James Smith, the grandfather of Mrs. Colburn, was a native of Derby, and followed farming at the homestead for some years in connection with the cooper's trade. Later he moved to Waterbury, but his last years were spent in Derby, his death occurring at the age of eighty years. He married Molly Fairchild, daughter of Abial and Zerviah Johnson, and they had three children. Mrs. Smith died when her son, James F., was but three weeks old.

James F. Smith, Mrs. Colburn's father, was born in Waterbury, and in 1819 went to Ohio, the journey, which was made with an ox-team, occupying one month. For one year he worked by the month, saving his wages carefully, and as time passed he became one of the wealthiest farmers and fruit growers of that section, his farm comprising 600 acres of land. He lived to the advanced age of ninety-three years. He married Caroline White, who was born in Granville, N. Y., one of the four children of John White, who died at the age of one hundred and two, and his wife, Ruby (Cleveland), who died aged sixty-seven. Mrs. Caroline Smith died aged sixty-seven years, and of her three children none are living except Mrs. Colburn, who was second in order of birth. James H. died in 1896, and Mary Z. died in 1870, aged nineteen years. The Smith family has also been connected with the Episcopal Church for many years, and Mrs. Colburn is among the active workers of the church in Ansonia.

SAMUEL E. FRISBIE, a prominent agriculturist and business man of the town of Milford, was born in East Haven, Conn., April 7, 1856, son of William H. and grandson of Samuel Frisbie. The family is of pioneer stock. Samuel Frisbie was born in Branford, Conn., where he continued to reside, and where he followed shoemaking all his life. His wife, Sally Tyler, was born in Branford, and passed her entire life there. Of their seven children, the eldest, Obed T. (deceased), was a shoemaker in New Haven, Conn.; Roxana (deceased) married Nelson Linsley, of New Haven; Randolph R. was a shoemaker and later a bookkeeper, but at present is retired; William H., our subject's father, is mentioned below; Mary E., a tailoress, died in Milford unmarried; Lewis, who died in Fair Haven, Conn., was an iron and brass founder, and earlier in life a shoemaker; and Sarah resides in Branford.

William H. Frisbie was born in Branford May 11, 1826, and became a shoemaker, but afterward for some time followed the iron molder's trade.

In April, 1877, he settled upon a farm in Milford, where he still resides. He married Eunice C. Dickinson, a native of Chester, Conn., and daughter of Ely Dickinson, and they became the parents of one child, Samuel E.

Samuel E. Frisbie first attended school in East Haven, and when eight years old went to Branford, where his studies were continued several years. At thirteen he moved with his parents to New Haven, and after a short service in the finishing department of the New Haven Clock Co. became clerk in a drug store to learn the business. During the panic of 1877 he settled with his parents in Milford upon his present farm as a market gardener and seed grower. For the last four years he has been special agent for the Page Woven Wire Fence Co., a most successful branch of his business, necessitating some traveling, and he also acts as general agent and traveler for the Rogers & Hubbard Co.'s fertilizers. He is thoroughly alive to up-to-date machinery, and has been local agent for various improved farm tools, etc., which he has introduced. He has never married, but he and his father have built a beautiful residence on a part of the old farm, which contains about eighty acres—the original farm when taken comprising about 164 acres. While he votes independently so far as local affairs are concerned, he is a Republican, and owing to his clear understanding of parliamentary law has often been chairman of that party's caucuses, as also of the annual and special meetings of the town. He has also served as grand juror. He was a prominent candidate for the first judge of the Milford Town Court upon its establishment in 1901, being defeated in legislative caucus only by a compromise candidate. While taking an active part in town affairs, he has sought to avoid and has refused public preferment. Mr. Frisbie belongs to the Patrons of Husbandry, or Grange, and is a charter member and organizer of the local Grange in his town; he is also president for the fourth consecutive time of the local council of the National Provident Union, and takes much interest in temperance affairs. He is a member of Plymouth Congregational Church, and for three years was superintendent of its Sunday-school. For two years he was director of music in the First Congregational Church, and he has taken much interest in musical affairs generally, having been president and organizer of the old Amphion Music Society, and secretary of the more recent Choral Musical Union.

CHARLES W. GRANNISS, an honored veteran of the Civil war, and a representative citizen of the town of East Haven, New Haven county, was born Nov. 10, 1844, on the farm where he now resides, and comes of good old Colonial stock.

The family was founded in the New World by Edward Granniss, a native of England, who came to this country in 1644 and first located in Hartford, Conn., where he followed farming about ten years.

About 1670 he removed to Hadley, Mass., and seven years later came to North Haven. He married Elizabeth Andrews in 1654, and among their children was Joseph Granniss, who was born in 1677. Isaac Granniss, son of Joseph, was born in 1716, and was the first of the family to locate in East Haven, making his home on the farm where our subject now lives. He purchased this land from the Indian chief Foxen. His son, Jared Granniss, the grandfather of our subject, was born in 1756, and lived to the advanced age of ninety-one years. He was one of the Revolutionary heroes, and was with Gen. Putnam in the battle of Bunker Hill.

Frederick Granniss, father of our subject, was born Feb. 2, 1813, and when sixteen years of age was apprenticed to George Hoadley, of New Haven, to learn the carriagemaker's trade, at which he continued to work for several years, spending part of the time in Albany, N. Y. Returning to the old homestead in East Haven, he followed dairy farming throughout the remainder of his life, and died there April 29, 1895. He was a consistent and faithful member of the Baptist Church, and took a very active part in its work. In early life he married Miss Emily Bailey, a daughter of Thaddeus Bailey, of Groton, Conn. She died Feb. 18, 1882. In their family were three children, of whom our subject is the youngest. George F., born Feb. 2, 1835, is a resident of Wallingford, this county; and Andrew J., born Jan. 11, 1841, is a farmer of East Haven.

Charles W. Granniss passed his boyhood and youth on the old homestead where he continues to reside, and was pursuing his studies in the local schools when the Civil war broke out. Going to New Haven, he enlisted Aug. 21, 1861, in Company A, 10th Conn. V. I., but his father, learning of his enlistment through the school teacher, succeeded in getting his release on account of his youth. Our subject returned home, but after talking the matter over with his father for a few days he was given a written consent to his enlistment, and together they returned to New Haven, where he re-enlisted in the same company and regiment, joining his command at that city. They were encamped at Hartford, and thence went to Annapolis, Md., later joining Burnside in his Roanoke expedition. Mr. Granniss' first engagement, at Roanoke Island, N. C., was followed by the battles of Newbern, Kinston and Goldsboro, under the command of Gen. Burnside, 10th Army Corps. Later the regiment was assigned to the 18th Army Corps, under Gens. Gilmore and Butler, and was sent to Charleston, S. C., where they helped dig the entrenchments and remained until the surrender of Fort Wagner, after a siege of three months. Going to St. Augustine, Fla., they did garrison duty until Dec. 31, 1863, and then returned home on a thirty days' furlough. Mr. Granniss re-enlisted and rejoined his regiment at Hartford, where they were encamped on Trinity College grounds. Later they proceeded to Alexandria, Va.

They spent five weeks at Arlington Heights, near Washington, D. C., and then joined the army opposite Yorktown, under Gen. Butler. Later they participated in the engagements at Bermuda Hundred, Drury's Bluff and the siege of Petersburg, and then crossed the James river and took part in the battle of Strawberry Plains, where Mr. Granniss was wounded by a minie ball in the left shoulder, Aug. 16, 1864. He was first taken to the field hospital and later to the hospital at Newmarket Heights. On his recovery he participated in the engagements at Laurel Hill, Newmarket, Derbytown, Johnston's plantation, Hatchie's Run and Fort Gregg. While storming the fort our subject was again wounded by a revolver in the hands of a Confederate officer not one hundred feet from him, the bullet striking the first joint of the first finger on the left hand and passing through all the finger joints. He spent a few days in the hospital at Point of Rocks, and a month at the hospital at Hampton, Va., and then was discharged at New Haven, Aug. 30, 1865, with the rank of sergeant.

Soon after his return home Mr. Granniss, in company with his brother Andrew, went to Norfolk, Va., where he was employed in lumber and wood yards for one year. At the end of that time he came back to Connecticut, and has since successfully engaged in market gardening and the dairy business on the old homestead in East Haven. On Feb. 24, 1874, he was united in marriage with Miss Annie Irwin, of Baltimore, Md., and to them were born three children: Irwin, a practicing physician of New Haven, who was graduated from the Medical Department of Yale College at the age of twenty-one years; Lincoln, who is now a member of the Freshman class at Yale; and Charles A., who died in infancy.

Fraternally Mr. Granniss is an honored member of Delphi Lodge, No. 63, F. & A. M., of New Haven; Admiral Foote Post, No. 63, G. A. R.; and Foxen Grange, No. 89, East Haven, of which he is now master. In politics he is an ardent Republican. He was a member of the State Legislature in 1895 and again in 1899, and was chairman of the committee on Temperance during the last term; he has been county auditor for two years. As a citizen he has always been true and faithful to every trust reposed in him, so that his loyalty is above question, being manifest in days of peace as when he followed the old flag to victory on Southern battlefields.

HENRY CHALMERS BALDWIN, whose fame as a lawyer and orator extended far beyond the confines of his native State, was born upon a farm known as Pond Hill, in the town of Naugatuck, Sept. 15, 1842.

Lucius Baldwin, his father, who was a Methodist minister, was born in Woodbridge. He married a Miss Willard, of Massachusetts, and for many years lived upon the farm where ten of his fourteen children were born. He died in April, 1869. Of his family Henry C. was the ninth in order of birth, the others being Jerusha Maria, Lucius Monroe, Edwin Soule, Hervey Watson, Amelia Anne, Louis Sherwood, Esther Sophia, Frances Adelaide, Celia Josephine, Matilda Augusta, Albert Warren, Charles Willard and Florence Eleanor. Lucius Monroe is a farmer in Naugatuck. Louis Sherwood and Albert Warren died in early manhood. Charles Willard is a practicing lawyer in Florida. Five of the seven daughters are married, Jerusha Maria to F. K. Small, of Cape Cod, Mass.; Esther Sophia to J. F. Brown, of Lynn, that State; Frances Adelaide to Judge Bingham, of Naugatuck; Celia Josephine to E. J. Whitehead, of New York; and Amelia Anne to George F. Walker, of Gloucester, England. Florence Eleanor has remained unmarried. Matilda Augusta died before reaching womanhood.

Henry C. Baldwin passed his boyhood upon the paternal farm, receiving his early education at the schools of Naugatuck and New Britain. In August, 1862, before he had reached the age of twenty, he enlisted with a number of other young men of Naugatuck, in Company H, 15th C. V. His experience as a soldier was eventful, and his record one of distinction. He was once wounded and was for two months a prisoner, and was mustered out of service June 28, 1865. On his return to Naugatuck he taught school for a time, and was for two years connected with a concern engaged in the manufacture of pocket cutlery, window fixtures, etc. That pursuit, however, he did not find congenial, and in 1869 he matriculated in the Yale Law School, from which he was graduated three years later. He at once began practice at Naugatuck, where his natural ability, sound learning and fidelity to his clients soon won for him a large clientage. In 1889 he opened an office in New York, spending three days of each week in that city, and in 1895 he established a branch office in Waterbury, Conn., the better to meet the demands of his constantly growing practice. He died Jan. 15, 1897, at his home in Carroll Court, the immediate cause of his death being heart failure, the sequence to an illness extending over several weeks. His passing away cast a gloom over the community in which he had lived so long, and where he had many friends and where he was universally honored, even by those who criticised what they sometimes designated his "erratic" course in politics. As a man he was trusted implicitly by all who knew him; as a friend he was sincere, charitable, faithful; as a husband and father, loyal and devoted; as a citizen, progressive, public-spirited and liberal. Endowed with a singularly retentive memory and sparkling wit, he was a brilliant conversationalist. As a lawyer, his sympathies were always with the cause which he believed to be right and just, and his generosity toward those in distress was limited only by his pecuniary ability, although ever guided by a sound judgment.

Reference has been made in the preceding paragraph to Mr. Baldwin's career as a politician. His first vote was cast as a Democrat, and in 1872 he took the stump for Horace Greeley. He was a constant reader on theories and principles of government and finance, and he early became imbued with the creed of the Greenback-Labor party, in 1875 delivering the first speech ever made in its advocacy in Hartford. In 1880 he was a delegate to the convention which nominated Gen. Weaver for the presidency, and in one campaign he was the Greenback candidate for Connecticut's chief executive chair. In 1886 he was elected town clerk on that ticket. In 1896 he was an ardent supporter of William J. Bryan, and made speeches in his behalf in Connecticut and New Jersey. The following is extracted from a paragraph which appeared in the New York Sun at the time of his death: "Mr. Baldwin had been identified with public affairs for a long time. He had been a Greenbacker, and was the Greenback candidate for governor of his State at one time. He followed Blaine through Maine the time the State elected a Greenback governor, and to him more than to any other man was due the victory of the party in that State. He was an ardent Populist of late years, and took an active part in the St. Louis convention. It was he who got on his feet and asked the gathering to use their brains instead of their mouths." As an orator Mr. Baldwin was eloquent and fearless, and even his opponents always heard him with interest and respect. He was a frequent contributor to the press, his writings always showing deep research and mental qualities of a high order. At one time he was connected with a Naugatuck weekly called the Agitator, devoted to the interests of the working men, and many leading papers throughout the land welcomed articles from his pen.

On May 29, 1875, Mr. Baldwin married Miss Millicent, a daughter of Elijah W. Bingham, of Middletown. She and their three children, May E., Florence J. and Seth W., survive him.

FREDERICK LEGRAND JACKSON, a well-known merchant at Stony Creek, has won more than a local reputation for honest goods and fair treatment, and by his plain and upright methods of doing business has drawn to himself a very desirable custom. Mr. Jackson was born in Durham, Conn., March 2, 1860, and is a son of Alfred and Deborah Ann (Davis) Jackson, both natives of Connecticut, the former of Guilford, and the latter of Durham.

John Jackson, his paternal grandfather, was born in Guilford, where he lived and died, having followed the vocation of farming all his life. Levi Davis, the maternal grandfather of Frederick L. Jackson, was also a farmer in Durham, and in his later life he removed to a location in Susquehanna county, Penn., where he spent the rest of his life, dying in that community.

Alfred Jackson, the father of Frederick L., is a farmer, and has his home in Durham, Conn. There are six children in his family: Lillia V. (who married Henry Davis), Andrew, Frederick L., Edith, Mary and John.

Frederick LeGrand Jackson spent his boyhood days in Durham, and received his education in Durham Academy. Leaving home at the age of twenty years, he became an employe in the general store of his brother-in-law, Henry Davis, and remained with him nine and a half years. Mr. Jackson began business for himself in 1891, at Stony Creek, after having managed the establishment of Strong, Barnes & Hart, for about a year and a half. Purchasing the stock and good will of his employers, he solicited the patronage of the public in his own behalf, and from the first made a decided success in his business.

On June 8, 1892, Mr. Jackson was married to Mary F., a daughter of Joseph A. and Adeline W. (Webster) Terry, of Hartford. Mr. Jackson is a member of the two fraternal societies the Knights of Honor and the Knights of Pythias. In politics he is a Democrat.

LYNDE ROWLAND, a prominent citizen of Branford, was born in Old Lyme, New London Co., Conn., July 17, 1827, son of Lynde and Susan Y. (Greenfield) Rowland, and grandson of Evi and Caroline (Chadwick) Rowland. He comes of good old Puritan stock, and is a worthy representative of the best ideals and principles of New England. The maternal grandfather of Mr. Rowland, James Greenfield, who was a shoe-maker of Old Lyme, came of English and German extraction. He was a soldier in the war of 1812. Our subject's father was a sea captain, and in the course of his professional career visited all the great seaports of the world. He died Jan. 20, 1841, aged fifty-five years, in the village of Old Lyme, shortly after the death of his wife, who passed away Nov. 15, 1840, aged forty-six years. Their family consisted of four children, of whom the eldest, Edward, who died several years ago, was a farmer and school teacher by occupation; he married Abigail Lay, and had six children. Mary Ann died Dec. 20, 1832, aged two years, six months. Abigail G. became the wife of Andrew Ure, a farmer and merchant, and had five children; she died in 1899.

Lynde Rowland, whose name introduces this sketch, was reared in the village of Old Lyme, where he spent the first thirteen and a half years of his life, at the end of which time he was bound out to the carriagemaker's trade for seven years to William F. Cables, of New London. He finished his trade in Salem, and in 1846 removed to Leyden, Lewis Co., N. Y., where he embarked in the manufacture of horse rakes, butter tubs, cheese boxes and presses, wagons, turnings for builders, and other wooden goods. For six years he continued in business in that city, and in 1851 he came to Branford, where he went into the wagon and carriage business, in which with some intermissions he continued for nearly fifty years. In 1862 he became the proprietor of a grocery store in Branford, which remained on his hands for nearly a year, and later he had another for about the same length of time. For a time he was also interested in a carriage factory in the city of New York, where he had a feed store and also a shoe shop. Mr. Rowland at the present time is extensively interested in Branford real estate, owning a number of tenements and business buildings, nineteen in all. He has been an active and progressive business man, and a considerable fortune attests his industry and thrifty management.

Mr. Rowland was married, in 1862, to Amelia M., daughter of William Allport, of Branford, and is the father of two sons, Lynde W. and Wallace A. Lynde W. was born July 13, 1863, was married May 2, 1888, to Minnie Harrison, and resides in Naugatuck. Wallace A., born Feb. 20, 1870, was married Aug. 21, 1899, to Mattie Parker, and has two sons—Chester R., born Nov. 13, 1900; and Lynde Parker, born Sept. 6, 1901. They make their home in Branford. Politically Mr. Rowland was a Whig in early life, but became a Republican on the formation of that party. In his younger manhood he was a member of the Odd Fellows in New Haven.

Mrs. Rowland's father, William Allport, was born in Birmingham, England, and came to America at the age of twenty-two. In Middletown he married Julia Hudson, and they had six children. Mr. Allport was a metal patternmaker by trade. He died Nov. 16, 1889, his wife on Dec. 1, 1891.

JOHN AUGUSTUS COOK was born June 5, 1859, on Center street, Wallingford, a son of Samuel Merriman Cook, and descends from the Cook family of Herefordshire and County Kent, England. The first of the name in America was Henry Cook, who was at Plymouth, Mass., before 1640, and there died. He had four sons: John, who settled at Middletown; Isaac, of Plymouth; and Henry and Samuel, who came to New Haven county.

Samuel Cook was born in Plymouth, and in 1663 came to New Haven, and married Hope Parker, daughter of Edward Parker, May 2, 1660. They located in Wallingford in 1670, on what is now known as Cook's Hill. Samuel was by trade a shoemaker and tanner, and he owned considerable land. He filled many public offices, and was prominent in church affairs, being one of the organizers of First Church of Wallingford. He died in 1702. After the death of his first wife, Hope, he married Mary Roberts, who on April 9, 1705, married Jeremiah Howe. Samuel Cook was the father of the following children: Samuel, mentioned below;

Lynde Rowland

John, born Dec. 3, 1669; Hannah, March 3, 1671; Isaac, March 10, 1673 (died April 7, 1673); Mary, April 23, 1675 (married Nathaniel Ives); Elizabeth, Aug. 22, 1677 (died young); Judith, Feb. 20, 1679 (married Jeremiah Howe, April 20, 1704, and died the same day); Isaac, Jan. 10, 1681; Joseph, Feb. 25, 1683; Hope, Sept. 27, 1686 (married Joseph Benham, and died Jan. 30, 1731). These were all by the first marriage, and by the second were born Israel, May 8, 1692; Mabel, June 30, 1694; Benjamin, April 8, 1697 (died in 1717); Ephraim, April 19, 1699; Elizabeth, Sept. 10, 1701 (married Adam Mott, Aug. 28, 1717).

Samuel Cook, son of Samuel Cook, was born March 3, 1667, in New Haven, Conn., and married Hannah Ives March 3, 1692. She was a daughter of William Ives, and died May 20, 1714. He married Elizabeth Bedel, of Stratford, for his second wife, and after a life devoted to farming, died Sept. 18, 1725. His children were (1) Hannah, born May 28, 1693, married Jeremiah Hull, and died Nov. 22, 1735; (2) Samuel, mentioned below; (3) Aaron, born Dec. 28, 1696, died Oct. 14, 1756; (4) Lydia, born Jan. 13, 1699, married Oct. 12, 1738, Daniel Dutton; (5) Moses, born Jan. 4, 1700, died Dec. 25, 1711; (6) Miriam, born Nov. 4, 1703, married Benjamin Curtis, Dec. 12, 1727; (7) Thankful, born Dec. 24, 1705, died Aug. 19, 1714; (8) Esther, born March 8, 1707, married Abel Yale, July 22, 1730; (9) Eunice, born Feb. 25, 1709; (10) Susannah, born Sept. 5, 1711, married Joseph Cole, Dec. 1, 1735; (11) Hope died Sept. 18, 1728. These children were all born of the first marriage. To the second came (12) Moses, born Nov. 6, 1716; (13) Thankful, born Nov. 14, 1718, married Stephen Hotchkiss, Dec. 31, 1742; (14) Asaph, born June 25, 1720; (15) Hannah, born Nov. 4, 1721, married Zephaniah Hull, of Cheshire.

Samuel Cook, son of the foregoing Samuel, was born March 5, 1695, became a wealthy shipping merchant from New Haven, and died on Thanksgiving Day, Nov. 7, 1745, leaving an estate of $145,525, as recorded in the probate proceedings of the time. He was buried at Cheshire, where a fine altar tomb marks his resting place. His benefactions to the poor were remarkable for the time. On Feb. 8, 1721, he married Hannah, daughter of Ebenezer Lewis, of Wallingford, and they had the following children: (1) Hannah, born Dec. 22, 1722, married Elnathan Beach, and died May 18, 1754; (2) Rhoda, born Oct. 22, 1724, married Benjamin Hitchcock, of Cheshire, Feb. 7, 1745; (3) Demaris, born November, 1726, married Rev. Ebenezer Boone, Dec. 19, 1750, and removed to Vermont; (4) Thaddeus is mentioned below; (5) Lowly, born May 15, 1730, married Andrew Hull, of Cheshire, Oct. 17, 1750, and became the mother of General Andrew Hull, of Cheshire, and the great-grandmother of Rear-Admiral Andrew Hull Foote, of the U. S. N.; (6) Samuel, born Nov. 16, 1733; (7) Eunice, born June 20, 1735, married Samuel Hull, of Cheshire, in 1765; (8) Levi, born Nov. 10, 1737; and (9) Aaron, born Nov. 30, 1739.

Col. Thaddeus Cook, son of Capt. Samuel and Hannah (Lewis) Cook, born in Cheshire, Sept. 10, 1728, was a soldier in the Revolution under Gen. Gates. He lived in Cheshire, where he was highly respected, and where he died Feb. 27, 1800. He was three times married. His first wife, Lois Beach, was a daughter of Capt. Elnathan Beach, and died April 4, 1753, at the age of twenty-one years. For his second wife he married Sarah Hall, who was born in Cheshire, and died Sept. 5, 1774. His third wife, Abigail, survived him some years. By his first marriage Col. Cook had one child, Lois, born April 1, 1753. Mrs. Sarah (Hall) Cook was the mother of: (1) Sarah, born July 23, 1755, married Dr. Gould Gift Norton, of Cheshire, and died in September, 1818; (2) Samuel, born in 1758; (3) Seneca, born Jan. 15, 1761, died Feb. 26, 1776; (4) Lucy, born in 1762, married Amos Harrison Ives in 1776, and died February, 1836; (5) Thaddeus, born May 3, 1764, graduated from Yale in 1783, and died Oct. 3, 1789; (6) Sally married Nathan Harrison, of North Branford; and (7) Clarissa became Mrs. Hall, and had one daughter, Sukey.

Samuel Cook, son of Col. Thaddeus, married Mary Kirkland, a daughter of Constant Kirkland, of Wallingford, and died Sept. 24, 1824, and his widow passed away March 10, 1839, when eighty-two years old. Their children were: (1) Russell, born Sept. 8, 1778, married a Miss Hall, of Cheshire; (2) Eunice, Aug. 24, 1780, married Elias Ford, Esq., of Naugatuck; (3) Harriet, born May 17, 1785, married Ira Yale, of Wallingford; (4) Turhand K., born in 1787, married Catherine Van Bryan, of Catskill, N. Y.; (5) Samuel, born Feb. 28, 1788, married Martha Culver, of Wallingford; (6) Thaddeus, born April 3, 1791, married four wives, Julia Cook (who had one daughter, Julia, who married William Francis and had two sons, William and John), Sylvia Hall (who had a daughter, Catherine, who married David Hall, and had three sons), Thankful Hall, and Martha Hall (who had four daughters: Caroline, who married Rev. Mr. Paddock; Sarah, wife of O. J. Martin; Emma, who married Edward Cook, and has two children; and Frances, who died in infancy); (7) George, born April 17, 1794, married Lavinia Culver, of Wallingford; (8) Friend, born Nov. 1, 1797, married Emily Atwater, of Wallingford; (9) John, mentioned below.

John Cook, son of Samuel and grandfather of John Augustus, was born on Cook's Hill, Dec. 2, 1799, and was a lifelong farmer. In political matters he was a Democrat, and stood well in his own community, holding at different times local offices of trust and responsibility. Belonging to St. Paul's Church, he was one of the most influential members of the Episcopal communion in this region. On June 25, 1823, he married Mary Munson, of Northford, now North Branford, who bore him the following children: Samuel Merriman is mentioned below; Mary Ann married Tilton E. Doolittle, for a number of years State's Attorney at New Haven, and both are now dead; Ellen Augusta married Charles N. Jones, of Wallingford, and is now deceased; and George Delos (deceased) married Ella Belle Bullock, of Wallingford. John Cook, the father of these, passed away Jan. 1, 1858, at the age of fifty-eight years.

Samuel Merriman Cook was born in Wallingford, May 5, 1825, on what is known as Cook's Hill, named after the after the family some generations ago. On April 27, 1847, he married Sarah Ellen Bartholomew, daughter of Ira and Emie (Hall) Bartholomew. To this union were born three children: Frank, born Jan. 25, 1854, died July 11, 1884 (he left a daughter, who married H. L. Ingraham); John Augustus; and Abbey Bartholomew, born Dec. 9, 1864, married Samuel E. Hopkins, of Naugatuck.

John Augustus Cook was educated in the public school of Wallingford, and at the age of fifteen years began for himself a small express business. This he has built up by close attention and fine management until it has become one of the most considerable establishments of the day, employing ten men steadily, often more, and using about twenty-five horses. He has every kind of a vehicle needed in his business, and has one of the most completely equipped stables in the State. Mr. Cook has contracts for teaming and hauling with several factories, and never lacks work. In 1897 Mr. Cook put up one of the finest and most modern residences in Wallingford.

On June 20, 1888, Mr. Cook was united in marriage with Miss Carrie Mae Chandler, of Galveston, Texas, daughter of Charles Henry Chandler. To this union was born Samuel John Cook, Nov. 28, 1889. The family have long been associated with the Congregational Church, and take an active interest in its work. Politically Mr. Cook is a Republican, but devotes more time to his private affairs than to partisan matters. He is highly esteemed in the community in which his family has been represented so many years.

HENRY WILSON TYLER, a well-known mill man and farmer of Wallingford, makes his home at what is known as Tyler's Mills, where he was born Feb. 18, 1848.

Mr. Tyler comes of a family notably concerned with the affairs of New Haven county for many years. John Tyler, his grandfather, was born in the town of Branford, and when a young man was a sailor. He was in Boston during the turbulent years that ushered in the American Revolution, and was one of the "Indians" who threw overboard the tea in Boston harbor. During the bloody years that followed he was very active, and was on the vessel that brought over the treaty of peace. After giving up his seafaring life Capt. Tyler removed to that part of Wallingford near the line of the town of Branford, and bought the mills now known as Tyler's Mills, devoting himself to the mill business with his son, Ezra. About the time of the marriage of this son John Tyler moved back to Branford and took charge of a mill at Mill Plain. There he died, and was buried in Mill Plain cemetery. He married Ann Rogers, who after his death returned to Wallingford, and lived with her son Ezra at the old homestead, where she died. She was buried in Branford, by the side of her husband.

Ezra Tyler, the son referred to, and the father of Henry Wilson, was born in Branford in 1799, and came to Tyler's Mills in company with his parents in 1812. Here he grew up, and here his entire life was spent, in the milling business. In connection with his gristmill he had a sawmill, and owned and farmed a large tract of land. He was one of the successful men of his day, and commanded the hearty and unstinted respect and confidence of all who knew him. A long and active life was his, and it was not terminated until he reached the age of eighty-four years. A member of the Episcopal Church for many years, he served as vestryman and warden. In his politics he was a Democrat, but did not seek for office or gain, and was a good citizen and a man of high character and aims. On Sept. 19, 1824, he married Jenette Bates (daughter of Parker Bates), who was born April 27, 1806. She was the mother of the following children: (1) George, born June 20, 1825, lives in Woodbury; (2) Harvey, born March 9, 1827, is now deceased; (3) Elsie, born July 11, 1829, married Munson Rogers, and both are deceased; (4) John, born Jan. 19, 1832, and (5) Ezra, born April 16, 1834, are deceased; (6) Jenette, born May 13, 1836, has never married; (7) Angenora, born Dec. 8, 1838, is deceased; (8) Miss Lucretia was born July 31, 1841; (9) Amanda, born March 17, 1844, married L. Lounsbury, of Southbury; (10) Emeline, born March 5, 1846, is unmarried; (11) Henry Wilson is mentioned below; (12) Ada C., born Feb. 24, 1850, died in infancy. Mrs. Ezra Tyler died on the farm, and was buried in Northford cemetery. Mr. Tyler married for his second wife Mary Bates, a sister of his first wife; they had no children.

Henry Wilson Tyler was educated in the district school, and worked on the farm and in the mill until he attained his majority, when he learned the trade of carpenter and joiner. For a number of years that was his occupation, but later he came to operate part of the farm and engaged in milling, and has become one of the solid and prosperous men of the community. He has built a new house on his place. He is still operating the mill, and in all his business transactions is regarded as one of the squarest men of the community. Mr. Tyler was married, in New Preston, Conn., to Miss Hattie M. Signor, a native of Roxbury, this State, and a daughter of John Signor. Six children have come to bless this union: Angenora, who married Charles Woliver; Lydia; David; John; Minnie; and George. Mr. Tyler is a Democrat, and a good citizen.

WILLIAM A. BARNES was born Nov. 18, 1850, at Roxbury, Conn., where his family is well known. His great-grandfather, Jabez Barnes, who was said to have been a native of Wales, was a seafaring man, and it is supposed died at sea. His great-grandmother, Martha (Atkins), a native of Middletown, Conn., lived to be nearly one hundred years old. Ithamar Barnes, our subject's grandfather, was born in Middletown, and settled in 1800 at Roxbury, engaging in business as a shoemaker and saddler. He and his wife, Ana Thomas, both lived to the age of seventy. She was born in either Roxbury or Woodbury. Her father, Ebenezer Thomas, is said to have been a captain in the Revolutionary army; he is buried in Roxbury.

George Barnes, our subject's father, was born Jan. 4, 1819, in Roxbury, where he has spent his life. After receiving a common-school education he engaged in farming, and for many years he has been interested also in the cattle business. As a citizen he is much respected. He married Julia Alling, who died aged seventy-three years. She was born in Woodbridge, New Haven county, daughter of Philo Alling, a farmer, who attained the advanced age of eighty years; her mother, Huldah (Lines), died in early womanhood, leaving a large family of children. George and Julia Barnes had six children, of whom five are living, as follows: Francis, George E., William A., Catherine A. (now Mrs. Noble Davenport) and Susan (who married Charles B. Minor. In the maternal line our subject is descended from ancestors who took a prominent part in the Revolutionary war and the war of 1812, and Roger Alling was the first treasurer of the Colony of New Haven.

Our subject obtained a common-school education in his native town, and when twenty years old left home to learn the trade of carpenter and joiner with Elliott P. Hine, of Southbury, this county. After working as a journeyman in Bridgeport and Waterbury for a time he went to Ansonia, in 1872, but remained only two years. In 1876 he returned to make his permanent home there, and with the exception of one winter spent in Florida in 1888 he has since resided in that place. During the first fifteen years he was in the contracting business he had a partner, S. B. Bronson, and they speedily acquired a large patronage in their line in the town, putting up numerous dwelling houses and other buildings. Since Mr. Bronson's retirement our subject has continued alone in business.

In 1877 Mr. Barnes married Miss Martha Lawton, a native of England, and daughter of Lewis and Rachel (Higginbotham) Lawton. Her father, who was a spinner by trade, died in Ansonia at the age of seventy-five; her mother lived to be over seventy years old. They reared a large family. Our subject has one son, George L., who is attending school.

Politically Mr. Barnes is a Democrat, and he has served two terms as assessor, two years as deputy judge, and several terms as a grand juror. In 1896 he was appointed on the board of charities by Mayor Webster, and after serving the term of two years was reappointed by Mayor Burton, to serve until 1901. In 1898 he was chosen president of the board, to serve one year. He is a member of Christ Church, Ansonia, of which he has been a vestryman for a number of years. Fraternally he is identified with George Washington Lodge, No. 78; Mt. Vernon Chapter, No. 34, R. A. M.; and Naugatuck Lodge, I. O. O. F., of Ansonia. He belongs to the Eagle Hose Company.

GEORGE BLACKSTONE, wholesale oyster dealer in New Haven, was born in Branford on the farm where he now resides, Feb. 6, 1859, a son of John Adam and Lucy (Booth) Blackstone. James Blackstone, his paternal grandfather, was a prominent farmer of Branford, in whose honor his son, Timothy B. Blackstone, erected the Branford Library, the finest in New England, at a cost of $900,000, for the maintenance of which he provided endowment funds of $300,000.

James Blackstone was born in Branford, where George Blackstone is now living, in 1793, where he died. He married Sarah Beach. The first ancestor of this family in America was the Rev. William Blackstone, a graduate in 1617 from Emanuel College, Cambridge, England, who was thereafter given Episcopal ordination in England. Not long after his ordination he embraced the Puritan faith, left his native country, and sought a home with the first settlers of Boston, on account of his Non-Conformist principles. He was the first settler of Boston, and when the Pilgrims arrived he was already on the ground. The Colony records show that he was the first person admitted as a freeman of the new government, May 18, 1631. John (1), his only son, married in 1692, and about 1713 moved to Branford. John (2), son of John (1), died in Branford Jan. 3, 1785, at the age of eighty-six. John (3), son of John (2), was born in Branford in 1731, and died Aug. 10, 1816, aged eighty-five years. Timothy, son of John (3), was born in Branford in 1766, and died in 1849, at the age of eighty-three; he was the father of James Blackstone, who was born in 1793, and died Feb. 4, 1886. Thus are outlined the five generations who have lived and died on the homestead of George Blackstone.

John A. Blackstone was born on the homestead where he passed his life, engaged in farming, and where he died in September, 1890, at the age of sixty-five years. He married Lucy Booth, who died in November, 1880, and they had three children: (1) Adelaide, who married Willis P. Hopson; (2)

Emma, who married Horatio Pond, and has one daughter, Alice Blackstone; and (3) George. The father was a Republican, but not active in politics.

George Blackstone was reared on the farm which has been his lifelong home, and obtained his education in the public schools. For fifteen years he has been engaged in the wholesale oyster business, proving a decided success in this line, his thorough knowledge of the business and his honorable and upright ways winning and retaining a good custom.

Mr. Blackstone was married, Dec. 27, 1899, to Mrs. Nellie Valentine, a native of Branford, and daughter of Alexander and Eliza J. (Tottem) Van Wie. The father, who was born in Albany, N. Y., died in 1898; he was a carriagemaker by trade, and was for fifteen years superintendent of the Branford Lock Works. He was a Republican politically. The mother is still living. They had a family of six children: John, Nellie (Mrs. Blackstone), Jane (deceased), Charles, Helena (deceased) and Frank. By her former husband Mrs. Blackstone had two children, William J. and Ethel Lena. Mr. Blackstone is connected with the Congregational Church, and in politics is a Republican. Mrs. Blackstone is a member of the Episcopal Church. They are both highly respected members of the community, and are much esteemed for their many good qualities.

HENRY J. SMITH, president of the Ansonia Lumber Co., at Ansonia, is one of the representative citizens of that town. The firm of which he is the head is the oldest lumber company in this section, and is the only one in Ansonia, their convenient location near the railroad and admirable system of business enabling them to meet all the demands of the large and growing trade in that locality.

Mr. Smith was born Oct. 1, 1831, in Oxford, this county, where his family has been prominent from an early day. Isaac Smith, his grandfather, also a native of the town, followed the blacksmith's trade there throughout his life, and died at the age of sixty years. He married Sarah Beardsley, who died aged sixty-five years, and they had a large family of children.

Philo Smith, our subject's father, was born in Oxford, and spent his life chiefly in the Naugatuck Valley. He was a fine mechanic, and followed the trades of carpenter, millwright and bridge builder, being especially noted for his work in the latter life. His death occurred at the advanced age of eighty-one years. Mr. Smith married Betsey Lum, who was born on Great Hill, daughter of Deacon Jonathan and Charity (Frazier) Lum, and died aged fifty-eight years. She was one of a family of eight children, none of whom are now living. Deacon Lum was a well known man of his day in this section, and made his home successively at Derby or Great Hill, Woodbury and Oxford, where he died aged sixty years. Mrs. Lum lived to be over seventy years old. Our subject's parents were both devout members of the Methodist Church, and were much esteemed in the community. They had two children, but our subject was the only one that lived to maturity.

Henry J. Smith's early years were spent upon a farm, and after completing a course in the district schools he attended the high school at Birmingham. At the age of seventeen he began to serve an apprenticeship at Birmingham as a carpenter and joiner, but after the completion of his apprenticeship he went to New Haven to study architecture with the late Henry Austin. For some years he followed that profession successfully in New Haven, and about 1861 he removed to Ansonia and entered the employ of Capt. John Lindley, then postmaster, as clerk in the post office and general store. In 1864 he was employed by Willis & Lewis Hotchkiss, lumber dealers, as clerk and bookkeeper, this arrangement continuing until the organization of the W. & L. Hotchkiss Lumber Co., when he was made secretary and treasurer. Ten years later the company was merged into the Ansonia Lumber Co., and Mr. Smith served as treasurer of that organization until the death of the Hotchkiss brothers, when he became president of the organization. He is also identified prominently with other business interests in the city, and is now vice-president of the Ansonia Flour & Grain Co., and president of the Savings Bank of Ansonia. Politically he is a Republican, and he served two years as town clerk before the separation from Derby, and four years as selectman. When the city was first organized he was elected alderman from the Fifth ward, and he did effective work as a member of the first board in shaping municipal affairs.

In 1857 Mr. Smith married Miss Susan A. Wheeler, who was born in the town of Monroe, Fairfield county, one of the four children of Samuel Wheeler and his second wife, Sabra (Seeley). Her father, who lived to the age of eighty-five years, was a lifelong resident of Monroe, where he followed the carpenter's trade in connection with farming. Mr. and Mrs. Smith have one son, Samuel W., who is now the head of the firm of S. W. Smith & Co., druggists of Ansonia. He married Miss Mary Fessenden, and they have had four children, of whom three are living: Pauline, Henry J. and Gertrude. The family is prominent socially, and is identified with Immanuel Church, West Side, our subject being a vestryman. He is one of the well-known Freemasons of this section, being a member of George Washington Lodge, F. & A. M.; Mt. Vernon Chapter, R. A. M.; and the Veterans' Association.

BENJAMIN L. BRONSON, a leading agriculturist of Wolcott, is a worthy descendant of an old and honored New England family, which was established in this country by John Bronson, an early settler of Cambridge, Mass. In 1636 he came with Rev. Mr. Hooker's colony to Hartford, Conn., and the following year took part in the Pequot war. He removed to what is now Farmington, Conn., in 1641, and was one of the seven pillars of the church, which was organized at that place in 1652. He died Nov. 28, 1680. His children were Jacob, born in January, 1641; John, born in January, 1644; Isaac, born in November, 1645; Mary; Abraham, a resident of Lyme, Conn.; Dorcas, wife of Stephen Hopkins; and Sarah.

John Bronson (2) was born in Hartford, and removed with his parents to Farmington, but later came to Mattatuck, now Waterbury, where he spent the remainder of his life. He had seven children, whose names and years of birth were as follows: John (3), 1670; Sarah, 1672; Dorothy, 1675; Ebenezer, 1677; William, 1682; Moses, 1686; and Grace, 1689.

John Bronson (3) was born in Waterbury, in 1670, and there grew to manhood, but subsequently he removed to Southington, Conn., where he spent the remainder of his life. In January, 1697, he married Rachel Buck, of Wethersfield, Conn., and to them were born the following children: John, Nov. 21, 1698; David, Aug. 9, 1704; Jonathan, May 14, 1706; Joseph, June 15, 1708; Rachel, July 6, 1710; Mary, Jan. 30, 1712; and James, Nov. 20, 1713.

Jonathan Bronson, son of John (3), spent his entire life in Southington, dying there Aug. 20, 1751. He was married, May 17, 1732, and had ten children: Asahel, born Oct. 25, 1733; John, in 1735; Ann, March 30, 1737; Abigail, Feb. 18, 1739; Jonathan, Dec. 24, 1740; a son (who died unnamed), Jan. 20, 1743; Zadac, Aug. 7, 1745; Huldah, April 18, 1747; Lois, Jan. 6, 1749; and Isaac, June 20, 1751.

John Bronson, son of Jonathan, was born and reared in Southington, and when a young man came to Wolcott, where he owned a farm. He was a hard working man and made farming his life occupation. He died Nov. 10, 1838, at the age of 103 years, 3 months and 25 days, and was buried in Wolcott. On March 30, 1758, he married Sarah Barnes, who was born Sept. 27, 1732, and died Dec. 17, 1804. For his second wife he married Mrs. Curtis Hall. He had six children: Joel, who was born March 9, 1759, and lived in Burlington, Conn.; Isaac, born July 19, 1761; Benjamin Barnes, who was born Aug. 19, 1763, and lived in Southington; Philenor, who was baptized April 21, 1766; Hannah; and John, born Jan. 31, 1776.

John Bronson, the youngest of this family and the grandfather of our subject, was a lifelong resident of Wolcott, and was one of its prominent and influential citizens, taking an active part in town and county affairs and doing all in his power to promote the general welfare. He was a soldier of the war of 1812. He married Hannah Root, of Farmington, Conn., who was born Feb. 14, 1781, and died Feb. 24, 1853, while his death occurred Nov. 25, 1866, and the remains of both were interred at Wolcott. Their children were Jarvis Root, born April 5, 1808; Sarah Ann, who was born April 1, 1811, and married George W. Carter; Stillman, the father of our subject; Pitkin, born May 2, 1815; and Sarah Maria, who was born June 18, 1823, and died Sept. 5, 1827.

Stillman Bronson, father of our subject, was born on the old homestead in Wolcott Sept. 11, 1812, and was provided with a good district school education. He followed farming on the place owned by R. Carter, a tract of 150 acres, upon which he made many improvements, and he was also interested in stock raising. His political support was first given the Whig party and later the Republican party, and in his church relations he was a Congregationalist. A man of industrious habits, upright and honorable in all his dealings, he commanded the respect and confidence of all with whom he came in contact, and was held in high regard. He died in 1891, and was laid to rest in Northeast cemetery. He married Charlotte R. Lindsley, who was born Dec. 21, 1816, a daughter of Lud and Hannah (Gaylord) Lindsley, and granddaughter of Benjamin and Keturah (Anger) Lindsley, of Bristol. She is still living with our subject on the old homestead, and is one of the oldest ladies of Wolcott. She is a good, consistent Christian, and possesses an excellent memory. Her children are as follows: Emerson R., who was born March 21, 1841, and died Feb. 21, 1846; Lucy S., who was born June 20, 1843, and was married, Oct. 31, 1867, to Benjamin C. Lum, now of New Haven; Harriet L., who was born Dec. 7, 1844, and died Nov. 10, 1869; E. Bruce, who was born Feb. 23, 1847, and died Oct. 7, 1862; Benjamin L., our subject, who was born July 16, 1849; Elliott, who was born May 13, 1851; Esther L. M., who was born July 16, 1854, and died Oct. 25, 1869; and Edith M., who was born Nov. 1, 1860, married Cornelius Tracy and resides in Waterbury.

During his boyhood Benjamin L. Bronson, our subject, attended the district schools, and, as soon as large enough to be of any assistance, he began to aid in the operation of the home farm, never leaving the parental roof. Since his father's death he has entire charge of the place, and is now successfully engaged in dairy and general farming, also stock raising. Enterprising and public-spirited, he takes a deep interest in the public welfare, and has most capably and satisfactorily filled the offices of selectman and member of the board of relief. He is a deacon in the Congregational Church, and merits and receives the respect and esteem of all who know him.

WILLIAM E. CURTISS, a veteran of the Civil war, is a leading wagon manufacturer of Ansonia, who, of late years, has found it necessary to restrict his business to orders, his general trade exceeding his facilities. His shop is well equipped for all kinds of work, and in addition to the manufacture of wagons he carries on a general business as a horse shoer, being now the oldest blacksmith in the town. As a self-made man and a most highly esteemed citizen his biography will be of special interest.

Mr. Curtiss was born May 28, 1850, in Newtown, Conn., where his ancestors were early settlers. Ezra Curtiss, our subject's grandfather, was a farmer in Newtown and lived to a good old age. William Curtiss, the father of our subject, was born and reared at the old homestead in Newtown, and learned the timber's trade, which he followed for some years. In 1862 he enlisted in Co. C, 17th Conn. V. I., as a private, and he died in the service at the age of fifty years. His wife, Sarah Fowler, a native of Philadelphia, died aged forty-five years. They had six children, of whom five are living, as follows: Eilen, who married David Downs; William E., who has been twice married; Georgia F., deceased; Theodore D., unmarried; Katie E., who married Clarence Blatchley; and Sylvia A., who became Mrs. Soliday.

The early education of William E. Curtiss was secured in the common schools of Newtown. In 1864, at the age of fourteen, he enlisted as a private in the Third Battery, and served until the close of the war, much of the time having been spent on the breast works at Petersburg. Upon his return to the North in 1865, he learned the blacksmith's trade in Oxford, New Haven county, serving an apprenticeship of three years and eleven months with Nicholas French. He then worked as a journeyman for a short time for Wesley Cowan, in the town of Trumbull, but later returned to Oxford and worked two years for Mr. French, when the "freshet" broke up the business. In 1875 he located at Ansonia, and after working one year for French & Mackey he engaged in business with Peter B. Mackey, continuing two years. His next venture was the opening of the "Colburn Shop," which he conducted three years, and he built his present shop at the corner of Jackson and Holbrook streets.

Oct. 13, 1873, Mr. Curtiss married Miss Martha Tuttle, a native of Huntington and daughter of Marvin Tuttle, a well known farmer. She was a consistent member of the Methodist Church for some years previous to her death, which occurred May 6, 1891, at the age of thirty-seven. On June 15, 1893, Mr. Curtiss married Miss Zenia E. Burr, who was born in Southbury, a daughter of Erastus Burr, a prominent citizen. Mr. Curtiss has two children, both by the first marriage: Edward M., now in business with his father, married, Oct. 12, 1890, Miss Evelyn T. Braley, daughter of Wesley Braley, of Derby, Conn.; and Nettie C. is at home. Politically our subject is a staunch Republican, but his only official service consisted of one year as constable. In his religious views he is liberal, and his wife belongs to the Episcopal Church. Mr. Curtiss is actively identified with a number of fraternal organizations, including the K. of P., the

A. O. U. W., and T. M. Redshaw Post, No. 75, G. A. R., in which he now holds the office of commander, and has held other positions in the past.

CORNELIUS W. MUNSON. Among the energetic, enterprising and successful citizens of Beacon Falls, none stands higher in public esteem than the subject of this sketch, who follows both carpentering and farming. A native of New Haven county, he was born in Waterbury Sept. 14, 1846, and is the only child of Cornelius and Polly (Wellton) Munson, the former born in the town of Oxford, the latter in Waterbury. In early life the father followed the occupation of farming, but later worked as a mechanic in Waterbury, where he died six months before the birth of our subject. He was a Whig in politics. The mother died Feb. 12, 1885, at the age of seventy years.

When Cornelius W. Munson was five years old his mother married again and removed from Waterbury to a farm in Wolcott, where he grew to manhood, his education being acquired in the schools of the neighborhood. Returning to Waterbury, he learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed at that place for five years, and then came to what is now the town of Beacon Falls, but which at that time was known as Oxford, where he worked at his trade for the same length of time. The following year he operated his step-father's farm in Wolcott, and then returned to Beacon Falls, where he has since worked at his trade in connection with farming, owning and cultivating a valuable place of 135 acres, a mile and a half from the village of Beacon Falls.

On Dec. 26, 1860, Mr. Munson was married to Miss Jennie L. Osborn, a native of Bethany, this county, and a daughter of George and Cynthia (Brooks) Osborn, well known farming people. Fraternally our subject is a member of Court High Rock, Foresters of America, of Beacon Falls, and religiously is a member of the Episcopal Church. He affiliates with the Democratic party, and for the past ten years has been a selectman, with the exception of a year or two, now serving as first selectman. He is also a member of the school board, has filled other local offices, and twice represented his town in the State Legislature in a most creditable and acceptable manner. He is genial, courteous, enterprising and progressive, of commendable public spirit, and reflects credit on the community which has honored him with office.

JOHN E. LUNDIN, manager and treasurer of the Naugatuck Co-Operative Co., is one of the leading and influential Swedish-American citizens of Naugatuck. He was born in Lilla Hestra, Sweden, May 17, 1850, and is a son of Peter and Gustava (Magnuson) Erickson, natives of the same place. The father was a contractor and builder, and also a farmer in the old country, where he has spent his entire life. The mother died in January, 1881.

The grandfather of our subject was an agriculturist, and the great-grandfather was a soldier.

John E. Lundin is the eldest in a family of seven children, the others being Mary, who died in infancy; Joseph, a contractor and builder in Sweden; Mary (2d), wife of Alfred Magnuson, a blacksmith of Lafayette, Ind.; Annie, wife of M. Peterson, a farmer of Sweden; Selma, wife of August Fredell; and Nathnael, a contractor, builder and cabinet-maker, who married Hulda Magnuson.

During his boyhood Mr. Lundin attended the common schools of his native land, and when his education was completed worked with his father at the carpenter's trade. In the spring of 1880 he bade good-by to home and friends, and came to the United States, first locating in Pennsylvania, where he worked as a laborer for a time. Removing to Portland, Conn., he worked in a shipyard there for one season; was next employed in a clock shop at Thomaston, this State, one winter; and for two months again worked in the same shipyard at Portland. In 1881 he came to Union City, this county, and was in the employ of W. H. K. Godfrey, a manufacturer of novelties, for a few months, at the end of which time he secured a position in the Naugatuck Malleable Iron Foundry, where he worked for fourteen years. On the formation of the Naugatuck Co-Operative Co. he became manager and treasurer, and is still filling those offices to the entire satisfaction of the company. He is an upright, reliable business man, painstaking and energetic, as well as progressive and enterprising, and to these characteristics may be attributed his success in life.

Mr. Lundin was married, Dec. 24, 1881, to Miss Ida C. Johnson, also a native of Sweden, and to them have been born two children, Alice A. and Ernest E. Our subject casts his ballot with the Republican party, but takes no active part in politics, and when nominated burgess of Naugatuck refused the honor, preferring to devote his undivided attention to his business interests. He has served as grand juror, however. He belongs to a local Swedish society, and is a prominent member of the Swedish Lutheran Church of Naugatuck, which he was instrumental in founding, and in which he has since served as deacon and also organist (gratuitously) for many years.

CLARENCE WALES WILLIAMS, a progressive and enterprising farmer of Cheshire, New Haven county, was born in Manchester, Hartford Co., Conn., March 19, 1842, and is of English descent, being a lineal descendant in the eighth generation of Robert Williams. His paternal grandfather, William Williams, was a farmer of Lebanon, Conn., where he was born Aug. 2, 1762. He was a soldier in both the Revolutionary war and the war of 1812. His second wife, Lydia, was a daughter of Joseph Loomis, a farmer of Lebanon. Their son,

William Chauncey Williams, father of Clarence W., was born in Lebanon Oct. 23, 1800, and was reared and educated there. He became quite a prominent physician and surgeon at Manchester, Hartford county, where he continued in practice up to the time of his death, which occurred Oct. 6, 1857. In Ashford, Conn., he married Julia White Cook, a native of that place, who died in Hartford July 19, 1875, at the age of sixty-seven. To them were born four children, namely: William C., a physician, who died in Cheshire in 1895; Aaron W. C., a resident of Hartford, who is connected with the Capewell Horse Nail Co.; Julia Elizabeth, who married H. C. Burgess, and died in Middletown, Conn.; and Clarence Wales. Aaron Cook, the maternal grandfather of our subject, was a blacksmith of Ashford. He married Elizabeth White, and to them were born two children, Julia White and Aaron.

Clarence Wales Williams received his education in the schools of Manchester, Hartford county, passing his boyhood in that town. He has always followed farming, and for a time he also worked for George S. Lincoln & Co., of the Phoenix Iron Works at Hartford. Since 1864 he has made his home in Cheshire, and has been actively identified with its agricultural interests. He is a staunch supporter of the Republican party, and has most efficiently served as district or school committeeman.

In 1864, in Cheshire, Mr. Williams married Miss Sarah Elizabeth Booth, a native of that town, and a daughter of Nathan and Sally (Ives) Booth, who were also born there. The father, who was a civil engineer, died in Cheshire in 1886, the mother in June, 1876. In their family were four children: Mary, who married Horace Brooks, and died in New Haven; Ann, who died unmarried; Isaac, who died young; and Sarah E., wife of our subject. Mr. and Mrs. Williams have one child, Elizabeth Booth, who was born in Cheshire July 13, 1865, and is now the wife of Samuel L. Norton, of Cheshire. They have two children—Birdsey, now (1901) nine years of age; and Ruth, aged seven.

JOSEPH FREEBERG, a prominent and thoroughly representative Swedish citizen of Branford, a molder by trade, was born July 26, 1860, in Mossebo, Vestergatand, Sweden, son of Andreas and Sarah (Peterson) Freeberg.

Mr. Freeberg was reared in his native town, remaining there until he reached the age of fifteen years, and received a somewhat limited education in the local schools. He served an eight-year apprenticeship at the trade of glass blowing in the town of Mossebo, and in Stenenge, Halland, Sweden. When his apprenticeship was finished and his trade was mastered Mr. Freeberg determined to seek a new home in the United States, where so many of his countrymen had tried their fortunes with satisfactory results. Leaving his native country, he landed in due time in New York City May 22, 1880, and thence came directly to Connecticut. For a time he followed various vocations, and worked in different localities until 1881, when he located in Meriden, working at the molder's trade there for a number of years. This was his vocation in Naugatuck and Bridgeport, Conn., and at Wilmington, Del. In 1890 he came to Branford, where he has resided to the present time. On his arrival there he secured employment in the Malleable Iron Works, and has never sought another situation.

Mr. Freeberg was married, March 29, 1884, to Anna, daughter of Nels Peter Nelson, of Skone, Sweden, and has one daughter, Josephine Amelia. Mr. Freeberg is a member of the Swedish Lutheran Church of Branford, and his upright character and straightforward integrity are highly valued, not only by his associates in the church, but by all who have come to know him in the community. He holds membership in Centennial Lodge, No. 100, I. O. O. F., of Naugatuck; the New England Order of Protection; and the Molders Union, No. 82, of Branford. In politics he has from the first espoused the cause of the Republican party.

WILLIAM PATRICK WILSON, M. D., was born March 6, 1857, in Montreal, Canada, a son of John Wilson, who was born in the County of Durham, England, and who married Miss Mary Ann McCarthy in Montreal, Canada. Coming to this country, he enlisted in the Union army, and was killed at the battle of Fort Fisher. John Wilson was a man of extensive military experience, and had served in both the English army and navy. At the time of his enlistment he was connected with the Watertown Arsenal. He was sergeant of a company in the 12th Mass. Volunteer Cavalry at the time of his death, in 1864, two years after the removal of his family to Boston from Montreal.

William Patrick Wilson obtained his early education in the Boston schools. At the age of seventeen he began the study of music, to which he devoted nearly seven years. When twenty-eight years of age he took up in earnest the study of medicine, to which he had long been inclining, and made it his life work. For two years his brother, John J. Wilson, a well-known physician of Bristol, was his preceptor, and in 1887 he entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons, at Baltimore, from which he graduated with honor in March, 1890. After three months' service in the Baltimore hospitals he came to Wallingford to engage in his profession, and in a surprisingly brief time had established himself in the confidence and respect of the community. The success which attended him in several exceedingly difficult operations did much to make him known as a surgeon of high merit.

Dr. Wilson is a Democrat, was appointed health officer in 1895, and is now serving his second term. In 1898 he was elected school visitor for three years. He is a member of the State and County Medical Societies, and is enrolled with the Hibernians, Knights of Columbus, Ancient Order of Foresters and T. A. B. In religion he is a member of the Holy Trinity (Roman Catholic) Church. He is a hard student, and is determined to keep up with his profession if wide reading and close study can avail. In youth he was a hard student, averaging fifteen hours a day with his books.

Dr. Wilson was married, Oct. 9, 1895, to Miss Elizabeth D. Flynn, of Hartford, daughter of Daniel Flynn, one of the leading grocers of that city for many years. Their union has been blessed with the following children: William Norbert, born July 21, 1896; Mary Elizabeth, Nov. 7, 1898; and Rose Genevieve, April 29, 1900.

MRS. CLARA BEISIEGEL, nee Schwartzweller, is well known and highly respected throughout the town of Woodbridge, New Haven county, where she has made her home for almost half a century. She was born July 17, 1830, in Bavaria, Germany, and possesses many of the admirable characteristics of the Teutonic race which make them so thrifty and contented a people.

Matthias Schwartzweller, the father of Mrs. Beisiegel, was born in the Province of Bavaria in 1798, son of John and Margaret Schwartzweller, who spent their entire lives there. The grandfather of our subject was an extensive farmer and property owner, and her father also followed agricultural pursuits in his native province until called to his final rest, in 1886. He married Christina Hans, who was born in Bavaria in 1799, and died in 1857. Mrs. Beisiegel is the eldest of their children, the others being Jacob, who remained in Germany; Mary, wife of Frederick Schlechtweg, of Bristol, Conn.; Peter, who died in Bristol, Conn.; Adam, now deceased, who was a resident of New York City; Margaret, who married Matthias Glade, and died in that city; and John, who also died in New York.

Mrs. Beisiegel was reared and educated in her native land, and in 1853 emigrated to the United States, locating in Maine, where she secured employment. Being unable to give up thoughts of the Fatherland, she soon returned to Germany, but after visiting her old home she again crossed the ocean, landing in New York. Not long afterward, at the age of twenty-six, she was united in marriage with Jacob Beisiegel, also a native of Germany, who was born Dec. 25, 1827, in Hessen-Darmstadt, son of Philip and Katherine (Miller) Beisiegel, who had thirteen children. Philip Beisiegel, father of Jacob, was a farmer and property owner, and was engaged in agriculture until his death, which occurred before his son emigrated to this country. Mrs. Katherine Beisiegel, mother of Jacob, came to this country late in life with several of her children, making her home in Buffalo, N. Y., until she died, at the age of seventy-nine years. Coming to America in 1854, Mr. Beisiegel found employment in Red Bank, N. J., for about six months, and then came to Woodbridge, where he was employed on a farm about two years. He next went to New York City for a while, was married there in January, 1857, and with his wife came to Woodbridge, where he rented a small farm. In 1860 he bought the farm situated in the northwestern part of the town, near Milford meadow. In 1870 he also bought the Giles Perkins farm, where he and his wife spent the greater part of their lives, and where his youngest son now lives. Mr. Beisiegel died Jan. 28, 1894. He was a Republican in politics, and always manifested a lively interest relative to the welfare of the town.

To Mr. and Mrs. Beisiegel were born children as follows: Mary A. is the wife of Albert Liefeld, of New Haven, and they have two children; Kate is a trained nurse, having taken a course in the Connecticut Training School for Nurses; Jacob, a prominent farmer of Woodbridge, is represented elsewhere in this volume; Clara is the wife of Edwin Buhles, of Meriden, now residing in Pasadena, Cal., and has one child; Julia is the wife of Charles Barker, a farmer of Woodbridge, and they have two children; Amelia resides with her mother; John, born July 19, 1867, died Feb. 24, 1876; Frank B. married Grace Baldwin, of Woodbridge, and they have three sons.

Mrs. Beisiegel at present owns a valuable farm of seventy-six acres in the southern part of the town, and she has displayed excellent business and executive ability in its management. Although seventy-one years of age, she is still an active worker and devotes considerable time to her dairy and to vegetable growing. Her family is one of prominence in Woodbridge, and nearly all hold membership in either the Calvary Baptist Church of New Haven or the Congregational Church of Woodbridge.

WILLIAM B. BLACKMAN, for many years a successful business man of Ansonia, was born May 4, 1844, in Easton, Conn., son of Harvey and Phebe (Treadwell) Blackman. The Blackman family has long been known as one of the oldest in this section, and our subject traces his descent through nine generations to Rev. Adam Blackman, of whom Cotton Mather says: "He was a useful preacher of the gospel, first in Leicestershire and then in Derbyshire, England," and was the first preacher at Stratford, settling there in 1630. Ebenezer Blackman, grandson of Rev. Adam Blackman, was the ancestor of the Blackman families of Newtown and Monroe. Jehiel Blackman, our subject's grandfather, was a farmer in Monroe, Conn., and died there.

Harvey Blackman, who was born and reared in Monroe, learned the blacksmith's trade, afterward following business pursuits in Connecticut, and later farming in Michigan. He died in Battle Creek, Mich., in 1888, at the age of sixty-eight. In religious faith he and his estimable wife were Methodists, and both were much respected among their associates. He married Phebe Treadwell, who was born in Weston, Conn., before the division of the town. Her father, Daniel H. Treadwell, who died at Easton in October, 1867, at the age of eighty-seven, was well known in Fairfield county, where he was engaged in business for many years as a builder and wheelwright. Her mother, Hannah (Lyon) Treadwell, was a native of Redding, and died at Easton in July, 1861, aged seventy-seven. Mrs. Phebe Blackman died at Long Hill, Trumbull, in November, 1844, at the age of twenty-four, when our subject was but six months old. She was the youngest in a family of four children. The last survivor, Sarah, widow of Henry Platt, died in Bethel, Conn., June 4, 1901, aged eighty-three.

William B. Blackman spent his early years in Easton, and attended the common schools until he reached the age of fifteen. Going to Ansonia, he learned the plumber's and tinner's trade with Martin L. Blackman, with whom he remained a little more than six years. He then spent four years in Derby and New Haven, and eighteen months at various points in Michigan and Indiana. In the fall of 1871 he returned to Connecticut, and for several years worked as a journeyman and foreman in Derby and Ansonia. In 1879 he started in business independently, opening a shop in Main street, Ansonia, where he remained seventeen years, until 1896, when he built a shop at No. 4 Crescent street. For fourteen years of the seventeen his cousin, Charles M. Platt, son of Henry and Sarah Platt, before mentioned, was associated with him in business, under the firm name of W. B. Blackman & Co. He bought out Mr. Platt's interest in 1897. In connection with plumbing he carried on contracting and jobbing, and while on Main street the firm had a large store and dealt in stoves, crockery, glassware, tinware and house furnishing goods. With one exception Mr. Blackman was in business longer in this line than any one else in the city. In 1892 he built a house on the lot adjoining his shop, and his residence was built upon the same lot in 1893. Recently, however, Mr. Blackman sold his house and shop in Ansonia, and removed his home and business to Torrington, Conn., where he is associated with the E. A. Perkins Electric Co., a joint-stock concern doing electrical work, plumbing, heating, lighting, etc., and dealing in supplies. Mr. Blackman is superintendent of the plumbing department.

Politically Mr. Blackman has affiliated with the Democratic party, but he believes in the principles of prohibition. His advice has always been valued in local affairs, and he was a member of the board of relief to serve until 1900. Socially he is a member of the Order of the Golden Cross, and a charter member of the Knights of Honor and the A. O. U. W., in both of which he has passed nearly all the chairs. For years he and his wife have been leading members of the Methodist Church, in which he is now trustee, and has served in nearly all of the offices in the society at various times, including those of secretary, librarian, superintendent and treasurer of the Sunday-school. In 1806 Mr. Blackman married Miss Ella J. Platt, a native of Washington, Conn. Her father, John T. Platt, a prominent member of the Congregational Church at Washington, is now eighty years of age. He is well known in his section, where he has been engaged in farming for many years and also conducted a stage route for a time. Mrs. Blackman's mother, Sarah (Hopkins) Platt, a native of Mansfield, died in Washington in November, 1804, aged seventy-nine years, and of three children two are living, Mrs. Blackman and a sister, Mrs. Fannie E. Fenn, of Washington, Connecticut.

HENRY H. GRISWOLD, of North Guilford, agriculturist, is a lineal descendant of (I) Michael Griswold, born in 1610, the first of that name in Wethersfield, Hartford Co., Conn., who emigrated from England in 1645. By his wife, Ann, he had the following children: Thomas B., born Oct. 22, 1646; Hester, May 8, 1648; Michael, Feb. 14, 1652, died young; Abigail, June 8, 1655; Isaac, Sept. 30, 1658, married Elizabeth Bradley, who died June 13, 1727; Jacob, April 15, 1660, died July 28, 1737; Sarah, Sept. 30, 1662; and Michael, Jan. 7, 1667.

(II) Thomas B. Griswold, son of Michael, was born in the town of Wethersfield, and died there. He married Nov. 22, 1672, Mary (surname unknown), and to them were born five children: Thomas, Jan. 11, 1674, married Sarah Bradley, of Guilford, and died there Oct. 19, 1729 (he was the first of the Griswold family in Guilford); Jacob, Feb. 5, 1676, married Abigail Hand; Martha, Aug. 20, 1678; Michael, Jan. 28, 1681, married Mary Gilbert; and Samuel.

(III) Samuel Griswold, of the above mentioned children, was born in Wethersfield. On March 11, 1707, he married Mary Francis, and came with his wife and family to Guilford in 1724, passing the rest of his days there, and dying in September, 1733. Twelve children were born to them as follows: Mary, born July 20, 1708, married Silas Crane; Samuel, born Feb. 7, 1710, married Hannah Alkins; Jared, Jan. 8, 1713; Lucy, Dec. 8, 1714; Nehemiah, Aug. 12, 1716; Jeremiah, Feb. 8, 1718, married Bashne Howe; Moses, Nov. 2, 1719, married Ann Smithson, and died Sept. 30, 1770; John, June 23, 1721; Mary, June 23, 1723, married John Norton, of Guilford; Manus, Sept. 4, 1727; Aaron, April 6, 1729; and Sarah, June 22, 1731.

(IV) Nehemiah Griswold, son of Samuel, was born in Wethersfield, and in boyhood was brought by his parents to Guilford, where he was reared. He engaged in farming in North Guilford, and died there Dec. 31, 1787. On Jan. 23, 1745, he married Mary Graves, who was born in Guilford Sept. 6, 1716, and died Nov. 25, 1776, a daughter of Nathaniel and Elizabeth (Barnes) Graves, of Guilford. To this marriage were born seven children: Ruth, Sept. 23, 1745, died Sept. 29, 1748; Arubah, July 1, 1747, died March 12, 1807; Noah, Oct. 24, 1749, married Olive Bishop, and died in 1809; Nathan, April 16, 1751; Joel, May 15, 1753, died May 28, 1802; Zadoc; and Elizabeth, wife of John Dobill.

(V) Nathan Griswold, son of Nehemiah, was born in North Guilford, and died Sept. 29, 1816. He married June 21, 1781, Jerusha Stone, born Feb. 18, 1753, and died in North Guilford April 18, 1833, a daughter of Ebenezer and Sybil (Leet) Stone. Five children were born to this union: Jacob, March 30, 1782; Mary, Oct. 22, 1783, married Noadiah Norton, and died May 8, 1858; William, May 31, 1787, married first, Sophia Brown (who died April 28, 1829) and second, September, 1833, Polly Kelsey (who died April 7, 1872), and he died Feb. 28, 1805; Clarissa, June 24, 1879, died Feb. 28, 1811; and Betsey, in 1792, married James Tyler, and settled in Cheshire, N. Y.

(VI) Jacob Griswold, grandfather of Henry Hill Griswold, was born in North Guilford, and died there Nov. 20, 1855. He married, in May, 1805, Obedience Potter, born in Branford, Conn., Feb. 13, 1786, and died Feb. 27, 1872, a daughter of Medad Potter, a soldier of the Revolutionary war, and a blacksmith by occupation. Three children were born to them: Russell Medad, sketch of whom follows; Clarissa Mehitabel, July 18, 1814, married to Henry H. Hill; and Janette Adelia, April 30, 1822, married to Martin C. Bishop. Of these,

(VII) Russell Medad Griswold, father of Henry Hill Griswold, was born Feb. 15, 1806, in North Guilford, where he received a common school education, and he also took a course at Guilford Academy. He was a lifelong farmer in that town, and died there Aug. 31, 1865, his remains being interred in North Guilford cemetery. He was a member of the Episcopal Church, in politics a Democrat, and was a man well-known and highly respected as a good citizen, a loving father and kind husband.

Mr. Griswold was twice married, first time on June 15, 1834, to Polly F. Hill, born Aug. 10, 1812, and died Dec. 6, 1857, a daughter of Henry and Lucy (Doolittle) Hill. Children born to this union: Dorcas Augusta, May 1, 1835, died Dec. 4, 1837; Frances Dorcas, Sept. 19, 1838, married Jerome Coan and died Feb. 1, 1859; Ellen Frederica, May 24, 1843, died Dec. 25, 1845; Henry Hill, sketch of whom follows. The mother of these died Dec. 6, 1857, and Nov. 24, 1850, Mr. Griswold married Mrs. Emeline W. Parkhurst born July 19, 1816, and died in St. Albans, Vt., July 31, 1872.

(VIII) Henry Hill Griswold, whose name introduces this sketch, was born Dec. 15, 1847, in North Guilford, and was educated in part at the district schools of the locality, in part at the North Guilford Academy, followed by one term at the Bryant & Stratton Business College, Hartford. When his father died, our subject was eighteen years old, and from that time he conducted the home farm till 1891, since when he has occupied the Dudley farm, on which his wife was born.

On Nov. 5, 1873, Henry H. Griswold married Frances S. Dudley, who was born May 14, 1848. Mr. and Mrs. Griswold are members of the Congregational Church, and in politics he is independent. Well known and highly respected, a man who lives up to the "Golden Rule." Mr. Griswold has hosts of friends whose esteem he justly merits.

HILL. The Hill family, intermarried with the Griswolds, was early represented in Guilford, and (1) John Hill, the first of the name in that town, came to America from Northamptonshire, England, settling in Guilford in 1654, and dying there June 8, 1689. His first wife, Frances, died in May, 1673, and on Sept. 23, 1675, he wedded Catharine Chalker, born Sept. 8, 1657, a daughter of Alexander Chalker. Children born to John Hill: John, James, Sarah, Elizabeth and Ann.

(II) John Hill married Thankful Stow, who died Nov. 18, 1711; he passed away May 8, 1690. They became the parents of children as follows: Mary, born May 8, 1671, died Aug. 24, 1671; John, born July 18, 1672, married Hannah Highland, and died Feb. 10, 1740; Elizabeth, born Feb. 20, 1674, married James Ford; Mary, born Feb. 1, 1676, married Josiah Rossiter, and died July 14, 1739; Hon. Samuel, born Feb. 21, 1678, married Huldah Rugles, and died May 28, 1752; Nathaniel, born April, 1680, died Oct. 16, 1714; and James, born April, 1682, married Mary Fry, and died March 25, 1715.

(III) James Hill, born April, 1682, married Jan. 15, 1710, Mary Fry, and died March 25, 1715. Three children were born to them: James, Sept. 28, 1712; Lydia, Sept. 9, 1713; Mary, Dec. 1, 1715, married Eliphalet Hall, and died May 27, 1762.

(IV) James Hill, maternal great-grandfather of Henry Hill Griswold, died Oct. 1, 1798. He married April 15, 1744, Hannah Nettleton, who was born in 1724, and died Nov. 26, 1821. Twelve children were born to them: Hannah, born April 14, 1745, married Abner Hull; Sybil, born Oct. 10, 1746, married Ezra Parmelee; Mercy, born Feb. 26, 1748, married Absalom Kelsey; James, born Nov. 30, 1749, married Eleanor Hull; Noah, born Oct. 22, 1751, married Caroline Parmelee; John, born Feb. 4, 1754, died in the Revolutionary war, Aug. 5, 1777; Thankful, born Feb. 9, 1756, married Elias Parmelee, and died Oct. 9, 1799; Selah, born Feb. 3, 1758, married Sally Turner; Henry, born July 27, 1761; Joseph, born April 15, 1765, married Hester Butler, and died Sept. 28, 1840; Benjamin (twin brother of Joseph), died in 1849, married Jennie Stannard; and Molly, born Feb. 20, 1767.

(V) Henry Hill, maternal grandfather of Henry H. Griswold, was born at Killingworth, Middlesex Co., Conn., died March 28, 1834. He married Lucy Doolittle, who died in 1845, and four children were born to them: Henry Hall, May 21, 1810, and died March 18, 1886, married Clarissa M. Griswold; Polly F., born Aug. 10, 1812, married Russell Medad Griswold, and died Dec. 6, 1857; John, July 18, 1814, died same year; John, March 12, 1816, and died Feb. 1, 1881, married Polly S. Willard.

DUDLEY. The Dudley family, with which Mrs. Henry Hill Griswold is connected, ranks among the old-time settlers of the town of Guilford.

Jared Dudley, son of Capt. William, grandson of Joseph, and great-grandson of the first William Dudley, was born Nov. 17, 1727, in the town of Guilford, and like his ancestors was a lifelong farmer and prominent citizen. He married Dec. 25, 1754, Mary Chittenden, who died Nov. 18, 1821, at the patriarchal age of ninety-two years, and their children were as follows: Luther, born Sept. 16, 1755; Jared, June 29, 1757; Ruth, Jan. 23, 1762, married March 6, 1783, John Tyler; Eunice, Sept. 3, 1764, married Dec. 5, 1787, Jonathan Russell; Mabel, March 10, 1767, married Davis Ford, of North Branford, Conn.

Luther Dudley, great-grandfather of Mrs. Griswold, and a farmer by occupation, was born in Guilford Sept. 16, 1755, a son of Jared Dudley, and died Sept. 14, 1810. He married Jan. 27, 1779, Mary Chidsey, who died April 8, 1827, at the age of seventy-eight years, and seven children were born to them: Luther, born Sept. 6, 1779, died at sea Oct. 1, 1799; Loveman, born July 7, 1781; Erastus, May 9, 1783; Nathan, 1785; Frederick, 1787, died Jan. 18, 1803, being crushed to death by a cart wheel; Olive, 1790, settled in Alabama; Prosper, Aug. 10, 1793.

Erastus Dudley, grandfather of Mrs. Griswold, was born in North Guilford, and there passed his entire life in agricultural pursuits, dying June 11, 1872, and buried in North Guilford cemetery. He married, July 2, 1806, Ruth Fowler, who died Dec. 23, 1863, and also buried in North Guilford. Their children: Mary Louisa, born April 4, 1807, married Oct. 9, 1845, William Norton, of North Guilford; Fanny Elvira, born Sept. 23, 1808, married Ira I. Fenn, of Lacon, Ill.; James Hervey, born Nov. 4, 1811; Lois Rossiter, born March 6, 1814, married May 6, 1834, Joel Benton, of Mendon, Ill.; Luther Frederick (twin of Lois, but born the day after), March 7, 1814; Ruth Francis, born May 1, 1816, married David Bartlett, April 12, 1839; Erastus Franklin (twin of Ruth F.), Ebenezer Fowler, April 20, 1819; Nathan Chidsey, Feb. 23, 1821; Abbie Ann, March 22, 1823, married David D. Chittenden, Aug. 22, 1844. Of these,

Erastus F. Dudley, father of Mrs. Griswold, all his life followed agricultural pursuits on the farm whereon our subject, Henry H. Griswold, has lived since 1801, in which year Erastus died, his remains being interred in North Guilford cemetery. On Jan. 5, 1842, in North Guilford, he married Pamel F. Chittenden, daughter of Simon Chittenden, and children as follows were born to them: Louis Franklin, born Nov. 8, 1843, married Ellen Rowe; Frances Selina, born May 14, 1848, married Henry H. Griswold Nov. 5, 1873; and Jane Louisa, born Jan. 29, 1855, died May 2, 1855.

CHARLES IVES PARMELEE was born in Wallingford, Nov. 1, 1854, a son of Samuel Blakeslee Parmelee, who was born on North Elm Street, Wallingford, Aug. 9, 1824. For the last twenty-one years before his death Samuel B. Parmelee was a traveling salesman for Simpson, Hall, Miller & Co., his territory being mostly in the West and South. In politics he was a Republican, and unusually well posted on the topics of the day. Of a genial and companionable nature he had many friends among his patrons. Fraternally he was a Mason; in religious connection a member of the First Congregational Church. On Oct. 18, 1846, he married Miss Lavinia C. Cook, a daughter of George Cook, a tavern keeper on the stage route between New Haven and Hartford. Their children were: Mary C., born April 15, 1849, died unmarried March 3, 1893; Charles L.; and Carrie Belle, born Feb. 7, 1860, married O. H. D. Fowler.

Leander Parmelee, father of Samuel Blakeslee, was born in Killingworth, where the Parmelee family was settled from an early period in the history of the Colony. He was a farmer, and a leading man in his day. For twelve years he was high sheriff of New Haven county, and spent the greater part of his life in Wallingford. While he was sheriff it was his official duty to hang four men. His funeral is remembered as being one of the most largely attended ever held in Wallingford. He was father of the following children: Stephen Ives went to California where he died when twenty-one years old; Charles died at the age of twenty-one years; Samuel B. is noted above; Elizabeth married Lorenzo Lewis, of Wallingford; and Emily married George Cooley, of Meriden.

Charles L. Parmelee received his education in the schools of his native place, was a student for a year in Cargill's business college, about the same time in French's Private School at New Haven, and for a year and a half he was student of Claverack College (The Hudson River Institute). Mr. Parmelee was now about twenty-one, and he came back to Wallingford to take charge of his father's farm of 125 acres, and a tract of fifty-seven acres, which he purchased for himself. He is a practical and successful farmer, and on the side of his farm that touches the town he is proving a very successful real estate dealer, selling off a number of building lots which have been improved by the erection of many very elegant residences, and greatly increasing the value of his entire property. For thirteen years Mr. Parmelee conducted an extensive milk route in Wallingford which proved very remunerative, but which he was compelled to give up in 1896 on account of ill health.

Mr. Parmelee is a member of the Grange, and has been active in its work from the time of its organization. He is a member of the First Congregational Church, while his wife is an Episcopalian. In politics he is a Republican, but he has never been much interested in partisan affairs.

On Dec. 31, 1878, Mr. Parmelee married Miss Eliza J. Ives, who was born June 18, 1857, daughter of Othniel Ives, and died Oct. 14, 1890. Two children came to this union: Mildred L., born Jan. 11, 1880, and Frances Cook, born Feb. 21, 1889. Charles L. Parmelee was married Dec. 15, 1891, to Miss Edna G. Wooding, a daughter of Henry Calvin Wooding, of Wallingford. To this union were born Hazel Marian, Oct. 10, 1895; and Samuel Blakeslee, March 8, 1899.

PHILO BAILEY NORTON, the popular liveryman at Waterbury, was born Feb. 17, 1834, in Goshen, Litchfield county, this state, and descends from one of three Norton brothers who came from England prior to the Revolutionary war.

Mr. Norton's grandfather, great-grandfather and great-great-grandfather all bore the Christian name of Stephen, and his great-grandmother was named Experience. In the great-grandfather's family were four sons and one daughter: Jonathan, Stephen, Ephraim, one son who was killed in the Revolution (and it is thought that Jonathan also served in that heroic struggle), and Clarissa. The great-grandfather settled in Norfolk in 1760, but his son Stephen was born in Bristol in 1760, and died in Norfolk July 8, 1843. The latter, who was the grandfather of our subject, married Hannah McCoy, a native of Stonington, Conn., born Nov. 25, 1773, who died May 20, 1848. To this union were born thirteen children, in the following order: Anson, Sept. 5, 1789; Lavinia, Feb. 8, 1791; Sarah, July 4, 1793; Experience, Aug. 1, 1796; Amanda, June 30, 1798; Marina, July 15, 1801; Keziah, March 15, 1803; Charles L., Nov. 15, 1804; Clarissa, April 25, 1806; Alson, April 26, 1808; Riley, March 26, 1813; Uriel, Jan. 26, 1815; and Albert, Nov. 16, 1818.

Charles L. Norton, father of our subject, grew to manhood in Norfolk, where he married Ann M. Bailey, who was born Feb. 23, 1806, daughter of Philo Bailey. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Norton settled in Goshen, where their children were born, in the following order: Marie E., May 12, 1827; Mary Ann, July 5, 1832; Philo B., the subject of this sketch; Albert C., Nov. 1, 1838; Charles L., April 26, 1840; and Remus A., Dec. 23, 1844. Of these, the first born, Marie E., is married to Harvey Johnson, of Norfolk, Conn.; Mary Ann is the wife of Nelson D. Ford, of Winchester; Albert C. is in Montville, Ohio, engaged in farming; Charles L. is associated with Philo B. in the livery business; and Remus A., who formerly conducted the old farm in Goshen, is now retired. The parents of this family later in life retired to Winsted to a farm, where Mrs. Norton died Feb. 17, 1888, and Mr. Norton on April 15, 1889. He was a Democrat in politics, was a very prominent man in his day, and was first selectman of Goshen for many years.

J. B. Norton

Philo B. Norton, the subject of this sketch, grew to manhood on the home farm, on which he remained until Dec. 12, 1859, when he came to Waterbury and entered into his present business, being now the oldest liveryman in the city and owning the best equipped barns, as well as large blocks of real estate, improved and unimproved. On Nov. 5, 1860, he married Miss Nettie Cebelia Yale, a daughter of Charles Elihu Yale, and a sister of John B. Yale, whose biography will be found in full elsewhere. One daughter came to bless this union, Juliette S., now the wife of Joseph Graham, who resides in New York City. In politics Mr. Norton is a Republican, and in religion a Congregationalist, the family attending the Second Congregational Church. He is universally respected for his uniform courtesy and his inflexible integrity in business transactions.

GEORGE STILLMAN POND, the energetic and capable superintendent of the supply department of the Southern New England Telephone Co., with his principal office at New Haven, was born in Branford July 12, 1854, and is a son of Capt. Joseph W. and Mary (Hall) Pond. The paternal grandparents of George S. Pond were Harvey and Betsy (Linsley) Pond, and his great-grandparents were Elias and Martha (Howd) Pond.

On the Linsley side Mr. Pond is a descendant of Ebenezer Linsley, who was a native of Branford, and who married Betsy Cohan, of Guilford. He was a son of Ebenezer Linsley, and a grandson of Ebenezer Linsley, who was born in England and was one of the pioneer settlers of Branford. The family Bible which he brought from England is still in the possession of Capt. J. W. Pond, who is living at the time of this writing (1901) on the old family homestead at Indian Neck, where he was born July 6, 1820.

Harvey Pond, noted above, was a boatman and coaster, and followed the water all his life. His children were Russell, Joseph W., Harriet and Eliza A. (who married Henry Nichols).

Capt. Joseph W. Pond was reared in Branford, where he has always resided. For sixty-six seasons he had charge of a pleasure boat on Long Island sound, and during the winter months was engaged in the coasting trade. Capt. Pond was twice married. In 1845 he wedded Elvira Averill, who died in 1851. In 1852 he married Mary E. Hall, of the city of New York, who became the mother of four children: George S.; Jarvis A.; Elvira, who married George Rice; and Mary E., who is Mrs. Frank Mackay.

George Stillman Pond was reared at Branford, which has always been his home. He obtained his education in the local schools, and began his business career by assisting his father as a boatman. For ten seasons he was captain of a pleasure boat on Long Island Sound. On Sept. 1, 1883, he received his appointment to the position he now holds, with the Southern New England Telephone Co., and is regarded as one of the most capable and trustworthy men on the company's staff.

Mr. Pond was married, Oct. 10, 1875, to Hattie J., a daughter of James F. and Harriet (Plant) Morris, of Branford. To this union have come three children, Harry J., Walter G. and Olive H. Mr. Pond is a member of Widows Sons Lodge, No. 66, F. & A. M. He is also a member of Montowese Lodge, No. 184, New England Order of Protection, of which he is warden. In his political relations Mr. Pond is a Republican.

CAPTAIN ALFRED J. WOLFF, foreman in the machine department of the Scovill Mfg. Co., Waterbury, was born March 11, 1856, in Vosges, France.

Francis F. Wolff, father of our subject, was born in the same locality, in 1817, and came to the United States in 1865, making his first New-World home in Bridgeport, Conn., where he found employment as a blacksmith on the Naugatuck railroad. From there he removed to Waterbury, and here worked for the Farrell Foundry Co. up to about the time of his death in 1870. In his native land he had married Celestine Wolff, a first cousin, and of the same nativity, and three children were born to them: Lucian, Adrian, and Alfred J. Of these, Lucian is a machinist with the Scovill Mfg. Co.; and Adrian is foreman at the same works. The mother passed from earth in 1898.

Alfred J. Wolff was ten years old when brought by his parents to this country from his native land, and received his education in part at Vosges, France, in part at Bridgeport, Conn., for a few months, then in 1866, coming to Waterbury, where he finished his schooling. Mr. Wolff now entered life in earnest, commencing an apprenticeship to the tool-making trade with the Scovill Mfg. Co., after which he worked in New York two years. Then returning to Waterbury, he was in the employ of the Steele & Johnson Mfg. Co. In 1881 he took his present position with the Scovill Mfg. Co.

On Nov. 4, 1878, Mr. Wolff was married to Mary Thompson, of Waterbury, daughter of Richard Thompson, who came from Ireland, settling in Waterbury. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Wolff are: Alice, Alfred, Edward, Joseph, Sarah, Grace and Armand, all of whom are living. The family are members of the Roman Catholic Church, Sacred Heart Parish.

On June 11, 1876, Mr. Wolff enlisted in Company G, 2nd Regiment, Connecticut National Guard, in which he rose through the grades of Corporal and Sergeant to Second Lieutenant, receiving his commission in July, 1884. On June 21, 1886, he was commissioned as Captain. At the breaking out of the war with Spain, Captain Wolff, in accordance with orders from headquarters, made all preparations for service with his command, having recruited his company to 100 men, and, besides, having a nucleus of forty-five enlisted men in case it became necessary to form an additional company. In January, 1899, Captain Wolff was, at his request, placed on the retired list of the Conn. N. G. In politics he is a Democrat, and served with much acceptability on the board of finance of the Center School District, being chairman thereof for five years. Socially he is affiliated with the Foresters of America, the Royal Arcanum, the Woodmen of the World, and the Knights of Columbus.

JOHN H. GUERNSEY, postmaster of Waterbury, was born in Watertown, Litchfield Co., Conn., January 26, 1848, and traces his ancestry in America back anterior to the Revolution. The first Guernsey, having come from the Isle of Guernsey, England, settled in Old Milford, Conn., in Colonial days. Many of the early Guernseys were farmers, but all were men of brains, profound thinkers, and of deep resources; they were patriotic to the core, and took part in all the early struggles of the Colonists in preserving the integrity of the rights of the British crown, but when the time came were especially conspicuous in the struggle for the independence of the States.

John J. Guernsey, father of John H., was born Dec. 30, 1814, in the same house in Watertown in which his son was born. William Guernsey, father of John J., was born in the same town, Jan. 25, 1784, a son of Abijah Guernsey, a native of the same place. Joseph, the father of Abijah, was born in Milford.

William Guernsey, grandfather of John H., subject of this sketch, grew to manhood in Watertown. His mother, who bore the maiden name of Lucy Bellamy, was a daughter of Rev. Joseph Bellamy, who graduated from Yale College in 1735, was famous as an instructor and was the leading divine of his day. William Guernsey married Hannah Parker, of Wallingford, settled in Watertown, and there reared a family of five children, viz.: John J., father of subject; Philena, who was married to S. A. Clock, of Litchfield, Conn.; Nancy, who was married to Chester Russell, of Waterbury; Sherman, who was a veneer sawyer, was a resident of Terryville; and a daughter, Rebecca, who died at the age of twenty, unmarried. This family, with the exception of John J., have all been called away, the father having lived to be eighty-one.

John J. Guernsey was reared a farmer and grew to manhood in Watertown. He married Mary J. Schofield, of Stamford, Conn., a daughter of William Schofield, one of the oldest residents of Fairfield county. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Guernsey continued to reside in Watertown for many years, but finally removed to Cheshire. They became the parents of eight children, as follows:

Sherman was a farmer and died in New Haven; Lyman was a butcher and died in Cheshire; Rebecca is the widow of R. C. Benjamin, of New Haven; Truman was a civil engineer and dry goods merchant, and died in Crawfordsville, Ind., where he was engaged in business; John H. is mentioned below; Almira, deceased, married Henry Hubbell, of Cheshire; Lotta married John Phillips; and an infant died unnamed. Of the above named children, Sherman, Lyman and Truman were soldiers during the Civil war, and two of them were taken prisoners, but were subsequently exchanged, having fully maintained the ancient reputation of the family for military valor. In politics the father was first a Whig, but is now a Republican; in religious faith he is a Methodist. He and his wife are still living at this writing, January, 1902. They celebrated their golden wedding June 27, 1887.

John H. Guernsey lived on the home farm at Waterbury until fifteen years of age, and for a short time resided in the town of Prospect. His education was acquired at the old district school, and he was an ardent student, prolonging his studies far into the night. In 1871 he settled in Waterbury, where he first entered a contractor's office, and for four years kept books, drew plans, and acted as time-keeper; he next became a hardware clerk for D. B. Wilson, with whom he remained ten years. For the following eight years he conducted a most prosperous hardware business on his own account. He then sold out and devoted his attention to life insurance until Feb. 14, 1899, when he was appointed postmaster of Waterbury, a position he fills in the most satisfactory manner to the public and to the government.

In 1870 Mr. Guernsey was united in matrimony with Miss Alice E. Wooding, of Prospect, and a daughter of Wales L. Wooding, who is a descendant of one of the oldest families of the East. No children have blessed this union. In politics Mr. Guernsey is a sound Republican, and in religion he is liberal. Fraternally he is a Freemason and an Odd Fellow and a member of the Union League of Connecticut. Socially, he is of a jovial, happy disposition, with a kind word for everybody, and is by everybody held in the highest possible esteem.

JAMES DYER HOTCHKISS, Ansonia. Samuel Hotchkiss, probably of Essex, England (the traditional brother of John of Guilford, Conn.), whose name was written, respectively, Hodgke, Hodgkin, Hotchkiss, was at New Haven as early as 1641. In August, 1642, he married Elizabeth Cleverly, and he died Dec. 28, 1663, leaving six children: John, Samuel, James, Joshua, Thomas and Daniel. Of these, Ensign Joshua Hotchkiss, the fourth son, born Sept. 16, 1651, was a leading man at New Haven. He was twice (at least) married, and had children as follows: Marv, Stephen, Martha, Priscilla, Abraham, Desire, Isaac and Jacob.

Deacon Stephen Hotchkiss, second in Joshua's family, married, at New Haven, Dec. 12, 1704, Elizabeth, daughter of John Sperry, and their children were: Joshua, Elizabeth, Mary, Hannah, Elizabeth (2), Gideon, Stephen, Silas, Hannah, Bathshua, Benjamin and Noah. Of these,

Deacon Gideon Hotchkiss, born Dec. 5, 1716, married (first) June 18, 1737, Anna Brackett, who died, and he married (second) Mabel, daughter of Isaac Stiles, of Southbury. He settled in the southeastern part of the town of Waterbury about 1736, and when the Society of Salem was organized he was made a deacon of the church; was one of the founders and active supporters of the church and Society of Columbia (now Prospect); was a leading man of the town; and served in both the French and Revolutionary wars. He died Sept. 3, 1807, having lived to see 105 grandchildren, 155 great-grandchildren, and four of the fifth generation. His children, nineteen in number, were as follows: Jesse, David, Abraham, Abraham (2), Gideon, Huldah, Anna, Amos, Submit, Titus, Eben, Asahel, Benoni, Mabel, Phebe, Stiles, Olive, Mellicent and Amzi. Of these,

Asahel Hotchkiss, born Feb. 15, 1760, married, March 22, 1781, Sarah Williams, who died in 1794. On June 7, 1794, he married Phebe Merriman, of Cheshire. His children were as follows: Sally, Curtis, Dyer, Esther, Temperance, Asahel, Marcus and Phebe Maria. Of these,

Dyer Hotchkiss, born June 24, 1785, died Nov. 14, 1862. He married, June 12, 1809, Orra Pritchard, born Oct. 26, 1783, who died Nov. 19, 1872. Their children were: Charles, born Feb. 23, 1811; Henry, in September, 1812; Mary, Sept. 4, 1814; Amos H., April 18, 1816; Sarah E., in June, 1820. Of these,

Charles Hotchkiss married Electa Brace Jan. 3, 1833, and had children: Edward, Lucia, Henry, Albert, Fidelia and Eugene, all married and residing in Torrington, Conn., except Lucia, who is deceased, and Albert, in New York City. The father died Nov. 14, 1897, the mother in September, 1884. He was a deacon in the Congregational Church.

Henry Hotchkiss, second son of Dyer, married, May 23, 1835, Rosetta Beacher, and died May 8, 1893; she passed away May 14, 1897, the mother of children as follows: Franklin A., a farmer in Cheshire; Julius, who died in the army during the Civil war; Ella, who married Charles Russell, and lived in Plainville; Hattie; Jennie, Mrs. Todd, of East Farms; Libbie, wife of Hooker Hotchkiss, of Nantucket; and William, who married Julia Fenton, and is living in New Haven.

Mary Hotchkiss, third child of Dyer, married, Oct. 27, 1832, Zenas Potter, who died in 1856. She now lives with her first child, Ellen, wife of Fred Candee, in Baldwin avenue, Waterbury. She had two other children—Samuel, who died young; and Amelia, married to Luther Wilmot, and residing in Baldwin avenue, Waterbury (they have a family).

Amos H. Hotchkiss, fourth child of Dyer, and the father of our subject, is mentioned below.

Sarah E. Hotchkiss, fifth child of Dyer, married Harmon Payne June 11, 1843, and they reside at Bristol, Conn. They had three children: Martha married Charles E. Russell, and lives in Bristol; Maria married William Cook, and lives in Wallingford (she has one child); Orra died young.

Amos H. Hotchkiss, born April 18, 1816, married Sally Maria Scott Aug. 20, 1837, and they had children as follows: (1) Martha Ann, born June 10, 1838, died Jan. 13, 1839; (2) Mary Maria, born April 18, 1841; (3) Orra Jane, born Sept. 22, 1843; (4) James Dyer, a sketch of whom follows; (5) Alice Ruth, born in September, 1846; (6) Ann Eliza, born Feb. 16, 1848; (7) Sarah Rosette, born July 7, 1849, died Aug. 2, 1890; (8) Marcie Elizabeth, born May 30, 1851; (9) Esther Ellen, born Oct. 21, 1852; and (10) Edward Amos, born June 11, 1854. Of these,

(2) Mary M. was married, April 7, 1861, to David Morse, who died leaving two children, Jane and George B. Mrs. Morse lives with her daughter Jane, who is married to Thomas Williams, and resides at Buck's Hill, north of Waterbury. (3) Orra Jane married James Magin, a farmer of the town of Bethany, and has two children—Lucia married and living in Rhode Island; and William, at home. (5) Alice Ruth married Frank Wedge, of Naugatuck, where they reside. They have had children—Allie, wife of Leander Wheeler (they have three children, and reside in Waterbury); Josie; Julia; Elmore; and Chester, who resides at home. (6) Ann E. married Henry Dudley, and they reside in Ansonia. They have had children as follows—Amy, who married Russell Wheeler and has one child (they live in Washington); Cora, who married Charles Chadwick and has one child (they live in Ansonia); Stephen, living in Brooklyn; Edward, who married Alice Seymour, and lives in Derby; and Charles, residing at home. (7) Sarah R. married Stephen Johns, and died Aug. 2, 1890. (8) Marcie E. is unmarried, and lives in Naugatuck. (9) Esther E. married Edmon Hoyt, of Middlebury, where they have their home; they have one son, Jay. (10) Edward A. married Jane Schofield, and they live at the old home in Naugatuck; their children, all yet living at home, are: Walter, George, Ida, Tracey and Sarah. Edward A. is a past N. G. of Centennial Lodge, No. 100, I. O. O. F., of Naugatuck, and at the head of Beacon Valley Grange, in which he is an active worker. Amos H. Hotchkiss, the father of the above enumerated family of ten children, was a member of the G. A. R. He served as wagoner in the 23d C. V. I. during the Civil war, in which conflict the family was well represented, his brother Henry Hotchkiss, now of Torrington, having been a member of the band of the 1st C. H. A.; Franklin A., son of Henry, was a wagoner in Company A, 20th C. V. I.; Julius, son of Henry, was a private in Company A, 20th C. V. I.; Charles Russell, who married Ella, eldest daughter of Henry, was in Company A, 20th C. V. I.; Charles E. Russell, who married Martha Payne, daughter of Mrs. Sarah E. (Hotchkiss) Payne, was in Company A, 20th C. V. I.; James D., whose name introduces these lines, served in Company H, 8th C. V. I.; James Magin, his brother-in-law, also served in the 20th C. V. I.; and Henry Dudley, another brother-in-law, served in the 50th Ill. V. I.

James Dyer Hotchkiss, fourth in the order of birth of the ten children of Amos H. and Sally M. (Scott) Hotchkiss, and the subject proper of this sketch, was born Feb. 24, 1845, in Naugatuck, and received a liberal education in the schools of the district. On Sept. 8, 1872, he married Martha E. Dougal, and afterward removed to Ansonia, in 1875. They had three children: William D. married Agnes Mathews, of Waterbury, and has one child, Reba May; they live in Ansonia. Albert E. died at the age of five years. Amos L. lives at home.

James D. Hotchkiss is a member of the F. & A. M., Shepherd's Lodge, No. 78, of Naugatuck; a P. C. of Ansonia Lodge, No. 24, K. of P.; a P. C. of Thomas M. Redshaw Post, No. 75; and past captain of William B. Wooster Camp, No. 25, Sons of Veterans, located in Ansonia.

ERWIN J. CRAWFORD, an influential citizen of West Haven, long prominently identified with the real estate and insurance interests of the town, was born Jan. 22, 1843, in Johnson, Lamoille Co., Vt., a son of Artemus and Aphia (Hadley) Crawford.

Artemus Crawford was a native of Franklin, N. H., and was reared upon a farm in that State, thence removing to Vermont, where in later years he became a silk merchant, driving to country stores, carrying his goods with him. In 1849 he was smitten with the "gold fever," and set out for California, and, as he was never heard of afterward, it is believed he perished en route. On Jan. 15, 1841, he married Aphia Hadley, daughter of Joseph and Achsah (Wells) Hadley. The latter, a native of Vermont, lived to the extraordinary age of ninety years. Mr. Hadley was a member of a family known among the early pioneers of Morristown, Vt., and passed his life there and in the adjoining towns, following farming. Mr. and Mrs. Hadley had three children: Volney, Orson and Aphia (our subject's mother). To Artemus and Aphia Crawford were born two children: Ellen, who married Henry Whiting, at present a judge of the city court in Cripple Creek, Colo.; and Erwin J. The mother died Oct. 16, 1900.

Erwin J. Crawford came from Vermont to Middlefield, Conn., when a youth of eighteen years.

There he worked for the Metropolitan Wringing Machine Co. for a few years, and later engaged in the wood-turning business on his own account in Middlefield, where for eight years he also engaged in farming and small fruit raising. In 1896 he engaged in business as a real estate and insurance agent, in which line he has met with pronounced success, representing various prominent companies. He has erected several houses in West Haven. On May 11, 1864, he was married to Fanny S. Coe, only child of Alvin B. and Harriet (Coe) Coe, of Middlefield. Mr. Coe was one of the prominent citizens of that place, being a manufacturer of buttons, a director in three banks and a stock dealer. Both he and his wife are deceased, he dying in 1886, at the age of seventy-five, and she in 1888, in her seventy-first year. To Mr. and Mrs. Crawford two children have been born: Maud, who died when six years old; and Daisy, who is at home.

In politics Mr. Crawford is a staunch Republican, and has always taken an active interest in the work of the party. While living in Middlefield he was chairman of the town committee, and in 1886 was elected a representative of the Legislature. In 1888 he removed to West Haven, where he soon attained the prominence to which he is entitled, alike through native ability and experience in public life. In 1890 he was elected a member of the board of wardens and burgesses, and in 1891 was chosen warden. He was re-elected to the latter office, annually, for five years, and since 1896 has served the town as tax collector for a year. He still retains his interest in his party organization, having served on his town committee. Socially Mr. Crawford is a member of the Royal Arcanum. He and his family are members of the M. E. Church, of which he is a trustee; he formerly served as steward.

EDWIN HOBSON, a typical representative of the industrial interests of Wallingford, where he has long been known as an industrious and trustworthy workman, has followed the trade of die-sinking and mold-making many years in this community, and is highly respected both as a mechanic and a citizen. He was born Oct. 28, 1821, in Sheffield, England, where his father, John Hobson, was also born.

John Hobson was also a diesinker. He spent the greater part of his life in Birmingham, where he died, and he is remembered as an upright and honorable man. He was a worthy member of the Episcopal Church. Mr. Hobson married Mary Whaley, also a native of Sheffield, England, who came to this country after the death of her husband, locating with her family in Meriden. There she died, and was buried in Wallingford. She was the mother of six children: Edwin; Emma, who died young; Selina, who married John Hollier, of England; William Henry, a resident of Wallingford; Sarah Ann, who married Thomas Morton, and is now dead; and Persella, who married Andrew Bailey, and is now deceased.

Edwin Hobson received his education in the schools of his native country, and it was mostly acquired before he reached the age of ten years, at which time his parents removed to Birmingham, where young Edwin was set to learn diesinking, modeling and designing with his father. He worked with him until he was of age, when he struck out for himself, earning at that time about three pounds a week. In 1866 he came to this country with his wife and family, embarking June 10, at Liverpool, in the steamship "Royal Standard." He secured a position at his trade in Newark, N. J., and the following year came to Wallingford to take a position with Simpson, Hall & Miller, in whose establishment he worked for more than a third of a century as a diesinker, designer and moldmaker. Through his unusual ability in his work, he won for himself the respect of his associates and the confidence of the firm, as well as the respect of the community, and before he left he was superintendent of his department. Mr. Hobson possesses much more than the ordinary taste and sensibility, and has artistic refinement to a marked degree. By his friends he is termed a born genius. In his leisure hours he has made several violins which are noted for their sweetness of tone and are highly prized by their fortunate possessors. He has also made several pianos, one of his make adorning the home of Clarence C. Brown, of Wallingford. Mr. Hobson has always been a careful and painstaking man, and, although past his eightieth year, still preserves his lifelong habits of industry and activity. When not engaged in diesinking, he may be found in his factory, engaged in either violin or piano making, and in these labors his whole soul is inwrapped. Mr. Hobson is a good violinist and plays with much skill and expression. Affable in his manners, and a good conversationalist, all who meet him are charmed with his courtly and old-fashioned hospitality.

Mr. Hobson was married, July 12, 1846, at Birmingham, England, to Miss Sarah James, daughter of Thomas and Mary (Mountford) James; her father was a maker of silver candlesticks. To this union were born six children: (1) Sarah married William J. Hodgetts, a box manufacturer of Wallingford. (2) Rosana married George W. Woodhouse, a painter, of Wallingford. (3) Mary Ellen (Nellie) is unmarried, and is living at home. She is an artist of acknowledged ability, was a student for five years at the Yale Art School, and is now teaching painting. (4) Mark Wallace is a diesinker with the Simpson, Hall & Miller Co., and learned his trade under his father's instructions. He married Elizabeth Valentine. (5) Arthur Edwin is a diesinker, and is superintendent in the factory of the International Silver Co., at Meriden. He married Miss Hattie Church, of Wallingford. (6)

Florence Elizabeth married Prof. Franze R. C. Milcke, the noted violinist and instructor. Mrs. Milcke is a vocalist of much ability, and a piano teacher of reputation. She designed the beautiful home which they occupy in Wallingford, and to which they have given the name of "Craig Nyth."

Mr. Hobson is a Mason, a member of Compass Lodge, No. 9, F. & A. M. He was a member of the I. O. O. F. In politics he is a Republican, but largely reserves the right of independent action. In religious connection he is a member of the Baptist Church. He has led an industrious, useful life, and has reared a family second to none in the community. For fifty-five years Mr. and Mrs. Hobson have worked happily and harmoniously together; she is a lady of innate refinement.

W. BURR HALL, a well-known resident of Wallingford, was born Dec. 16, 1845, in Hamden, New Haven county, son of William Day Hall.

Mr. Hall is a descendant of John Hall, who died in 1676, aged seventy-one years. He married Jane Woolen, and they had children: John, Richard, Samuel, Sarah, Thomas, Jonathan and David.

(II) Samuel Hall, son of John, born May 21, 1646, died March 5, 1725. He married Hannah Walker, and their children were: John, Hannah, Sarah, Samuel, Theophilus and Elizabeth.

(III) Samuel Hall (2), son of Samuel, born Dec. 10, 1680, died June 15, 1770. He married Hannah Hall, and their children were: Theophilus, Samuel, Hannah, Sarah, Mehitable and Esther.

(IV) Samuel Hall (3), son of Samuel (2), was born June 8, 1709, and died Dec. 24, 1771. He married Sarah Hull, and their children were: Samuel, Hezekiah, Louisa, Sarah, Esther, Love, Elizabeth, Damaris.

(V) Samuel Hall (4), son of Samuel (3), was born Feb. 28, 1750, and died Feb. 27, 1821. He married Elizabeth Parsons, and their children were: Samuel, Hezekiah, George, Marilla, Richard and Jared.

(VI) Jared Hall, son of Samuel (4), and the grandfather of W. Burr, was born Aug. 24, 1792, in Wallingford, and died there April 24, 1861. He married Rebecca Hall, and by her had four children: Caroline, William Day, Charles D. and Lucy H. By his second wife, Emily Austin, he had three children: Jane, Rebecca and Henry L.

(VII) William Day Hall, our subject's father, was born Dec. 6, 1821, in Wallingford, and died there March 21, 1889, having returned to his native place a short time previous. He married Miss Harriet Perkins, who was born May 24, 1821, daughter of Amasa Perkins, of Wallingford, and died March 4, 1887. William D. Hall was a manufacturer of fertilizers, and a large dealer in hides and tallow. When quite young he settled in Hamden, and for many years he was located in Fairport and Millenbeck, Va., where he had a large force of men getting out lumber. At Millenbeck he was also postmaster, and the proprietor and manager of a large general store. He owned 1,200 acres of land, and raised some very fine cattle. A busy and hustling man, Mr. Hall pushed his enterprises to the utmost, and was widely known as thoroughly honorable and reliable. Quiet and unassuming in manner, he was never an aspirant for political honors, though a staunch Republican in politics.

W. Burr Hall attended school in North Haven, and had one term at Claverack, N. Y. At the age of sixteen his school days came to an end and he worked on his father's farm until he engaged, as his father had done before him, in the hide, tallow and fertilizer business, becoming well acquainted with the people of his town and county. In 1885 he moved to Wallingford. Since April, 1888, his time has largely been devoted to the public service. He has been a member of the court of burgesses, and first selectman, for six terms. For one year he was town clerk. On Jan. 16, 1890, he was appointed postmaster by President Harrison. In 1870 Mr. Hall joined the Governor's Horse Guard, in which he became senior second lieutenant March 14, 1879; senior first lieutenant on Aug. 30, 1880; was elected captain Aug. 29, 1887; and in February, 1890, he retired from the service, receiving an honorable discharge. After retiring Mr. Hall was unanimously elected by the members of the squadron as major, and was appointed by the governor as such, but, though fully appreciating the honor, he declined. Mr. Hall is a member of the National Band at Wallingford. He has always been a public-spirited man, with a host of friends, and when he has been a candidate for office he not only received the full party vote, but also the ballots of many Democrats. A genial and kind-hearted gentleman, he is very popular with all who know him.

Mr. Hall was married, Dec. 14, 1868, to Miss Ella M. Skinner, daughter of Edwin H. Skinner, of Middlefield, and they have had one child, Maude, born Aug. 26, 1877, who is at home. Mr. Hall has a summer cottage at Madison, Conn., where his hospitality is well known and highly appreciated by his many friends.

WILLIS MILLER COOK, assistant superintendent and general foreman of the Mt. Carmel Axle Works, Mt. Carmel Centre, was born in that place, April 9, 1858, and is a worthy representative of one of the oldest and most honored families of New England. Many of the name are still residents of Litchfield county, Conn., including ex-Gov. Cook, of this State.

Sylvester Cook, grandfather of our subject, was born in Harwinton, Litchfield county, July 16, 1802, and there spent his entire life, engaged in agricultural pursuits. He died Aug. 12, 1845, honored and respected by all who knew him. In Harwinton, he was married, April 6, 1832, to Miss Mercia Francis, who was born June 29, 1807, and died Dec. 21, 1886, being laid to rest by the side of her husband in Harwinton cemetery. Both were members of the Episcopal Church. Of their four children, Henry Francis, father of our subject, was the oldest; Mary Pernelia, born Nov. 3, 1834, is the wife of Daniel Fox, of Plainville, Conn.; George Allen, born Aug. 11, 1836, is a resident of Redlands, Cal.; and Sarah Maria, born April 24, 1838, is the widow of Albert Fox, of Plainville, Connecticut.

Henry Francis Cook was born in Harwinton, Feb. 10, 1833, was reared upon a farm, and educated in the district schools. While in his teens he secured employment on the New York, New Haven & Hartford railroad, and remained with that corporation for several years. He came to Hamden in the employ of the same company, and later held a position in the axle works at Mt. Carmel. He spent several years in Philadelphia, Penn., with a similar company, and then returned to Mt. Carmel, where he passed the remainder of his life. During the Civil war he was a member of Company I, 20th Conn. V. I., and served his country faithfully and well in her hour of peril. He was liberal in religious views, and politically, was a staunch supporter of the Republican party, but never a politician in the sense of office seeking. In Hamden he married Miss Maria E. Miller, a native of Woodbridge, Conn., a daughter of Chauncey M. Miller, and a sister of Willis E. Miller, president of the Mt. Carmel Axle Works. She was a consistent Christian woman, was a devoted wife and mother, and a sincere friend. She died at her home Nov. 20, 1872, in Hamden, and was buried in the Mt. Carmel cemetery. Mr. Cook died Feb. 2, 1895. Their children were Willis Miller, our subject; Sereno T., who is mentioned below; and Mary, wife of Willard Mathews, of Hamden.

Willis M. Cook was educated in district and select schools of Hamden, and at a very early age commenced work in the axle shop with his uncle, having for the past thirty-one years been a faithful and trusted employe of the company. Through his own efforts he has risen to the position of foreman of the works, and has won for himself the confidence of the company, and the respect of those under him. His practical knowledge of all the details of the business, as well as his acquaintance with men, renders him a most valuable employe, as is evidenced by his long continuance with the company. Formerly he was extensively engaged in dairy farming, and he owns one of the finest homes and farms in Mt. Carmel Centre. He also owns considerable real estate in that vicinity, including nearly all of Mt. Carmel, on the summit of which he has a pleasant cottage.

On March 12, 1884, Mr. Cook married Miss Nellie Morey, a native of Hadley, Mass., and a daughter of Charles H. Morey. Twins were born of this union, but both died in infancy. Mr. Cook is a staunch supporter of the Republican party, but has never sought political preferment, though he filled the office of justice of the peace eight years. He and his wife are members of Hamden Grange, of which he is past master and overseer, and in social circles they are quite prominent. He is a man noted for his high moral character, and his genial, pleasant manner makes for him many friends.

SERENO THOMAS COOK, the younger son of Henry F. Cook, and the well-known shipping clerk and assistant foreman of the Mt. Carmel Axle Works, was born in the town of Hamden, June 8, 1860, and was reared in Mt. Carmel Centre, where he attended the district and select schools. He began his business career as a clerk in a grocery store in New Haven, where he was employed for a year and a half, and then returned to Mt. Carmel Centre, where he was a clerk in a store and postoffice, and also for the Adams Express Company for three years. At the end of that time he accepted the position of shipping clerk with the Mt. Carmel Axle Manufacturing Co., under his uncle, and for the past twenty-one years has filled that responsible position with credit to himself and to the general satisfaction of the company. He is also assistant foreman of the works. In Mt. Carmel, Nov. 16, 1881, he married Miss Louise M. Carroll, a native of Cheshire, New Haven Co., and a daughter of James Carroll, and to them has been born one child, Jessie M. Both Mr. and Mrs. Cook hold membership in Hamden Grange. As a Republican, he takes quite an active and prominent part in local politics, and has been a member of the central committee for many years. He has been an efficient member of the school board for the past five years and in 1898 was elected selectman of the town of Hamden, which office he filled in a most capable and satisfactory manner. Like his brother, he is very popular both in business and social circles and has hosts of friends throughout the community.

HIRAM JESSE PECK is a leading and influential citizen of Cheshire, where he owns and operates a fine farm of seventy-five acres, under a high state of cultivation and well improved with good and substantial buildings. A native of that town, he was born Nov. 5, 1859, and is a worthy representative of one of the most prominent early families of Cheshire. His grandfather Peck was a shoemaker by trade. He married Patty Iver, and to them were born four children: Hiram A., father of Hiram J.; Sarah, Mrs. Hall, who died in Waterbury; Chaucey, who lived in New York, where his death occurred; and one that died at the age of four years.

Hiram A. Peck was born in Cheshire, Sept. 9, 1820, and was there reared and educated in much the usual manner of farmer boys of his day. In 1848 he was married to Miss Mary Ann Peck, a native of Cheshire, and a daughter of Capt. William and Marianne (Atwater) Peck. Her father was born in the same town, and made his home on the farm now owned and occupied by our subject. There his death occurred in April, 1884, at the age of ninety-seven years, and his wife died in 1871, aged seventy-nine years. In their family were three children: Matilda, Mrs. Sanford, a resident of New York; William, who died in Cheshire in May, 1890, at the age of eighty years; and Mary Ann, mother of Hiram J. Peck. After his marriage Mr. Peck located on the Waterbury road, at the corner of Peck lane, where he followed farming, and also worked in a button shop in Cheshire, and subsequently in a pin shop at Waterbury. His wife died, leaving one child, Hiram J. For his second wife he married Celia Roberts, who became the mother of Clinton C., Clayton E. and Mary H. He died in Cheshire, Aug. 1, 1876. Mrs. Celia (Roberts) Peck was a native of England, and a daughter of Elijah and Sally Ann Roberts.

Hiram J. Peck received a practical education in the public schools of his native town, and since leaving the school room has devoted his energies to agricultural pursuits. He is a thrifty and progressive farmer, and is meeting with well-merited success in life. In his political views he is an ardent Republican. Mr. Peck was married in Meriden, in 1893, to Miss Mary Helena Brown, who was born in Berlin, Hartford Co., Conn., a daughter of Charles and Cornelia (Thrasher) Brown. The father died in Meriden in 1891, but the mother is still living, and now makes her home in New Haven. Mr. and Mrs. Hiram J. Peck have an adopted son, born Oct. 1, 1892, who was named Frank Amos.

HENRY F. SANFORD, for the past fifteen years a faithful and competent employe of the American Ring Co., Waterbury, is a native of that city, born Dec. 16, 1843.

Ruel F. Sanford, his father, was born in the town of Wolcott, Conn., and was a son of Truman Sanford, who was also of Wolcott nativity, and died in Waterbury, Nov. 26, 1856. Henry Sanford, grandfather of Truman, was born in Boston, Mass., a son of Thomas Sanford, who came from England, and was the father of four sons: Nathan, Archibald, Freeman and Henry. Of these, Nathan settled in Plymouth, Archibald in Bethany, and Freeman in Prospect, all in Connecticut, and they were all farmers. Henry, Jr., married Rhoda Perkins, settled on a farm in Wolcott, reared the following named children: Jared, Truman, Joseph, Rhoda, Francis and Tryphena, and died Dec. 25, 1830, aged seventy-eight years.

Truman Sanford, grandfather of our subject, was born in 1782, and died Nov. 26, 1856, aged seventy-four. He married Anna Curtis, who was born in 1780, and died Aug. 24, 1862, aged eighty-two. The following children were born to them: Tryphena, Maria Ann, Abel Curtis, Rhoda, Marilla, Ruel F. and Rufus B. Of these, Tryphena married Julius Buckingham, a farmer of Middlebury, Conn.; Maria Ann married David H. Buckingham, a farmer of Middlebury, Conn.; Abel Curtis married Elizabeth H. Judd, and was a farmer in Southington, Conn.; Rhoda married Lambert Russell, and they settled on a farm in Darlington, Wis.; Marilla was the wife of Lyman Smith, a mechanic of Waterbury; Ruel F. was the father of our subject; Rufus B., a brass caster in Waterbury, married (first) Elmira Russell, and (second) Ellen Russell, who is yet living.

Ruel F. Sanford married Nancy H. Neal, who was born in Southington, Conn., a daughter of Timothy Neal, a farmer in Cheshire, Conn., and who served in the war of 1812. The Neals were an old settled family in this country. Timothy Neal had three children: Nancy H., Lucinda and Dennis, and of these, Nancy H. was the mother of our subject; and Lucinda married Thomas M. Payne, a carpenter of Waterbury; but of Dennis there is nothing now known. To Ruel F. Sanford and his wife were born five children: Henry F., William M., Ella A., Emma J., and Caroline A. Of these, Henry F. is our subject; William M. is a brass caster in Meriden, Conn.; Ella A. died at the age of twenty-two years; Emma J. is the wife of John Jopson, of Meriden, Conn.; Caroline A. is the wife of Merle C. Coles, of Bridgeport, Conn. The father of this family came to Waterbury when a boy, and followed the trade of brass caster. In politics he was a Whig, later a Republican, and in religious faith he and his wife were Baptists. He died June 3, 1878, at the age of fifty-eight, his wife on April 3, 1897, when she was aged seventy-seven years.

Henry F. Sanford, the subject proper of this memoir, attended the schools of his native city, Waterbury, until he was sixteen years of age, at which time he commenced to learn the brass caster's trade with his father. In August, 1862, he enlisted in Company A, 23d Conn. V. I.; served in the Banks expedition; was taken prisoner at Bayou Boeuf, La. After being mustered out, Aug. 31, 1863, he returned to Waterbury, and learned the machinist's trade and worked in various manufactories, including that of the American Ring Co., where he has been employed for the past fifteen years.

On Dec. 23, 1868, Mr. Sanford married Agnes L. Griffing-Speirs, a native of Scotland, and daughter of Robert and Agnes Speirs, also of the same nativity, and five children were born to them: May L., Bertha A., Elsie M., Henry F., Jr., and Grace E. The mother died Sept. 2, 1899. She was a Baptist in religious faith, member of the First Church, as is also her husband, and he has been connected with the same over thirty years, and been clerk for the past sixteen years. In politics he is an active Republican, has been councilman of the First ward two years, also alderman three years, and served on the board of health two years. Specially he is a member of the I. O. O. F., Pacific Lodge, of Meriden, Conn.; of the K. of P., Speedwell Lodge, Waterbury; and of the G. A. R., Wadhams Post, No. 49, Waterbury.

SAMUEL HALPER, deceased. The story of this gentleman's life is a record of early struggles and hard work, crowned with the ultimate success which is the fitting reward of patient industry, earnest purpose and unwavering integrity. He was of the Jewish race, a people which has given to the world more than its full quota of merchant princes, financiers, statesmen and eminent men of science and letters, and which, without a distinctive country of its own, has preserved through centuries its homogeneous national character and religious faith.

Mr. Halper was born in Roumania March 25, 1841. His school days ended when he was twelve years old, and at that early age he went into the world to struggle alone against the vicissitudes and temptations of life. For six years he worked at the jewelry business, and at the age of eighteen engaged in the sale of linen on his own account. After a year so spent he was made overseer of the construction of some macadamized roads, a position which he filled for a considerable time, with credit to himself and satisfaction to his employers. When this employment came to an end he again embarked in mercantile business. In 1867 he resolved to emigrate to the United States. On reaching this country he invested his slender capital in a stock of small wares, and for a few months carried a peddler's pack upon his back, through Connecticut. Wearying of this life, he went to New York City, where he opened a small store in Spring street, for the sale of millinery and fancy goods. This venture did not prove financially as successful as he had hoped, and in 1872 he removed to Seymour, New Haven Co., Conn., where with a cash capital of but seventy dollars, he embarked in similar business. He remained in Seymour five years, and in March, 1877, transferred his stock to Derby. His first store in that city was in Main street, nearly opposite the present location of the business, at No. 223, in that thoroughfare. He moved into the latter premises about 1880, and in 1891 purchased the property, which he thoroughly remodeled and greatly improved, putting in handsome fixtures, and fitting the store up with such artistic taste and lavish expenditure that it is to-day the handsomest and best appointed of its class in the city of Derby. To an extensive line of millinery he added cloaks, and in both these specialties built up a large and remunerative trade. Besides attending to his mercantile interests, Mr. Halper dealt quite extensively in real estate, investing considerable capital in building and improving. At the time of his death he was a member of the Derby Board of Trade, of which he was one of the organizers. Upright, enterprising and public-spirited, he was one of Derby's most highly esteemed citizens. He took a deep interest in educational matters, as well as in the advancement of every enterprise looking to the public good, and shortly before his death subscribed $100 toward the founding of a general hospital at Derby, his name heading the list. Had he lived, he would have doubtless brought the undertaking to a successful completion, for he was as zealous and careful in the prosecution of any work into which he entered as he was in business matters. Politically Mr. Halper was a Republican, but never sought public office, though at his death he was a member of the board of apportionment and taxation. Fraternally he was an Odd Fellow, having become connected with that order in Seymour, and he was also a member of a mutual benefit society in New York. He passed away May 22, 1900.

Mr. Halper was twice married, first to Miss Matilda Greenfield, a native of Germany, who died in 1878, leaving one son, Charles J. On March 17, 1879, our subject was united in marriage with Miss Jennie Gottlieb, of New York, and two children were born to this union, Frances and Joseph W., the former of whom is a graduate of Derby high school. The beautiful home occupied by the family, on the corner of Anson and Fifth streets, is one of the finest in Derby.

Charles J. Halper, after finishing the course in the public schools of Derby, entered Yale Business College, from which he was graduated in 1888. Later he took up the study of medicine, intending to adopt the profession, but he abandoned same on his father's death, since which time he has assisted his mother in the management of their extensive interests. During the Spanish-American war he served as a member of the Hospital Corps of the 3d Division, 4th Army Corps.

SYLVANUS ARTHUR SCRANTON, a well-known, prosperous and progressive citizen of the town of Madison, is a native of the same, born May 13, 1852. He is a member of one of the oldest families of New Haven county, a sketch of which, from the pioneer John down to our subject's great-grandfather Theophilus, will be found in the sketch of Ichabod Lee Scranton elsewhere.

Hubbard Scranton, grandfather of Sylvanus A., was born May 4, 1788, in the town of Madison, a son of Theophilus and Abigail (Lee) Scranton. He was a lifelong farmer of Madison, and during the war of the Rebellion furnished vegetables for the War Department, and ran a coasting line from Madison to Georgetown, D. C. He died in 1876, and was interred in Madison cemetery. On April 25, 1810, he married Elizabeth H. Auger, born Jan. 10, 1792, a daughter of Philemon Auger, of New Haven. Their children: (1) Philemon Auger, born Sept. 30, 1812, was a merchant at Augusta, Ga.; he married Elizabeth Lee Starks, a native of Lyme, Conn., and died June 5, 1878. (2) Abigail, born Feb. 2, 1815, married Austin Dowd, and died in February, 1873. (3) Parmelia, born July 2, 1819, married Richard E. Rice and died in March, 1893. (4) Daniel Hubbard, a sketch of whom follows. The mother of these was called from earth in December, 1871.

Daniel Hubbard Scranton, father of Sylvanus A., was born April 26, 1826, and received his education at the schools of Guilford. All his life he followed farming in the town of Madison, where he was a land owner; he died there Feb. 28, 1897, and was buried in Madison cemetery. In matters of religion he was a member of the Congregational Church, and in politics he was a staunch Whig and Republican; fraternally he was affiliated with the F. & A. M. lodge of Madison, and with the I. O. O. F.

On Sept. 22, 1847, Daniel H. Scranton was united in marriage with Phebe Ann Shelly, born in Madison, Nov. 20, 1825, a daughter of Sylvanus and Harriet (Loveland) Shelly, the latter of whom was a granddaughter of John Loveland. Children: (1) Rufus Henry, born Dec. 29, 1848, died Jan. 18, 1849; (2) Elbert Newton, born Sept. 16, 1850, died Aug. 1, 1866; (3) Sylvanus Arthur, sketch of whom follows; (4) Elizabeth Harriet, born Nov. 20, 1856, married William H. Golden, of Meriden, Conn.; (5) Austin Dowd, born Feb. 9, 1859; (6) Nellie Rice, born Feb. 12, 1862, married William H. Demorest, of New York.

Sylvanus Arthur Scranton, the subject proper of these lines, attended the district schools of Madison, also Lee's Academy, and at the age of fourteen years commenced clerking in a wholesale and retail grocery store, which position he filled a couple of years. This was in New Haven, Conn., and he then returned home and commenced in the ice business, at first on a small scale, since when, a period of over thirty years, he has been engaged in that line of trade, both wholesale and retail, having over 3,000 tons of ice stored each winter, and supplying both Madison and East River. He is also engaged in farming. In 1894 he purchased the old Scranton homestead, which was built over forty years ago, and is one of the oldest in Madison.

On Oct. 7, 1879, S. A. Scranton married Rose R. Williams, daughter of Charles Williams, late of Madison, and one child was born to their union, Maude A., a student at Hand's Academy, Madison. In politics Mr. Scranton is a Republican, and in 1898 was elected first selectman of Madison, an office he has filled the past three years with credit to himself and the satisfaction of the people. For seven years he served as deputy sheriff, and for eight years was constable of Madison. In religious faith he and his family attend the services of the Congregational Church.

CHARLES RANDELL LAMB, trustee of the Yalesville M. E. Church, and constable for the town of Wallingford, is one of Yalesville's best known and highly respected citizens. Mr. Lamb traces his ancestry to England, and belongs to one of the old and substantial families of Connecticut.

William Lamb was a native of Mystic, and throughout life was a seafaring man, following the business of fishing, and he was one of the most respected citizens of that old Connecticut town.

Sanford Lamb, son of William and father of Charles R., was born in Mystic, Conn., where he was educated in the branches then taught in the district schools. He learned the trade of blacksmith and general iron worker. His life was an exemplary one, honest and upright, and he enjoyed the esteem of the community. He was liberal minded in religious matters, and was noted for his generosity and public spirit. In politics he was an active member of the Whig party. Sanford Lamb was married in Mystic, Conn., to Miss Julia Giant, who died in Medfield, Mass., from heart failure, and was buried at Norwich, Conn. A pious and worthy woman, she was sincerely mourned not only by her devoted family but by a large circle of friends who valued her for her lovely traits of character. Six children were born of this union: Emeline died at the age of fourteen; William A., a minister in the Congregational Church in Los Angeles, Cal., married Mary Proctor, of Massachusetts; Charles Randell; John H., a shoe dealer on Washington street, in Boston, Mass., married Lillian Mayel, of Massachusetts; Minnie married John H. School, of Medfield, Mass.; and Hattie married Dwight Sanford.

Charles R. Lamb was born in Mystic, Conn., Sept. 28, 1847, and was given good school advantages, attending the higher grades in the schools at Norwich, Conn., where he graduated when only fourteen years old. One year later he removed to Meriden, and immediately found employment in E. Miller's brass works, where he remained for one year. In 1866 he came to Yalesville and entered the spoon factory of G. J. Mix & Co., and in the employ of this firm he continued for twenty-six years, receiving promotions until he became foreman of his department.

On account of health, Mr. Lamb decided to make a change in his business, and with this end in view, removed to Medfield, Mass., where he opened up a provision and meat store, which he conducted but a short time, and then came back among his old friends in Yalesville and entered the shipping room of the piano stool department of the Charles Parker Co., and remained here for eight years, resigning this position to engage in the shoe business as a silent partner with his sons at Leominster, Mass., which business was conducted under the firm name of Lamb Bros.

Charles R. Lamb was married in Yalesville, Conn., to Miss Alice M. Jeralds, who was born in Prospect, Conn., a daughter of Bennett Jeralds, one of the best-known citizens of Yalesville. Eight children have been born of this union: Eva J., who married Wallace A. Shipton, of Newton, Mass.; Wilbur R., who married Annie Farrell, of Hartford, and has one child, Wilbur Raymond, Jr.; Charles S., of the shoe firm of Lamb Bros., of Leominster, Mass.; Clifton Jeralds, engaged in the piano stool department of the Charles Parker Co.; Roscoe Edward, a bookkeeper; Dexter, in the Parker factory in Yalesville; Mary, who attends high school in Meriden; and Alice. Both the young ladies are at home, and with their estimable mother are among the most cultivated and intellectual members of social life in Yalesville.

Mr. Lamb has long been one of the most active members of the Yalesville Methodist Church, and for a number of years has been a trustee and one of the faithful stewards. He was a member of the building committee of the new church, erected in 1899. Not only is Mr. Lamb prominent in church matters, but he has been conspicuous in public affairs, and has been selectman, grand juror, and for twelve years has been the efficient and reliable constable of Wallingford. In 1884 his popularity in the Republican party was attested by his selection as its candidate for the State Legislature. Socially he is connected with the Pilgrim's Harbor Council, No. 543, Royal Arcanum, of Meriden. Mr. Lamb has succeeded in many lines of work, and his ability as a mechanic has been developed in his son, Charles, in the line of invention. An ingenious invention of the latter, which has been patented and has come into general use, is the automatic self-closing window grip, and this is but one of this talented young man's ideas.

The Jeralds family, of which Mrs. Lamb is a member, is one well known through this part of Connecticut. Bennett Jeralds, the father of Mrs. Lamb, was born in Watertown, Conn., Oct. 10, 1818, a son of Ransom Jeralds, a native of Cheshire, Conn., whose father, a seafaring man, lost his life on the water.

Ransom Jeralds grew up in Cheshire, and throughout his life was a very successful farmer, operating in Wallingford, but the last years of his life were spent in Yalesville, where he owned an estate. His death, at the age of seventy-six years, occurred in 1870, in Yalesville, where he was respected by the community. Mr. Jeralds, also, was a man who held to his convictions of right; early in life he embraced the principles of the Democratic party, but was a free-soil man, and possessed anti-slavery views, and later became a staunch Republican. Temperate in all things, honest and upright in life, he was one of the most consistent members of the M. E. Church. He served as a soldier in the war of 1812. Ransom Jeralds married Alma Judd, of Bethany (then Woodbridge), a daughter of Isaac Judd, and to this union ten children were born, all of whom have passed away with the exception of four: Bennett; Patience Juliet, widow of Lewis W. Turner, of Yalesville; Orrin, of New York; and Edward, a manufacturer of Cheshire.

The beloved mother died in Wallingford, at the age of eighty-two years, after a life filled with good deeds of charity and neighborly kindness. She was formerly connected with the Episcopal Church, later with the M. E. Church.

Isaac Judd worked in summer as a stone mason and was a teacher during many winter terms, numbering his own children and grandchildren among his pupils. In early life he held a lieutenant's commission in the King's militia, and at the opening of the Revolution organized a company of minute men at what is now Naugatuck. He was almost constantly in the service of the Colonies during that struggle, although he was not enrolled in the regular service. He was also active in civil life, and served many years as a magistrate, both before and after the Revolution.

Bennett Jeralds received his schooling in Bethany and Prospect, Conn., but it was limited, as at the age of thirteen he was hired out to work during the summer months, and could only attend school during the short winter sessions. Until he was eighteen he worked at different places, and then entered the employ of William Mix, at Prospect, Conn., who was the first spoon manufacturer in the United States, and with him he remained three years. During these years of toil the fertile brain of Mr. Jeralds was at work, and when he reached his majority he began the manufacture of Britannia spoons on his own account, in Yalesville, and continued in this business until 1845, when he formed a partnership with Eli Ives, of Meriden, and the business was successfully continued until 1853. During that year Mr. Jeralds bought out the interest of Mr. Ives and managed alone until he sold the business to Charles Parker, of Meriden, and immediately became the capable superintendent of the factory, which was removed to Wallingford in 1854, retaining the position until 1876, when the contract system was inaugurated. At this time Mr. Jeralds became a contractor in the establishment, which position he filled until 1886, when he retired from activity. Through the application of sound business principles and individual enterprise, he has accumulated large means, and is personally one of the most esteemed citizens of this locality.

Bennett Jeralds was married first in 1840, to Lucy Mix, a daughter of William Mix, and to this union three children were born: Laura, deceased, who married Henry C. Wooding; Lucy, wife of George S. Allen; and Cornelia, who married Edwin P. Smith. For his second wife Mr. Jeralds wedded Arvilla Raymond, a daughter of Lincoln Raymond, and four children were the result of this union: Alice M., who married Charles R. Lamb; Ellen, wife of Frederick Wilcox; Frank, who died at the age of four; and Fanny, who married William Kingford. By his third wife, Mary M. Adams, Mr. Jeralds has a son, Arthur, who resides in Wallingford. The fourth marriage of Mr. Jeralds was to Lucy Wilcox, widow of Oliver Wilcox, and his fifth wife was Mary B. Wilcox, widow of Charles Sherman.

In politics Mr. Jeralds identified himself with the Free Soil party, and was defeated as a candidate for the Legislature, in 1851, by a very small majority, although this party was greatly in the minority; in fact, one vote decided the contest against him. Since the organization of the Republican party he has been an active member. For years he was justice of the peace, and has always been interested in educational matters, and has held many offices of public trust. For thirty-three years he has been a warden in the Episcopal Church, at Yalesville, and is fraternally connected with Compass Lodge, A. F. & A. M., in Wallingford.

CHARLES ROBERTS, a well-known horse dealer and the popular proprietor of the "Roberts House," of Hamden, is a native of New Haven county, born in the town of Wallingford, June 13, 1842. His father, Ephraim Roberts, was born and reared in Meriden, Conn., and when a young man removed to Wallingford, where he engaged in the butcher business for many years, selling his meat in the towns of Cheshire and Wallingford. His political support was given the men and measures of the Democratic party. He died suddenly in Southington, in 1872, at the age of seventy-two years. For his first wife he married Susan Ellis, a sister of William Ellis, of New Haven, and to them were born nine children, namely: Amanda, wife of Zadock Morgan; Horatio, deceased; Harriet, deceased wife of James Bell; Louise, deceased wife of Charles Pardee; Emily, deceased wife of F. F. Bailey; Ralph, a resident of Forestville, Conn.; Nancy, deceased wife of Frederick Minott; Charles, our subject; and Susan, widow of R. L. Lake. The mother died in Wallingford, and the father subsequently married Polly Dunham, by whom he had two children: James, deceased; and John, a resident of Meriden.

Charles Roberts acquired a limited education in the district schools of Wallingford, and at the age of nine years started out to make his own way in the world by working as a farm hand, being thus employed until he attained his fifteenth year, when he learned the blacksmith's trade with John R. Henshaw, of Middletown, with whom he spent two years. The following year he worked at his trade in Meriden. He was one of the first to offer his services to his country at the opening of the Civil war, enlisting in 1861, at Meriden, for three months, in Company F, 1st Conn. V. I., under Col. R. Tyler and Capt. Byxbee. He participated in the first battle of Bull Run, and was then detailed for horse shoeing.

On the expiration of his term of enlistment, Mr. Roberts returned home and followed his trade until February, 1862, when he went to New York City and entered the employ of the Sixth Avenue Railroad Co., with which he was connected for two years. In 1864 he went to California, intending to stop at Nicaragua, but on account of the hostility of the natives proceeded to San Francisco, where he remained only a short time, and then went south to Santa Barbara and San Bernardino, where he filled the position of station agent. He was also connected with the mail service between Los Angeles and San Diego for a time, but on account of ill health he returned to San Francisco, where he remained several months, and then came East. He was conductor on the street railroad in New York City until 1869, when he again came to New Haven county, Conn., and purchased a farm in Cheshire, which he operated for two years. On selling out, in 1871, he embarked in the livery business in Hamden, and has since devoted much of his time to dealing in horses, buying his stock principally in the West and selling the same in Hamden and eastern markets. In 1889 he opened the "Roberts House," which he has since conducted with marked success, as under his able management it has become one of the leading hotels of the locality. His genial, pleasant manner makes him quite popular with his guests, and wherever known he is held in high regard. Socially he is a member of Day Spring Lodge, No. 30, F. & A. M., of Hamden, and politically he is identified with the Republican party. The success that he has achieved in life is due to his own well-directed and energetic efforts, and he may well be classed among the self-made men of the county.

SAMUEL GRIFFING COOKE, a prominent farmer and fruit grower of Branford, was born in Honey Creek township, Adams Co., Ill., Aug. 31, 1835, son of Increase W. and Harriet D. (Griffing) Cooke, natives of North Guilford and Branford, respectively. He is descended from Henry Cooke, who came from the west of England, and was in Plymouth, Mass., before 1640. His son, Samuel Cooke, married Hope Parker. Their son, Samuel Cooke, married Hannah Ives. Their son, Aaron Cooke, married Ruth Burrage. Their son, Aaron Cooke, the great-grandfather of our subject, married Lucretia Dudley. Kilburn Cooke, grandfather of Samuel G., was a native of Guilford, was reared to farming and followed that occupation all his days. He married Eunice Williams.

The maternal great-grandparents of Samuel Griffing Cooke were Aaron and Elizabeth (Palmer) Griffing. Aaron Griffing was a son of Samuel and Martha (Vail) Griffing, grandson of Robert and Susanna Griffing, and a great-grandson of Jasper and Hannah Griffing.

Increase W. Cooke, whose name appears above as the father of Samuel G., was born in North Guilford in December, 1807, and was married in Branford in May, 1832, to Harriet D., daughter of Capt. Samuel and Statira (Frisbie) Griffing. They had three children who lived to maturity: (1) Harriet A., who married Samuel Beach; (2) Sam-
